Alleged Juror Misconduct Not Sufficient for Rule Exceptions: The following factors did not constitute juror misconduct sufficient to qualify as exceptions under this rule, which governs the admissibility of juror testimony to impeach a verdict: (1) jury confusion over the statutory definition of deliberate homicide; (2) a juror's physical, mental, and emotional condition; (3) a juror's possession of knowledge about the human body; and (4) a juror's donning of the victim's shirt to see how the garment might fit, depending on the position of the body. St. v. DeMers, 234 M 273, 762 P2d 860, 45 St. Rep. 1901 (1988).

No Showing That Extraneous Material Prejudiced Other Jurors: During the jury deliberations following defendant's trial on the charge of leaving the scene of an accident involving personal injuries, in violation of 61-7-103, one juror told the others that because defendant had been drunk while driving, he should be convicted on the basis of that charge alone. The same juror also passed out a letter to the jury addressing a jury's duty to resist judicial instructions and acquit defendants in tax resistance cases. Defendant was convicted and on appeal claimed that the juror's actions constituted "extraneous prejudicial influence" within the meaning of this rule. The Supreme Court held there was no evidence that the juror's actions had a prejudicial effect on the jury and refused to reverse the conviction on this issue. However, the conviction was reversed on the ground that the juror's actions denied defendant a trial before a fair and impartial jury and therefore violated his right to due process. St. v. Stafford, 208 M 324, 678 P2d 644, 41 St. Rep. 377 (1984).

Effect of Illness on Juror's Vote: Diabetic jury foreman was incompetent to testify concerning the effect of her illness on her mental processes during deliberation. Thus her condition could not be used as basis for new trial. The effect of fatigue or illness on jury deliberations is inherent in the verdict and cannot be used to impeach the verdict. St. v. Maxwell, 198 M 498, 647 P2d 348, 39 St. Rep. 1149 (1982), followed in St. v. DeMers, 234 M 273, 762 P2d 860, 45 St. Rep. 1901 (1988).

Jury Discussion Concerning Defendant's Medical Condition Not to Be Disclosed: In prosecution for sexual intercourse without consent, part of defendant's case was based on his medical condition, retrograde ejaculation. The jury's discussion of the effect of retrograde ejaculation, the contents of which was allegedly in conflict with medical testimony, is inadmissible under this rule and may not be used as grounds for a new trial. St. v. Maxwell, 198 M 498, 647 P2d 348, 39 St. Rep. 1149 (1982).

Jury Misconduct Not Grounds for New Trial Unless Material: A new trial will be ordered because of alleged jury misconduct only if the alleged misconduct affects a material matter in dispute and prejudices the complaining party. St. v. Maxwell, 198 M 498, 647 P2d 348, 39 St. Rep. 1149 (1982).

New Trial — Use of Juror Affidavit: Plaintiff, mother and mother-in-law of defendants, broke her ankle by falling into a trench on a construction project in defendants' backyard. The jury found damages of $15,000, but found plaintiff 85% negligent. The District Court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on irregularity in the jury proceedings, and defendant appealed. Plaintiff's motion was supported by an affidavit of the jury foreman stating the jury did not understand the instructions on contributory negligence, comparative negligence, and mitigation of damages. Cases on use of juror affidavits in granting a new trial involve either external or internal influence on the jury. This case falls into the internal influence category. The District Court abused its discretion in granting a new trial on the basis of a juror affidavit purporting to impeach the verdict by delving into the thought processes of the jurors. Harry v. Elderkin, 196 M 1, 637 P2d 809, 38 St. Rep. 2076 (1981), followed in Geiger v. Sherrodd, Inc., 262 M 505, 866 P2d 1106, 50 St. Rep. 1661 (1993), St. v. Brogan, 272 M 156, 900 P2d 284, 52 St. Rep. 636 (1995), and McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998).

Rule 607. Who may impeach: party not bound by testimony.

Commission Comments

Subdivisions (a) and (b). Subdivision (a) is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 607. Its effect is to abolish the traditional common-law rule, recognized in Section 93-1901-8, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], that a party may not impeach his own witness. A corollary to the traditional rule, that a party is bound by the testimony of his witnesses, is also necessarily and logically abolished in subdivision (b).

The Commission believes that the traditional rule is based on two invalid policies: first, that a party vouches for the credibility of his own witnesses, and second, a party could coerce his witnesses if it were not for the traditional rule. Yet a party does not vouch for his witnesses because, except for expert and character witnesses, a party's witnesses are not chosen but are those persons who happen to be present and see the event which is the basis of the case. The second policy is concerned with the situation where a party's witness decides to change his story, testify unfavorably, and is prevented from doing so by the party's threat of impeachment. Yet, the policy falsely assumes that whenever a witness changes his testimony, it will be from falsehood to truth, that the party coerces the witness by threatening impeachment, and that the truth is thereby suppressed. Certainly witnesses could be changing their testimony from truth to falsehood and so the coercion, if there is any, could be supporting, not suppressing, the truth. The second policy is also invalid because the exceptions to the common law allowing a party to impeach his own witness under certain circumstances ignore the problem of coercion when its potential is just as great. Therefore, the Commission believes that the traditional common-law rule that a party cannot impeach his own witness is based on invalid policies and should be abolished.

This rule is inconsistent with Section 93-1901-8, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], which provides:

The party producing a witness is not allowed to impeach his credit by evidence of bad character, but he may contradict him by other evidence, and may also show that he has made at other time statements inconsistent with his present testimony, as provided in Section 93-1901-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded].

All of the cases construing and using the statute have been concerned with its exceptions. The first exception contained in the statute allows a party to contradict his witness by other evidence; that is, when a witness testifies to a particular fact, other witnesses may later contradict it. The second exception allows a party to show that his witness has made prior inconsistent statements; that is, when a witness testifies to a particular fact, the party may ask the witness about contradictory statements and present evidence of them. A requirement exists, both at common law and under Montana cases, that before one's own witness could be impeached by prior inconsistent statement, the party had to show surprise at the change and that the change had caused prejudice to his case. State v. Bloor, 20 Mont. 574, 584, 52 P 611 (1898); State v. Willette, 46 Mont. 326, 330, 127 P 1013 (1912); and State v. Kinghorn, 109 Mont. 22, 36, 93 P2d 964 (1939). These requirements have also been applied to impeachment by contradiction. Dick v. King, 73 Mont. 456, 459, 236 P 1093 (1925). However, the requirements have been liberally construed so that the surprise does not have to take place while the witness is on the stand, but may occur before testimony is given. State v. Clark, 87 Mont. 416, 420, 288 P 196 (1930) and State v. Kinghorn, supra.

Subdivision (a) is consistent with [former] Rule 43(b) M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded], allowing a party to impeach and not be bound by the testimony of a hostile witness or adverse party. It is also consistent with [former] Rule 26(d)(1), M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded], allowing impeachment of any witness with his deposition.

Therefore, under existing Montana law, a party can impeach his own witness by contradiction or prior inconsistent statement when he shows surprise and prejudice or when the witness is hostile or the adverse party. As a practical consideration, it is likely that a party can impeach his own witness as the need arises under existing Montana law. The effect of this rule is simply to remove these artificial requirements by abolishing the traditional rule. This also somewhat broadens the methods of impeaching one's own witness.

The corollary to the traditional rule not allowing impeachment of one's own witness, that a party is bound by the testimony of his witness, is contained in Montana case law. Tebay Land and Livestock Co. v. Hastie, 64 Mont. 590, 517, 210 P 605 (1922); Sommerville v. Greenhood, 65 Mont. 101, 120, 210 P 1048 (1922); and Welch v. Nepstad, 135 Mont. 65, 75, 337 P2d 14 (1959). The rule expressed by these cases is inconsistent with the idea that a party may impeach his own witness, for a party cannot be bound by testimony he has impeached. Therefore, to the extent that these cases are inconsistent with subdivision (b) of this rule, they are expressly superseded.

At this point it should be noted that the only means of impeachment covered by rules are character evidence under Rule 608, a prohibition of use of evidence of conviction of a crime under Rule 609, and a prohibition of use of religious beliefs under Rule 610. The Commission intends the broad language of Rule 607, allowing the credibility of a witness to be attacked, to mean that impeachment is only limited by the ingenuity of counsel to show any reason to disbelieve a witness' testimony and by consideration of relevancy under Rules 401 and 403.

The traditional methods of impeachment, not otherwise mentioned in these rules, are intended to be preserved by this rule. They may include, but are not limited to, evidence of the following:

(1) Bias for or against any party involved in the case. Frank v. Symons, 35 Mont. 56, 60, 88 P 561 (1907); State v. Wakely, 43 Mont. 427, 436, 117 P 95 (1911); State v. Whitworth, 47 Mont. 424, 430, 133 P 364 (1913); State v. Ritz, 65 Mont. 180, 188, 211 P 298 (1922); State v. London, 131 Mont. 410, 430, 310 P2d 571 (1957); and State v. Carns, 136 Mont. 126, 137, 345 P2d 735 (1959).

(2) Interest in the outcome of the litigation. Frank v. Symons, 35 Mont. 56, 61, 88 P 56, 61, 88 P 561 (1907); State v. Mott, 72 Mont. 306, 314, 233 P 602 (1925); and Currie v. Langston, 93 Mont. 570, 581, 16 P2d 708 (1932).

(3) Motive to testify falsely, such as bribery (State v. London, supra at 432), or pending criminal charges, State v. Ritz, supra, and State v. Ponthier, 136 Mont. 198, 205, 346 P2d 974 (1959).

(4) Lack of capacity of the witness to perceive, to recollect, or to communicate any matter about which he testifies. State v. Spotted Hawk, 22 Mont. 33, 64, 55 P 1026 (1898); State v. Trueman, 34 Mont. 249, 252, 85 P 1024 (1906); State v. Ritz, supra at 187; Herzig v. Sandberg, 54 Mont. 538, 540, 172 P2d 132 (1918); State v. White, 146 Mont. 226, 237, 405 P2d 761 (1965); and State Highway Comm'n v. Bennett, 162 Mont. 386, 391, 513 P2d 5 (1973).

(5) Contradiction of the existence or nonexistence of any fact about which the witness testifies. Sections 93-1901-8, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], on one's own witness and cases cited in this Note; Section 93-1901-11, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], "A witness may be impeached by the party against whom he was called, by contradictory evidence..."; Seder v. Peter Kiewit Sons' Co., 156 Mont. 322, 332, 479 P2d 448 (1971); and State v. Deschner, 158 Mont. 188, 195, 489 P2d 1290 (1971).

(6) Prior inconsistent statements. See Rule 613.

The limitation of impeachment by considerations of relevancy is a change in Montana law to the extent that it abolishes the collateral matters rule. This rule is concerned with the practice of cross-examining a witness as to matters not brought out on direct examination (which are irrelevant) for the purpose of contradicting the witness as to that matter. State v. McConville, 64 Mont. 302, 307, 209 P 987 (1922); and State v. Mott, 72 Mont. 306, 311, 233 P 602 (1925). The rule is well settled that impeachment as to collateral matters is not allowed. Bullard v. Smith, 28 Mont. 387, 401, 72 P 761 (1903); State v. Collett, 118 Mont. 473, 477, 167 P2d 584 (1946); and State v. Deeds, 126 Mont. 38, 41, 243 P2d 314 (1952). The test relied on to determine what is a collateral matter, which has been construed as consistent with Section 93-401-25, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], is: "Could the fact,...have been shown in evidence for any purpose independently of the contradiction?" State ex rel. Bourquin v. Morris, 67 Mont. 40, 44, 214 P 332 (1924). The latest statement of the test is very similar, requiring that the fact used for contradiction be provable as part of the cross-examining party's case in chief. Holland v. Biggs, 166 Mont. 278, 282, 532 P2d 411 (1975).

The many cases considering collateral matters indicate that it is a troublesome doctrine. The Commission believes that the limitation of impeachment by Rule 401, defining relevant evidence as including impeaching evidence, and Rule 403, allowing the court to exclude relevant evidence if its probative value is outweighed by prejudice, confusion or waste of time, will allow the same result to be reached through a more flexible means than currently used with the collateral matters rule. Therefore, Section 93-401-25, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], (to the extent that it is concerned with collateral matters) and case law stating the collateral matters rule are abolished in favor of the relevancy approach.

Case Notes

Collateral Nature of Evidence in Determining Admissibility of Contradiction Evidence: The Supreme Court cited federal courts and the Commission Comments to Rule 607, M.R.Ev., and concluded that while the collateral or noncollateral nature of evidence may be a factor to consider, the admissibility and use of contradiction evidence, whether extrinsic or the actual testimony of the witness, is to be governed by Rules 401 and 403, M.R.Ev., and any other applicable rules of evidence. Rule 403 identifies the factors pertinent to determining the admissibility of contradiction evidence. A trial court must carefully apply those factors in deciding whether and to what extent contradiction evidence may be introduced, and the trial court has broad discretion to exclude evidence under Rule 403. St. v. Passmore, 2010 MT 34, 355 Mont. 187, 225 P.3d 1229.

No Error in Denial of Assignment of Liability as Sanction for Alleged Violation of Pretrial Rulings: White sued her doctor for alleged negligence in treatment. Prior to trial, the District Court made several rulings, including restricting defense counsel from arguing or attempting to shift the blame to White or her mother for any alleged lack of diligence in pursuing a diagnosis, although counsel was allowed to address and explain the standard of care. White subsequently asserted that during trial defense counsel repeatedly violated the pretrial orders, and she requested that liability be assigned to defendant as a sanction. The District Court denied sanctions and White appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Once White's mother testified that she had expressed concern about White's height and development, the door was opened to challenge this assertion, and as long as counsel did not directly blame the mother for any delayed diagnosis, defense counsel was allowed to present evidence to challenge the mother's credibility. Inquiry for this purpose was properly allowed in the effort to present a defense. White v. Johnson, 2009 MT 254, 351 M 534, 215 P3d 11 (2009).

Evidence of Other Crimes Properly Admitted for Impeachment Despite Motion In Limine to Exclude Evidence of Prior Crimes — Failure of Claim of Ineffective Assistance of Counsel for Lack of Objection to Properly Admitted Evidence: Prior to trial, the Justice's Court granted defendant's motion in limine to exclude evidence of prior crimes or wrongs. However, on direct examination, the complaining witness stated that defendant had never been physical with her before, so the state moved to allow impeachment of the witness by asking questions relating to a prior conviction of defendant for assaulting the same victim. Defendant's counsel did not object, the motion was granted, and evidence of the prior assault was allowed. Following conviction, defendant appealed on grounds that the evidence was improperly admitted and that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to object to the prior crimes evidence. The District Court held that defendant's reliance on the motion in limine did not preserve the issue for appeal and that the evidence was properly admitted for impeachment purposes. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The trial court acted within its discretion and did not act arbitrarily without conscientious judgment or exceed the bounds of reason by allowing evidence of defendant's prior conviction for impeachment purposes, and defense counsel could not be considered ineffective for failing to object to properly admitted evidence. St. v. Parker, 2007 MT 243, 339 M 211, 169 P3d 380 (2007).

No Prejudice to Defendant When Assistance of Counsel Not Deficient: Following conviction for deliberate homicide, Sellner filed a petition for postconviction relief based on ineffective assistance of counsel, contending that counsel was deficient in: (1) failing to investigate and present a case for justifiable use of force; (2) abandoning an attempted mitigated deliberate homicide defense; (3) pursuing a defense based on a civil suit filed against defendant; (4) failing to offer a "failure to agree" instruction to the jury; and (5) making other errors. The Supreme Court applied the Strickland test to determine whether counsel's performance was deficient and prejudicial, addressing each argument in turn, and concluded that Sellner's contentions of deficient counsel were unfounded. Absent a showing of deficient counsel, Sellner could not show prejudice, and the denial of the petition for postconviction relief was affirmed. Sellner v. St., 2004 MT 205, 322 M 310, 95 P3d 708 (2004), following St. v. Hubbel, 2001 MT 31, 304 M 184, 20 P3d 111 (2001).

Stipulation Precluding Need to Bring Evidence of Insurance Settlement Before Jury: Dill suffered damages after being hit as a pedestrian by a vehicle operated by Jardine. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company (State Farm) provided both liability insurance for Jardine and underinsured motorist coverage for Dill. Dill maintained that State Farm's settlement of the underlying liability claim against Jardine was admissible as relevant under Rules 401 and 402, M.R.Ev., and as impeachment evidence pursuant to Rule 801(d)(2), M.R.Ev., and this rule. However, it was not necessary to bring evidence of the settlement before the jury in light of the fact that State Farm stipulated that it had paid Dill the liability policy limit on behalf of Jardine and would pay any jury verdict that exceeded that amount up to the policy limit under the underinsured motorist policy. Simple knowledge that the policy limits were paid was sufficient. Dill v. District Court, 1999 MT 85, 294 M 134, 979 P2d 188, 56 St. Rep. 350 (1999).

Limited Admissibility of Settlement Agreement to Show Witness Bias: Although the introduction at trial of offers to compromise and settlement agreements is forbidden under Rule 408, M.R.Ev., settlements may be admitted for limited purposes, such as proving bias or prejudice of a witness, in accordance with this rule. In the present case, plaintiff's counsel questioned one of the settling parties extensively regarding a settlement agreement and whether the party would benefit under the agreement if defendants prevailed. The witness admitted that he would gain under the agreement. The cross-examination adequately brought out the witness's bias, and the jury had sufficient evidence of the nature and effect of the settlement agreement to judge the credibility of the testimony. Therefore, the trial court did not err in limiting the admission of the settlement agreement to show the bias of the witness. In re Estate of DeCock, 278 M 437, 925 P2d 488, 53 St. Rep. 992 (1996).

Cross-Examination of Witness Regarding Civil Action Against Defendant Allowable: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court adopted the majority view from other jurisdictions that the proper approach to the question of whether a defendant may cross-examine a witness regarding a contemplated civil action against the defendant is to allow the cross-examination. Nevertheless, in the present case, the evidence of aggravated assault by defendant was so overwhelming that the failure of the trial court to allow cross-examination regarding a contemplated civil action would not have materially affected the jury's verdict and was thus harmless error. St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994), discussed and distinguished in St. v. Milton, 280 M 142, 930 P2d 28, 53 St. Rep. 1337 (1996). See also St. v. Underwood, 281 NW 2d 337 (1979), St. v. Ferguson, 450 NE 2d 265 (1983), and Wooten v. St., 464 S 2d 640 (1985).

Exclusion of Witness's Earlier Crimes — Impeachment by Showing Bias — Criminal History in Offer of Proof: Hone, a witness to an assault, was on parole from a homicide conviction at the time of the assault. It was not error for the District Court to grant a motion in limine to prevent defense counsel from using that conviction for impeachment under an offer of proof, supposedly showing bias, that "he, Hone, would personally see to it that [defendant] served time in prison because a year at the pen had done him, Hone, a lot of good". There was no record that there was an offer to restrict the testimony to the admissible portion. Sloan v. St., 236 M 100, 768 P2d 1365, 46 St. Rep. 214 (1989), followed in St. v. Haskins, 255 M 202, 841 P2d 542, 49 St. Rep. 922 (1992).

Evidence of Witness's Misrepresentations and Omissions Improperly Excluded — "Collateral Matters" Rule Incorrectly Applied: The District Court excluded evidence of a witness's misrepresentations and omissions after holding that the evidence constituted impeachment on collateral matters. The Supreme Court found the exclusion of evidence improper on two issues: the issue of the credibility of the witness and the issue of punitive damages. Further, the Supreme Court noted that the rule on collateral matters was abolished in favor of the relevancy approach contained in this rule. Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988), followed in St. v. Kowalski, 252 M 166, 827 P2d 1253, 49 St. Rep. 197 (1992), and McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that evidence of the defendant's bid on state trust land, for which it had no use, was properly admitted to prove the plaintiffs' punitive damages claim as it was relevant to whether the defendant was acting maliciously toward the plaintiffs.

Objection Sustained on Defendant's Cross-Examination of Expert Regarding Motive and Bias: The District Court did not err in sustaining the state's objection to defendant's cross-examination of an expert witness pertaining to the expert's bias and hostile feelings because the cross-examination went beyond the state's direct examination and was irrelevant, having no bearing on the expert's testimony as a coroner. Furthermore, the sustained objection did not prevent the defendant from pursuing a related line of inquiry, the defendant could have called the coroner during his case in chief, and the defendant failed to make any timely offer of proof in accordance with Rule 103(a), M.R.Ev., instead raising the issue for the first time on appeal. St. v. Atlas, 224 M 92, 728 P2d 421, 43 St. Rep. 2042 (1986).

Applicability of False Exculpatory Statement Not Related to Crime Charged: Defendant claimed that a false voluntary statement he gave to a deputy sheriff prior to the time he was a suspect in the homicide should not have been admitted. He argued that since the statement was not made regarding the homicide, it showed no consciousness of guilt and unlawful intent. The Supreme Court found that the suspicious circumstances about which he gave a false explanation tended to connect him to the homicide regardless of the reason for the statement. The court cited its decision in St. v. Goltz, 197 M 361, 642 P2d 1079 (1982), that a false exculpatory statement may be used as evidence of consciousness of guilt and unlawful intent. St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Admission of Letter From Defendant to Witness Not Error: The trial court did not err in admitting a note written in jail by the defendant to a witness during the trial. The defendant gave the note to a deputy, saying he assumed the deputy would have to read it before delivering the note. The deputy read the note, then turned it over to the prosecutor who offered it in evidence to impeach the witness. Although the defendant contended that the deputy's passing of the note to the prosecutor constituted an illegal search, the defendant handed the unsealed note to the deputy. The contents were visible, and the note was not placed in the U.S. mail. Therefore, no search occurred. The letter was properly admitted to impeach the witness. St. v. Doll, 214 M 390, 692 P2d 473, 42 St. Rep. 40 (1985).

False Exculpatory Statements: The defendant in a criminal action falsely assured her employer that the money she is accused of stealing was deposited in her personal checking account. The statements made by the defendant are admissible to impeach the defendant and also to prove consciousness of guilt and unlawful intent. Her statements are not admissions but false exculpatory statements which are admissible. St. v. Goltz, 197 M 361, 642 P2d 1079, 39 St. Rep. 613 (1982).

Proposed Jury Instructions — Definition of "Impeach" — Consideration of Instructions as a Whole: A defendant was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault. On appeal, he alleged error in the failure to give a jury instruction on the definition of "impeach". The Supreme Court held that the definition was not necessary because the jury was fully instructed on that aspect of the law and defense counsel had not been precluded from arguing his theory of the case. Another alleged error was in the failure to give an instruction outlining certain types of evidence that could serve to impeach a witness' testimony. The Supreme Court said that although it would not have been error to give such a specific instruction, it was unnecessary. The instructions given contained the substance of this omitted instruction. The instructions as a whole were considered in determining adequacy. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

Impeaching of One's Own Witness: Under existing Montana law, a party can impeach his own witness by contradiction or prior inconsistent statement when he shows surprise and prejudice or where the witness is hostile. As a practical consideration, it is likely that a party can impeach his own witness as the need arises. The corollary to the tradition rule not allowing impeachment of one's own witness, that a party is bound by the testimony of his witness, is contained in Montana case law, and to the extent those cases are inconsistent with subsection (b) of this rule, they are expressly superseded. (Superseding Tebay Land & Livestock Co. v. Hastie, 64 M 509, 210 P 605 (1922); Sommerville v. Greenhood, 65 M 101, 210 P 1048 (1922); and Welch v. Nepstad, 135 M 65, 337 P2d 14 (1959).) St. v. Hart, 191 M 375, 625 P2d 21, 38 St. Rep. 133 (1981); St. v. Fitzpatrick, 186 M 187, 606 P2d 1343, 37 St. Rep. 194 (1980). See also St. v. Pease, 222 M 455, 724 P2d 153, 43 St. Rep. 1417 (1986).

Impeachment of Witness' Testimony as to Repair Feasibility: Plaintiffs' rebuttal testimony offered for impeachment of one of defendants' central witnesses on the crucial issue of practicability or feasibility of repairs, an issue raised by defendants in their case in chief, should have been allowed under the exception to the general rule of excluding evidence of subsequent repairs when, as here, the evidence was not offered as proof of negligence. Lawlor v. County of Flathead, 177 M 508, 582 P2d 751 (1978).

State v. Pelletier: Protecting the Balance Between Montana Rules of Evidence 404 and 607, Monroe, 83 Mont. L. Rev. 171 (2022).

Rule 608. Evidence of character and conduct of witness.

Commission Comments

(a) Opinion and reputation evidence of character. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 608(a). This subdivision is a continuation of Rules 404 and 405 on the admissibility and methods of proof of character evidence. Rule 404(a)(3) contains a cross reference to Article VI and allows evidence of character to be admissible under this rule as an exception to the general rule that character evidence is inadmissible to prove conduct. Rule 405(a) provides, "in all cases in which evidence of character...is admissible, proof may be made by testimony as to reputation or by testimony in the form of an opinion".

Montana law has long recognized that character evidence is admissible for the purpose of impeachment, but has generally restricted the method of proof to reputation evidence. Section 93-1901-11, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides in part, "A witness may be impeached by the party against whom he was called...by evidence that his general reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity is bad...". Case law has also allowed reputation for truth and veracity to be admissible for impeachment purposes. Territory v. Paul, 2 Mont. 314, 316 (1875); State v. McMillan, 20 Mont. 407, 410, 51 P 827 (1897); and Farleigh v. Kelly, 28 Mont. 421, 431, 72 P 756 (1903). Note that State v. Laverdure, 140 Mont. 236, 241, 370 P2d 489 (1962) held that it was reversible error to deny the defendant an opportunity to impeach the prosecution's chief witness by evidence that his reputation for truth and honesty was bad.

This subdivision's use of character for truthfulness or untruthfulness focuses the relevancy of character evidence. It does represent a change in the phrase contained in Section 93-1901-11, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], "general reputation for truth, honesty, or integrity...".

Proof of character evidence in the form of opinion testimony for impeachment purposes has never arisen under Montana case law, probably because of the language of the statute referring to reputation. The subdivision expands Montana law in this area by allowing character evidence for truthfulness or untruthfulness to be proved by opinion testimony. The Commission feels this is a sensible addition to Montana law for the reasons stated in the Commission Comments to Rule 405(a) allowing opinion evidence to prove character evidence generally.

The last clause of the subdivision incorporates the rule found in Section 93-1901-13, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], providing in part: "Evidence of the good character of a party is not admissible in civil action, nor a witness in any action, until the character of such party has been impeached...". Case law also supports this rule. In re William's Estate, 52 Mont. 192, 203, 156 P 1087 (1916); State v. Diedtman, 58 Mont. 13, 19, 190 P 117 (1920) (error to allow support of a witness' character before it was impeached); and State v. Jackson, 71 Mont. 421, 432, 230 P 370 (1924) (reversible error for not allowing presentation of good character after the witness' character had been impeached). A question can arise with this rule concerning whether or not an attack has been made upon the character of the witness so as to allow the introduction of good character evidence. The only Montana case on this point broadly construed what an attack constitutes: In re William's Estate, supra, found that the introduction of a deposition showing the witness was currently serving a sentence in prison was clearly an attack upon his character and allowed supporting evidence.

(b) Specific instances of conduct. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 608(b) except that the phrase "other than conviction of crime as provided in Rule 609", was deleted because of a change in that rule making conviction of a crime inadmissible for purposes of impeachment.

This subdivision is inconsistent with Section 93-1901-11, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], providing that a witness may be impeached by evidence that his "general reputation for truth, honesty and integrity is bad, but not by evidence of particular wrongful acts". The cases following this section indicate that specific wrongful acts were used for the cross-examination of witnesses that degraded their character, contrary to this section and Sections 93-2101-2, R.C.M. 1947 [26-2-302], and 93-2101-3, R.C.M. 1947 [26-2-401]. State v. Rogers, 31 Mont. 1, 6, 77 P 293 (1904); State v. Crowe, 39 Mont. 174, 177, 102 P 579 (1909); State v. Kanakaris, 54 Mont. 180, 184, 169 P 42 (1917); State v. Shannon, 95 Mont. 280, 288, 26 P2d 360 (1933). In Shannon, supra, the court indicated that asking questions on cross-examination which were related to the same offense for which the defendant was on trial was particularly harmful because this places before the jury assumptions which may not or could not be proven. In State v. Rivers, 133 Mont. 129, 134, 320 P2d 1004 (1958) the court found that cross-examination as to specific instances of misconduct was not only a violation of the statutory prohibition, but an invasion of a substantial right of the defendant; the questions asked the defendant related to the crime for which she was on trial.

There have been no Montana cases holding that a specific instance of conduct was improperly inquired into where the conduct was probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness. This is the standard imposed by the subdivision. The subdivision also contains the additional safeguard that the discretion of the court will determine whether a specific instance will be used at all. The court must consider the admissibility of this type of evidence, like any other impeaching evidence, under Rules 401 and 403. Also see Commission Comments to Rules 405(b) and 607. The Commission intends to change Montana law only to the extent that specific instances of conduct probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness and weighed by the trial court will be admissible. The Montana cases excluding specific instances of conduct would probably have the same result under this rule because they did not relate to these character traits.

There have been no Montana cases directly dealing with clause (2) of this subdivision, allowing impeachment of impeaching witnesses. However, in State v. Jackson, 71 Mont. 421, 433, 230 P 370 (1924), the court indicated through dicta, "It should be noted that no question arises here as to the impeachment of an impeaching witness.... Of course there must be a limit to such collateral inquiry, for in most instances testimony for and against the reputation of a witness for truth and veracity could be recruited ad infinitum".

The final paragraph of this subdivision provides the final safeguard against abuse under this rule. It states that an accused or any other witness does not waive his "privilege against self-incrimination when examined with respect to matters which relate only to credibility". This is not inconsistent with the longstanding rule in Montana that when a defendant testifies on his own behalf and denies he committed the crime, he waives his privilege against self-incrimination, and may be cross-examined as to the crime for which he is on trial. State v. Rogers, 31 Mont. 1, 7; State v. Smith, 57 Mont. 349, 359, 188 P 644 (1920); and State v. London, 131 Mont. 410, 436, 310 P2d 571 (1957). Nor is it inconsistent with the rule that when a defendant testifies on his own behalf he is subject to the same rules of impeachment as any other witness. State v. Schnepel, 23 Mont. 523, 525, 59 P 927 (1899); and State v. Inich, 55 Mont. 1, 13, 173 P 230 (1918). As indicated in State v. Rogers, supra, any witness is granted the right to be protected from questions which have a tendency to subject him to punishment for a felony, unless it relates to the fact in issue. Section 93-2101-2, R.C.M. 1947 [26-2-302]. Therefore this paragraph is consistent with Montana law.

Case Notes

Mazurek Hearing — Rape Shield Exception Regarding Victim's Prior False Accusation of Sexual Assault — District Court Properly Excluded Evidence of Minor's Statement — Forensic Interview and Testimony Unclear — Probative Value of Minor's Statement Limited — District Court Balanced Minor's Rights and Defendant's Right to Confront Accuser. St. v. Hansen, 2022 MT 163, 409 Mont. 495, 515 P.3d 799.

Exception to Prohibition on Character Evidence Limited to Cross-Examination and May Not Exceed Scope of Direct Examination — Reversible Error: A defendant was charged with partner or family member assault (PFMA) and stalking, as well as solicitation and witness tampering charges resulting from the defendant allegedly requesting that his family members convince the alleged victim not to testify against him. The victim did not appear in court at the trial, leading the state to dismiss the PFMA and stalking charges and move forward with only the tampering charge. During the state's case-in-chief, the state solicited testimony and sought to introduce evidence regarding bad acts related to the defendant's PFMA and stalking charges through multiple witnesses. The defendant objected under Rule 404, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), arguing that the PFMA and stalking charges were irrelevant to proving the elements of the tampering charge. The District Court overruled the objections, reasoning that the testimony and evidence could be properly used to impeach the defendant's credibility. On review, the Supreme Court sought to clarify the interplay between Rule 404 and Rule 608, M.R.Ev. The Supreme Court stated that while Rule 404(a)(3) provides an exception to the general rule that evidence of a person's character is not available for the purpose of proving action in conformity therewith, this exception is limited to the extent provided in Rule 608. Rule 608 provides that specific instances of a witness' character may be proven exclusively on cross-examination and only if the instances are probative toward truthfulness or untruthfulness. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court's flawed understanding of Rule 404 and Rule 608 contributed to numerous erroneous evidentiary rulings, resulting in cumulative error requiring a reversal of the defendant's conviction. St. v. Smith, 2020 MT 304, 402 Mont. 206, 476 P.3d 1178.

Convictions for False Statements Admissible for Truthfulness — Finding Regarding Ability to Pay Required to Impose Court Costs: The defendant appealed his conviction on evidentiary grounds and appealed the imposition of court costs. The Supreme Court affirmed that prior convictions for false statements to law enforcement may be admitted for the limited purpose of demonstrating the defendant's lack of credibility. The Supreme Court reversed the imposition of court costs, ruling that a District Court cannot impose court costs without a finding regarding the defendant's ability to pay, and remanded for that purpose. St. v. Frey, 2018 MT 238, 393 Mont. 59, 427 P.3d 86. See also St. v. Yeaton, 2021 MT 312, 406 Mont. 465, 500 P.3d 583.

Character Evidence Admissible to Rebut Evidence of Good Character Presented by Defendant: The defendant offered evidence that he was peaceful and trustworthy. The District Court allowed the state to present other character evidence in rebuttal, including cross-examination on specific incidents of untrustworthiness. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the state to rebut the evidence presented by the defendant. St. v. Reinert, 2018 MT 111, 391 Mont. 263, 419 P.3d 662.

Indistinguishable DUI Reports — Preclusion of Defendant From Introducing or Referencing Reports for Purpose of Impeachment — Abuse of Discretion: A defendant accused of DUI sought to introduce police reports from other cases prepared by the reporting officer. The reports contained identical or nearly identical language that led to at least one mistake in another case in which the officer reported that the suspect had failed a field sobriety test that the officer did not administer. Because the reports were relevant and admissible to attack the police officer's credibility and truthfulness, the District Court abused its discretion by granting the state's motion in limine to preclude the defendant from introducing or referencing the arresting officer's reports for purposes of impeachment. St. v. Zimmerman, 2018 MT 94, 391 Mont. 210, 417 P.3d 289.

Numerous Erroneous Rulings Amounting to Cumulative Error — Reversal Required: The defendant appealed his conviction for deliberate homicide, arguing that the District Court had made several erroneous rulings that required a new trial: (1) excluding as hearsay statements the victim had made to the defendant, which the defendant asserted showed his state of mind and the victim's and were relevant to his defense of justifiable use of force, and (2) preventing the defendant from impeaching the state's expert witness with evidence that the expert witness had mishandled other autopsies and testified falsely in other cases. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a new trial, concluding that the District Court had erred in excluding the victim's statements and preventing the defendant from impeaching the state's expert witness and that, although the errors might not individually warrant reversal, the cumulative effect prejudiced the defendant's ability to present his justifiable use of force defense and denied him a fair trial. St. v. Cunningham, 2018 MT 56, 390 Mont. 408, 414 P.3d 289.

Defendant Not Allowed to Cross-Examine Arresting Officer on Reasons for His Administrative Leave — Fair Trial Not Denied: The defendant was charged with DUI. His trial was delayed because the arresting officer, who was scheduled to testify, was on administrative leave. Prior to trial, the Justice Court ruled that the defense could not cross-examine the officer about the reasons for his leave. After a jury convicted him of DUI, the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the Justice Court did not abuse its discretion in disallowing the cross-examination because the defendant had failed to show that the conduct underlying the officer's leave was probative of his truthfulness. St. v. Krenning, 2016 MT 202, 384 Mont. 352, 383 P.3d 721.

Defendant Prohibited From Questioning Incest Victim at Trial About Prior Rape Allegations Without Evidence: During discovery, the defendant obtained a single-page report written by a social worker that contained a reference to the incest victim's allegation of a prior rape. At trial, the District Court determined that the report was not admissible under St. v. Anderson, 211 Mont. 272, 686 P.2d 193 (1984), because the reported allegation had not been proven false or admitted to be false and prohibited the defendant from questioning the victim about the existence and veracity of prior allegations. The defendant appealed, arguing that the District Court had applied Anderson incorrectly. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that a defendant is not entitled to question the victim on the stand about prior false allegations if there is no evidence that the victim had made a prior false accusation. St. v. Ring, 2014 MT 49, 374 Mont. 109, 321 P.3d 800, following St. v. Anderson, 211 Mont. 272, 686 P.2d 193 (1984), and State ex rel. Mazurek v. District Court, 277 Mont. 349, 922 P.2d 474 (1996). See also St. v. Hoff, 2016 MT 244, 385 Mont. 85, 385 P.3d 945.

Witness's Decade-Old Forgery Charge Not Admitted — No Abuse of Discretion by Court: The defendant was convicted of felony partner or family member assault based on injuries that he inflicted on his girlfriend. The girlfriend testified against the defendant, but the District Court refused to admit character evidence of the girlfriend's decade-old felony forgery charge due to the remoteness in time. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's evidentiary ruling, reasoning that while forgery indicates dishonesty, the girlfriend's testimony alone did not provide the only evidence of assault. Moreover, the forgery charge was over a decade old and the girlfriend was not convicted. St. v. Thompson, 2012 MT 208, 366 Mont. 260, 286 P.3d 581.

No Right to Confront Witness With Irrelevant Evidence: Dunning contended that his constitutional right to confront witnesses was violated when he was not allowed to question the friend of the victim of a kidnapping and sexual assault regarding the victim's allegedly untruthful statement that she was pregnant in order to establish the victim's propensity to lie. However, the testimony would have been an improper attack on the victim using irrelevant evidence, and the constitutional right does not allow a defendant to confront a witness with irrelevant evidence. The possibility of the friend's testimony prejudicing the jury outweighed the probative value of the testimony, so the testimony was properly excluded. St. v. Dunning, 2008 MT 427, 347 M 443, 198 P3d 828 (2008).

Exclusion of Assault Victim's Prior Assault Record — Probative Value Outweighed by Prejudicial Effect: Grixti was arrested for family member assault against his wife. At trial, Grixti sought to introduce evidence of the wife's prior family member assault against Grixti, but the trial court granted the state's motion in limine excluding evidence of the wife's prior assault. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that evidence of a witness's prior crimes and wrongs is inadmissible to show action in conformity with the prior crime under Rule 403, M.R.Ev., but may be admissible under Rule 404, M.R.Ev., to prove motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident and under this rule, to attack a witness's character if probative of truthfulness or untruthfulness. However, in this case, the trial court found that the potential prejudicial effect of the wife's prior arrest record likely outweighed any probative value regarding the wife's character for truthfulness or untruthfulness. The Supreme Court deferred to the trial court's discretion in making evidentiary character determinations and affirmed the grant of the motion in limine. St. v. Grixti, 2005 MT 296, 329 M 330, 124 P3d 177 (2005).

No Prejudice to Defendant When Assistance of Counsel Not Deficient: Following conviction for deliberate homicide, Sellner filed a petition for postconviction relief based on ineffective assistance of counsel, contending that counsel was deficient in: (1) failing to investigate and present a case for justifiable use of force; (2) abandoning an attempted mitigated deliberate homicide defense; (3) pursuing a defense based on a civil suit filed against defendant; (4) failing to offer a "failure to agree" instruction to the jury; and (5) making other errors. The Supreme Court applied the Strickland test to determine whether counsel's performance was deficient and prejudicial, addressing each argument in turn, and concluded that Sellner's contentions of deficient counsel were unfounded. Absent a showing of deficient counsel, Sellner could not show prejudice, and the denial of the petition for postconviction relief was affirmed. Sellner v. St., 2004 MT 205, 322 M 310, 95 P3d 708 (2004), following St. v. Hubbel, 2001 MT 31, 304 M 184, 20 P3d 111 (2001).

Unsubstantiated Discovery Request for Criminal History of All State Witnesses Properly Denied: DuBray requested discovery of the criminal history records of each of the state's witnesses in a homicide trial, arguing that he was entitled to the records for impeachment purposes. The District Court denied the request, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Although information about a witness's prior convictions may be admissible under certain circumstances, a wholesale request for the production of records of all witnesses, absent an explanation or substantiation of the evidence sought or the potential use of the evidence, was unjustified and beyond the purpose of open discovery requirements in criminal cases. St. v. DuBray, 2003 MT 255, 317 M 377, 77 P3d 247 (2003).

Error in Not Excluding Results of Independent Blood Alcohol Test Taken After DUI Arrestee Released From Custody: When Krause was picked up for DUI, he refused to take a Breathalyzer test and his license was revoked. After booking, Krause was released from custody, went to the hospital, and requested a blood alcohol test. The state subsequently obtained the results of the blood test by investigative subpoena, and the District Court allowed admission of the test results at Krause's trial over his objection. Krause appealed on grounds that the test results should not have been admitted because they were not relevant to any issue in the case. Krause pointed out that the decision as to the validity of an arrest must be based on information that the officer had at the time and cannot be justified bolstered by information obtained after the fact. The state argued that the evidence of the blood test was introduced to substantiate the credibility of the arresting officer's observations and opinion, not to retrospectively validate the officer's belief that Krause had been driving under the influence. The Supreme Court agreed with Krause. The officer's character for truthfulness was not attacked, nor did evidence of Krause's blood test refer to the officer's character for truthfulness. Thus, there was no legitimate purpose for the introduction of the blood test evidence, and the District Court should have excluded it. St. v. Krause, 2002 MT 63, 309 M 174, 44 P3d 493 (2002).

"Were They Lying" Questions to Defendant Not Categorically Improper: Hart argued that the lower court erred in allowing the prosecutor to ask him if other witnesses had lied when they testified that Hart owned the cattle prod used in an alleged assault after he had testified that the prod belonged to the victim. The Supreme Court held that it was declining to follow the line of cases that held "were they lying" questions were always proper or the line of cases that held that they were always improper. The Supreme Court stated that the admissibility of "were they lying" questions was discretionary with the trial court. In the instant case, the questions were proper because the case came down to whether the jury believed the defendant or the victim and the other eyewitnesses. Therefore, the prosecutor's asking Hart if the other witnesses lied helped focus the jury's attention on the central issue of the case. St. v. Hart, 2000 MT 332, 303 M 71, 15 P3d 917, 57 St. Rep. 1398 (2000).

Cross-Examination Regarding Unrelated Incidents of Prior Sexual Abuse Properly Limited: The District Court did not err in limiting defendant's cross-examination of his ex-wife regarding two unrelated prior incidents of sexual abuse, one involving the ex-wife and the other involving her infant daughter. Defendant was allowed to present closing arguments concerning the ex-wife's motive, bias, or prejudice, based on evidence in the record. However, allowing cross-examination regarding the two prior unrelated incidents would have created unfair prejudice against the ex-wife and confused the issues for the jury. St. v. MacKinnon, 1998 MT 78, 288 M 329, 957 P2d 23, 55 St. Rep. 331 (1998).

Impeachment of Credibility With Evidence of Prior False Information Held Not to Violate Rule 609: At his trial on various charges involving sex with boys and girls, Martin sought to prevent the prosecutor from cross-examining his wife as to her conviction on a perjury charge by arguing that evidence of his wife's prior conviction was precluded by Rule 609, M.R.Ev. The Supreme Court distinguished St. v. Gollehon, 262 M 1, 864 P2d 249 (1993), and held that the District Court properly allowed the cross-examination by prohibiting the prosecution from inquiring whether Martin's wife had been convicted of a crime but allowing the prosecutor to inquire whether she had provided false alibi testimony. St. v. Martin, 279 M 185, 926 P2d 1380, 53 St. Rep. 1109 (1996), followed, although the error in restricting cross-examination was found to be harmless, in St. v. Maier, 1999 MT 51, 293 M 403, 977 P2d 298, 56 St. Rep. 208 (1999).

Failure to Offer Testimony of Past Conduct as Character Evidence — Issue Not Preserved for Appeal: Allen argued that the District Court erred when it sustained the state's objection to Allen's inquiry regarding a previous physical altercation between Allen and Evans. In order to properly preserve the issue for appeal, Allen should have offered the testimony as character evidence under this rule, thereby affording the trial court an opportunity to evaluate the question pursuant to this rule. Because Allen failed to argue to the trial court that he be allowed to question Evans as to credibility, failing as well to raise the issue of admissibility, the merits of the argument could not be addressed for the first time on appeal. St. v. Allen, 278 M 326, 925 P2d 470, 53 St. Rep. 935 (1996), following Buhr v. Flathead County, 268 M 223, 886 P2d 381 (1994), and Marsh v. Overland, 274 M 21, 905 P2d 1088 (1995).

Evidence of Witnesses' Prior Crimes Inadmissible — No Violation of Right to Confront Witnesses: Gollehon contended that refusing to allow his questioning of the state's eyewitnesses, who happened to be state prison inmates, as to their prior crimes violated his constitutional right to confront the witnesses against him. However, proof of the witnesses' conduct would require examination of extrinsic evidence, which is inadmissible under this rule, and evidence of prior convictions, expressly prohibited under Rule 609, M.R.Ev. Balancing the probative value of the evidence with its potential prejudicial effect, the Supreme Court held that Gollehon's right to confrontation was not violated by the trial court's refusal to allow cross-examination of the witnesses' past criminal conduct. St. v. Gollehon, 262 M 1, 864 P2d 249, 50 St. Rep. 1250 (1993), distinguished in St. v. Martin, 279 M 185, 926 P2d 1380, 53 St. Rep. 1109 (1996).

Evidence of Other Crimes by Defendant Inadmissible to Bolster Credibility of Witness: Based on the testimony of witness Grotjohn, defendant Cameron was convicted of the sale of dangerous drugs (now criminal distribution of dangerous drugs). In order to explain Grotjohn's behavior as a witness at trial, the state introduced evidence over defendant's objection of a gun threat made by Cameron against Grotjohn. The Supreme Court held that the evidence of the gun threat was inadmissible because Grotjohn's reputation for truthfulness was not attacked at trial. The evidence of the threat was also inadmissible because under the rule in St. v. Just, 184 M 262, 602 P2d 957 (1979), as modified by St. v. Matt, 249 M 136, 814 P2d 52 (1991), the state failed to give written notice of the evidence to be admitted and the purpose of the evidence. Moreover, there was no similarity between the gun threat and the charged crime of sale of dangerous drugs (now criminal distribution of dangerous drugs). The District Court therefore committed reversible error in admitting the evidence of the gun threat. St. v. Cameron, 255 M 14, 839 P2d 1281, 49 St. Rep. 861 (1992), clarified, with regard to the applicability of the corpus delicti rule, in St. v. Hansen, 1999 MT 253, 296 M 282, 989 P2d 338, 56 St. Rep. 997 (1999).

Character Evidence Based Solely on Witness's Testimony Concerning Material Fact in Conflict With Defendant's Testimony Inadmissible: As set out in St. v. Webb, 252 M 248, 828 P2d 1351, 49 St. Rep. 236 (1992), character evidence regarding a witness is not admissible solely on the basis that the witness has testified concerning a material fact and that the testimony conflicts with that of defendant. St. v. Lyons, 254 M 360, 838 P2d 397, 49 St. Rep. 730 (1992).

Opinion Evidence of Witness Credibility Allowed Only After Character Attacked: The state contended that a drug informant's character for truthfulness was attacked on numerous occasions by defendant's questions regarding informant's use of drugs, rendering admissible during rebuttal the testimony by a Sheriff's detective as to informant's character. However, the defense did not offer opinion or reputation evidence or otherwise attack informant's veracity as part of its own case. Citing St. v. Deach, 699 P2d 811 (Wash. Ct. App. 1985), and U.S. v. Jackson, 588 F2d 1046 (5th Cir. 1979), the Supreme Court noted that even though defense witnesses disputed informant's testimony and offered conflicting testimony, neither contradictory testimony nor extensive cross-examination constituted an attack on informant's character for veracity. To hold otherwise would result in admitting opinion testimony regarding veracity in virtually every case. The state, having opened the door to informant's veracity, was then allowed to put the full weight of the detective's drug enforcement experience behind his opinion testimony regarding informant's credibility. Admission of the testimony constituted reversible error. St. v. Webb, 252 M 248, 828 P2d 1351, 49 St. Rep. 236 (1992).

Extrinsic Evidence of Witness's Conduct Not Allowed: Defendant sought to introduce evidence of a witness's character through the statements of other witnesses instead of during cross-examination. The District Court properly held that proof of a specific instance of a witness's conduct is not allowed through the introduction of extrinsic evidence. St. v. Kowalski, 252 M 166, 827 P2d 1253, 49 St. Rep. 197 (1992). See also St. v. Quinlan, 2021 MT 15, 403 Mont. 91, 479 P.3d 982, holding that a witness's denial of having lied in an instance inquired about on cross-examination does not open the door for a party to otherwise prove the lie with extrinsic evidence.

Report of Earlier Abuse Irrelevant and Inadmissible: In a trial for sexual intercourse without consent, the District Court erred on relevancy grounds by allowing a social worker to testify about an earlier report of abuse involving defendant's wife and son. St. v. Hensley, 250 M 478, 821 P2d 1029, 48 St. Rep. 1018 (1991).

Admissibility of Extrinsic Evidence Regarding Informant's Drug Use as Relevant to Motive for False Testimony: A trial court's discretion in exercising control and excluding evidence of a witness's bias or motive to testify falsely becomes operative only after the constitutionally required threshold level of inquiry has been afforded the defendant. Therefore, subject to the limitations of Rules 403 and 611, M.R.Ev., a defendant should be afforded latitude in cross-examination and be allowed to introduce extrinsic evidence regarding an informant's alleged habitual drug use as relevant to the informant's motive to testify falsely, if denied by the informant. St. v. Gommenginger, 242 M 265, 790 P2d 455, 47 St. Rep. 681 (1990), followed in St. v. Haskins, 255 M 202, 841 P2d 542, 49 St. Rep. 922 (1992), and St. v. Milton, 280 M 142, 930 P2d 28, 53 St. Rep. 1337 (1996). However, see St. v. Allen, 276 M 298, 916 P2d 112, 53 St. Rep. 403 (1996).

Inconsistent Statement by Victim — Character Not Automatically at Issue: An inconsistent statement in a victim's account of a sexual assault does not automatically put her character in issue and thus does not open the door for evidence of any past misconduct. St. v. Courville, 236 M 253, 769 P2d 44, 46 St. Rep. 338 (1989).

Exclusion of Evidence of Victim's Later Crimes Proper — Balance of Prejudice and Probative Value: The District Court properly excluded evidence, under Rules 608 and 609, M.R.Ev., of pending or resolved criminal charges against the victim of an assault unless the state alluded to the victim's good character, truthfulness, or veracity. As noted in Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988), evidence bearing on the issue of the credibility of a witness, in order to be admissible, must be more probative than prejudicial, and the District Court must balance prejudice and probative value pursuant to Rules 401 and 403, M.R.Ev. St. v. Hammer, 233 M 101, 759 P2d 979, 45 St. Rep. 1326 (1988).

Defendant Portrayed as Loving Husband — Videotaped Testimony Concerning Extramarital Affair Admissible: The District Court did not err in allowing videotaped testimony of defendant's former lover concerning an extramarital affair when defendant himself opened the door on the relevance of character evidence by portraying himself as a loving husband. The videotaped testimony was relevant to rebuttal and motive. St. v. Atlas, 224 M 92, 728 P2d 421, 43 St. Rep. 2042 (1986).

Bench Warrants for Arrest of Witness — Properly Excluded: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in excluding copies of bench warrants for the arrest of a witness when it allowed inquiry into a specific instance of conduct, the witness' failure to appear on the warrants, and would have admitted the exhibits if the witness had denied his failure to appear. St. v. Short, 217 M 40, 702 P2d 979, 42 St. Rep. 1026 (1985).

Cross-Examination — Pending Charges Against Witness — Trial Court Discretion: When a prosecution witness admitted under cross-examination that he had failed to appear on bench warrants from the State of Washington and that the Washington charges involved an allegation that he had stolen defendant's property, the witness asserted his privilege against self-incrimination. The District Court's limiting of the extent of the cross-examination on the pending charges did not violate defendant's right to confront witnesses and was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion. The privilege against self-incrimination is not waived by testifying for the prosecution. St. v. Short, 217 M 40, 702 P2d 979, 42 St. Rep. 1026 (1985).

Extrinsic Evidence of Witness's Conduct — Credibility: The defendant was tried and convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and aggravated kidnapping. The defense was not allowed to cross-examine prosecution witness concerning her own specific acts of conduct except to show the defendant did not initiate his contacts with the present victim through a common scheme, design, or plan. Evidence of witness's extrinsic acts is not allowable to attack the witness' credibility. St. v. Norris, 212 M 427, 689 P2d 243, 41 St. Rep. 1841 (1984).

Sex Crime Victim's Past Sexual Conduct and False Accusations — Admissibility — Veracity of Victim: Although there is a compelling interest in favor of preserving the integrity of a sex crime trial and preventing it from becoming a trial of the alleged victim and a general policy against sordid probes into a victim's sexual past, evidence on an alleged victim's past sexual conduct is admissible on the issue of veracity. To limit or bar cross-examination when there is evidence of prior false accusations by the alleged victim restricts the constitutional right to confront witnesses. The evidence is admissible only if the prior accusations were proven false or admitted to be false. If the prior charge was not adjudicated, the evidence is inadmissible. A separate hearing on the issue should be held outside the jury's presence. The evidence is properly barred when its only value is to prejudice the alleged victim's character and reputation. St. v. Anderson, 211 M 272, 686 P2d 193, 41 St. Rep. 1357 (1984), modifying St. v. McSloy, 127 M 265, 261 P2d 663 (1953), and followed in St. v. Steffes, 269 M 214, 887 P2d 1196, 51 St. Rep. 1463 (1994). Anderson was discussed in St. v. Van Pelt, 247 M 99, 805 P2d 549, 48 St. Rep. 109 (1991), and State ex rel. Mazurek v. District Court, 277 M 349, 922 P2d 474, 53 St. Rep. 678 (1996).

Other Similar Conduct of Witness — Impeachment: At trial of defendant convicted of aggravated assault arising from fight outside a bar, it was reversible error for the court to allow the prosecutor to interrogate one of defendant's witnesses as to past instances of misconduct of the witness at the bar, unconnected to the assault, for the purpose of impeaching the witness. St. v. White, 202 M 491, 658 P2d 1111, 40 St. Rep. 235 (1983), followed in Unmack v. Deaconess Medical Center, 1998 MT 262, 291 M 280, 967 P2d 783, 55 St. Rep. 1080 (1998), ruling that admission of character evidence regarding a physician witness who was also a licensed attorney concerning disciplinary action taken against the witness as an attorney was improper and clearly prejudicial because attorney character evidence was not probative and had no relevance as to credibility as an expert medical witness.

Impeachment by Reference to Remaining Silent: Defendant charged with burglary told his second attorney on the date set for trial that he had an alibi and intended to rely on it. In his direct testimony, defendant testified concerning his alibi and that he said nothing to the police during and after his arrest and never confessed to the crime. The State, on cross-examination, repeatedly asked why he had not raised his alibi defense earlier. Defendant's direct testimony opened the door to the impeachment inquiry, and the prosecutor's questions were proper and did not violate his right against self-incrimination. Defendant could not cloak himself on direct examination with seeming innocence because of his silence following arrest and at the same time be immune from impeachment when, to attack his credibility, the same kind of silence could be shown to speak to his guilt. St. v. White, 200 M 123, 650 P2d 765, 39 St. Rep. 1619 (1982), distinguished in St. v. Furlong, 213 M 251, 690 P2d 986, 41 St. Rep. 2096 (1984).

Miranda Violation — Use of Evidence for Impeachment: Evidence inadmissible in the prosecution's case in chief due to Miranda violations is not barred for all other purposes and may be used for impeachment of accused. If the police willfully violate Miranda thinking that the evidence can still be used for impeachment, the case, like those involving coercion or duress, may be handled by the application of the traditional standards for evaluating voluntariness and trustworthiness. St. v. Cartwright, 200 M 91, 650 P2d 758, 39 St. Rep. 1598 (1982), following St. v. Smith, 168 M 93, 541 P2d 351 (1975); St. v. Buckley, 171 M 238, 557 P2d 283 (1976).

Burglary Defendant's Credibility — Past Criminal Conduct: In an attempt to evoke testimony from the witness (an attorney) that he had seen the burglary defendant on the evening of the crime, the prosecutor asked the witness if he had ever defended the defendant. The question was interrupted by defense counsel, and no answer was given. Because the prosecution presented ample evidence of the defendant's guilt, the question was not reversible error. St. v. Welling, 199 M 135, 647 P2d 852, 39 St. Rep. 1215 (1982).

Character of Victim — Right to Witness and Confrontation — Sexual Intercourse Without Consent: While the sixth amendment guarantees a criminal the right to testimony of witnesses in his favor, it does not guarantee him the right to any and all witnesses, regardless of their competency or knowledge. There is the competing interest of the fairness and reliability of the trial. Here, in a sexual intercourse without consent case, the defendant was precluded by these rules from calling witnesses to establish the victim's sexual views and from cross-examining the victim concerning a quote on her jacket ("Liquor in the front, poker in the back"). Since the victim's character is not in issue and her sexual views are not probative of the truthfulness, and it is clearly within the judge's discretion to exclude this evidence if it is irrelevant or too prejudicial, the Supreme Court found no merit in defendant's argument that he was denied his right to confront witnesses. St. v. Higley, 190 M 412, 621 P2d 1043, 37 St. Rep. 1942 (1980), followed in State ex rel. Mazurek v. District Court, 277 M 349, 922 P2d 474, 53 St. Rep. 678 (1996).

Evidence of Drug Use of Witnesses Inadmissible as Too Remote and Without Foundation: The defendant appealed her conviction for deliberate homicide and aggravated assault in part by contending that it was error to prohibit the defense from referring to the use of marijuana by the victims in the hours before the shootings. In St. v. Gleim, 17 M 17, 41 P 998 (1895), Montana has endorsed the majority rule requiring a showing that the witness was under the influence of drugs at the time the events about which he testified occurred before evidence of the witness' drug use is admissible. Implicit in the formulation of the Gleim rule is a recognition of the remoteness concept. The question of remoteness is directed to the discretion of the trial court. While remoteness is a matter that generally goes to the credibility of the evidence rather than to its admissibility, evidence can be excluded if it is so remote that it has no evidentiary value. Given the defendant's failure to lay a proper foundation that the witnesses were under the influence of drugs at the time of the material events in this case, exclusion of the evidence was justified both under the Gleim rule and under the remoteness doctrine. St. v. Sorenson, 190 M 155, 619 P2d 1185, 37 St. Rep. 1834 (1980).

Character Evidence to Demonstrate Motive in Testifying: The point of Rule 608, M.R.Ev., for the purposes of this appeal is that reference to specific instances of a witness's conduct for the purpose of proving his character for truthfulness or untruthfulness is never permitted on direct examination. This rule, in conjunction with Rules 403 and 405, M.R.Ev., supports the trial court limitation on impeachment evidence, which defendant argues should have been permitted to establish a prosecution witness's personal habits for marijuana use to demonstrate a profit motive in obtaining a conviction. St. v. McClean, 179 M 178, 587 P2d 20, 35 St. Rep. 1790 (1978).

Intimidation of Witnesses: When protection was immediately provided for two witnesses upon discovery that they were being intimidated and the jury had all the facts before it to weigh those witnesses' credibility, the District Court sufficiently guarded the defendant's rights and a mistrial was not warranted. St. v. Booke, 178 M 225, 583 P2d 405, 35 St. Rep. 1249 (1978), followed in St. v. Ferguson, 2005 MT 343, 330 M 103, 126 P3d 463 (2005).

Rule 609. Impeachment by evidence of conviction of crime.

Commission Comments

This rule is unlike either the Federal or Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 609 in that they provide that evidence of conviction of a crime is admissible for the purpose of attacking credibility. Each of those rules provide substantial limitations upon the admissibility of this type of evidence: the discretion of the court; a time limit; and a pardon, annulment, or certificate of rehabilitation making such evidence inadmissible. Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 609(a), (b), and (c). The latter subdivision also provides an "other equivalent procedure" and makes conviction inadmissible; while Montana does not have a certificate of rehabilitation, Article II, Section 28, 1972 Constitution of Montana, and Section 95-2227(3), R.C.M. 1947 [46-18-801], both provide that when a person is no longer under state supervision, his full rights of citizenship are restored. Adoption of this provision would mean that only those persons serving a sentence in prison, suspended sentence or on parole could be impeached by this method, and would severely limit the usefulness of the rule.

However, the Commission rejects the rule allowing impeachment by evidence of conviction of a crime, not only because of these Constitutional and statutory provisions but also and most importantly because of its low probative value in relation to credibility. The Commission does not accept as valid the theory that a person's willingness to break the law can automatically be translated into willingness to give false testimony. Advisory Committee Note to Federal Rule 609, 46 F.R.D. 161, 297, (1969). The Commission does believe that conviction of certain crimes is probative of credibility; however, it is the specific act of misconduct underlying the conviction which is really relevant, not whether it has led to a conviction. Allowing conviction of crime to be proved for the purpose of impeachment merely because it is a convenient method of proving the act of misconduct (Advisory Committee Note, Id.) is not acceptable to the Commission, particularly in light of Rule 608(b) allowing acts of misconduct to be admissible if they relate to credibility.

This rule is inconsistent with existing Montana law. Section 93-1901-11, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides the methods of impeachment and includes, "...it may be shown by the examination of the witness, or the record of the judgment, that he has been convicted of a felony". It is also admissible under Section 93-2101-2, R.C.M. 1947 [26-2-302]. Section 93-1901-11, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], was interpreted in State v. Coloff, 125 Mont. 31, 35, 231 P2d 343 (1951) to mean that the cross-examiner may ask the question, "Have you ever been convicted of a felony?" If the witness answers "Yes", then the inquiry is closed; if the witness answers "No", then proof may be made of conviction through the record of judgment. Montana also recognizes the rule that the witness may explain the felony conviction in an attempt to support his credibility. State v. McClellan, 23 Mont. 532, 538, 59 P 924 (1899); Osnes Livestock Co. v. Warren, 103 Mont. 284, 301, 62 P2d 206 (1936); and State v. Tully, 148 Mont. 166, 169, 418 P2d 549 (1966).

The Commission feels that, in addition to the reasons for rejecting the rule stated above, the present Montana practice can lead to one of two undesirable results. First, the mere fact that a witness can be asked whether he has been convicted of a felony can, in many instances, cause severe embarrassment on the part of the witness. This is particularly uncalled for where the conviction has no relation to credibility, such as manslaughter caused by an automobile accident. This could cause many witnesses to decide not to testify at all or, when the witness is a party, not to present or defend his side of the case at all. The fact that the witness can explain his conviction can simply add to the embarrassment and is no help. Second, when the witness answers that he has been convicted of a crime, no further inquiry is permitted. This can lead to confusion by jury members who see no connection between conviction of a crime and the case or to undue prejudice, particularly when the witness is a defendant testifying in his own behalf.

Compiler's Comments

1990 Amendment: Substituted gender neutral language for gender specific language. Amendment effective June 7, 1990.

Case Notes

Bifurcation of Trial for Aggravated DUI — Appropriate When Aggravating Factor Is Prior DUIs: The defendant in a trial for aggravated DUI had two prior DUI convictions. She requested that the trial be bifurcated so that if the jury found her guilty of driving under the influence of alcohol in the particular instance at issue in the first phase of trial, then the state could introduce evidence of her prior convictions in the second phase of trial. The Justice Court denied the request and allowed the state to discuss the prior DUIs in the opening and closing statements and during testimony. The District Court affirmed the Justice Court's decision. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, concluding that the introduction of the prior convictions was inherently prejudicial under Rules 403, 404(b), and 609, M.R.Ev. Because the aggravated DUI statute requires the commission of a "standard" DUI plus the existence of an aggravating factor, the Supreme Court found that bifurcation was a solution that would both remove unfair prejudice from the defendant and allow the state to present each element of the defense to the jury. St. v. Holland, 2019 MT 128, 396 Mont. 94, 443 P.3d 519.

Cross-Examination of Witness Regarding Sex Offender Status of Stepfather Properly Prohibited: The defendant was charged with sexually abusing a child. During trial, the defendant's counsel sought to cross-examine the alleged victim about possible sexual abuse by his stepfather, a registered sex offender. The District Court prohibited introduction of the stepfather's status as a sex offender. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the purpose of such cross-examination was to attack the victim's credibility. St. v. Given, 2015 MT 273, 381 Mont. 115, 359 P.3d 90.

No Connection Between Character Evidence and Facts of Case — Character Evidence Properly Disallowed: Plaintiff bank sought to recover money due on defendants' indebtedness incurred from bank loans for defendants' clothing business. The trial court granted defendants' motion in limine prohibiting testimony that one defendant had previously pleaded guilty to an unrelated felony and had invoked his fifth amendment rights during a deposition in a prior civil case. On appeal, plaintiff contended that excluding the defendant's prior criminal history prohibited plaintiff from effectively impeaching the defendant. The Supreme Court found no error in excluding the evidence because admission of the character evidence was prohibited by Rules 404(b) and 609, M.R.Ev., and because there was no connection between the evidence sought to be disclosed and the facts of the case. First Citizens Bank v. Sullivan, 2008 MT 428, 347 M 452, 200 P3d 39 (2008), distinguishing Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125 (1988).

Limit on Cross-Examination of State's Witness Not Violative of Right to Confront Witnesses: Doyle contended that the trial court violated Doyle's constitutional right to confront witnesses by limiting Doyle's cross-examination of a state witness regarding the witness's prior criminal history and character and benefit to the witness from a plea agreement granting a lighter sentence in exchange for testimony against Doyle. The Supreme Court found no constitutional violation. Evidence of the witness's prior convictions was inadmissible for purposes of impeachment. Evidence of the witness's character was inadmissible for purposes of proving action in conformity with that character. Last, Doyle cross-examined the witness extensively about the benefits of the plea agreement, and the jury was adequately apprised of the potential biases and motives behind the witness's testimony in light of the cross-examination. St. v. Doyle, 2007 MT 125, 337 M 308, 160 P3d 516 (2007).

Unsubstantiated Discovery Request for Criminal History of All State Witnesses Properly Denied: DuBray requested discovery of the criminal history records of each of the state's witnesses in a homicide trial, arguing that he was entitled to the records for impeachment purposes. The District Court denied the request, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Although information about a witness's prior convictions may be admissible under certain circumstances, a wholesale request for the production of records of all witnesses, absent an explanation or substantiation of the evidence sought or the potential use of the evidence, was unjustified and beyond the purpose of open discovery requirements in criminal cases. St. v. DuBray, 2003 MT 255, 317 M 377, 77 P3d 247 (2003).

Evidence of Prior DUI Conviction Not Related to Crime Charged — Harmless Error: In a trial for fourth offense DUI, Bingman contended that the trial court erred in admitting testimony related to Bingman's two most recent DUI convictions. However, as in St. v. Austad, 197 M 70, 641 P2d 1373 (1982), the evidence here was admitted for the purpose of proving not that Bingman had committed the DUI charged, but rather that Bingman had lied under oath. Bingman's own testimony opened the door to evidence of the past convictions and provided the jury with self-serving statements that Bingman knew to be untrue, but that were intended to place Bingman in a better light with the jury. As such, the testimony was not the sort of evidence contemplated by this rule, which prohibits the admission of evidence that a witness has been convicted of a crime for the purpose of attacking the witness's credibility. There was no reasonable possibility that the jury would have acquitted Bingman had he lied under oath only once instead of twice. Evidence of Bingman's prior convictions under these circumstances constituted harmless error and did not contribute to Bingman's conviction. St. v. Bingman, 2002 MT 350, 313 M 376, 61 P3d 153 (2002).

Impeachment of Credibility With Evidence of Prior False Information Held Not to Violate This Rule: At his trial on various charges involving sex with boys and girls, Martin sought to prevent the prosecutor from cross-examining his wife as to her conviction on a perjury charge by arguing that evidence of his wife's prior conviction was precluded by this rule. The Supreme Court distinguished St. v. Gollehon, 262 M 1, 864 P2d 249 (1993), and held that the District Court properly allowed the cross-examination by prohibiting the prosecution from inquiring whether Martin's wife had been convicted of a crime but allowing the prosecutor to inquire whether she had provided false alibi testimony. St. v. Martin, 279 M 185, 926 P2d 1380, 53 St. Rep. 1109 (1996), followed, although the error in restricting cross-examination was found to be harmless, in St. v. Maier, 1999 MT 51, 293 M 403, 977 P2d 298, 56 St. Rep. 208 (1999).

Evidence of Defense Witness's Prior Criminal History Not Admissible — Conviction Overturned: In a prosecution for accountability for aggravated kidnapping, the District Court allowed the state to cross-examine the defendant's witness as to the witness's prior criminal history. The Supreme Court found this to be reversible error on the grounds that there is a reasonable possibility that the inherently prejudicial and inadmissible evidence of the witness's criminal history might have contributed to the defendant's conviction. St. v. Bristow, 267 M 170, 882 P2d 1041, 51 St. Rep. 1010 (1994).

Evidence of Witnesses' Prior Crimes Inadmissible — No Violation of Right to Confront Witnesses: Gollehon contended that refusing to allow his questioning of the state's eyewitnesses, who happened to be state prison inmates, as to their prior crimes violated his constitutional right to confront the witnesses against him. However, proof of the witnesses' conduct would require examination of extrinsic evidence, which is inadmissible under Rule 608, M.R.Ev., and evidence of prior convictions, expressly prohibited under this rule. Balancing the probative value of the evidence with its potential prejudicial effect, the Supreme Court held that Gollehon's right to confrontation was not violated by the trial court's refusal to allow cross-examination of the witnesses' past criminal conduct. St. v. Gollehon, 262 M 1, 864 P2d 249, 50 St. Rep. 1250 (1993), followed in In re Seizure of $23,691.00, 273 M 474, 905 P2d 148, 52 St. Rep. 1063 (1995).

One Objection Sustained — No Violation of Right to Confront Witnesses: The trial court sustained one objection on relevancy grounds to the question of whether the state's chief witness against the defendant had ever been in prison. On appeal, the defendant claimed that sustaining the objection prevented any cross-examination to impeach the witness's credibility or to establish his bias, motives, or proclivity toward dishonesty and that this violated the defendant's right to confront the witnesses against him. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not improperly restrict the defendant's right of cross-examination because the trial record disclosed no other restrictions or limitations on counsel's ability to cross-examine. St. v. Hatfield, 256 M 340, 846 P2d 1025, 50 St. Rep. 101 (1993).

Disclosure by Defense Witness of Other Crimes — Improper Prosecutorial Inquiry: A defense witness was impeached on cross-examination when asked if he had been convicted of a crime and what crime he had committed. The prosecutor's inquiry was clearly improper under this rule, and none of the exceptions in Rule 404(b), M.R.Ev., applied. The conviction was reversed and the case remanded for a new trial. St. v. Shaw, 237 M 451, 775 P2d 207, 46 St. Rep. 942 (1989).

Exclusion of Witness's Earlier Crimes — Impeachment by Showing Bias — Criminal History in Offer of Proof: Hone, a witness to an assault, was on parole from a homicide conviction at the time of the assault. It was not error for the District Court to grant a motion in limine to prevent defense counsel from using that conviction for impeachment under an offer of proof, supposedly showing bias, that "he, Hone, would personally see to it that [defendant] served time in prison because a year at the pen had done him, Hone, a lot of good". There was no record that there was an offer to restrict the testimony to the admissible portion. Sloan v. St., 236 M 100, 768 P2d 1365, 46 St. Rep. 214 (1989), followed in St. v. Dahms, 252 M 1, 825 P2d 1214, 49 St. Rep. 106 (1992), and in St. v. Haskins, 255 M 202, 841 P2d 542, 49 St. Rep. 922 (1992).

Exclusion of Evidence of Victim's Later Crimes Proper — Balance of Prejudice and Probative Value: The District Court properly excluded evidence, under Rules 608 and 609, M.R.Ev., of pending or resolved criminal charges against the victim of an assault unless the state alluded to the victim's good character, truthfulness, or veracity. As noted in Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988), evidence bearing on the issue of the credibility of a witness, in order to be admissible, must be more probative than prejudicial, and the District Court must balance prejudice and probative value pursuant to Rules 401 and 403, M.R.Ev. St. v. Hammer, 233 M 101, 759 P2d 979, 45 St. Rep. 1326 (1988), followed in St. v. Kowalski, 252 M 166, 827 P2d 1253, 49 St. Rep. 197 (1992).

Knowledge of Term of Art Shown Through Testimony — Evidence of Prior Crimes Admissible: When a defendant understands the intricacy of proving a legal term of art and attempts through his own testimony to subvert proof of this element, he has clearly shown knowledge. A defendant who said he was not familiar with the term "under the influence" at the time of arrest and did not believe he was under the influence when arrested, opened the door to evidence of previous DUI convictions, which evidence was then properly admitted under the knowledge exception of Rule 404(b), M.R.Ev. St. v. Kinney, 230 M 281, 750 P2d 436, 45 St. Rep. 205 (1988).

Admissibility of Character and Other Crimes Evidence When Defendant "Opens Door" on Cross-Examination: Where defendant on cross-examination stated he was not the kind of person who could commit the crime of which he was accused, evidence of character was admissible because defendant opened the door to rebuttal evidence by his statement. When defendant on cross-examination further stated he had never committed a burglary, evidence of prior burglary conviction was admissible for the same reason. St. v. Austad, 197 M 70, 641 P2d 1373, 39 St. Rep. 356 (1982).

Admissibility of Mug Shots: Defendant was identified as the perpetrator of a burglary by identification of mug shots by the two victims of the burglary and a next-door neighbor. The identifications were made from a mug shot book. The viewings were conducted separately and within a few days of the burglary. The parties did not discuss the identifications with each other. Defendant contended that the mug shots should not have been allowed to be introduced because they implied that he had committed prior criminal acts. The mug shots were booking photographs and merely indicated that defendant had been booked on prior occasions. The photographs were used for identification. No evidence was adduced indicating that defendant had ever been convicted of any crime. The photographs were relevant for purposes of identification. The judge also gave a cautionary instruction regarding the photographs. This instruction dealt with possible prejudicial effect, and it was within the discretion of the trial judge to admit the photographs. St. v. Stokes, 195 M 321, 637 P2d 498, 38 St. Rep. 1889 (1981).

Permissible Use of Records of Juvenile Crimes — Impeachment: Before his trial on charges of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault, the defendant filed a motion to allow his counsel to inspect the Youth Court records of any complaining witnesses on the grounds that the records might have a bearing on the competency and veracity of those witnesses. The motion was denied, and the judge said he would examine the records to determine if any of the girls should be examined by a psychologist before testifying. The Supreme Court found that the judge's ruling denying the defendant's motion to inspect denied him the right to confront the witnesses against him. However, a review of the juvenile records convinced the Supreme Court that the error here was harmless. It declined to adopt a rule allowing evidence of prior juvenile convictions to be used as evidence to attack the general credibility of a witness. The permissible use of those juvenile records was confined to demonstrating, by cross-examination, a witness' bias, prejudice, or motive. It was within the discretion of the trial judge to determine competency, and his findings would not be overturned absent an abuse of discretion. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981).

One Proceeding With Two Hearings — Failure to Object Again — Waiver of Error: In a child abuse and neglect proceeding to terminate parental rights when the father of the youngest child was to have his rights determined a month after a hearing involving the termination of both parents' rights to the two older children, the father of the youngest child waived his right to complain of error on appeal because he failed to object to questions by the judge at the second hearing involving a prior felony conviction, even though objection was made and overruled in the first hearing. In re T.J.D., J.L.D., & R.J.W., 189 M 147, 615 P2d 212, 37 St. Rep. 1385 (1980).

Prior Felony Conviction — Factor to Be Considered in Parental Termination Proceedings: Although a criminal background does not disqualify one from having custody of his children, it is a factor and should be considered in child abuse and neglect proceedings under 41-3-102. Although the crime itself may not be relevant to the proceeding, the conduct of the father on parole may be; thus the admission of a prior felony conviction at such a hearing was not error. In re T.J.D., J.L.D., & R.J.W., 189 M 147, 615 P2d 212, 37 St. Rep. 1385 (1980).

Effective Assistance of Counsel — Failure to Object to Inquiry of Witness's Criminal Record: Failure of defense counsel to object to an inquiry into a defense witness's prior criminal record did not appear in a case involving at least a dozen witnesses and several days of testimony as if it prejudiced the defendant. St. v. Rose, 187 M 74, 608 P2d 1074, 37 St. Rep. 642 (1980).

Inquiry by Defense Into Qualifications to Be Deputy Sheriff — Electronic Surveillance: A Deputy Sheriff serving as an undercover officer in a neighboring county was a public employee with an official duty to maintain contact with persons involved in the drug scene and could lawfully use electronic surveillance against defendant as allowed by 45-8-213 and St. v. Brackman, 178 M 105, 582 P2d 1216 (1978), and this rule prohibited raising an inquiry before the jury into the Deputy Sheriff's prior criminal record and qualifications to be a Deputy Sheriff. St. v. Hanley, 186 M 410, 608 P2d 104, 37 St. Rep. 427 (1980).

Erroneous Jury Instruction: While an instruction that provided in part that a witness can be impeached by evidence that he has previously been convicted of a felony was improper, under the facts of a given case the instruction may not be prejudicial. St. v. Sullivan, 182 M 66, 595 P2d 372, 36 St. Rep. 936 (1979).

Rule 610. Religious beliefs or opinions.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 610. As indicated in Section 93-701-2, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], persons were formerly not allowed to testify at common law if they did not profess a belief in God. This rule was grounded on the notion that if the witness did not believe in punishment after death for testifying falsely, he was not considered trustworthy. The abandonment of this rule of disqualification has led to a rule in some jurisdictions allowing impeachment on the grounds of religious beliefs. Although there is no Montana law on this subject, the Commission believes that the abandonment of the rule of disqualification should also mean abandonment of the rule of impeachment because there "...is no basis for believing that the lack of faith in God's avenging wrath is today an indication of greater than average untruthfulness". McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Evidence, 102 (2d ed. 1972).

The Advisory Committee's Note to the Federal Rule, 46 F.R.D. 161, 302 (1969), indicates that impeachment for religious beliefs should be allowed in "an inquiry for the purpose of showing interest or bias...". The Commission agrees with this interpretation of the rule.

COMMISSION COMMENT TO JUNE 1990 AMENDMENT

The revision establishes gender neutral format only. No substantive change.

Compiler's Comments

1990 Amendment: Substituted gender neutral language for gender specific language. Amendment effective June 7, 1990.

Rule 611. Mode and order of interrogation and presentation; re-examination and recall; confrontation.

Commission Comments

(a) Control by court. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 611(a). It expresses the common law rule which allowed the trial court to control the mode and order of presentation of evidence as well as restating goals found in Rules 102, concerning the effective ascertainment of the truth, and 403, concerning undue delay, waste of time, or cumulative evidence. The rule states for the first time the goal that witnesses are to be protected from harassment or undue embarrassment. It should be noted that mode of interrogation refers to the allowable form of examination, that is, whether the discretion of the court will allow questions which ask for a general or specific answer; and order of presentation refers to the alteration of the normal order of presentation of evidence by the parties at the discretion of the court.

This rule is consistent with existing Montana law. Section 93-5101, R.C.M. 1947 [25-7-301], provides the order of trial and as an exception states, "when the jury has been sworn, the trial shall proceed in the following order, unless the court, for good cause and special reason, otherwise directs...". The fourth subdivision of that statute allows the court "for good reasons, in the furtherance of justice", to permit parties to offer evidence of their original case during rebutting evidence. Cases interpreting this subdivision of this statute indicate that allowing a variance from the normal order of proof is a matter of discretion with the trial court. First National Bank of Saco v. Vagg, 65 Mont. 34, 41, 212 P 509 (1922); Puutio v. Roman, 76 Mont. 105, 116, 245 P 523 (1926); Howe v. Messimer, 84 Mont. 304, 311, 295 P 281 (1929).

Section 93-1901-1, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides: "The order of proof must be regulated by the sound discretion of the court...". No cases have construed this particular provision. Section 93-1901-3, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], states:

The court must exercise a reasonable control over the mode of interrogation, so as to make it as rapid, as distinct, as little annoying to the witness, and as effective for the extraction of the truth as may be;... The court, however may stop the production of further evidence upon a particular point when the evidence upon it is already so full as to preclude reasonable doubt.

Of the four cases which have interpreted this statute, three were concerned with the exclusion of questions which have been asked and answered several times. State v. McConville, 64 Mont. 302, 306, 209 P 987 (1922); State v. Cassill, 70 Mont. 433, 452, 227 P 49 (1924); and State v. McSloy, 127 Mont. 265, 271, 261 P2d 663 (1953). The final case citing this statute, State v. Keller, 126 Mont. 142, 146, 246 P2d 817 (1952), indicates that this statute as well as Section 93-401-24, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], represent the rule that cross-examination should be limited to pertinent questions.

Two sections of the criminal code also provide that the discretion of the court may control the order of trial: Section 95-1910, R.C.M. 1947 [46-16-401], is a parallel provision to Section 93-5101, R.C.M. 1947 [25-7-301], on order of trial, and Section 95-1911, R.C.M. 1947 [46-16-402], allows this order to be varied from in the discretion of the court.

There is also a line of cases in Montana which establishes the rule independent of any statute that the order of trial is within the sound discretion of the trial court. Griswold v. Boley, 1 Mont. 545, 558 (1872); Noyes v. Clifford, 37 Mont. 138, 142, 94 P 842 (1908); Coleman v. Higgins, 137 Mont. 222, 236, 351 P2d 901 (1960).

The first two goals stated in the subdivision are consistent with Rules 102 and 403, respectively. See the Commission Comments to those rules. The third goal is consistent with statutes and cases concerning the protection of witnesses from harassment or embarrassment. Section 93-2101-2, R.C.M. 1947 [26-2-302], provides that while a witness is bound to answer all pertinent questions, "...he need not give an answer which will have a tendency to subject him to punishment for a felony; nor need to give an answer which will have a direct tendency to degrade his character...". Section 93-2101-3, R.C.M. 1947 [26-2-401], provides, "it is the right of a witness to be protected from irrelevant, improper or insulting questions, and from harsh or insulting demeanor;... to be examined only as to matters legal and pertinent to the issue". [Former] Rules 26(c) and 30(b), M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded], similarly allow the court to limit discovery to protect parties and deponents from annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression.

Cases which have interpreted Sections 93-2101-2, R.C.M. 1947 [26-2-302], and 93-2101-3, R.C.M. 1947 [26-2-401], have indicated that witnesses should be protected and in some instances have found reversible error for allowing degrading questions. State v. Rogers, 31 Mont. 1, 7, 77 P 293 (1904) (reversible error); State v. Trueman, 34 Mont. 249, 256, 85 P 1024 (1906) (reversible error); State v. Crowe, 39 Mont. 174, 179, 102 P 579 (1909) (improper questions); State v. Biggs, 45 Mont. 400, 404, 123 P 410 (1912) (proper protection provided); Lukert v. Eldridge, 49 Mont. 46, 50, 139 P 999 (1914); State ex rel. Bacorn v. District Court, 73 Mont. 297, 302, 236 P 533 (1925); and State ex rel. Woodward v. District Court, 120 Mont. 585, 590, 189 P2d 998 (1948).

(b) Scope of cross-examination. The first paragraph of this subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 611(b). The Commission added the second paragraph to ensure that if the court allows the scope of cross-examination to be exceeded, the evidence thereby brought out may be used as proof in the case and to overrule a line of older Montana cases which would not allow such evidence to be used in the cross-examiner's case.

The intent of the Commission in adopting the Federal Rule is to retain the traditional rule of scope of cross-examination for the purpose of maintaining the usual order of proof, but to allow the trial court to vary that order if good reasons occur during the trial. Two such reasons would be to save time for the court and witnesses by allowing complete questioning of a witness when he first testifies, rather than recalling by the cross-examining party, and to achieve a more orderly presentation of evidence where circumstances dictate.

It is important to note that the Commission intends the adoption of Rules 607 and 611 to abolish the doctrine of sponsorship of witnesses. In order to accomplish this end, five particular rules establishing the doctrine have been dealt with: First, the rule that a party may not impeach his own witness has been abolished by Rule 607(a). Second, the rule that a party is bound by the testimony of any witness has been abolished by Rule 607(b). See Commission Comment to Rule 607. Third, existing Montana law concerning the scope of cross-examination has been clarified by the adoption of Rule 611(b)(1), noted above, which allows the court the discretion to permit parties to exceed the scope of normal cross-examination. Fourth, the rule not allowing a party to prove his case on cross-examination has been abolished by Rule 611(b)(2). And fifth, an interpretation of Section 93-1901-7, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], that if a party exceeds the scope of cross-examination, he makes that witness his own, is bound by his testimony, and therefore cannot impeach him (State v. Smith, 57 Mont. 349, 363, 188 P 644 (1920) and State v. Richardson, 63 Mont. 322, 329, 207 P 124 (1922)), is necessarily abolished by the combination of Rules 607 and 611.

The first sentence of the first paragraph of this subdivision is consistent with existing Montana law. Section 93-1901-7, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides the scope of cross-examination: "the opposite party may cross-examine the witness as to any facts stated in his direct examination or connected therewith...". This section was enacted in 1895, and up to that point the leading case of scope cross-examination was Territory v. Rehberg, 6 Mont. 467, 470, 13 P 132 (1887) which stated the rule that the scope of cross-examination was to be limited to matters stated in the direct examination. The leading case interpreting the statute after its enactment is Kipp v. Silverman, 25 Mont. 296, 306, 64 P 884 (1901), which stated:

We deem it sufficient in this connection to say that the statute...permits a wide range for cross-examination, and the courts should incline to extend, rather than to restrict the right. Properly understood, the right extends, not only to all facts stated by the witness in his original examination, but to all other facts connected with them, whether directly or indirectly, which tend to enlighten the jury on the question in controversy.

Another leading case construing Section 93-1901-7, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], Cobban v. Hecklen, 27 Mont. 245, 263, 78 P 805 (1902), indicates that cross-examination should not be unduly restricted, for "the purpose of trial issues of fact is to bring out the whole truth, and to that end the right of cross-examination must be liberally interpreted and freely exercised". The court also indicated that this section "...radically changes the common-law rule in respect of cross-examination...". Many Montana cases have followed this particular interpretation of Section 93-1901-7, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. The latest case stating this rule is State Highway Comm'n v. Bennett, 162 Mont. 386, 391, 513 P2d 5 (1973) where the court stated that the statute:

...permits a wide range of cross-examination. The right of cross-examination may not be unduly restricted and may extend not only to facts stated by the witness in direct examination, but to all other facts connected with them which tends to enlighten the jury on the question in controversy.

In addition, there is a rule in criminal cases that when the defendant takes the stand and denies the commission of the crime for which he is on trial, "...a wide latitude of cross-examination is permissible, owing to the general nature of the defendant's statement" State v. Rogers, 31 Mont. 1, 7, 77 P 293 (1904), and State v. Smith, 57 Mont. 349, 359, 188 P 644 (1920).

The second sentence of the first paragraph of this subdivision allows the court, in its discretion, to extend the scope of cross-examination beyond matters covered on direct. It is not clear if this particular provision is consistent with existing Montana law. There are cases which established the principle that "...it is the duty of the trial court to exercise a sound legal discretion in controlling the cross-examination of witness...". State v. Howard, 30 Mont. 518, 527, 77 P 50 (1904); State v. Biggs, 45 Mont. 400, 404, 123 P 410 (1912); and Conway v. Monidah Trust, 51 Mont. 113, 116, 149 P 711 (1915). These cases are consistent with the existing Montana law which allows the trial court discretion in varying from the normal order of proof. See Commission Comments to Rule 611(a). However, there are cases which hold that despite the liberal rule announced by the Kipp and Cobban cases, cross-examination should not be allowed as to any matter not connected with the subject matter of the direct examination. Borden v. Lynch, 34 Mont. 503, 509, 87 P 609 (1906); State v. McConville, 64 Mont. 302, 305, 209 P 987 (1922); Spurgeon v. Imperial Elevator Co., 91 Mont. 432, 436, 43 P2d 891 (1935); and McCutcheon v. Larson, 134 Mont. 511, 514, 333 P2d 1013 (1959). Therefore, to the extent that this particular provision allows the trial court discretion to permit the cross-examiner to exceed the scope of cross-examination, these and like cases are expressly overruled. The Commission feels that this matter is one for the discretion of the court in its capacity to determine the order of proof and probably is consistent with the practice in many district courts of this state.

The second paragraph of this subdivision is inconsistent with existing Montana case law. This provision necessarily overrules many Montana cases, for if the cross-examiner is allowed to go beyond matters covered on direct examination, he should be allowed to use any evidence developed during such an examination.

Cases which have stated the rule that a party may not make out his case on cross-examination are as follows: Fredericks v. Clark, 3 Mont. 258, 261 (1878) (defendant may not make out his defense on cross-examination of plaintiff's witnesses); Davis v. Morgan, 19 Mont. 141, 144, 47 P 793 (1896); Harrington v. Butte and Boston Mining Co., 19 Mont. 411, 417, 48 P 758 (1897) (defendant may not make out his case on cross-examination); Brophy v. Downey, 26 Mont. 252, 255, 67 P 312 (1901); Shandy v. McDonald, 38 Mont. 393, 398, 100 P 203 (1909); Allen v. Deer Creek Coal Co., 43 Mont. 269, 282, 115 P 673 (1911) (holding it proper to deny an offer of proof on cross-examination which tended to show mitigation of damages); Pelican v. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 44 Mont. 277, 285, 119 P 778 (1911) (defendant may not establish an affirmative defense on cross-examination); Hanson Sheep Co. v. Farmers and Traders State Bank, 53 Mont. 324, 340, 163 P 1151 (1917); State v. Wyman, 56 Mont. 600, 612, 186 P 1 (1919); State v. Smith, 57 Mont. 349, 361, 188 P 644 (1920); Mutual Oil Co. v. Hamilton, 73 Mont. 385, 391, 236 P 545 (1925); State v. Shannon, 95 Mont. 280, 288, 26 P2d 360 (1933); Vonault v. O'Rourke, 97 Mont. 92, 110, 33 P2d 535 (1934); and McGonigle v. Prudential Ins. Co., 100 Mont. 203, 219, 46 P2d 687 (1935) (stating, "this court has consistently adhered to the rule that a party under the guise of cross-examination make out his case by witnesses for the other side".) To the extent that these cases state a rule contrary to paragraph (2) of this subdivision, they are expressly superseded.

(c) Leading questions. This subdivision is identical to Federal Rule 611(c). It recognizes the traditional view that leading questions, that is, questions which suggest the desired answer, are generally undesirable on direct examination, for the witness "...may acquiesce in a false suggestion". McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Evidence 8 (2d ed. 1972).

The exception found in the first sentence, allowing leading questions to develop a witness' testimony, is intended to recognize situations where leading questions can be used. Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 611(c), 56 F.R.D. 183, 275 (1972). Among those recognized are "the witness who is hostile, unwilling, or biased; the child witness or an adult with communication problems; the witness whose recollection is exhausted; and undisputed preliminary matters". Id. citing 3 Wigmore Evidence, Sections 774-778 (Chadbourn Rev. 1970). The subdivision also recognizes that leading questions should ordinarily be allowed on cross-examination because the purpose of cross-examination is to discredit testimony and this is where leading questions are most effective. The use of the word "ordinarily" in the second sentence is intended to allow a court to deny use of leading questions when cross-examination is in form only, such as cross-examination of a party by his counsel after being called as an adverse witness or of a friendly witness. The use of leading questions is ultimately a question for the trial court under Rule 611(a).

Except for its final sentence, this subdivision is consistent with existing Montana law. Section 93-1901-5, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-101], provides:

A question which suggests to the witness by the answer which the examining party desires is denominated a leading or suggestive question. On a direct examination, leading questions are not allowed, except in the sound discretion of the court, under special circumstances making it appear that the interest of justice requires it.

Cases in Montana indicate that a trial court has the discretion to allow leading questions, in accordance with the statute. State v. Spotted Hawk, 22 Mont. 33, 64, 55 P 1026 (1898); Hefferlin v. Karlman, 29 Mont. 139, 144, 174 P 201 (1903); and State v. Collett, 118 Mont. 473, 477, 167 P2d 584 (1946). The cases have also indicated that allowing leading questions where improper is a technical error and will only rarely be grounds for a new trial. Hefferlin v. Karlman, supra; State v. Kanakaris, 54 Mont. 180, 183, 169 P 482 (1917); and State v. Collett, supra. The cases have also recognized some of the exceptions to the rule generally disallowing leading questions on direct examination. In State v. Spotted Hawk, supra, the Supreme Court found that when witnesses were illiterate or unable to speak English, examination should be allowed by leading questions, a view affirmed in State v. Collett, supra at 478. In Hefferlin v. Karlman, supra, the court held it was within the sound discretion of the trial court to permit leading questions to establish a foundation, for it was a preliminary matter. Finally, in State v. Karri, 84 Mont. 130, 136, 276 P 247 (1929), the court held it was proper for the prosecution to ask a leading question which contained specific words which established an element of the crime.

The last sentence of this subdivision indicates that certain parties and witnesses may be “automatically regarded and treated as hostile”. Advisory Committee’s Note, 56 F.R.D. supra at 276. This is an expansion of Montana law. [Former] Rule 43(b), M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded], provides in its first sentence “a party may interrogate any unwilling or hostile witness by leading questions”. The rule goes on to indicate that certain categories of witnesses may be treated as if they were adverse party and so cross-examined and impeached; however, a foundation is usually required to show that the witness is in fact hostile. In Salvail v. Great N. Ry., 156 Mont. 12, 22, 473 P2d 549 (1970), the Supreme Court indicated that Montana Rule 43(b) is wider than the same Federal Rule because the adjective “managing”, which modified agent in the Federal Rule, was deleted from the Montana Rule in accordance with the broader superseded Section 93-1901-9, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. Therefore, Montana has more broadly construed who is a hostile witness and the expansion under Rule 611(c) follows this previously established trend.

(d) Reexamination and recall. This subdivision is original and therefore entirely different from the Federal or Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 611. It is based on 93-1901-10, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], the first two sentences simply rewording that statute. It should be noted that the word “concluded” in the second sentence is intended to mean that all the parties have had a chance to call and examine the witness. The final sentence is included to ensure that rebuttal, as defined by Section 93-5101, R.C.M. 1947 [25-7-301], will be allowed as a matter of right and that witnesses may be called for this purpose even after their examination has been concluded.

Case law supports the rule that the scope of reexamination is a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court. State v. Simanton, 100 Mont. 292, 310, 49 P2d 981 (1935), and State v. Heaston, 109 Mont. 303, 316, 97 P2d 330 (1939)[, and Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990)]. The rule has also been established that reexamination should be allowed to as to new matters brought out during cross-examination. Croft v. Thurston, 84 Mont. 510, 514, 276 P 950 (1929); State v. Board, 135 Mont. 139, 145, 337 P2d 924 (1959); and State v. Crockett, 148 Mont. 402, 409, 421 P2d 722 (1967). Case law also supports the rule that it is within the discretion of the trial court to allow a witness to be recalled after the examination of the witness has been concluded. State v. Mumford, 69 Mont. 424, 433, 222 P 447 (1924); State v. Carns, 136 Mont. 126, 137, 345 P2d 735 (1959) (finding an abuse of discretion); and Clark v. Wegner, 147 Mont. 521, 530, 415 P2d 723 (1966) (also finding an abuse of discretion).

(e) Confrontation. This subdivision is original and therefore not part of either the Federal or Uniform Rules (1974). It is based on West’s Ann. Cal. Ev. Code, Section 711, and Section 93-401-3, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. The rule is adopted, not only to include this fundamental concept in the rules but also to ensure that it remains in effect, because Rule 603, oath of affirmation, superseded Section 93-401-3, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], which provides: “A witness can be heard only upon oath or affirmation, and upon a trial he can be heard only in the presence and subject to the examination of all the parties, if they choose to attend and examine”. That which has not been superseded by Rule 603 is superseded by this subdivision.

The exception clause is included at the beginning of the subdivision to govern situations, for example, where a witness or deponent may give testimony out of the presence of a party, later joined in the action, or where reports are submitted in evidence as exception to the hearsay rule, but in apparent violation of the subdivision. The intent of the Commission in adopting this subdivision is to carry forward the effect of Section 93-401-3, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], subject to subsequently enacted exceptions.

Case Notes

Jurors and Witnesses Required to Wear Face Masks During Voir Dire and Trial — Not Violative of Defendant’s Right to Fair Trial or Right of Confrontation — Important Public Policy to Provide Protection of Public Health by Mandating Masks to Prevent Spread of COVID-19 — Defendant

Failed to Provide Clear Face Shields for Jurors or Witnesses When Given Opportunity to Do So— Both Craig Prongs Satisfied. St. v. Mountain Chief, 2023 MT 147, 413 Mont. 131, 533 P.3d 663.

Confrontation Clause — Alleged Denial of Broad Latitude to Cross-Examine and Impeach Victim Regarding Leniency Victim Allegedly Received in Unrelated DUI Charge — District Court Did Not Curtail Defendant's Right to Mount Complete Defense — Nothing in Record Indicated County Offered Deal to Victim in Return for Her Testimony. St. v. James, 2022 MT 177, 410 Mont. 55, 517 P.3d 170.

District Court Properly Complied With Instructions on Remand — Only Illegal Sentence Provision Relating to Parole Struck From Sentence — District Court Properly Denied State-Funded Expert. St. v. Keefe, 2022 MT 121, 409 Mont. 86, 512 P.3d 741. See also St. v. Keefe, 2021 MT 8, 403 Mont. 1, 478 P.3d 830.

Constitutional Right to Confrontation Violated by Allowing Foundational Witness to Testify in Real Time by Two-Way Videoconference — Harmless Error: The defendant appealed his convictions of deliberate homicide and tampering with physical evidence, arguing that he was denied his right under the United States Constitution and the Montana Constitution to confront witnesses against him when the District Court allowed a foundational witness to testify in real time by two-way videoconference. The Supreme Court determined that the two-prong analysis set forth in Md. v. Craig, 497 US 836 (1990), applied, requiring (1) a showing that the denial of face-to-face confrontation is necessary to further an important public policy, and (2) a determination by the trial court that reliability of the testimony is otherwise assured. Applying the first prong of Craig, the Supreme Court concluded that the use of two-way videoconference for the foundational witness's testimony was not necessary to further an important public policy because judicial economy, standing alone, did not constitute an important public policy. The Supreme Court upheld the defendant's conviction for deliberate homicide, concluding that the state demonstrated that the confrontation clause violation was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. The Supreme Court reversed the defendant's conviction for tampering with physical evidence because the state offered no physical evidence or testimony, other than the erroneously admitted foundational witness's testimony, that proved the defendant handled the victim's phone or otherwise tampered with the phone. St. v. Mercier, 2021 MT 12, 403 Mont. 34, 479 P.3d 967, followed in St. v. Martell, 2021 MT 318, 406 Mont. 488, 500 P.3d 1233.

Blanket Exclusion of Victim's Use of Drugs Prior to Reporting Rape — Abuse of Discretion in He-Said/She-Said Case — New Trial Granted: The defendant was charged with sexual intercourse without consent. He claimed that the alleged victim had consented. At trial, the defendant sought to introduce a redacted version of the victim's toxicology report that indicated high levels of THC in her blood and testimony that the victim had ingested a THC-concentrated marijuana product shortly before reporting the alleged rape to police. The District Court disallowed the report, finding that the evidence would unfairly confuse and distract the jury. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court's total exclusion of the victim's marijuana use for impeachment purposes was an abuse of discretion in a classic "he-said/she-said" case. Accordingly, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the matter for a new trial. St. v. Pelletier, 2020 MT 249, 401 Mont. 454, 473 P.3d 991.

Witnesses Allowed to Testify Multiple Times on Direct Examination — No Abuse of Discretion: The District Court allowed the state to call two law enforcement officers multiple times in a homicide case so that they could testify chronologically about the multiyear investigation. The defendant appealed his conviction, arguing that allowing the witnesses to be recalled violated Rule 611(d), M.R.Ev. Following the factually similar federal case U.S. v. Puckett, 147 F.3d 765 (8th Cir. 1998), the Supreme Court found that the District Court did not abuse its discretion. St. v. Hatfield, 2018 MT 229, 392 Mont. 509, 426 P.3d 569.

Exclusion of Evidence Relevant to Testimony of Key Witness — Abuse of Discretion — Homicide Trial: The defendant argued that he was defending himself from the victim at the time he shot and killed him. The District Court granted the prosecutor's motion in limine to prohibit the defense from introducing evidence that the sole witness to the homicide may have been high on methamphetamine at the time of the murder. Following conviction, the defendant appealed to the Supreme Court, which agreed that the District Court had abused its discretion in granting the motion in limine. The Supreme Court reasoned that the ruling had prevented the jury from considering important impeachment evidence and remanded the matter. St. v. Polak, 2018 MT 174, 392 Mont. 90, 422 P.3d 112.

Allowance of Leading Questions to Adult Victim With Communication Problems and Developmental Disability Proper: The District Court allowed prosecutors to ask leading questions of the victim, an adult with communication problems, a mild mental handicap, and confusion about place and time. After the defendant's conviction on charges of partner or family member assault, the defendant appealed, arguing that the District Court had abused its discretion in allowing the leading questions. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court had properly allowed the use of leading questions to elicit the victim's testimony. St. v. Sayler, 2016 MT 226, 384 Mont. 497, 380 P.3d 743.

Mere Mentions of Witness and Witness's Affidavit Insufficient to Introduce Testimony: The defendants in a deficiency action attached an affidavit by an expert to their pleadings valuing the defaulted property. Subsequently at trial, the plaintiff mentioned that the expert was expected to testify, although ultimately he did not testify, and mentioned the expert's work during cross-examination. However, this did not introduce the expert's testimony into evidence, and the District Court erred by improperly considering the expert's report in its valuation of the property. Whitefish Credit Union v. Prindiville, 2015 MT 328, 381 Mont. 443, 362 P.3d 53.

Rule Applicable to Criminal Proceedings — Harmless Error: Although the District Court erroneously ruled that Rule 611, M.R.Ev., did not apply to a criminal proceeding, Skype testimony presented by the prosecution in a cruelty to animals case did not affect the substantial rights of the defendant because the witness was in the live presence of the parties and subject to examination. Missoula v. Duane, 2015 MT 232, 380 Mont. 290, 355 P.3d 729, distinguished in St. v. Mercier, 2021 MT 12, 403 Mont. 34, 479 P.3d 967.

Criminal Defendant's Submission of Affidavit at Evidentiary Hearing — Waiver of Right to Remain Silent: After the defendant was found guilty of DUI per se, fourth offense, which is a felony, the defendant moved to dismiss the felony or, alternatively, to amend the charge to a misdemeanor DUI, arguing that a previous DUI conviction was constitutionally infirm because she was not informed of her right to counsel if she could not afford one. The District Court held an evidentiary hearing on the motion at which the only evidence the defendant presented was her affidavit. The state then called the defendant to testify, which the defendant objected to on the basis that she had a right to remain silent. The District Court overruled the objection, concluding the state had a right to cross-examine the defendant because she had submitted the affidavit in support of her motion, which was effectively testimony. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the defendant's submission of the affidavit waived her right to remain silent. The defendant could not submit an affidavit without being subject to cross-examination as to the contents of the affidavit. St. v. Johnson, 2015 MT 221, 380 Mont. 198, 356 P.3d 438.

Statutes Allowing Child to Testify Outside Presence of Criminal Defendant Constitutional: During the defendant's jury trial on incest charges, the District Court allowed the 6-year-old alleged victim to testify via two-way electronic audio-video communication, rather than in the presence of the defendant and the jury. On appeal, the defendant challenged the use of the audio-video testimony, arguing that 46-16-226 through 46-16-229, which allow a child witness to testify outside the presence of a defendant, violate a criminal defendant's right to confront witnesses. The Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of 46-16-226 through 46-16-229 on the basis that the statutes require an adequate showing of necessity and serve the compelling state interest of protecting a child witness from suffering further trauma. St. v. Stock, 2011 MT 131, 361 Mont. 1, 256 P.3d 899.

Reopening of Hearing for Rebuttal Properly Denied: Lester and Sharon married in December 1972. The parties separated on and off between December 2005 and December 2006. Sharon filed a petition for dissolution of marriage on June 20, 2006. Lester argued that the District Court asked the parties to submit additional evidence at the close of the hearing. However, the District Court failed to approve his motion to reopen the hearing to offer additional testimony regarding Lester's inheritance, the date of the parties' separation, and control of property and to allow his rebuttal witnesses to testify. Lester further contended that the court abused its discretion in not allowing him to conduct redirect examination of himself. The court asked the parties to present values of their retirement accounts and insurance policies as of the date of separation. Lester had argued that the date of separation should have been December 2006. Sharon had argued for December 2005. The court took the middle ground and determined June 1, 2006, to be the date of separation. The parties provided updated information regarding the value of their retirement accounts and insurance policies as of June 1, 2006. The court divided the property according to the values as of June 1, 2006. Sharon asked the court to exclude any witnesses before the start of the testimony. The court asked Lester's counsel whether any persons present in the courtroom were going to testify. Lester's counsel informed the court that not unless they were called as rebuttal witnesses. Lester ultimately chose not to call rebuttal witnesses during the trial. Further, Lester's counsel did not inform the court that he wanted to conduct redirect examination of Lester. It was only after the trial, over 3 weeks later, that Lester sought to reopen the hearing to conduct redirect examination of Lester and to provide rebuttal testimony. Rebuttal witnesses may offer testimony only about “that which tends to counteract new matter offered by the adverse party”. The proposed redirect examination of Lester and rebuttal testimony regarding Lester’s inheritance, the date of the parties’ separation, and control of property do not constitute new matters raised by Lester. The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it denied Lester’s motion to conduct redirect examination of Lester and to present rebuttal testimony. In re the Marriage of Howard, 2008 MT 351, 346 M 312, 195 P3d 812 (2008).

Parent’s Excited Utterance Following Domestic Disturbance Not Considered Hearsay in Proceeding Adjudicating Child as Youth in Need of Care: In adjudicating a child as a youth in need of care, the District Court relied on statements made by the mother to an officer who was investigating a domestic disturbance at the family residence. Following adjudication, the court implemented a treatment plan, which the father refused to sign. The court subsequently terminated the father’s parental rights for failing to comply with the treatment plan. The father contended that the District Court improperly admitted hearsay evidence from the officer that provided the evidentiary support for designating the child as a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court disagreed. The excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule under Rule 803, M.R.Ev., applied to the officer’s testimony regarding the mother’s statements because the statements were made immediately after the mother had been fighting with the father and while she was still visibly upset. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officer’s testimony. In re T.W. & J.M., 2006 MT 153, 332 M 454, 139 P3d 810 (2006), distinguishing In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994).

Standard of Review of Witness Reexamination — Abuse of Discretion: A District Court has wide discretion in determining the scope and extent of reexamination regarding matters brought out on cross-examination. The Supreme Court reviews a District Court’s action in allowing the prosecution to reexamine its witness following its previous direct examination, the defense’s cross-examination, the state’s redirect examination, and the defense’s recross-examination for abuse of discretion. In the present case, Long failed to cite any authority that it was error to allow the prosecutor to ask further questions of a prosecution witness, and allowing the state to reopen redirect examination was a proper exercise of the District Court’s discretion. St. v. Long, 2005 MT 130, 327 M 238, 113 P3d 290 (2005). See also St. v. Shaw, 255 M 298, 843 P2d 316 (1992), and St. v. Veis, 1998 MT 162, 289 M 450, 962 P2d 1153 (1998).

Limitation on Cross-Examination, Closing Arguments, and Calling of Witnesses Within Discretion of Trial Court: Acting pro se, defendant was allowed considerable leeway by the trial court in cross-examination, closing arguments, and calling witnesses, and the court restricted defendant in each area only when defendant went “over the line”. Defendant was convicted and on appeal contended that the trial court’s restrictions were an abuse of discretion. The Supreme Court examined the record and affirmed, noting the trial court’s broad discretion in conducting a trial in a speedy and fair manner and holding that each restriction was within the trial court’s discretion under evidentiary rules. St. v. Insua, 2004 MT 14, 319 M 254, 84 P3d 11 (2004).

Rebuttal Testimony Offered to Refute Defendant’s Theory of Child Incest Victim’s Conduct Properly Allowed: During the state’s case in chief, a child incest victim’s mother testified that on one occasion when the child was visiting her father, the child had called and requested to be picked up early because her father had scared her and that the touching of the child by the father had begun when the child called to be picked up. During the defendant’s case in chief, Gardner offered a different explanation as to why the child was frightened that day. The District Court then allowed rebuttal testimony from the mother and a friend regarding the child’s demeanor after being picked up. Gardner asserted that it was error to allow the rebuttal testimony because it did not contain any facts to rebut Gardner’s explanation. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in allowing the rebuttal testimony because it could be viewed as tending to contradict or disprove the alternate theory and evidence offered by Gardner, so allowing the testimony was within the trial court’s discretion. St. v. Gardner, 2003 MT 338, 318 M 436, 80 P3d 1262 (2003).

No Constitutional Violation in Admission of Telephonic Testimony at Revocation Hearing — No Abuse of Discretion Upon Good Cause: To accommodate counsel, the state moved to allow the admission of telephonic testimony from two law enforcement officers who could not attend Megard’s sentence revocation hearing in person. Megard objected, relying on this rule and In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994). The District Court held that neither the rule nor Bonamarte applied and that Megard’s fundamental rights would be adequately protected, so the motion was granted. On appeal, Megard also contended that allowing the telephonic testimony violated his due process right and the right to confront witnesses. The Supreme Court affirmed.

The District Court was familiar with the witnesses. Allowing telephonic testimony did not impede the ability to judge a witness's credibility in relation to other witnesses, who corroborated the testimony, because knowledge of a witness's identity and credentials may constitute a special circumstance under which telephonic testimony is allowed. Although telephonic testimony is generally not allowed in trials absent special circumstances or the parties' consent, evidentiary rules do not apply to revocation proceedings. Because a revocation hearing is not a criminal trial, Megard had no constitutional right to confront witnesses at the hearing. Further, Megard's due process rights were not violated because his counsel actually cross-examined the witnesses, and good cause existed for the District Court to admit the telephonic testimony to address scheduling conflicts. Even if error occurred, it was harmless, given Megard's failure to establish prejudice pursuant to St. v. Pedersen, 2003 MT 315, 318 M 262, 80 P3d 79 (2003). St. v. Megard, 2004 MT 67, 320 M 323, 87 P3d 448 (2004).

Limitation on Cross-Examination Not Violative of Right to Confront Witnesses: Nelson was charged with five felony offenses, and as a result of a plea bargain, Nelson's accomplice testified for the state at trial. During cross-examination, the District Court prevented questioning about charges allegedly filed against the accomplice in another county. Nelson contended that restricting the scope of cross-examination violated his constitutional right to confront witnesses. The Supreme Court disagreed. Limiting the scope of cross-examination does not necessarily violate the right to confront an adverse witness. A District Court has discretion to exercise reasonable control over the mode and order of interrogating witnesses, and may limit the scope of cross-examination to those issues that the court determines to be relevant to the trial. The determination of relevance and admissibility is left to the sound discretion of the trial judge and will not be overturned absent a showing of abuse of that discretion. Nelson was afforded the constitutionally required level of inquiry, and the District Court did not violate the confrontation clause or abuse its discretion by limiting Nelson's questioning of the adverse witness concerning unrelated alleged but unsubstantiated charges in another county. St. v. Nelson, 2002 MT 122, 310 M 71, 48 P3d 739 (2002), distinguishing Alford v. U.S., 282 US 687 (1931), and Davis v. Alaska, 415 US 308 (1974), and followed in St. v. Garding, 2013 MT 355, 373 Mont. 16, 315 P.3d 912. See also St. v. Quinlan, 2021 MT 15, 403 Mont. 91, 479 P.3d 982.

Objection to Medical Testimony Regarding Effects of Personality Disorder on Parenting Sustained — Cross-Examination Properly Limited: A medical expert who evaluated a mother regarding her parenting ability was asked about opinions that could be made based on the evaluation. The expert responded that it would require an explanation of personality and cognitive features and limitations. The guardian ad litem contended that inquiry should be allowed on cross-examination into the effects of a personality disorder on parenting. The mother objected, and the District Court sustained as beyond the scope of direct examination. The Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in limiting the latitude of cross-examination because the expert testimony in this case centered on the expert's observations and because the expert had not diagnosed the mother with a personality disorder. In re B.B., 2001 MT 285, 307 M 379, 37 P3d 715 (2001).

Admission of Inadmissible Hearsay — Denial of Due Process Right: Allowing an employer to submit hearsay statements of witnesses with personal knowledge of alleged work misconduct without requiring that the witnesses testify in person at the eligibility hearing denied claimant of the right to confront and cross-examine the witnesses and was a violation of the constitutional right to due process, warranting reversal and remand. Bean v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 1998 MT 222, 290 M 496, 965 P2d 256, 55 St. Rep. 927 (1998), distinguishing Richardson v. Perales, 402 US 389 (1971). See also In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994).

Refusal to Allow Telephone Testimony Upheld — Credibility of Witness Critical — Untimely Request: After several previous continuances in a hearing date and after Toni and Kevin failed to comply with a treatment plan prepared by the Department of Family Services (DFS) (now Department of Public Health and Human Services), DFS petitioned the District Court to terminate the parental rights of Toni and Kevin. After DFS presented its testimony on the petition, Toni and Kevin's attorney requested that they be allowed to testify by telephone since they could not pay the expenses to travel to Montana to appear in person at the hearing. The District Court denied the motion and was upheld by the Supreme Court. Citing Bonamarte v. Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994), the Supreme Court held that inability to pay the costs of travel to Montana did not constitute the "exigent circumstances" exception referred to in Bonamarte to the general rule that testimony must be given live and in person. The Supreme Court noted that it was important for the District Court to observe the demeanor of Toni and Kevin while they testified and also held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in holding that the request to testify by telephone was untimely because it was not made until after the conclusion of the state's case, when the District Court could not make other arrangements. In re B.C., 283 M 423, 942 P2d 106, 54 St. Rep. 690 (1997).

Written Questions From Jurors Allowed if Safeguards Implemented — No Abuse of Discretion: Defendant appealed from felony theft and burglary convictions, alleging that the court abused its discretion by permitting jurors to submit written questions to be asked of witnesses, including the defendant, at the conclusion of the defendant's testimony. After reviewing decisions from other jurisdictions, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court decision allowing juror questioning, ruling that the practice of juror questioning is within the sound discretion of the court if minimal safeguards are implemented to ensure: (1) that questions are factual, not adversarial or argumentative, and are allowed only to clarify information already presented; (2) that questions are submitted to the court in writing; (3) that both counsel are given an opportunity to object to the questions outside the presence of the jury; (4) that the trial judge read the questions to the witness; and (5) that both counsel are allowed to ask followup questions. St. v. Graves, 274 M 264, 907 P2d 963, 52 St. Rep. 1221 (1995).

Plaintiff Cannot Object to Admission of Evidence for Which Plaintiff Opened Door: Hando suffered physical damages while involved in painting activities at work. She subsequently settled with her employer and sued PPG, the manufacturer of the paint. Hando alleged that the District Court erred in allowing PPG to introduce evidence indicating that any damages that she suffered were the result of her employer's negligence when the statute states that the negligence of an employer may not be considered when the employer has tort immunity under the Workers' Compensation Act. The Supreme Court held that Hando had opened the door to the evidence by testifying on direct examination about the procedures used by her employer and therefore had participated and acquiesced in the introduction of evidence concerning negligence on the part of her employer. Hando v. PPG Indus., Inc., 272 M 146, 900 P2d 281, 52 St. Rep. 670 (1995), following Pedersen v. Nordahl, 261 M 284, 862 P2d 411 (1993).

Request for "in Person" Hearing Improperly Denied — Administrative Rule Contrary to Statute and Rules of Evidence Invalid: Charles disputed the amount of child support payments intended to be withheld by an income withholding proceeding and requested that he be given an "in person" hearing, rather than a telephone conference hearing, pursuant to 40-5-414. His request was denied by the administrative hearings officer pursuant to ARM 46.30.607(1) (now repealed). The Supreme Court held that the request for the "in person" hearing was improperly denied because 2-4-612(2) makes the Montana Rules of Evidence applicable to administrative hearings and subsection (e) of this rule provides that a witness can be heard only in the presence of other parties. Citing In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994), the Supreme Court held that this rule requires the physical presence of a witness in the courtroom. The Supreme Court also noted that 40-5-414 requires a live hearing if a party requests it and that the administrative rule adopted by the Child Support Enforcement Division, providing for a live hearing only upon approval of the hearings officer, was void because it was contrary to statute and this rule. Taylor v. Taylor, 272 M 30, 899 P2d 523, 52 St. Rep. 567 (1995).

Improper Restriction of Cross-Examination — No Injury: The District Court incorrectly limited defense counsel's questions on cross-examination to questions based upon facts that had already been established in the record. The rules do not contain that restriction. However, the error did not require reversal in this case because all the information sought to be disclosed was actually presented in an alternative cross-examination format, and as a result, there was no prejudice or adverse consequence to the defendant's substantial rights. St. v. Wing, 264 M 215, 870 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 223 (1994).

Testimony by Telephone a Violation of Rule: Judith, a resident of New Jersey, brought an action for dissolution of marriage in Montana, where her husband lived. Judith did not attend the trial in Montana because she could not afford the travel expenses and because she was afraid of her husband. The District Court allowed her to testify by telephone. Her husband claimed that he was denied the right to confront witnesses against him. Citing Coy v. Iowa, 487 US 1012, 101 L Ed 2d 857, 108 S Ct 2798 (1988), the Supreme Court held that the integrity of the factfinding process is undermined when the parties cannot confront one another and when the trier of fact is not allowed to observe the demeanor of the witness. The Supreme Court said that the reasons given by Judith for not returning to Montana do not outweigh the necessity for the trier of fact to determine credibility. Other alternatives, such as written or videotaped deposition, also existed. The Supreme Court held that while it was not adopting a per se rule to prevent telephone testimony in all cases, the District Court did abuse its discretion in this case. In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132, 51 St. Rep. 1 (1994), followed in Taylor v.

Taylor, 272 M 30, 899 P2d 523, 52 St. Rep. 567 (1995), and In re B.C., 283 M 423, 942 P2d 106, 54 St. Rep. 690 (1997).

Court to Control Evidence — Successful Motion in Limine as Preventing Later Defense Evidence on Same Issue: Little was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault on his two minor stepdaughters. His successful motion in limine prevented the state from introducing evidence of any sexual offenses against his two stepdaughters other than the four offenses charged and those contained in a Just notice. For this reason, there was no evidence in the record regarding a sexual assault occurring on a motorcycle. Defendant then sought to introduce expert testimony that the assault occurring on the motorcycle could not have taken place but was prevented from doing so by the District Court. The Supreme Court held that the evidence was properly excluded because without any evidence in the record concerning the alleged motorcycle incident, it would have been improper to allow Little to introduce evidence that it did not occur. St. v. Little, 260 M 460, 861 P2d 154, 50 St. Rep. 1124 (1993).

Redirect Examination as to Other Crimes Following Cross-Examination as to Whether Search Took Place: During cross-examination of a recalled prosecution witness in a prosecution for conspiracy to sell dangerous drugs, a detective was asked if defendant's house was searched and answered that they had no reason to do it. On redirect examination, it was error for the judge to allow, over objections, questions and answers regarding other evidence of defendant's prior involvement with drugs. The testimony exceeded the scope of the cross-examination and violated defendant's right to notice that the information would be brought out at trial. St. v. Shaw, 255 M 298, 843 P2d 316, 49 St. Rep. 1012 (1992).

Refusing to Allow Doctor to Use Lab Slides of Removed Tissue in Giving Opinion on Depth of Surgery: In a medical malpractice case, defendant's expert was asked on cross-examination for his opinion on the depth of defendant doctor's laser surgery. The expert asked if he could use certain slides of the removed tissue to answer the question, and the judge said, "Just answer the question." The judge's statement was not improper. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Time for Allowing Defendant's Attorney to Examine Him After Plaintiff Examines Him as Adverse Witness: The judge did not err when he precluded examination of defendant by his attorney directly after defendant was examined as an adverse witness by plaintiff's attorney. The judge may use his discretion to rearrange the order of the trial. The defendant was called as a witness the next day and given a full opportunity to provide testimony and evidence to support his case and to counter plaintiff's case. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Disclosure of Rebuttal Witness Not Required: The law does not require the advance disclosure of rebuttal witnesses. *Valley Properties Ltd. Partnership v. Admissibility of Extrinsic Evidence Regarding Informant's Drug Use as Relevant to Motive for False Testimony: A trial court's discretion in exercising control and excluding evidence of a witness's bias or motive to testify falsely becomes operative only after the constitutionally required threshold level of inquiry has been afforded the defendant. Therefore, subject to the limitations of Rules 403 and 611, M.R.Ev., a defendant should be afforded latitude in cross-examination and be allowed to introduce extrinsic evidence regarding an informant's alleged habitual drug use as relevant to the informant's motive to testify falsely, if denied by the informant. St. v. Gommenginger, 242 M 265, 790 P2d 455, 47 St. Rep. 681 (1990), followed in St. v. Haskins, 255 M 202, 841 P2d 542, 49 St. Rep. 922 (1992), and St. v. Milton, 280 M 142, 930 P2d 28, 53 St. Rep. 1337 (1996).

No Error for Refusal to Allow Rebuttal Testimony: In a case involving the destruction of a building by fire, the trial court did not err in refusing to allow a retired firefighter to give his expert opinion on behalf of the plaintiffs during rebuttal testimony concerning the alleged negligent firefighting methods employed by the defendant city firefighters. The proposed testimony related to the issue of whether the city negligently fought the fire and was not a new matter raised by the defense; it was one of the main issues raised by the plaintiffs in their complaint. Having failed during their case in chief to meet the burden of proving that the defendant negligently fought the fire, the plaintiffs cannot then assert that the city's alleged negligent firefighting was a new issue first raised by the defense and open to rebuttal testimony. Massman v. Helena, 237 M 234, 773 P2d 1206, 46 St. Rep. 764 (1989).

Introduction of Evidence of Other Crimes Prior to Case in Chief — Court Discretion to Allow Chronological Presentation of Evidence: Defendant claimed the District Court improperly allowed introduction of evidence of other crimes, wrongs, and acts before the prosecution presented evidence of the crime charged. The state gave sufficient notice that it intended to introduce evidence of five burglaries or attempted burglaries, in chronological order, attributed to defendant. To cure any defect, the state filed a sealed affidavit with the court 1 week before trial, setting out what this evidence would prove. The court carefully apprised the jury of what crime was charged and admonished the jury as to the limited purposes of the prior crimes and acts evidence. The Just rules for admissibility having been met and an offer of proof having been received by the court for the chronological presentation of evidence, it was within the court's discretion to allow the sequence and order of presentation. St. v. Keefe, 232 M 258, 759 P2d 128, 45 St. Rep. 1034 (1988). See also St. v. Keefe, 2021 MT 8, 403 Mont. 1, 478 P.3d 830, and St. v. Keefe, 2022 MT 121, 409 Mont. 86, 512 P.3d 741.

Names of Anonymous Phone Callers Not Disclosed — Tips Not Essential Evidence — Right to Confront Witnesses Not Abused: The District Court allowed evidence and argument on the contents of two anonymous tips reporting defendant's speeding car, but the names of those giving the tips to police were not disclosed at trial. The defendant's right to confront witnesses was not impinged because the tips were corroborated by two investigating officers and were used in conjunction with evidence of the vehicle's excessive speed to effectuate a justifiable stop. The tips were not the essential evidence upon which defendant was convicted. St. v. Shaffer, 227 M 221, 738 P2d 491, 44 St. Rep. 1029 (1987), distinguishing Moore v. U.S., 429 US 20, 50 L Ed 2d 25, 97 S Ct 29.

Expert Opinion on Truthfulness of Children's Testimony: Expert testimony by a psychologist on the reliability and truthfulness of child victims in sexual assault cases aided the trier of fact, and its admission on cross-examination was not an abuse of discretion. In re J.W.K., 223 M 1, 724 P2d 164, 43 St. Rep. 1483 (1986).

Child's Testimony From Prosecutor's Lap: Defendant was charged with felony assault (now assault with a weapon) and sexual intercourse without consent. The alleged victim was a 4-year-old who had been left in his care for several days. After the court determined that the child was a competent witness, it allowed the child to testify while sitting on the prosecutor's lap. Defense counsel was offered the opportunity to hold the child during cross-examination but declined. Defendant contended that this method of testifying was prejudicial and prevented him from conducting an adequate cross-examination, although he cited no specific instances. The Supreme Court held that pursuant to Rule 611, M.R.Ev., the trial court was within its discretion in allowing this method of testifying. That posture assisted in directing the child's attention to the questioning and provided comfort to her during a difficult and unfamiliar experience. St. v. Rogers, 213 M 302, 692 P2d 2, 41 St. Rep. 2131 (1984).

Hostility of Crime Victim on Prosecution's Witness List Testifying for Defendant: Sex offense victim was listed, but not called, as a prosecution witness. She was called as a witness in defendant's case in chief. The trial court properly ruled that she could not be examined as a hostile witness unless her cross-examination testimony showed hostility toward defendant. Hostility was not shown merely because she was listed as a prosecution witness. That listing was irrelevant, since her testimony absolved defendant. St. v. Anderson, 211 M 272, 686 P2d 193, 41 St. Rep. 1357 (1984).

Criminal Defendant Impeached on Cross-Examination — Not Violation of Privilege Against Self-Incrimination: A defendant in a criminal case who takes the stand and testifies in his own behalf may have his credibility impeached and his testimony assailed like that of any other witness, and his waiver of the privilege against self-incrimination is determined by the scope of relevant cross-examination. St. v. Wilson, 194 M 530, 634 P2d 172, 38 St. Rep. 1040 (1981).

Credibility of Witnesses — Threat to Kill as Motive to Testify Falsely: The plaintiff allegedly assaulted and threatened to kill the witness if he did not testify favorably to plaintiff's case at trial. Testimony concerning the assault was admitted over the objection that it was irrelevant. The Supreme Court stated that although the evidence is irrelevant to the issue in dispute at trial it is admissible if it is otherwise relevant to the credibility of the witness. The fear of plaintiff carrying out the threat could provide a motive for the witness to give false testimony, and therefore evidence of the assault was relevant and properly admitted to show a motive to testify falsely. Cissel v. W. Plumbing & Heating, 188 M 149, 612 P2d 206, 37 St. Rep. 966 (1980). See also St. v. Flores, 1998 MT 328, 292 M 255, 974 P2d 124, 55 St. Rep. 1329 (1998).

Requiring Testimony in Question and Answer Form — Criminal Defendant Testifying — Pro Se: It is not error to require a defendant to testify in question and answer form in order to give the State an opportunity to object and avoid the introduction of inadmissible evidence, even where defendant has knowingly and intelligently waived assistance of counsel and is representing himself. St. v. Harvey, 184 M 423, 603 P2d 661, 36 St. Rep. 2035 (1979).

Leading Questions to Child: The court did not err in asking a child leading questions during an in-chambers interview. Leading questions may be asked if necessary to develop testimony, and whether or not they will be allowed is a matter for the trial court's discretion. One of the exceptions to the prohibition against leading questions is when the witness is a child, and here, where the child was rather withdrawn, the asking of leading questions was not an abuse of discretion. In re Bailey v. Bailey, 184 M 418, 603 P2d 259, 36 St. Rep. 2162 (1979), followed in St. v. Howie, 228 M 497, 744 P2d 156, 44 St. Rep. 1711 (1987), St. v. Eiler, 234 M 38, 762 P2d 210, 45 St. Rep. 1710 (1988), and in St. v. Hibbs, 239 M 308, 780 P2d 182, 46 St. Rep. 1705 (1989).

Rule 612. Writings used to refresh memory.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal Rule 612 except that a qualifying clause making the rule subject to the Jenks Act, 18 U.S. Code Section 3500, is deleted, for the Jenks Act governs only Federal criminal proceedings and so has no application to Montana law.

At the outset, it is important to distinguish between writings used to refresh the memory of a witness, which are governed by this rule, and writings denominated as recorded recollection, which are governed as a hearsay exception under Rule 803(5). A writing used to refresh memory is one that is meant to help a witness who has a memory of the subject of his testimony, but who needs a stimulus in order that his memory be revived. The witness can then testify independently of the writing, and it is his memory or recollection which is used as evidence and not the writing. A recorded recollection is a writing made by or for the witness about a subject of which the witness retains no independent recollection; the recorded recollection is allowed to be read to the trier of fact as an exception to the hearsay rule, but it does not have the effect of reviving the memory of the witness, and so it is the writing as a recorded recollection which constitutes the evidence. This distinction represents the common law approach to each of the doctrines.

The distinction is noted in Montana in Marron v. Great N. Ry., 46 Mont. 593, 601, 129 P 1055 (1913), but the case went on to construe Section 93-1901-6, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], as requiring a foundation to be supplied before either type of writing can be used. That foundation required that the writing must have been made by the witness or under his direction, at a time when the event occurred or when the facts were fresh in the witness' memory, and that the witness must have known the writing to correctly state the facts. Marron v. Great N. Ry., supra at 602. This is inconsistent with the common-law doctrine of writing used to refresh memory. The common-law doctrine has been revived by later Montana cases which are also consistent with the approach taken in Rule 612. Therefore, to the extent that the statute and Marron v. Great N. Ry., supra, are inconsistent with the common law and Rule 612, they are superseded.

These later cases have held that witnesses may refresh their memory without the foundation, for this is a matter depending upon the circumstances of the case and the discretion of the court. State v. Gallagher, 151 Mont. 501, 504, 445 P2d 45 (1968). The foundation is a matter addressed to the trial court, and it is within the trial court's discretion to permit the witness to refresh his memory. State v. Watkins, 156 Mont. 456, 462, 481 P2d 689 (1971). The latest case dealing with this topic, State v. LaFreniere, 163 Mont. 21, 25, 515 P2d 76 (1973), indicated that the writing used to refresh the witness' memory under the statute may include a copy of a police officer's report, and therefore the writing used to refresh memory need not be admissible in evidence. The decision also cited and quoted United States v. Riccardi, 174 F. 2d 883, 889 (3d Cir. 1949) as "the best rationale in interpreting [the statute] in not requiring the introduction of the memorandum or report into evidence...". [Brackets in commission comments.] Riccardi states that the witness testifying as to his present recollection is placing that in evidence, and not the writing; therefore, "it is pointless to require proof of the accuracy of the writing, for such proof can only amount to corroborative evidence". Id.

The purpose of Rule 612 is "to promote the search of credibility and memory". Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 612, 56 F.R.D. 183, 277 (1972). It accomplishes its purpose by allowing an adverse party the right to have produced a writing used to refresh the memory of a witness whether the writing was used before testifying or while testifying. After the writing is produced, the adverse party may cross-examine the witness with the writing and introduce portions to the testimony of the witness. The rule also adopts provisions which are similar to those found in the Jenks Act: it allows the court to excise any portions not related to testimony, allows withheld writings to be made available to an appellate court, and provides sanctions for failure to produce the writing. The Commission intends that the term “writing” as used in this rule is the same as defined in Rule 1001(1).

This rule is consistent with existing Montana law which provides in Section 93-1901-6, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], “...but in such case the writing must be produced and may be seen by the adverse party, who may, if he chooses, cross-examine the witness upon it, and may read it to the jury”. There are no cases in Montana which have specifically dealt with the right of the adverse party to gain access or to use the writing used to refresh memory. The right is mentioned in State v. Watkins, supra 156 Mont. at 462, and State v. LaFreniere, supra 163 Mont. at 25. Allowing a party to demand the production of a writing used to refresh a witness’ memory before testifying is consistent with Montana law to the extent that such a writing would be discoverable in civil cases under [former] Rule 34(a)(1) M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded], and in criminal cases under Section 95-1803(c), R.C.M. 1947 [46-15-301]. The sanctions for nonproduction found in the last sentence of the rule allow in civil cases any order justice requires; this would be consistent with the sanctions found in [former] Rule 37(b), M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded]. In criminal cases, Section 95-1803(c), R.C.M. 1947 [46-15-301], does not provide for mistrial for nonproduction of evidence, but it does allow testimony to be stricken. Other provisions of the rule are new to Montana law.

Case Notes

Failure to Supplement Discovery Two Days Before Trial — Witness Precluded From Testifying Based on Undisclosed Material: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank’s predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the bank that she received this loan. However, the bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. On remand from the Supreme Court and 2 days before trial, the defendant received a journal from its witness employee. The defendant did not supplement its discovery by providing the journal. At trial, the witness referred to the journal. Outside the presence of the jury, the District Court ruled that the defendant should have supplemented its discovery and that the witness was precluded from testifying based on the journal. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because the defendant failed to supplement its discovery, the District Court properly excluded testimony based on the journals. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Officer’s Use of Arrest Report Allowed for Refreshing of Memory: At Harrington’s DUI trial, he objected to the fact that during direct testimony, the arresting officer read a nonadmitted document, the arrest report, into evidence. On appeal, Harrington asserted that the testimony was inadmissible because the foundation required by Rule 803, M.R.Ev., was not met. However, this rule allows witnesses to use writings to refresh their memories while testifying, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officer to refer to the report to refresh his memory. Columbus v. Harrington, 2001 MT 258, 307 M 215, 36 P.3d 937 (2001).

Refusal to Show File Used to Refresh Memory to Opposing Counsel — No Abuse of Discretion Found: At the trial of a declaratory judgment action brought to enforce an easement reserved by the Rankins as grantors, an attorney appearing as a witness for the Rankins was asked to compare the language of the original contract for deed that he had prepared with the language of a copy produced several days before trial by the Andersons, the grantees. The version produced by the Andersons did not contain language reserving the easement. The Andersons claimed that the original of the deed showing the reservation of the easement had been in the possession of the Rankins for a number of years and that the copy could have been altered. The witness was shown a copy of the original deed to refresh his recollection, and counsel for the grantee asked to review the entire “file” for purposes of cross-examination. The request was denied by the District Court. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing the request of counsel to review the file. Noting that the Andersons had recorded three separate documents over the years prior to the trial, all of which contained reference to the easement language, the District Court could have concluded that the “interests of justice” did not require inspection of the witness’s copies of these documents. Reichle v. Anderson, 284 M 384, 943 P.2d 1324, 54 St. Rep. 930 (1997).

Discovery — Depositions: In a suit against an insurance company, it was error for the court to deny a request to compel production of a recorded statement that was used by several of defendant's witnesses to refresh their memories prior to their depositions and testimony in court. However, it was harmless error in this case. Bartlett v. Allstate Ins. Co., 280 M 63, 929 P2d 227, 53 St. Rep. 1300 (1996).

Testimony of Witness Reading From Inadmissible Writing Allowed: The Williamses argued that the lower court erred in allowing Watkins to read from a document during his testimony when the document had already been held to be inadmissible. The Supreme Court ruled that the best evidence rule is inapplicable when the witness testifies about personal knowledge of a matter, regardless of whether the same information may be contained in an inadmissible writing, and that the witness could use the writing to refresh his memory. Watkins v. Williams, 265 M 306, 877 P2d 19, 51 St. Rep. 489 (1994).

Refusal to Grant Defense Access to Witness Statement Used to Refresh Memory Prior to Pretrial Hearing — No Abuse of Discretion: It was within the discretion of the District Court to refuse to allow defense counsel to inspect a written statement used by a witness to refresh his memory prior to a pretrial hearing when there was nothing in the statement that would have aided the defense's cross-examination and the statement was subsequently provided to the defense after the hearing and prior to trial. It would have been nonsensical to allow the defense access to the statement at the same hearing at which defense access to the statement was at issue. St. v. Briner, 253 M 158, 831 P2d 1365, 49 St. Rep. 402 (1992).

Motion to Compel Production of Documents Reviewed by Expert Properly Denied: Defendant sought to compel the production of documents reviewed by plaintiff's expert witness in preparation for the expert's deposition, contending that because the expert took the documents to the deposition, the entire file should be made available as a deposition document and as subject matter for cross-examination. However, the trial court examined the documents in camera and concluded that two letters in the file were unrelated to the subject matter, were protected as attorney work product, and would not lead to further discovery. Therefore, denial of the motion to compel production was not an abuse of discretion. N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991).

Police Officer's Review of Interview Transcript Permissible — Best Evidence Rule Not Applicable: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing a police officer to refresh his recollection by reviewing the transcript of an interview the officer had with the defendant. The fact that the police department had erased audio tapes of the interview is not material. The best evidence rule is inapplicable because the admissibility or inadmissibility of the writing does not affect the writing's availability for the use of refreshing a witness's memory. St. v. Walters, 247 M 84, 806 P2d 497, 48 St. Rep. 102 (1991).

Rule 613. Prior statements of witnesses.

Commission Comments

(a) Examining witness concerning prior statement. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 613(a). It has the effect of abolishing the rule of Queen Caroline's Case which required that before a witness could be cross-examined about his own written statement, he had to be shown that statement. The rule has been criticized as a misapplication of the best evidence rule because, first, the cross-examiner is not attempting to prove the contents of the document, but actually hopes that the witness will deny its existence; and second, the best evidence rule is one requiring production of an original document "as proof of its contents to the judge and jury, not to the witness". McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Evidence 56 (2d ed. 1972). The rule has been characterized as a "useless impediment to cross-examination". Advisory Committee's Note to Rule 613(a), 56 F.R.D. 183, 278 (1972). Allowing a witness to view his own written statement before an attempt to impeach him with it is certainly an obstacle to effective cross-examination. Therefore, the Commission intends the adoption of this rule to allow effective cross-examination of witnesses by their own prior statements, whether written or not.

This rule does not defeat the provisions of Rule 1002, requiring the production of original to prove the contents of a document. The rule is also not inconsistent with [former] Rule 26(b)(3), M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded], entitling a person to request the production of his own written statements, although its provisions must be temporarily suspended for effective cross-examination. Finally, the rule provides the safeguard that opposing counsel, upon request, shall be allowed to see the document "to protect against unwarranted insinuations that a statement has been made when the fact is to the contrary". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 278.

This subdivision is inconsistent with Section 93-1901-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. The section provides for impeachment by evidence of prior inconsistent statements and indicates in part: "If the statements be in writing, it must be shown to the witness before any questions may be put to him concerning them". There are no cases in Montana which are directly in point with this part of the statute and what is covered in Rule 613(a). Cases concerned with impeachment of a witness by use of a writing hold that the witness must be allowed to explain the writing. Kennelly v. Savage, 18 Mont. 119, 123, 44 P 400 (1896); State v. Ritz, 65 Mont. 180, 188, 211 P 298 (1922); State v. Keays, 97 Mont. 404, 417, 34 P2d 855 (1934); and State v. Board, 135 Mont. 139, 143, 337 P2d 924 (1959). These cases would certainly be consistent with the provisions of subdivision (b) of this rule. Therefore, the change in Montana law found in this subdivision affects only part of a statute which has never been construed by any cases.

(b) Extrinsic evidence of prior inconsistent statement of witness. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 613(b). It is implicit in the rule that the impeachment of a witness by use of a prior inconsistent statement will be allowed. The usual requirement for a foundation commonly required with this method of impeachment has been modified. This subdivision allows the witness to explain and the opposite party to examine concerning the prior inconsistent statement, but "with no specification of any particular time or sequence". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 279. This is in accord with two of the three objectives for requiring a foundation; that is, that the witness in fairness to himself be allowed to explain or deny the apparent inconsistency and that to avoid unfair surprise to the opposite party, the opposite party be allowed an opportunity to examine the witness concerning the inconsistent statement. Id. A third objective is to save time, for if the witness denies or forgets that he has made the statement, no contradiction exists and therefore no evidence of the inconsistent statement could be admitted. Yet, savings of time is a poor reason not to allow the trier of fact to consider and have the witness explain any prior inconsistent statements he may have made. Id. The Advisory Committee's Note gives an example of when this subdivision would be most effective: "under this procedure, several collusive witnesses can be examined before disclosure of a joint prior inconsistent statement".

The final phrase in the first sentence allows the trial court the discretion to waive the foundational requirements, for instance when the witness is unavailable when the inconsistent statement is discovered. The exclusion of admissions of a party opponent from the operation of this rule, as provided in the final sentence of the subdivision, is in accord with the traditional view that in this situation there is little danger of unfair surprise and usually the party will have an explanation ready. McCormick, supra at 74.

This subdivision is inconsistent with Montana law to the extent that the foundation required for a prior inconsistent statement need not be laid before the witness may be impeached. Section 93-1901-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides:

A witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony; but before this can be done, the statements must be related to him, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present, and he must be asked whether he had made such statements, and if so, allowed to explain them....

A number of cases have held that it is improper to impeach a witness with a prior inconsistent statement unless the foundation is laid in accordance with the statute. State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 9, 43 P 1091 (1896); Melzner v. Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Ry., 51 Mont. 487, 493, 153 P 1019 (1915); and State v. McSloy, 127 Mont. 265, 273, 261 P2d 663 (1953). In addition, there are many cases which cite this statute and indicate that the proper foundation had been laid; among the more recent cases are: State v. Walker, 148 Mont. 216, 224, 419 P2d 300 (1966); Tigh v. College Park Realty, 149 Mont. 358, 364, 427 P2d 57 (1967); and State v. Smith, 168 Mont. 93, 541 P2d 351, 353, (1975).

There are some cases which have liberally construed or not strictly followed the foundation requirements. State v. Hurst, 23 Mont. 484, 495, 59 P 911 (1899); State v. Beesskove, 34 Mont. 41, 53, 85 P 376 (1906); State v. McGowan, 36 Mont. 422, 431, 93 P 552 (1908); Wise v. Stagg, 94 Mont. 321, 330, 22 P2d 308 (1933); State v. Curtis, 114 Mont. 232, 242, 135 P2d 361 (1943); and State v. Robinson, 109 Mont. 322, 328, 96 P2d 265 (1939). However, it is apparent that statutory and case law in Montana require that a foundation be laid before impeachment by prior inconsistent statement is allowed; to the extent that this subdivision does not require that the foundation be laid before impeachment occurs, this subdivision supersedes the statute and cases.

Another rule associated with the foundational requirement is that when the witness denies having made the prior inconsistent statement, it may not be introduced. State v. Burrell, 27 Mont. 283, 285, 70 P 982 (1902), cited what is now Section 93-1901-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and held that if a witness denies or says that he does not remember making the inconsistent statement, that ends the matter because the foundation cannot be laid and a witness may not be impeached with a statement he says he did not make. However, in State v. McGowan, 36 Mont. 422, 430, 93 P 552 (1908), a prior inconsistent statement was introduced after the witness had denied making it. Two other cases hold that the witness' assertion that he did not remember making a statement does not affect its admissibility. Wingate v. Davis, 77 Mont. 572, 579, 252 P 307 (1926) and State v. Jolly, 112 Mont. 352, 355, 116 P2d 686 (1941). State v. Burrell, supra, is effectively overruled by this subdivision. There is no Montana law allowing a judge in his discretion to waive the requirements of foundation; therefore, this part of the subdivision is new to Montana law. Finally, the last sentence of this subdivision is consistent with existing Montana law excluding the requirements of a foundation when the statement is an admission by the party-opponent. State v. Allen, 34 Mont. 403, 410, 87 P 177 (1906) and Howe v. Messimer, 84 Mont. 304, 311, 275 P 281 (1929).

Case Notes

Excluding Cross-Examination of Witness Regarding Prior Inconsistent Statements — Abuse of Discretion: The District Court abused its discretion when it ruled that the plaintiff's counsel could not impeach a witness through cross-examination because the plaintiff was entitled under Rule 613, M.R.Ev., to cross-examine the witness about her prior inconsistent statements and a related motion in limine did not restrict such cross-examination. The District Court's error affected the outcome of the case and materially affected the plaintiff's right to a fair trial. Maier v. Wilson, 2017 MT 316, 390 Mont. 43, 409 P.3d 878.

Medical Records Require Proper Foundation — No Manifest Abuse of Discretion: It was not a manifest abuse of discretion for the District Court to prohibit the defendant employer from using statements contained in medical records to impeach the plaintiff employee about injuries to his back given: (1) denial by the plaintiff of the accuracy of the medical records; (2) lack of foundation demonstrating authenticity; and (3) no change in the doctor's opinion regarding the injury upon being advised of weightlifting references in the medical records. Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115.

Impeachment Inadmissible if Witness Denied Opportunity to Explain: Following the testimony and dismissal of a witness, counsel attempted to introduce extrinsic evidence regarding the witness's prior inconsistent statements for impeachment purposes. Upholding the District Court's refusal to allow introduction of the evidence, the Supreme Court ruled that because the defendants had failed to question the witness regarding the alleged statements and provided the witness no opportunity to explain or deny the prior inconsistent statements, impeachment testimony was inadmissible. Doig v. Cascaddan, 282 M 105, 935 P2d 268, 54 St. Rep. 263 (1997).

Out-of-Court Statement Consistent With Trial Testimony Properly Excluded as Hearsay: Defendant sought to introduce deposition testimony of the grandmother of a victim of sexual intercourse without consent in order to impeach the victim's trial testimony regarding defendant's motives for the sexual contact. However, because the victim's out-of-court statement to her grandmother was not inconsistent with her trial testimony, it was properly excluded as hearsay. St. v. Goodwin, 249 M 1, 813 P2d 953, 48 St. Rep. 539 (1991).

Motion In Limine — When Not Proper to Exclude Prior Inconsistent Statements: A motion in limine may not properly prevent the use of prior inconsistent statements for impeachment purposes under this rule. St. v. Lias, 218 M 124, 706 P2d 500, 42 St. Rep. 1453 (1985).

Language Excised to Uphold Constitutionality of Malpractice Panel Act: The phrase in 27-6-704(2), "No statement made by any person during a hearing before the panel may be used as impeaching evidence in court", must be severed from the act in order to uphold the constitutionality of the panel act. It is fundamental to our adversarial system that litigants retain the right to impeach the sworn testimony of a witness testifying against them. A litigant may not receive a full and fair hearing if he is unable to fully cross-examine in court the witnesses that testified in the prior hearing. Linder v. Smith, 193 M 20, 629 P2d 1187, 38 St. Rep. 912 (1981).

Reading of Plaintiff's Deposition Properly Refused: The method chosen by the cross-examiner violated Rule 613(b), M.R.Ev. The witness was not on the stand. The cross-examiner proposed to offer in evidence, in the absence of the witness, a deposition taken of the witness pretrial for the purpose of impeachment. Thus, the deposition itself was extrinsic evidence of a prior inconsistent statement. It was not admissible unless the witness had an opportunity to explain or deny the same, the opposite party was afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the same, and the opposite party was afforded an opportunity to interrogate her on the deposition. This foundational requirement not having been met by the cross-examiner, the District Court was correct in denying the admission into evidence of the deposition or any part of it under Rule 613(b), M.R.Ev., and former Rule 32(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668, 37 St. Rep. 437 (1980).

Rule 614. Calling and interrogation of witnesses by court.

Commission Comments

(a) Calling by the court. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 614(a). It adopts the traditional view that the trial court has the inherent authority to call witnesses. The usual reason for this practice is the tendency of a jury to associate an undesirable witness with one party or the other, and this problem is met by having the court call such a witness to obtain his knowledge of relevant facts. The Commission intends the adoption of this rule to carry with it certain limitations, so that the court does not interfere with the jury's function as trier of fact or undermine either party's presentation of evidence. There is no Montana law specifically addressed to the question of whether a court may call witnesses; therefore, this subdivision is new to Montana law.

(b) Interrogation by court. This subdivision is based upon New Mexico Rule 614(b), which in turn is based upon Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 614(b). The first clause of each of these rules is identical. However, the New Mexico Rule adds the final clause to which the Commission has added "express or" before "implied comment". The Commission added the clause from the New Mexico Rule to ensure that trial courts would not lose their impartiality or become involved in a case as an adversary. This subdivision also expresses the traditional view, founded on the same reasons stated in the Commission Comments to subdivision (a).

There are Montana cases concerning the trial court's interrogation of witnesses. State v. McConville, 64 Mont. 302, 308, 209 P 987 (1922); State v. Richardson, 69 Mont. 400, 403, 22 P 418 (1924); and Roman v. Albert, 81 Mont. 393, 403, 264 P 115 (1928). None of these cases found that the trial court had abused its discretion in interrogating witnesses. In State v. Richardson, supra, the Supreme Court clarified this following statement made in the McConville decision: "It is the right, even the duty of the judge to examine the witnesses for the purpose of eliciting the truth", by indicating:

But the right should be exercised with great care, and never unduly extended, and the questions put shall not betray bias or prejudice nor carry to the jury the impression that the judge has made up his mind as to fact inquired about or the merits of the case. The questions must be framed to make clear that which is not clear.... The judge should avoid officious interference.

There is no doubt that Montana follows the rule which does not allow the trial court to comment upon the evidence. State v. Fuller, 34 Mont. 12, 26, 85 P 369 (1906). Therefore, this subdivision is entirely consistent with existing law.

(c) Objections. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 614(c). It is comparable to the objection provision of Rules 605 and 606(a). The subdivision gives counsel the option of objecting at the time an objection occurs or at the next available opportunity when the jury is not present, to allow avoidance of embarrassment which might arise when counsel is objecting to questions by the court in the presence of the jury. Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 614, 56 F.R.D. 183, 280 (1972). Cases in Montana dealing with the objection to court-imposed questions have held that the party must object at the time the question is made. State v. Richardson, supra; Roman v. Albert, supra; and Batchoff v. Craney, 119 Mont. 157, 167, 172 P2d 308 (1946). Therefore, to the extent that an objection is allowed out of the presence of the jury, this subdivision is a change in Montana law.

Case Notes

Comment to Witness Instructional — Not Comment on Credibility: The District Court's comment to a witness, taken in context, was an instruction to the witness, not a comment on the witness's credibility. St. v. Zlahn, 2014 MT 224, 376 Mont. 245, 332 P.3d 247.

Court's Questions Concerning Facts Already in Evidence — No Express or Implied Comment: In a sexual assault trial, the mother of three children, including one of the children at issue in the assault, testified for the defense. Because the children had different last names, the District Court clarified the identity of each child's father with the witness during the trial. The defense asserted that this was improper, calling into question the credibility and promiscuousness of their witness. The Supreme Court did not find that the brief questioning violated Rule 614(b), M.R.Ev., because the facts were already previously presented to the jury through appropriate questioning by counsel, and therefore, the District Court properly denied the defendant's motion for a new trial. St. v. Walton, 2014 MT 41, 374 Mont. 38, 318 P.3d 1024.

Exhibit Offered Into Evidence by Trial Judge — No Examination of Witness: The trial court in this criminal case offered a document into evidence. Counsel for the defendant argued that by ordering the admission, the court was commenting on the evidence in violation of this rule. However, the issue raised is not the examination of a witness but the actual admission of an exhibit by the court's own order. Although there is no provision under this rule or elsewhere in Montana law that directly permits the court to offer its own exhibit into evidence, if this were error, it was harmless because the document had been read into evidence in full by the prosecutor. St. v. Hibbs, 239 M 308, 780 P2d 182, 46 St. Rep. 1705 (1989).

Comment to Witness at End of Testimony That He Did Good — Not Comment on Credibility: The judge, during a conversation in the course of excusing a witness, said to him "You did good. You did good." While a court should refrain from comments on witness credibility, taken in context, the statement was not a comment on the witness's credibility. The defendant was not denied a fair trial by the comment. Sloan v. St., 236 M 100, 768 P2d 1365, 46 St. Rep. 214 (1989).

No Express or Implied Comment — No Objection Made: Defendant contended that the judge's questions to witnesses violated subsection (b) of this rule three times during trial, but the Supreme Court found that the questions could be viewed as a reflection of the judge's belief in what the witness stated and did not necessarily imply belief in the testimony. Nothing in the Montana Rules of Evidence prohibits a trial judge from asking questions to clarify testimony. Further, defense counsel failed to object to the questions at trial, precluding consideration of the issue on appeal. St. v. Martin, 226 M 463, 736 P2d 477, 44 St. Rep. 804 (1987). See also St. v. Scarborough, 2000 MT 301, 302 M 350, 14 P3d 1202, 57 St. Rep. 1268 (2000).

Failure to Object to Judge Qualifying Ten-Year-Old Sexual Crime Victim as Witness in View of Jury — Not "Plain Error" — Mass of Damaging Evidence Precluding Any Prejudice: In the presence of the jury, the District Court Judge questioned the 10-year-old victim of a sexual crime and an aggravated assault about whether she was aware of the consequences of taking an oath and testifying. Defense counsel did not object. Although it would have been better to have conducted the questioning away from the jury and the questions should have been framed differently, any mistake did not warrant the application of the "plain error" rule of 46-20-702 (now 46-20-701(2)) because the defendant was not prejudiced by the manner of qualifying the victim in light of all of the independent and highly damaging evidence against him. St. v. Smith, 208 M 66, 676 P2d 185, 41 St. Rep. 176 (1984).

Evidence — Witness Called by Judge: There was no merit to contention that due process was denied at suspended sentence revocation hearing when the judge called a witness to the stand to resolve a conflict in pertinent testimony, for a court may on its own motion call witnesses, and the asserted error was waived because it had not been objected to at the time. St. v. Sullivan, 197 M 395, 642 P2d 1008, 39 St. Rep. 412 (1982).

Witness Properly Called by the Court — Fair Trial Not Denied: In a prosecution for theft, the court did not err in itself calling a witness to verify the testimony of a prosecution witness. The authority of the court to call a witness is expressly granted to the District Court by the rules of evidence. This procedure avoids the possibility that the witness will be associated with one party or the other, and absent a showing of abused discretion or manifest prejudice. The trial court's decision should not be reversed. No abuse or prejudice was found. St. v. Hart, 191 M 375, 625 P2d 21, 38 St. Rep. 133 (1981).

Statements Not Comment on Evidence: The court's statements "purely his say-so" and "purely his concoction" were not in violation of subsection (b) of this rule because the statements were not directed at defendant's credibility but were intended to clarify that defendant's testimony on where his wife was standing was based exclusively upon defendant's recollection. St. v. Bier, 181 M 27, 591 P2d 115, 36 St. Rep. 466 (1979).

Rule 615. Exclusion of witnesses.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 615. It recognizes the time-honored view that excluding or sequestering witnesses is an effective "means of discouraging and exposing fabrication, inaccuracy, and collusion". Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 615, 56 F.R.D. 183, 280 (1972). The rule allows witnesses to be excluded as a matter of right rather than as a matter of discretion with the trial court. The Commission believes that this is the better approach because it is simple, feasible, and a powerful weapon against perjury; it should not be left to the trial court to determine whether there is a need for exclusion when the trial court judge may be unfamiliar with the witnesses or the case; and finally, no rule should ever be allowed which does not permit a party to expose inaccurate testimony or even perjury. 6 Wigmore, Evidence, Section 1838 (3d ed. 1940).

This rule provides three categories of witnesses who may be exempted from an order of exclusion: the first, the parties; the second, a representative of a party not a natural person; and third, a person necessary for the presentation of evidence. This latter category may allow the court some discretion in determining which witnesses will be excluded.

Montana law has allowed the exclusion of witnesses, but is inconsistent with the rule in that it has been a matter of discretion with the court. Section 93-1901-2, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides: "If either party requires it, the judge may exclude from the courtroom any witness of the adverse party, not at the time under examination, so that he may not hear the testimony of other witnesses". Several cases have found that exclusion of witnesses is a matter of discretion with the trial court. Finlen v. Heinze, 32 Mont. 354, 383, 80 P 918 (1905); State v. Walsh, 72 Mont. 110, 117, 232 P 194 (1924); Smith v. Armstrong, 121 Mont. 377, 385, 198 P2d 795 (1948); Thompson v. Yellowstone Livestock Comm'n, 133 Mont. 403, 419, 324 P2d 412 (1958); and State v. Radi, 168 Mont. 320, 542 P2d 1206, 1210, (1975)[; and St. v. Evans, 247 M 218, 806 P2d 512, 48 St. Rep. 170 (1991)]. In State v. McLeod, 131 Mont. 478, 491, 211 P2d 400 (1957), the court also indicated that exclusion of witnesses was a question of discretion of the trial court; "however, this is the first time it has been brought to our notice that a judge has refused absolutely the exclusion rule, especially where...the county attorney informed the court that he had no objection to the exclusion of the witnesses". Supra at 492. The decision indicated that the Supreme Court examined the record to ensure that no witnesses were influenced and found no prejudice. The court went on to indicate "...the better practice especially in felony cases is to apply the customary and universal rule of exclusion when proper and timely request, supported by particular and well-founded reasons, is made". Id. Therefore, to the extent that the rule provides exclusion as a right, it is inconsistent with Montana law, although the trend in Montana appears to be very close to providing a right.

There is no doubt that Section 93-1901-2, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], applies to criminal cases. State v. McDonald, 51 Mont. 1, 7, 149 P 279 (1915) and State v. McLeod, supra. There is also a rule in criminal cases which has evolved since State v. Walsh, 72 Mont. 110, 117, 232 P 194 (1924), where the trial court was upheld for refusing, as a matter of discretion, to exclude two members of the sheriff's office from the courtroom. State v. Fitzpatrick, 149 Mont. 400, 403, 427 P2d 300 (1967), held that it was no error to exempt from an order of exclusion two members of the sheriff's office who were witnesses. In State v. Meidinger, 160 Mont. 310, 320, 502 P2d 58 (1972), the court indicated that "it has been a long and well-established rule in Montana..." that orders of exclusion do not apply to law enforcement personnel, citing State v. Walsh, supra, and State v. Fitzpatrick, supra. It indicated that the trial court, in exercising its discretion, was following the law. However, the latest case in this area, State v. Radi, supra, stated that police officers are exempted from an order of exclusion as a matter of discretion of the trial court. Therefore, to the extent that law enforcement personnel can be included in the second or third categories of the rule, they may be exempted from orders of exclusion; however, the rule does not establish that law enforcement personnel are always exempted from such an order.

Finally, Montana case law has considered an area not included as part of this rule, the sanctions to be imposed for disobedience of such an order. The general rule appears to be that unless the party is aware of a witness' disobedience, the witness should be cited for contempt and the party should not be deprived of his testimony. See State v. McDonald, supra; State v. Johnson, 62 Mont. 503, 510, 205 P 661 (1922); Bickford v. Bickford, 94 Mont. 314, 320, 22 P2d 306 (1933); and State v. Love, 151 Mont. 190, 195, 440 P2d 275 (1968).

Case Notes

Motion to Exclude Victim From Trial Properly Denied: The state filed a notice that the victim of an alleged crime who would testify at trial planned to be present in the courtroom throughout the trial. The defendant, who had been charged with attempted homicide, moved to exclude the victim under Rule 615, M.R.Ev., which the District Court denied. After his conviction, the defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of the motion to exclude, concluding that the defendant, as the moving party, had the burden to prove that the exclusion was warranted. The defendant's conclusory statements without specific facts were insufficient to warrant exclusion given the victim's statutory right to be present at the trial. St. v. Braulick, 2015 MT 147, 379 Mont. 302, 349 P.3d 508.

Testimony of Chief of Police Concerning Legality of Traffic on Controlled Access Highway Properly Excluded: Plaintiffs sued the state for inverse condemnation and taking for constructing a highway improvement project that allegedly impaired access by large trucks to plaintiffs' business on a main street in Dillon. Plaintiffs asserted that the trial court improperly excluded evidence from the city Chief of Police regarding the illegality of maneuvering trucks on the reconstructed limited access highway. The Supreme Court found no error in the trial court's decision because all questions of law, including the admissibility of testimony and the rules of evidence, must be decided by the court. Williams Feed, Inc. v. St., 2007 MT 79, 336 M 493, 155 P3d 1228 (2007).

Valid Designated Representative Allowed to Remain in Court During Trial and to Testify — Former State Employee Not Considered Proper Designated Representative at Trial: The trial court granted the state's motion to exclude all witnesses pursuant to this rule. The state designated former employee Weaver as its representative, and Weaver was allowed to remain in the courtroom at the counsel table while other witnesses testified. Plaintiffs were unaware until Weaver began to testify that Weaver was no longer employed by the state and contended that Weaver should not have been permitted to testify as a fact witness after all witnesses had been excluded, citing St. v. Claric, 271 M 141, 894 P2d 946 (1995), and St. v. Flowers, 2004 MT 37, 320 M 49, 86 P3d 3 (2004). The Supreme Court clarified this rule, noting that the plain language of the rule provides that both a natural person who is a party and a designated representative of a party who is not a natural person may remain in the courtroom notwithstanding the exclusion of other witnesses. Thus, Claric and Flowers were overruled to the extent that those cases held that a valid designated representative may not both remain in the courtroom and testify. However, the rule also provides that an appropriate designated representative is an officer or employee of a party who is not a natural person. Weaver was no longer a state employee and thus did not qualify as a proper representative at retrial. Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006). In St. v. Nichols, 2014 MT 343, 377 Mont. 384, 339 P.3d 1274, the Supreme Court clarified that the holding in Faulconbridge applies to both civil and criminal cases.

Exclusion of Defense Expert From Listening to Testimony of Complaining Witnesses Not Abuse of Discretion: At Riggs's trial on sex charges involving children, the trial court allowed Riggs to present extensive expert testimony critical of the interviewing techniques employed in the investigation, but did not allow defendant's expert to listen to the testimony of the complaining witnesses, reasoning that to do so would be useful preparation only for credibility testimony that had been prohibited by the court. Given the general preference in this rule to exclude witnesses from the courtroom, the Supreme Court held that Riggs was not prejudiced by the exclusion of his expert from the courtroom and that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in doing so. St. v. Riggs, 2005 MT 124, 327 M 196, 113 P3d 281 (2005).

Allowing Investigating Officer Witness to Remain in Courtroom — Harmless Error: Defendant requested that all witnesses be excluded from the courtroom during trial, but the trial court allowed a police officer who investigated the crime and who was a state witness to remain in the room when all other witnesses were excluded. Although it was error to allow the officer to remain and hear the testimony of the other witnesses, the Supreme Court applied St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001), in determining that the trial error in this instance was harmless because the officer's presence did not prejudice defendant's case. St. v. Flowers, 2004 MT 37, 320 M 49, 86 P3d 3 (2004), overruled in Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006), to the extent that a valid designated representative may not both remain in the courtroom and testify. In St. v. Nichols, 2014 MT 343, 377 Mont. 384, 339 P.3d 1274, the Supreme Court clarified that the holding in Faulconbridge applies to both civil and criminal cases.

Failure to Exclude Testifying Witness From Courtroom — No Prejudice: Before the court received testimony, the state moved to exclude witnesses from the courtroom. The court granted the motion but allowed a Deputy Sheriff who was to testify to remain in the courtroom. Although the deputy should have been excluded as well, he was not an eyewitness. His only role was to describe what he had learned from the participants and eyewitnesses. His observations were documented in a report that was admitted as evidence, and if his testimony was not consistent with the report, he was subject to impeachment. In this case, failure to exclude the deputy from the courtroom was not reversible error because defendant was not prejudiced by the ruling. St. v. Claric, 271 M 141, 894 P2d 946, 52 St. Rep. 377 (1995), overruled in Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006), to the extent that a valid designated representative may not both remain in the courtroom and testify. See also St. v. Osborne, 1999 MT 149, 295 M 54, 982 P2d 1045, 56 St. Rep. 589 (1999), and St. v. Nichols, 2014 MT 343, 377 Mont. 384, 339 P.3d 1274, in which the Supreme Court clarified that the holding in Faulconbridge applies to both civil and criminal cases.

Exclusion Request Made After Sixteen Witnesses Testified — Untimely: Although this rule does not specify when a request for exclusion of witness must be made, the Supreme Court upheld the trial court's denial, for lack of timeliness, of a motion for sequestration made after 16 witnesses had already testified. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983).

Article VII Opinions and Expert Testimony

Article Case Notes

Error in Denial of Continuance so That New Psychosexual Evaluation Might Be Performed Without Polygraph Test: As part of a plea agreement in an incest case, Anderson was required to voluntarily submit to a psychosexual evaluation, which included a polygraph test. Results of the test were considered in the preparation of the presentence sexual offender evaluation. Anderson moved for a continuance of the sentencing hearing so that a new psychosexual evaluation could be performed without the use of a polygraph, but the continuance motion was denied. Noting that pursuant to St. v. Staat, 248 M 291, 811 P2d 1261 (1991), polygraph evidence may not be used in any proceeding in a Montana court, the Supreme Court reversed and ordered a new psychosexual evaluation performed without the use of a polygraph and the preparation of a new presentence sexual offender evaluation in light of the new psychosexual evaluation. St. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 58, 293 M 472, 977 P2d 315, 56 St. Rep. 243 (1999), followed in In re N.V., 2004 MT 80, 320 M 442, 87 P3d 510 (2004).

Introduction of Polygraph Results in Custody or Visitation Dispute Prohibited: As part of a modification of Robert's visitation rights, the District Court required that Robert undergo a sex offender evaluation. Robert argued that the results of a polygraph test taken as a part of the sex offender evaluation should not be introducible. Citing St. v. Staat, 248 M 291, 811 P2d 1261 (1991), and 37-62-302 (now repealed), the Supreme Court held that the results of a polygraph test taken as part of a court-ordered sex offender evaluation would not be admissible in subsequent proceedings in the case. In re Marriage of Njos/Allard, 270 M 54, 889 P2d 1192, 52 St. Rep. 74 (1995), followed in St. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 58, 293 M 472, 977 P2d 315, 56 St. Rep. 243 (1999).

Conflicting Testimony of Experts:

The credibility of expert witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony are matters for the District Court's determination in a nonjury trial. The Supreme Court will presume the findings and judgment of the District Court are correct when presented with the question of contradictory expert opinions. Fairview v. Deming, 238 M 496, 778 P2d 876, 46 St. Rep. 1446 (1989).

Defendant argued that the trial court should have believed its expert testimony rather than the expert testimony of the plaintiffs and therefore should not have denied its counterclaim. On appeal, the Supreme Court said that there was substantial credible evidence upon which the trial court could deny the counterclaim. Morrison-Maierle, Inc. v. Selsco, 186 M 180, 606 P2d 1085, 37 St. Rep. 299 (1980).

Witness Not Listed as Expert — No Foundation in Trial as Witness: A witness was not listed in interrogatories as an expert witness; the opposing party through depositions was satisfied that the witness did not have expertise in the subject area, and, at the time of trial, he was not questioned to provide a foundation to qualify him as an expert. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in allowing questioning on redirect examination that asked the witness his opinion on the cause of the accident. Such opinion on whether the machinery in question was defective or unreasonably unsafe was within the province and ordinary understanding of the jury. Tacke v. Vermeer Mfg. Co., 220 M 1, 713 P2d 527, 43 St. Rep. 123 (1986).

Weight of Expert's Testimony — Criminal Defense Witness: A defense witness who testified as to the drugged condition of the defendant for the purposes of negating requisite criminal mental state and whose testimony was not rebutted by the State is not necessarily entitled to more weight than the testimony of any other witness; thus, the evidence relating to the drug use of the defendant in the State's case in chief, although not made by experts, presented a question for the jury to decide. St. v. Doney, 194 M 22, 636 P2d 1377, 38 St. Rep. 1707 (1981).

Expert Evidence Necessary Where Laymen Have No Knowledge: A court and jury must be dependent on expert evidence regarding matters with respect to which a layperson can have no knowledge whatever. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Expert Evidence Not Needed to Show Attorney Negligent: Insurer's agent, an attorney, filed an action against plaintiff for damages arising out of accident. Plaintiff was not involved in the accident and notified insurer that it had sued the wrong person; the litigation was pursued to default judgment against plaintiff, who refused to defend. The question whether insurer's attorney was negligent was well within the realm of knowledge of a layman. Nothing legally technical was involved in judging the attorney's conduct. Expert testimony on the matter of attorney's negligence was not required and would not have been helpful. The lower court did not err in failing to grant insurer's motion for directed verdict. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Rule 701. Opinion testimony by lay witnesses.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 701. It has the effect of restating the lay opinion rule, not in terms of numerous exceptions but of safeguards which are easier to apply. It also allows limited expansion within these safeguards.

The traditional lay opinion rule, found in early American common law, prohibited lay witnesses from testifying as to their opinions. Yet the traditional rule has been criticized because of the difficulty of distinguishing "facts" which lay witnesses could testify to and "opinions" which they could not. See Territory v. Clayton, 8 Mont. 1, 12, 19 P 293 (1888) and Watson v. Colusa-Parrot Mining and Smelting Co., 31 Mont. 513, 521, 79 P 12 (1905). The impracticality of the traditional rule is obvious when the many sensible exceptions to it are considered. These exceptions are part of Montana case law, the most general of which allows a witness to give an opinion which is a "shorthand rendering of the facts". State v. Lucey, 24 Mont. 295, 302, 61 P 994, (1900); State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 341, 71 P 3 (1903); State v. Byrd, 41 Mont. 585, 592, 111 P 407 (1910); and State v. Collins, 88 Mont. 514, 523, 294 P 957 (1930).

Montana case law provided additional exceptions to the traditional rule, as the following statement indicates:

...all concede the admissibility of the opinions of nonprofessional men upon a great variety of unscientific questions arising every day, and in every judicial inquiry. These are questions of identity, handwriting, quantity, value, weight, measure, time, distance, velocity, form, size, age, strength, heat, cold, sickness, and health; questions also concerning various mental and moral aspects of humanity, such as disposition and temper, anger, fear, excitement, intoxication, veracity, general character, and particular phases of character, and other conditions and things, both moral and physical, too numerous to mention. State v. Trueman 34 Mont. 249, 253, 85 P 1024 (1906).

Other cases have allowed opinions in the following specific areas: the general health of another person (Fearon v. Mullen, 38 Mont. 45, 52, 98 P 650 (1908)); nervousness (State v. Lucey, supra 24 Mont. at 303); fright (State v. Byrd, supra 41 Mont. at 592); the nature of alcohol and intoxication (State v. Trueman, supra 34 Mont. at 252; State v. Sedlacek, 74 Mont. 201, 211, 239 P 1002 (1925), Meinecke v. Intermountain Transp. Co., 101 Mont. 315, 322, 55 P2d 680 (1936), and State v. Strobel, 130 Mont. 442, 446, 304 P2d 606 (1956)); the speed of an automobile (Herzig v. Sandberg, 54 Mont. 538, 540, 172 P 132 (1918); State v. Souhrada, 122 Mont. 377, 381, 204 P2d 792 (1949); and Cross v. Tretheway, 155 Mont. 337, 340, 471 P2d 538 (1970)); the fitness of a parent to have custody of children (Wilson v. Wilson, 128 Mont. 511, 517, 278 P2d 219 (1955)); the value of property (Klind v. Valley County Bank of Hinsdale, 69 Mont. 386, 394, 222 P 439 (1924); State v. Russell, 93 Mont. 334, 336, 18 P2d 611 (1933); Harding v. H.F. Johnson, Inc., 126 Mont. 70, 82, 244 P2d 111 (1952) and Futton v. Rocky Mountain Phosphates, 151 Mont. 54, 69, 438 P2d 674 (1968)); and finally, the value of the witness' own services. Matoole v. Sullivan, 55 Mont. 363, 367, 177 P 254 (1918).

Still other exceptions to the lay opinion rule can be found in Section 93-401-27(9), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], which allows the opinion of a witness respecting the identity or handwriting of a person "when he has knowledge of the person or handwriting..." and (10) which allows "the opinion of a subscribing witness to a writing....respecting the mental sanity of the signer; and the opinion of the intimate acquaintanceship respecting the mental sanity of a person, the reason for the opinion being given". It is not clear whether these two statutory provisions come within the scope of the rule.

The rule is intended to be consistent with the holdings of Montana case law exception. However, this rule changes existing Montana law to the extent that it operates by allowing lay opinions to be admitted using two safeguards rather than having the traditional rule riddled with necessary exceptions and without any such safeguards. The first safeguard, found in (a), requires the lay witness to base his opinion upon his personal knowledge in accord with the Rule 602. In addition, the opinion must be "rationally based on the perception of the witness", ensuring an opinion or inference that would ordinarily be the result of a particular perception. The second safeguard, found in (b), requires the opinion to be "helpful to a clear understanding of his testimony or the determination of a fact in issue". This safeguard expresses a policy found throughout Article VII and under this rule is intended to allow only those lay opinions which will assist the trier of fact in making its findings. It expresses the intention of the Federal drafters of "...putting the trier of fact in possession of an accurate reproduction of the event". Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 701, 56 F.R.D. 183, 281 (1972). It also provides the court with a means of dealing with broad assertions which could conceivably be admitted under this rule, even though "...a detailed account carries more conviction..." and is subject to cross-examination and argument pointing up the weakness of such assertions. Id.

Case Notes

Admission of Opinion Evidence From Detective as to Credibility of 4-Year-Old Victim's Testimony Was Abuse of Discretion When Detective Not Qualified as Expert — Error Not Violative of Defendant's Right to Fair Trial When Defendant Acquiesced to Victim's Credibility in Defendant's Own Testimony. St. v. Mountain Chief, 2023 MT 147, 413 Mont. 131, 533 P.3d 663.

Officer's Testimony on Blood Spatter — Harmless Error to Not Disclose Officer as Expert: The defendant was charged with killing a man in his garage. At trial, a police officer was allowed to testify where he observed blood in the garage and to offer his interpretation about where the defendant was standing at the time he fired his gun. Following his conviction, the defendant appealed and the Supreme Court agreed that the officer should have been disclosed as an expert. The Supreme Court concluded that the officer's testimony constituted expert testimony because it was based on his training and expertise. Nevertheless, the District Court affirmed because it ruled that the error was harmless given that it was cumulative in nature. St. v. Kaarma, 2017 MT 24, 386 Mont. 243, 390 P.3d 609.

Appraiser Not Agent of Buyer — Property Owner Qualified as Lay Witness: After the defendants defaulted on a mortgage, the buyer of the property at a sheriff's sale (and holder of the property's mortgage note) sought a deficiency judgment. At a hearing concerning the property's value, over the buyer's objection, an appraisal that the defendants used to form their valuation of the property was admitted into evidence. On appeal, the buyer argued that the appraisal was hearsay, and the defendants argued that it was properly admitted because the appraisal was the vicarious admission of value made by the buyer through its agent, the appraiser, under Rule 801, M.R.Ev. However, although the appraiser was hired to perform an appraisal by the buyer, he was an independent appraiser, not an agent of the buyer. Further, although as an owner a defendant was permitted to testify as a lay witness about the property's worth, she was not an expert witness who could rely on inadmissible opinions under Rule 703, M.R.Ev. Thus, the District Court abused its discretion by admitting the appraisal. Whitefish Credit Union v. Prindiville, 2015 MT 328, 381 Mont. 443, 362 P.3d 53.

Attorney Not Qualified to Offer Expert Medical Opinions: The District Court relied on the testimony of an attorney and dismissed a legal malpractice case by concluding that the underlying medical malpractice case would not have been successful. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the attorney was not qualified to offer expert medical opinions, and the case was remanded to the District Court. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160, following Maulding v. Hardman, 257 Mont. 18, 847 P.2d 292 (1993), and Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 Mont. 342, 916 P.2d 122 (1996).

General Testimony on Impairment — Expert Marijuana Testimony by Nonexperts Harmless: Deputies testified as experts on how marijuana impairs driving ability in a DUI trial, but their training and experience were insufficient to qualify them as experts. The error was held to be harmless because the deputies' nonexpert testimony provided sufficient observations of the driver's general impairment, the testimony of the driver and the driver's performance on the field sobriety tests indicated impairment, and the defense on cross-examination demonstrated to the jury that neither deputy was an expert regarding marijuana's impact on the ability to drive. St. v. Larson, 2010 MT 236, 358 Mont. 156, 243 P.3d 1130.

Expert Testimony Properly Limited After Disclosure Deadline Passed: It was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to exclude expert testimony in a case in chief when the expert disclosure deadline had passed. The exclusion was well within a trial court's great latitude in ruling on admissibility of expert testimony. DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718.

Admission of Officer's Personal Observation Testimony Cumulative and Harmless: At Foston's trial for distribution of dangerous drugs, the trial court, pursuant to Rule 803, M.R.Ev., admitted testimony by an officer that conversations overheard between Foston and a confidential informant were consistent with drug transactions. Foston appealed on grounds that the testimony constituted plain error. The Supreme Court noted that the testimony was admissible under Rule 701, M.R.Ev., as a statement of the officer's personal observation. The court further found that even without the officer's testimony, there was ample evidence from which the jury could conclude that Foston was selling drugs, so the testimony was cumulative and harmless if it was error at all. St. v. Foston, 2009 MT 191, 351 M 85, 209 P3d 262 (2009).

Failure to Disclose Expert — Testimony Properly Excluded: Plaintiff failed to properly disclose a witness as an expert, despite three requests by defendant to disclose expert witnesses. It was therefore within the authority of the trial court to exclude the witness's testimony as a result of plaintiff's failure to disclose. First Citizens Bank v. Sullivan, 2008 MT 428, 347 M 452, 200 P3d 39 (2008). See also Nelson v. Nelson, 2005 MT 263, 329 M 85, 122 P3d 1196 (2005).

Disclosure Required for Expert Testimony Based on Industry Standards Rather Than Personal Knowledge: Defendant sought to introduce testimony by a local real estate agent on the custom and practice of paying trailing commissions on Montana real estate transactions. Plaintiff objected on grounds that the agent was giving undisclosed expert testimony and not evidence based on the agent's personal knowledge as required by Rule 701, M.R.Ev., and on grounds that the testimony was irrelevant because the agent had no personal experience working for defendant. The District Court agreed and limited the agent's testimony. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because the agent had never worked for defendant, the proposed testimony would have been based on industry standards rather than personal knowledge and should have been disclosed as expert testimony pursuant to Rule 702, M.R.Ev. West v. The Club at Spanish Peaks, LLC, 2008 MT 183, 343 M 434, 186 P3d 1228 (2008), distinguishing Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695 (1984).

Admissibility of Summary of Medical Expenses Not Error When Injury Obvious and Plaintiff Competent: At a personal injury trial, the District Court allowed plaintiff to introduce a one-page summary of plaintiff's medical expenses. Defendant asserted on appeal that plaintiff's medical providers should have been required to lay the foundation for admission of the summary. The Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiff's injuries comprised the type of injuries that a lay person could infer had resulted from plaintiff's accident, and plaintiff was competent to testify regarding the injuries and past expenses incurred as a result of the injuries. Thus, admission of the summary was not an abuse of discretion. McCormack v. Andres, 2008 MT 182, 343 M 424, 185 P3d 973 (2008), following Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287 (1992).

Failure to Object to Firefighter's Lay Testimony Regarding Burn Patterns — Admissibility Affirmed: During Henderson's arson trial, the state sought to introduce testimony of a firefighter who was at the scene. Defense counsel objected that because the firefighter was not a qualified expert, the firefighter's opinion testimony should not be allowed. The trial court allowed counsel to voir dire the firefighter in the presence of the jury, and the firefighter responded by explaining how to find a point of origin of a fire, describing indications of arson, and discussing pour patterns. Defense counsel did not move to strike the testimony or move for a limiting instruction after the court allowed the firefighter to testify as a lay witness, nor did counsel register a continuing objection to ensuing testimony that was based in part on the voir dire responses. Following conviction, Henderson contended that the testimony amounted to impermissible expert testimony, but the Supreme Court affirmed. By eliciting the evidence on voir dire, Henderson waived the right to object on appeal. Additionally, even though the testimony went beyond personal observations made at the scene, given Henderson's failure to object to the voir dire testimony regarding pour patterns, the trial court did not err in allowing testimony concerning the firefighter's observation of pour patterns at the scene. St. v. Henderson, 2005 MT 333, 330 M 34, 125 P3d 1132 (2005).

Sufficient Foundation for Lay Testimony Based on Training and Experience: Frasure contended that two police officers were allowed to give expert testimony at Frasure's drug trial without the prosecution first laying a foundation establishing the officers' qualifications as experts, as required in Rule 702, M.R.Ev. The state contended that the testimony was actually admissible lay testimony under this rule. The Supreme Court found that the state had established that the officers had extensive training and experience in the methods used in the illicit drug trade and in the prices that illicit drugs generally garner and that this provided a sufficient foundation for the officers to provide testimony as to whether Frasure possessed drugs with the intent to sell. The testimony was rationally based on the officers' perceptions and helped give a clear understanding of whether Frasure had the necessary intent and was thus admissible as lay testimony. St. v. Frasure, 2004 MT 305, 323 M 479, 100 P3d 1013 (2004). See also St. v. Champagne, 2013 MT 190, 371 Mont. 35, 305 P.3d 61. See also St. v. Zlahn, 2014 MT 224, 376 Mont. 245, 332 P.3d 247, holding that an officer's testimony concerning inferences based on his experience about criminal demeanor was properly admitted.

Proper Exclusion of Lay Testimony of Paramedics Regarding Resuscitability — Expert Testimony Required: Plaintiff requested that a medical team be sent to her home to attend to her husband who was in respiratory arrest, but the police dispatcher sent the medics to the wrong address. The husband subsequently died, and the wife brought a wrongful death and negligence action against the city. In their depositions, the paramedics testified that had they been correctly dispatched, they would have arrived at the home and begun resuscitation procedures several minutes earlier, enhancing the chances of survival. The city argued that the prospects for survival were a subject for expert testimony and that such testimony by the paramedics lacked foundation and was speculative. The District Court agreed and granted the city's motion in limine to exclude the testimony. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The paramedics' proposed testimony clearly extended beyond their observations at the scene or a description of their actions and into the realm of expert medical testimony. Absent a foundation establishing the expertise of the paramedics to give an expert opinion on resuscitability, their lay testimony was properly excluded. Christofferson v. Great Falls, 2003 MT 189, 316 M 469, 74 P3d 1021 (2003).

Abuse of Discretion in Allowing Testimony of Accident Reconstructionist Absent Foundation for Expert Opinion Testimony: Defendants presented an accident reconstructionist as an expert witness. However, the expert explained that the visibility test about which he testified required no specialized skill or knowledge to perform or analyze, so the foundational requirements for expert testimony in Rule 702, M.R.Ev., were not met. Further, because defendants never disclosed the expert as a fact witness during discovery or pretrial proceedings, testimony as a lay witness was also precluded under this rule. Thus, absent establishment of the necessary foundation for expert opinion testimony, the District Court erred in allowing the expert to testify on the visibility test. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

Improper Admission of Testimony by Highway Patrol Officer Regarding Effect of Prescription Medication on Driving Ability — Harmless Error: During Nobach's DUI trial, the District Court allowed testimony from a highway patrol officer regarding the effect of prescription medications on Nobach's driving ability, without specifically determining whether the testimony would be considered expert or lay opinion. The officer opined that Nobach's ability to drive safely was diminished as a result of the consumption of drugs. Following conviction, Nobach appealed on grounds that the testimony was an expert opinion that was improperly allowed without the requisite foundation. The state contended that the testimony was a lay opinion, and cited St. v. Bradley, 262 M 194, 864 P2d 787 (1993), and St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173 (1997), for the proposition that a lay witness may give an opinion regarding intoxication based on the witness's personal observations. The Supreme Court first distinguished Bradley and Carter because the type of intoxication in those cases involved alcohol, while in Nobach's case, the officer concluded that drugs were involved only when alcohol use was ruled out by the administration of a Breathalyzer test. The court was not convinced that lay people are sufficiently knowledgeable about common symptoms of drug consumption and its effect on driving ability to offer lay testimony on the subject based on personal observation. The officer's opinion testimony was thus considered expert testimony rather than lay testimony, requiring an adequate foundation under Rule 702, M.R.Ev. The officer's training and experience did not provide a sufficient foundation for admitting the expert testimony, so the District Court abused its discretion in allowing it. However, because the abuse was trial error rather than structural error, the error did not warrant automatic reversal.

Rather, the question was whether the finder of fact was presented with admissible evidence that proved the same facts as the tainted evidence and, if so, whether the tainted evidence would have contributed to the conviction qualitatively by comparison. In this case, the state provided other expert testimony from a pharmacist that tended to prove the same facts as the officer's testimony, and because the officer's testimony would not have contributed to Nobach's conviction, the error was harmless and the conviction was affirmed. St. v. Nobach, 2002 MT 91, 309 M 342, 46 P3d 618 (2002).

Admissibility of Testimony of Police Officers Not Qualified as Experts: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. In her case in chief, Onstad presented testimony by three police officers who investigated the assault, but the officers had not been qualified as witnesses prior to trial. Notwithstanding that Payless had, in its opening statement, raised issues about which the officers testified, including store security and the escalation of severity in a sexual deviant's actions, Payless objected to the testimony on grounds that the officers were unqualified lay witnesses testifying on issues that required expert opinions. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officers to answer, pursuant to this rule, because their opinions sprang from their work and experience as police and involved matters about which they were qualified to testify through training and extensive experience. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000). See also Hislop v. Cady, 261 M 243, 862 P2d 388 (1993).

Witness Testimony Properly Disallowed as Irrelevant: McGillen sued for unlawful discharge from employment, arguing on appeal that the trial court erred by not allowing his witnesses to give opinions on whether McGillen's conduct constituted a violation of company policy and whether the firing was justified. The ultimate question before the jury was whether McGillen was wrongfully discharged, and the witnesses' personal opinions about whether they thought that McGillen's conduct violated company rules were irrelevant. The testimony was also properly excluded because McGillen admitted in his deposition that he had violated company rules. McGillen v. Plum Creek Timber Co., 1998 MT 193, 290 M 264, 964 P2d 18, 55 St. Rep. 808 (1998).

Admissibility of Ambulance Attendant's Testimony That Driver in Accident Acted Like Belligerent Drunk: Since defendant was charged with DUI, not with driving with an illegal blood alcohol content, the ambulance attendant's testimony that defendant's actions after the accident occurred were those of a belligerent drunk did not constitute an opinion of guilt, and it was not an abuse of discretion to allow admission of the testimony. St. v. Gregoroff, 287 M 1, 951 P2d 578, 54 St. Rep. 1469 (1997).

Foundational Requirements of Knowledge of Intoxication by Lay Witness — Opinion Testimony Properly Admitted: Kucera, an off-duty firefighter, watched Carter stagger from a tavern, cross the street, get in a car, and drive away. Carter, appearing intoxicated, was followed by Kucera in Kucera's own car and was observed driving through a stop sign, at which time Kucera reported Carter to the police via portable radio, resulting in Carter's subsequent arrest for DUI. At trial, Kucera answered three questions pertaining to his opinion as to whether Carter was intoxicated. Carter asserted that Kucera's statements about his impression, concern, and feeling that Carter was intoxicated did not meet the standard of testifying from personal knowledge required by Rule 602, M.R.Ev. However, as a lay witness, Kucera's opinions or inferences were rationally based on his perception and personal knowledge. The state established that Kucera knew the objective signs of intoxication, had much experience being around people in varying states of intoxication, and had observed Carter for some time before alerting police. Because the state complied with the foundational requirements of Rule 602, M.R.Ev., and this rule, Kucera's lay witness opinion testimony was properly admitted. St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173, 54 St. Rep. 1235 (1997).

Victim's Deathbed Statements Admissible as to State of Mind of Victim — Cautionary Instruction Required: As Turner was dying, he made statements to several witnesses to the effect that Fuhrmann stabbed him "on purpose" and that the stabbing was "not an accident". The trial court admitted the statements into evidence. On appeal, Fuhrmann contended that the testimony by the witnesses was inadmissible hearsay because the statements regarding Fuhrmann's intent addressed Fuhrmann's, rather than Turner's, state of mind and thus did not fall within the hearsay exception in Rule 803(3), M.R.Ev. Following St. v. Magruder, 234 M 492, 765 P2d 716 (1988), and St. v. Losson, 262 M 342, 865 P2d 255 (1993), the Supreme Court concluded: (1) Turner's statements that Fuhrmann stabbed him "on purpose" and that the stabbing was "not an accident", if the statements were construed as providing evidence that Turner feared Fuhrmann, could only be construed as providing circumstantial evidence of Turner's fear and, under that construction, would not be considered as hearsay and would be admissible; (2) such statements must be offered only for the purpose of showing the declarant's state of mind and may not be offered for the truth of the matter asserted; and (3) to prevent any potential prejudicial effect on a defendant and to uphold the integrity of both the hearsay rule and the state of mind exception of Rule 803(3), M.R.Ev., a trial court must instruct the jury as to the limited purpose for which it may consider this type of testimony. Nevertheless, in Fuhrmann's case, failure by the court to offer a limiting instruction was harmless error given the overwhelming independent evidence of guilt. St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996).

Officer Not Qualified as Expert — Testimony as Lay Witness Only: The Supreme Court ruled that without being qualified as an expert in accident reconstruction, a highway patrol officer could not testify as to his opinion on the cause of an accident but was limited to lay opinions based upon his own perceptions regarding a fact at issue. Hall v. Big Sky Lumber & Supply, Inc., 261 M 328, 863 P2d 389, 50 St. Rep. 1345 (1993).

Nonmember of Board of Directors Not Allowed to Testify as to Board's Judgment: A special verdict form required the jury to determine whether the board of directors of the Butte Water Company, in the board's judgment, had a basis to conclude that it was in the best interests of the company to fire Mannix, president of the company. Mannix attempted to introduce testimony by a long-time employee of the company that it was not in the company's best interests to fire Mannix. The Supreme Court held that the testimony was inadmissible and irrelevant. The issue was whether the board had a basis to reach its conclusion not whether a lay witness thought that the firing was not in the company's best interests. Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 259 M 79, 854 P2d 834, 50 St. Rep. 691 (1993).

Lay Witness's Explanation of Voluminous Documents Admissible Under Rules 602 and 701 and as Summary Under Rule 1006: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. The District Court awarded both Cowles and Sheeline 50% of the shares in the mining company, based in part on the testimony of Don Cowles, Jr. Sheeline argued that Cowles's testimony concerning the number of shares issued by the mining company should not have been permitted because Cowles was not an expert. The Supreme Court found that the record indicated that Cowles did not testify as an expert but only as to his interpretation of his typewritten copy of his father's handwritten notes from the company stock book and as to Cowles's summaries of exhibits already in evidence. These summaries were helpful in explaining many pages of documents to the District Court. The Supreme Court concluded that Cowles's testimony was admissible under Rules 602, 701, and 1006, M.R.Ev. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Clear and Convincing Evidence Required — Allegation in Complaint, Statements in Judgment, and Unqualified Expert Medical Opinion Insufficient: Because of allegations that alcohol was involved in a car accident, the District Court awarded $25,000 for punitive damages to Maulding as part of a default judgment against Hardman. The Supreme Court noted that the only evidence of the use of alcohol was an unsubstantiated allegation in the complaint and that the only rationale by the District Court was a statement in the judgment that "evidence showed" that the accident was caused by the use of alcohol. The Supreme Court also noted that at the hearing on the matter, Maulding's counsel was allowed to give unqualified expert medical opinion, which the District Court should not have accepted. For these reasons, the Supreme Court reversed the denial of a motion to set aside the default. Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Allowing Witness to Testify as Expert When Not Listed as Expert — No Error When Testimony Related to Personal Knowledge: Allowing a witness to testify as an expert, even though he was not listed as an expert in either discovery responses or the pretrial order, was not error when the witness's testimony was not expert testimony but rather related only to matters of which he had personal knowledge. Bache v. Gilden, 252 M 178, 827 P2d 817, 49 St. Rep. 203 (1992).

Social Worker With Only Sexual Abuse Treatment Experience Not Qualified as Expert — Reversible Error: In determining that the District Court improperly allowed into evidence opinion testimony by a social worker on whether the victim had been sexually abused, the Supreme Court held that allowing the testimony constituted reversible error because the social worker had no experience in treating children who had not been sexually abused and thus had no controlled standard that allowed her to arrive at the conclusion that abuse had occurred. St. v. Scheffelman, 250 M 334, 820 P2d 1293, 48 St. Rep. 1023 (1991), followed in St. v. Steffes, 269 M 214, 887 P2d 1196, 51 St. Rep. 1463 (1994), and St. v. Whitlow, 285 M 430, 949 P2d 239, 54 St. Rep. 1227 (1997).

Testimony of Nonexpert Witness Limited to Facts: A nonexpert witness is generally limited to testifying to matters of fact. It was error, albeit harmless absent prejudice to appellant, for a trial court to admit testimony of a college course instructor when the thrust of his testimony was not the fact that he taught the material but rather the material itself, which was to a large extent only his opinion. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991), followed in Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Police Officer Testifying as to Meaning of Taped Conversation: The authorities hired an informant to aid them in drug investigations. The defendant was arrested, and the primary evidence against him was a tape recording taken by the informant. Nowhere on the tape was there any specific reference to drugs. The prosecutor called an officer to testify as to how the taped conversation should be interpreted. The Supreme Court ruled that the officer's testimony was inadmissible because the jury was able to understand the plain language on the tape and therefore it was improper to allow a lay witness to interpret the conversation. St. v. Webb, 243 M 368, 792 P2d 1097, 47 St. Rep. 1050 (1990).

Landowner Testimony — Value of Property: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, the purchaser was allowed to estimate the value of the resort he purchased from the defendant seller. A landowner has the right to testify as to the value of his property. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989), followed in Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993).

Testimony Admitted as Exception to Lay Opinion Rule: The trial court excluded the plaintiff's testimony that a third party had told him that the defendant had made statements pressuring the third party not to award a subcontract to the plaintiff. The trial court held that the testimony of the plaintiff was an opinion that the defendant's statements constituted an attempt to pressure the third party and was therefore inadmissible. The Supreme Court reversed on grounds that the testimony was admissible as an exception to the lay opinion rule since the evidence could be characterized as concerning the various mental and moral aspects of humanity, such as disposition and temper, anger, fear, veracity, and other conditions and things, both moral and physical, too numerous to mention. Phillip R. Morrow, Inc. v. FBS Ins. Mont.-Hoiness Labar, Inc., 236 M 394, 770 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 455 (1989).

Existence of Agreement and Subsequent Breach: The District Court erred in allowing lay witnesses to testify as to the existence and breach of an agreement between the parties when their testimony was based on conversations with others rather than their own personal perceptions. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Acceptability of Lay Witness Opinion Testimony: Opinion testimony of a lay witness was acceptable where the witness was substantially involved in the affairs of his business enterprise, his statements were rationally based on his own perceptions, and the testimony was helpful to the determination of a fact in issue. Springer v. Opsahl, 229 M 10, 744 P2d 884, 44 St. Rep. 1738 (1987).

Police Officer Testifying to Effect of Mechanical Defect in Automobile: Law enforcement officer testified solely as to what, in his experience, happens to a vehicle when its power steering fails and did not offer an opinion as to what specifically happened to defendant's vehicle. Testimony indicated officer was well-qualified to offer his lay opinion, and admission of his testimony was not error. St. v. Johnson, 221 M 503, 719 P2d 1248, 43 St. Rep. 1010 (1986).

Determination of Major Issue of Fact — No Error: In a product liability case, both parties agreed that the brake line on a truck was defective but disagreed as to whether it left the factory in a defective condition or was altered at a later time. Defendant maintained that the brake line could have been altered at the shop where the truck frame was shortened. Undoubtedly the question of whether the shop could have altered the line was helpful in determining a major issue of fact. Because the employee who did the actual frame shortening was unavailable as a witness, the owner of the shop was an appropriate witness to respond to questioning with regard to the procedure. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the cross-examination of the shop owner. Rix v. Gen. Motors Corp., 222 M 318, 723 P2d 195, 43 St. Rep. 1296 (1986).

Sufficient Proof of Existence, Cause, and Permanency of Physical Injury: In a tort suit for damages for a back injury, plaintiff was competent to testify as to his past and present condition and his testimony was sufficient for the jury to determine whether there was an injury. However, the testimony was not sufficient to prove permanency or cause of the injury when his testimony was disputed and permanency and cause were not apparent from the injury itself. Since the trial court gave the issue of permanency to the jury with insufficient proof, error occurred and a new trial on the issue of damages was ordered. Cain v. Stevenson, 218 M 101, 706 P2d 128, 42 St.

Rep. 1428 (1985), followed in St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106, 49 St. Rep. 586 (1992), and in Moralli v. Lake County, 255 M 23, 839 P2d 1287, 49 St. Rep. 872 (1992).

Later Voluntary Amplification of Confession — No Second Miranda Warning — Sheriff as Nonexpert — Not Error: Approximately a month after his arrest for homicide, followed by a Miranda warning and confession, the defendant asked to see the Sheriff. When the Sheriff arrived at the cell, no Miranda warning was given, but the defendant began clarifying his confession and reenacting transactions that occurred the day of the homicide. The Supreme Court held it was not error for the District Court to admit the Sheriff's testimony regarding the incident because the defendant had been given a Miranda warning at the time of his first confession and he had asked to talk to the Sheriff and voluntarily offered information in an atmosphere free from coercion. The court also held that because there was no direct infringement of the defendant's fourth or fifth amendment rights under the federal constitution, the Sheriff's testimony could not be excluded as the fruit of a suppressed statement. In a further holding, the court provided that the Sheriff's statements were not inadmissible under Rule 701, M. R. Ev., on the grounds that the Sheriff's testimony was nonexpert opinion testimony and that, even if error had occurred, there was no reversible error because no prejudice was demonstrated. St. v. Kutnyak, 211 M 155, 685 P2d 901, 41 St. Rep. 1277 (1984), cited in St. v. Allen, 276 M 298, 916 P2d 112, 53 St. Rep. 403 (1996).

Investigator Not Expert — Investigation Not Opinion Based on Perceptions: Defendant was charged with eight counts of sexual intercourse without consent with his stepdaughter. After defendant pleaded not guilty and noticed an alibi defense, the State amended the information to allege the times of the rapes less precisely. Defense counsel hired Goddard to investigate the charges alleged in the original information. At trial, the trial court refused to allow Goddard to synopsize evidence gleaned from 40 interviews to establish an alibi for defendant to the original information. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the trial court ruling. Goddard's proposed testimony about defendant's alibi defense and the victim's credibility did not involve scientific, technical, or specialized knowledge. The testimony was not a proper subject matter for expert testimony, so Goddard's "opinion" was properly excluded. As a lay witness, Goddard's "opinion" was not based on his own perceptions. His opinion was gathered from interviewing other persons regarding the crimes charged. The trial court properly excluded the hearsay and opinion testimony of the investigator. St. v. Clark, 209 M 473, 682 P2d 1339, 41 St. Rep. 833 (1984).

Safety of Workplace: Mydlarz fell from a ladder at the workplace and was seriously injured. Lins had fallen from the same ladder while performing the same job several days before Mydlarz's fall. The District Court improperly excluded Lins' layman's opinion concerning the safety of the workplace. His opinion was based on his perception from working the same job as Mydlarz, and his testimony would have helped the jury understand the conditions under which Mydlarz was working. Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695, 41 St. Rep. 738 (1984).

Farmer's Testimony as to Damage to Own Land:

Where the State condemned a piece of the defendant's land as right-of-way for an interstate frontage road, the District Court did not err in admitting the defendant's testimony that the heat, noise, and dust from the road would damage the defendant's pig rearing business and testimony of the resulting reduction in value of the property. The landowner-witness rule relied on by the State to exclude that testimony is not directly applicable to this case. What is at issue is the competency of the landowner to testify on the causal link between the taking and any damages to the remainder, and ultimately to the depreciation in market value. The record indicates that the defendant was informed regarding the facts of construction and use of the highway. When a landowner is so informed, he is competent to estimate before-and-after value as to that particular use of his property or the causes of damage to the remaining property. St. v. Howery, 204 M 417, 664 P2d 1387, 40 St. Rep. 975 (1983).

Plaintiffs own a farm surrounded on three sides by the Flathead River and Flathead Lake. After Kerr Dam was built in 1939, the water table in the area began to rise. In 1960 plaintiffs filed suit claiming inverse condemnation of their land and damages due to the rising of the water table. The complaint was amended four times over the years and was finally tried in 1979. Defendant claimed that the cause was barred by prescription and the Statute of Limitations. At all times defendant denied any damage. Plaintiffs presented photographs of the land and a chart showing various tracts in different colors, denoting the degree of soil damage in each tract. Defendant objected that the evidence was a self-serving statement. The Supreme Court recognizes a farmer's competence to testify, without proper foundation, about the effects of water damage to his crop and land. (See Watson v. Colusa-Parrot Min. & Smelting Co., 31 M 513, 79

P 14 (1905).) The chart was held to be properly admissible on this basis. Blasdel v. Mont. Power Co., 196 M 417, 640 P2d 889, 39 St. Rep. 219 (1982).

The landowner-witness rule in valuation of property in a condemnation proceeding consists of two parts: the landowner on prima facie showing of ownership may testify as to value so long as his testimony is reasonable and the value testified to is for the use to which he is putting the land; if the landowner desires to testify as to value when used for other purposes, he must have some peculiar means of forming an intelligent and correct judgment beyond what is presumed to be possessed by men generally. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 175 M 460, 575 P2d 38 (1978), followed in K&R Partnership v. Whitefish, 2008 MT 228, 344 M 336, 189 P3d 593 (2008). See also St. v. Donnes, 187 M 338, 609 P2d 1213, 37 St. Rep. 702 (1980).

Lay Witness Opinion Testimony Inadmissible When Witnesses Did Not See Event: Defendant was convicted of negligent homicide after a vehicle owned by defendant and his wife struck and killed a pedestrian. Both defendant and his wife were in the car at the time of the accident. At the trial, defendant's wife stated the defendant had been driving. There were no eyewitnesses to the accident. The District Court refused to admit the testimony of two lay witnesses who had seen the parties shortly after the accident. Defendant claimed the witnesses should have been allowed, under this rule, to state their opinion as to who had been driving the car at the time of the accident. The Supreme Court ruled that the District Court had not erred in its discretionary decision since the witnesses had not actually seen the accident and since the testimony of one of the witnesses was in conflict with a previous sworn statement. St. v. Henricks, 201 M 157, 653 P2d 479, 39 St. Rep. 2022 (1982), followed in St. v. Smith, 1998 MT 257, 291 M 236, 967 P2d 424, 55 St. Rep. 1058 (1998).

Appraiser-Remodeler Testifying to Defects in House: It was not an abuse of discretion to allow a certified real estate appraiser who had once managed a remodeling department of a lumber company to testify to damage caused by defects in a modular house. Little v. Grizzly Mfg., 195 M 419, 636 P2d 839, 38 St. Rep. 1994 (1981).

Qualifications of Expert Witnesses: A trial court has broad discretion in determining whether a witness may qualify as an expert, and the degree of a witness' qualifications affects the weight but not the admissibility of his testimony. Little v. Grizzly Mfg., 195 M 419, 636 P2d 839, 38 St. Rep. 1994 (1981).

Bond Forfeiture Hearing — Opinion as to Mental Condition: In a hearing to discharge a bond forfeiture order, the trial court improperly excluded the defendant's wife's opinion testimony concerning the defendant's mental condition. The surety offered the wife's testimony in order to meet the statutory criteria of satisfactory excuse for defendant's failure to appear. St. v. Musgrove, 187 M 549, 610 P2d 710, 37 St. Rep. 755 (1980).

Improperly Admitted Expert Testimony — Harmless Error: Although testimony by Sheriff as to his opinion of where an alleged murder weapon was located was improperly admitted over defense attorney's objection, the testimony did not affect substantial rights of the defendant, since cross-examination revealed that the Sheriff's belief regarding the location of the handgun was based on information given him by a third party. St. v. Fitzpatrick, 186 M 187, 606 P2d 1343, 37 St. Rep. 194 (1980).

Testimony to Be Rationally Based on Perception of Witness — Testimony as to Probable Location of Weapon: When a witness had testified that the defendant had taken a handgun from car, walked over an embankment into an open field but out of her sight, and then returned to the car without the gun, the District Court erred in allowing a Sheriff who had gone to the site with the witness and searched unsuccessfully for the weapon to testify as to his opinion of where the weapon was probably located. The Sheriff's testimony was not rationally based on his own perception. St. v. Fitzpatrick, 186 M 187, 606 P2d 1343, 37 St. Rep. 194 (1980).

Opinion Testimony as to State of Intoxication — Harmless Error: Failure to allow witnesses to answer defense attorney's question of whether they thought defendant was drunk or on drugs, when witnesses had testified as to defendant's erratic actions, responses, appearance, and condition and defendant's expert witness had testified concerning the effect of alcohol and drugs, was at most harmless error not affecting the substantive rights of the defendant. St. v. Hardy, 185 M 130, 604 P2d 792, 37 St. Rep. 1 (1980), followed in St. v. Bradley, 262 M 194, 864 P2d 787, 50 St. Rep. 1511 (1993).

Exclusion of Lay Testimony: In the context of this case, the court's exclusion of lay testimony on bullet angles was harmless error as it did not affect the substantial rights of the defendant. St. v. Bier, 181 M 27, 591 P2d 115, 36 St. Rep. 466 (1979).

Lay Opinion — Objection: The court did not commit reversible error in overruling defendant's objection to plaintiffs' testimony concerning opinions as to causation of physical illness which consisted of self-serving statements and speculation because there was ample evidence in the record that plaintiffs suffered emotional distress at the hands of defendant, as established by testimony of another plaintiff to which defendant failed to object. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 176 M 37, 575 P2d 578 (1978).

Rule 702. Testimony by experts.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 702. It states the two common-law standards required before an expert is allowed to give his opinion, each of which is found in existing Montana law.

These two standards are set forth in Section 93-401-27(9), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]: "...his opinion of a question or [sic, should be of] science, art, or trade, when he is skilled therein". The first standard is concerned with whether or not the subject matter is that requiring expert testimony. Case law has construed the phrase "science, art, or trade" to include any particular area "...not within the range of ordinary training or intelligence...." [Bracketed material in commission comments.] (Kelly v. John R. Daily Co., 56 Mont. 63, 79, 181 P 326 (1919)) or "the question must be one involving matters too complex to be readily grasped by the average mind...". Wibaux Realty Co. v. N. Pac. Ry., 101 Mont. 126, 139, 54 P2d 1175 (1935). The rule states this standard in slightly different terms of having the "scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge... assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine the fact in issue...". This is consistent with Forquer v. Slater Brick Co., 37 Mont. 426, 460, 97 P 843 (1908) which indicated that expert testimony would not have aided the jury in its determination and so it should be excluded. Demarais v. Johnson, 90 Mont. 366, 370, 3 P2d 283 (1931) and cases cited therein indicate that expert testimony should be admitted so that the jury is able to understand the facts and draw correct conclusions. Other cases exclude expert testimony when the Supreme Court has found that the opinion testimony is not necessary for the jury to be capable of rendering a verdict. Hightower v. Alley, 132 Mont. 349, 354, 318 P2d 243 (1957) and Lamb v. Page, 153 Mont. 171, 178, 455 P2d 337 (1969). The Commission intends the rule to be consistent with both statements of this standard.

The second standard is concerned with whether or not the particular witness is qualified as an expert to give an opinion in the particular area of his testimony. This is consistent with Section 93-401-27(9), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], quoted above ("...when he is skilled therein."), and with case law which has allowed an expert to be qualified in the same terms of the rule, that is "...qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education...". DeSandro v. The Missoula Light and Water Co., 52 Mont. 333, 338, 157 P 641 (1916); Graham v. Rolandson, 150 Mont. 270, 284, 435 P2d 263 (1968) and Haynes v. County of Missoula, 163 Mont. 270, 289, 517 P2d 370 (1973).

Finally, the rule states that an expert properly qualified and testifying in an area requiring expert testimony may not only testify in the form of opinion but "otherwise". This allows an expert to give testimony which need not be in the form of opinion, but which informs the jury so they may render the correct decision. This is consistent with State v. Cassill, 70 Mont. 433, 448, 227 P 49 (1924) where prosecution witnesses qualified as experts in accounting and bookkeeping were allowed to explain the meaning of various bookkeeping entries because the court "...found the explanations illuminative and useful and have no doubt they served to enlighten the jury".

GENERAL

Lack of Nonspeculative Evidence in Causative Chain — Summary Judgment Precluded. Kostelecky v. Peas in a Pod, LLC, 2022 MT 195, 410 Mont. 239, 518 P.3d 840.

Motion Prohibiting Expert From Opining on Credibility of Witnesses Granted: The defendant was charged with sexually assaulting his two stepdaughters. During trial, the District Court granted the state's motion in limine to prevent the defendant's expert from opining on the credibility of the stepdaughters and their claims. Following his conviction, the defendant appealed to the Supreme Court, arguing that the District Court had abused its discretion in granting the motion in limine. However, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that it is the sole duty of the jury to determine credibility of witnesses and that the exceptions to the rule did not apply. St. v. Villanueva, 2021 MT 277, 406 Mont. 149, 497 P.3d 586.

Scheffelman Exception Criteria Erroneously Applied — Reversible Error: The defendant sought to call an expert witness to testify regarding general characteristics of children of sexual abuse in his trial for incest. The District Court granted the state's motion in limine to exclude the witness, finding that the exception set forth in St. v. Scheffelman, 250 Mont. 334, 820 P.2d 1293 (1991), applied and that the proposed expert failed to satisfy the first prong of the exception because her curriculum vitae did not indicate extensive firsthand experience treating children. The defendant was convicted and appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that Scheffelman did not apply because the defendant was not proposing to use the witness's testimony to directly comment on the victim's credibility, but rather to provide the jury with general information on a topic that was likely to be outside the common knowledge of the jury. St. v. Reams, 2020 MT 326, 402 Mont. 366, 477 P.3d 1118.

Expert Testimony on False Reports on Sexual Assault Improperly Admitted — Abuse of Discretion: When an expert witness testified generally about rape myths and behaviors common to victims of sexual assault, the testimony was proper, but when the expert testified about the statistical percentage of false rape allegations, the testimony was improper because it meant solely to bolster the credibility of the victim's testimony. Because the case required the jury to determine who was telling the truth between the victim and the defendant, the improper expert testimony tipped the scales to make the trial unfair, and so the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for a new trial. St. v. Grimshaw, 2020 MT 201, 401 Mont. 27, 469 P.3d 702, followed in St. v. Quiroz, 2022 MT 18, 407 Mont. 263, 502 P.3d 166.

English Professor's Testimony Interpreting Reservation of Royalty Interest Improperly Admitted: Because the construction and interpretation of a contract is a legal conclusion for the court to decide, the District Court improperly admitted an English professor's expert testimony on the signatories' intent with respect to the meaning of a deed's language. Wicklund v. Sundheim, 2016 MT 62, 383 Mont. 1, 367 P.3d 403.

Plaintiff's Physician and Physical Therapist Precluded — Causation Testimony — Directed Verdict Proper: The plaintiff was injured in a vehicle collision with the defendant. The plaintiff claimed the accident injured her shoulder, and the defendant argued that the shoulder injury was preexisting and unrelated to the accident. The plaintiff's treating physician and physical therapist were ultimately unable to testify that the accident caused the injury but both mentioned that it was possible the accident exacerbated a preexisting shoulder injury. At trial, the District Court limited the testimony of the physician and physical therapist regarding causation and later granted a directed verdict in favor of the defendant relating to causation of the shoulder injuries. The plaintiff appealed, arguing that limiting the testimony and granting the directed verdict were improper. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, holding that the plaintiff failed to produce expert testimony that the shoulder injury was more likely than not caused by the collision and failed to present evidence or otherwise argue that the collision aggravated a preexisting condition. Cleveland v. Ward, 2016 MT 10, 382 Mont. 118, 364 P.3d 1250.

Failure to Provide Expert Testimony Regarding Breach of Standard of Care — Summary Judgment Granted: The plaintiff was injured when a vehicle he was a passenger in failed to negotiate a corner and crashed through concrete barriers on Zimmerman Trail in Billings. The plaintiff sued the city public works director, the city, the county, and the state alleging negligent installation and maintenance of the concrete barriers. The District Court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment, generally holding that the plaintiff failed to produce requisite expert testimony relating to the standard of care. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the plaintiff failed to show that the defendants breached the standard of care. Not Afraid v. St., 2015 MT 330, 281 Mont. 454, 362 P.3d 71.

No Record of Why Counsel Disclosed Neurologist as Lay Witness — Ineffective Assistance Claim Not Appropriate for Direct Appeal: The defendant was convicted of felony theft by insurance fraud. On direct appeal, the defendant argued he received ineffective assistance of counsel because his attorney had disclosed a neurologist as a lay witness rather than an expert. The Supreme Court held that the record did not explain why the defendant's attorney chose not to offer the neurologist as an expert witness and dismissed the claim without prejudice, allowing the defendant to raise the claim in a petition for postconviction relief. St. v. Schaeffer, 2014 MT 47, 374 Mont. 93, 321 P.3d 809.

Failure to Preserve Issue for Appeal — Expert Testimony on Standard of Care Not Subject to Appellate Review: In a suit against the state for negligent firefighting techniques, the state failed to object to the testimony of the plaintiffs' expert on fire suppression techniques. Additionally, the state did not move for judgment as a matter of law by arguing that the plaintiffs failed to present evidence of breach of the applicable standard of care. On appeal, the state claimed that the plaintiffs failed to establish the standard of care for wildfire suppression, breach, and causation through expert testimony, but the Supreme Court held that the state waived the opportunity to raise this issue when it failed to object in District Court. Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495.

Expert Opinions in Legal Malpractice Claim During Summary Judgment — Plaintiffs Not Required to Prove That Underlying Case Was Winner: An attorney missed a statute of limitations deadline in a medical malpractice case by failing to file an application with the Montana Medical Legal Panel before filing a complaint in District Court, as required under 27-6-301 and 27-6-701. After the medical malpractice claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice case against the attorney, but the District Court dismissed the legal malpractice case during summary judgment by relying completely on the affidavit of the attorney's expert while disregarding the opinions of three of the plaintiffs' witnesses. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that the plaintiffs' opinions from two doctors and one legal expert were sufficient to overcome summary judgment. The Supreme Court held further that at the summary judgment stage, the plaintiffs had to establish only that, but for the attorney's negligence, the plaintiffs would have been able to present sufficient evidence to withstand summary judgment for the underlying medical claim and reach the jury with the case. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160.

Video of Defendant Taking Preliminary Alcohol Screening Test Inadmissible — Expert Testimony Required: After being convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol, the defendant claimed on appeal that the District Court abused its discretion by admitting a police video that showed the defendant participating in a preliminary alcohol screening test (PAST) and then being placed under arrest. The sound from the video was muted and the results of the PAST were not presented to the jury. The Supreme Court reversed the conviction, reasoning that the video showing administration of the PAST, followed by an arrest, raised a compelling inference that the defendant was over the legal blood alcohol limit. Consequently, the Supreme Court determined that the video was impermissibly used as substantive evidence of intoxication without the state satisfying the requirement of St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 Mont. 276, 119 P.3d 1194, and Rule 702, M.R.Ev., to call an expert witness to testify regarding the reliability and accuracy of the PAST. St. v. Lozon, 2012 MT 303, 367 Mont. 424, 291 P.3d 1135.

Failure to Provide Expert Testimony Regarding Firefighting Tactics — No Negligence: The plaintiff claimed that Billings firefighters negligently fought a fire at his home, but he failed to present expert testimony. The city of Billings countered with testimony from firefighters regarding fire tactics. The District Court held that the plaintiff's negligence claim failed due to his failure to provide the requisite expert testimony, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Albert v. Billings, 2012 MT 159, 365 Mont. 454, 282 P.3d 704, citing Massman v. Helena, 237 Mont. 234, 773 P.2d 1206 (1989), and Dayberry v. E. Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 Mont. 301, 80 P.3d 1218.

Officer Qualified to Testify as Expert on Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test: The defendant was convicted of his fifth DUI. At trial, the state offered an officer to testify as an expert on the horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test and the defendant objected. After a hearing on the officer's qualifications, which included an associate's degree in criminal justice and several hours of training on the HGN test over the course of 5 years, the District Court concluded the officer was qualified to testify as an expert on the results of the defendant's HGN test. The defendant appealed, arguing that the District Court had abused its discretion by allowing the officer to testify as an expert. The Supreme Court disagreed, ruling that the officer had extensive training and was thus adequately qualified to testify as an expert on the HGN test. St. v. Bollman, 2012 MT 49, 364 Mont. 265, 272 P.3d 650.

Expert Needed to Establish Standard of Care in Road Closure Case — Summary Judgment Proper in Absence of Expert — District Court Affirmed: The plaintiff's husband was killed when, as he was waiting for road crews to clear fallen debris from high winds, a tree fell on his parked car. The road was closed shortly after the incident. The plaintiff sued the Department of Transportation (Department) for negligence, claiming that it should have closed the road earlier pursuant to its own policies and procedures. After the deadline for expert disclosure had passed and the plaintiff had not named an expert on the standard of care, the Department filed a motion for summary judgment, arguing that the understanding of the multiple interrelated factors a Department employee must consider in determining whether to close a road is outside the experience of the common juror. The plaintiff argued that an expert on the standard of care was not necessary because the Department's own policies and procedures were evidence of the standard of care. The District Court agreed with the Department and granted it summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court, citing Dayberry v. City of East Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 Mont. 301, 80 P.3d 1218, and the proposition that a lay jury of ordinary training and intelligence would not understand the complexities of what must be considered in determining whether to close a road. Dubiel v. Dept. of Transportation, 2012 MT 35, 364 Mont. 175, 272 P.3d 66, followed in Dulaney v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Ins. Co., 2014 MT 127, 375 Mont. 117, 324 P.3d 1211.

No Appeal of Inadmissible Evidence — Not Ineffective Assistance — Better Appeal Issues Addressed: Although defense counsel objected at trial to inadmissible evidence that was admitted anyway, it was not ineffective assistance of counsel to fail to appeal on that ground when defense counsel felt that four other issues provided better grounds for reversal. The Supreme Court found that admission of the evidence was improper but did not constitute reversible error and that including the objection would not have changed the outcome of the appeal. Rogers v. St., 2011 MT 105, 360 Mont. 334, 253 P.3d 889.

Failure to Call Expert to Rebut an Expert — No Ineffective Assistance of Counsel: In a termination of parental rights proceeding governed by the Indian Child Welfare Act, 25 U.S.C. 1912(f), which requires an expert to testify regarding custody of the child, it was not ineffective assistance of counsel for the parents' attorney not to call an expert to rebut the required expert because it would be impossible to require that an expert exist who would testify favorably for the family. The state's expert was subject to cross-examination and was not shown to be ineffective. In re I.B., 2011 MT 82, 360 Mont. 132, 255 P.3d 56.

General Testimony on Impairment — Expert Marijuana Testimony by Nonexperts Harmless: Deputies testified as experts on how marijuana impairs driving ability in a DUI trial, but their training and experience were insufficient to qualify them as experts. The error was held to be harmless because the deputies' nonexpert testimony provided sufficient observations of the driver's general impairment, the testimony of the driver and the driver's performance on the field sobriety tests indicated impairment, and the defense on cross-examination demonstrated to the jury that neither deputy was an expert regarding marijuana's impact on the ability to drive. St. v. Larson, 2010 MT 236, 358 Mont. 156, 243 P.3d 1130.

District Court Qualification Latitude Based Upon Testimony: A District Court has great latitude in assessing the qualifications of witnesses as experts and can determine if a witness's training and experience adequately qualify the witness to give the testimony that was given, particularly if the testimony was intuitive and involved easily understood propositions. St. v. Stout, 2010 MT 137, 356 Mont. 468, 237 P.3d 37.

Disclosure Required for Expert Testimony Based on Industry Standards Rather Than Personal Knowledge: Defendant sought to introduce testimony by a local real estate agent on the custom and practice of paying trailing commissions on Montana real estate transactions. Plaintiff objected on grounds that the agent was giving undisclosed expert testimony and not evidence based on the agent's personal knowledge as required by Rule 701, M.R.Ev., and on grounds that the testimony was irrelevant because the agent had no personal experience working for defendant. The District Court agreed and limited the agent's testimony. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because the agent had never worked for defendant, the proposed testimony would have been based on industry standards rather than personal knowledge and should have been disclosed as expert testimony pursuant to Rule 702, M.R.Ev. West v. The Club at Spanish Peaks, LLC, 2008 MT 183, 343 M 434, 186 P.3d 1228 (2008), distinguishing Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P.2d 695 (1984).

Review of District Court Ruling on Admissibility of Expert Testimony — Abuse of Discretion Standard: A District Court has broad discretion in ruling on the admissibility of expert testimony, and a ruling will not be disturbed on appeal absent a showing of an abuse of discretion. St. v. St. Germain, 2007 MT 28, 336 M 17, 153 P.3d 591 (2007).

Disqualification of Expert Witness for Lack of Knowledge of Uniform Commercial Code Standard of Ordinary Care: Section 30-3-102 defines a bank's duty of ordinary care with respect to the community in which the bank is situated. Defendant's expert witness was well qualified by education, special training, and experience in banking policies and procedures, but had no knowledge of the commercial standards prevailing in the area where plaintiff bank was located, so the District Court did not err in disqualifying the expert for lack of knowledge of the Uniform Commercial Code standard of ordinary care. Valley Bank of Ronan v. Hughes, 2006 MT 285, 334 M 335, 147 P.3d 185 (2006), distinguishing Burlingham v. Mintz, 270 M 277, 891 P.2d 527 (1995). See also St. v. Cooksey, 2012 MT 226, 366 Mont. 346, 286 P.3d 1174.

Failure to Object to Firefighter's Lay Testimony Regarding Burn Patterns — Admissibility Affirmed: During Henderson's arson trial, the state sought to introduce testimony of a firefighter who was at the scene. Defense counsel objected that because the firefighter was not a qualified expert, the firefighter's opinion testimony should not be allowed. The trial court allowed counsel to voir dire the firefighter in the presence of the jury, and the firefighter responded by explaining how to find a point of origin of a fire, describing indications of arson, and discussing pour patterns. Defense counsel did not move to strike the testimony or move for a limiting instruction after the court allowed the firefighter to testify as a lay witness, nor did counsel register a continuing objection to ensuing testimony that was based in part on the voir dire responses. Following conviction, Henderson contended that the testimony amounted to impermissible expert testimony, but the Supreme Court affirmed. By eliciting the evidence on voir dire, Henderson waived the right to object on appeal. Additionally, even though the testimony went beyond personal observations made at the scene, given Henderson's failure to object to the voir dire testimony regarding pour patterns, the trial court did not err in allowing testimony concerning the firefighter's observation of pour patterns at the scene. St. v. Henderson, 2005 MT 333, 330 M 34, 125 P3d 1132 (2005).

Accuracy and Reliability of Preliminary Blood Test Established — Test Results Properly Admitted in Evidence: An officer measured Damon's blood alcohol content at 0.274, using an Alco-Sensor III preliminary breath test (PBT). The state and Damon both presented expert testimony as to whether the PBT was reliable and accurate as an evidentiary tool. Both experts testified that when administered according to protocols, the Alco-Sensor III had a margin of error in the range of 10%. The trial court held that the PBT was sufficiently reliable and accurate and admitted the PBT results. Damon appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although holding that PBT evidence is not necessarily admissible or inadmissible as a matter of law, the court reaffirmed the holding in Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594 (1983), that it is better to admit relevant scientific evidence in the same manner as other expert testimony and allow the weight of the evidence to be attacked by cross-examination and refutation. Applying the 10% margin of error to Damon's test results, Damon's blood alcohol content was in the range of 0.247 to 0.301, more than twice the legal limit of intoxication. Thus, the state met its burden in establishing that Damon's intoxication exceeded the legal limit, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the results of Damon's PBT. St. v. Damon, 2005 MT 218, 328 M 276, 119 P3d 1194 (2005), followed, with regard to the requirement that a party must establish that a defendant's preliminary alcohol screening test result is accurate and reliable before the test result may be admitted as evidence of a defendant's blood alcohol content, in St. v. Reavely, 2007 MT 168, 338 M 151, 164 P3d 890 (2007).

Standards Applicable to Termination of Indian Parental Rights — Active Department Efforts to Provide Services Required: The District Court terminated the parental rights of an Indian father after the children were removed from the father's custody a fourth time because of the father's abuse and neglect. The father appealed on grounds that: (1) the state did not make active efforts to provide remedial services; (2) the District Court relied on expert testimony based on the Department file rather than personal interviews; and (3) it was error not to grant the father's request for an extension of temporary legal custody. The Supreme Court affirmed on all issues. The father left no phone number or address with the social worker and moved multiple times. Without any involvement, the father prevented the Department from making active efforts at providing more intensive services. Second, the federal Indian Child Welfare Act requires testimony from a qualified expert witness, but does not require a specific form of that testimonial evidence or personal interviews, and a District Court need not conform its decision to a particular piece of evidence or a particular expert's report or testimony as long as a reasonable person could have found beyond a reasonable doubt that continued custody by an Indian parent or custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child. Last, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in refusing to extend temporary custody because the Department had already provided active efforts and did not need more time to assist the father in attaining his goals. The District Court had an accurate perspective on the father's parenting abilities, and refusal to extend the temporary placement did not make the court's decision any less reasonable. In re A.N. & M.N., 2005 MT 19, 325 M 379, 106 P3d 556 (2005). See also In re Marriage of McKenna, 2000 MT 58, 299 M 13, 996 P2d 386 (2000), In re D.S.B., 2013 MT 112, 370 Mont. 37, 300 P.3d 702, and In re S.B., 2019 MT 279, 398 Mont. 27, 459 P.3d 214, holding that the Department made active efforts beyond a reasonable doubt.

Sufficient Foundation for Lay Testimony of Police Officers Based on Training and Experience: Frasure contended that two police officers were allowed to give expert testimony at Frasure's drug trial without the prosecution first laying a foundation establishing the officers' qualifications as experts, as required in this rule. The state contended that the testimony was actually admissible lay testimony under Rule 701, M.R.Ev. The Supreme Court found that the state had established that the officers had extensive training and experience in the methods used in the illicit drug trade and in the prices that illicit drugs generally garner and that this provided a sufficient foundation for the officers to provide testimony as to whether Frasure possessed drugs with the intent to sell. The testimony was rationally based on the officers' perceptions and helped give a clear understanding of whether Frasure had the necessary intent and was thus admissible as lay testimony. St. v. Frasure, 2004 MT 305, 323 M 479, 100 P3d 1013 (2004).

Failure to Provide Expert Testimony Regarding Adequacy of Swimming Pool Depth for Diving — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff was injured diving into a municipal swimming pool and sued the city for negligence and strict liability. Administrative rules adopted in 1985 set standards articulating board lengths for various pool depths, but the rules apply only to pools constructed or remodeled after June 28, 1985, and the pool in question was constructed in 1972, so the rules did not apply. Further, 50-53-107 does not define a particular standard of conduct to which public pool operators must conform, but rather imposes a general duty on a city to keep a pool safe. Absent an applicable standard, plaintiff was required to present expert testimony to assist jurors in determining whether the pool depth was unreasonably dangerous for the diving board length. Plaintiff offered no expert testimony on the subject, thus failing to establish a prima facie case of liability, so the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the city. Dayberry v. E. Helena, 2003 MT 321, 318 M 301, 80 P3d 1218 (2003), followed in Dubiel v. Dept. of Transportation, 2012 MT 35, 364 Mont. 175, 272 P.3d 66, and Dulaney v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Ins. Co., 2014 MT 127, 375 Mont. 117, 324 P.3d 1211.

Finding of Gap Between Easements Not Clearly Erroneous — Remediation and Injunctive Relief Proper: In attempting to exercise an easement to some trust property, defendants breached plaintiffs' fence line and plowed about 70 to 80 feet of new road across plaintiffs' property to connect a 1950 road on the trust property to defendants' newly relocated easement. Plaintiffs sued, contending that there was a mismatch between the terminus of the 1950 road and defendants' newly surveyed and relocated easement. Faced with conflicting testimony from two professional surveyors, the District Court Judge conducted an on-the-ground inspection of the property, concluding that in the process of relocating the original easement running along defendants' property line, defendants created a gap of 70 to 80 feet between the old road and the new road and breached the gap by crossing plaintiffs' property. Defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court found no clear error in the District Court's findings and affirmed. The District Court was at liberty to give the expert testimony whatever weight that the court considered to be justified. Substantial credible evidence supported the finding that a large gap existed and that defendants connected the roadways by plowing across plaintiffs' land without regard to plaintiffs' property rights. The Supreme Court also affirmed the District Court's grant of plaintiffs' request to enjoin defendants from using the connecting road, its order to defendants to reinstall plaintiffs' fence line and gates and to resurface and restore plaintiffs' property, and its holding of defendants in contempt for failing to obey the mandates of the preliminary injunction. Koeppen v. Bolich, 2003 MT 313, 318 M 240, 79 P3d 1100 (2003).

Standard of Admissibility of Expert Testimony: Under Cottrell v. Burlington N. RR Co., 261 M 296, 863 P2d 381 (1993), issues concerning the admissibility of evidence are within the discretion of the District Court, including determinations of the qualification and competency of expert witnesses, and those determinations will not be disturbed by the Supreme Court absent a showing of an abuse of the District Court's discretion. St. v. DuBray, 2003 MT 255, 317 M 377, 77 P3d 247 (2003). See also St. v. Larson, 2004 MT 345, 324 M 310, 103 P3d 524 (2004), Harris v. Hanson, 2009 MT 13, 349 M 29, 201 P3d 151 (2009), and *Wheaton v. Expert Witness in Indian Child Welfare Proceeding — Cultural Knowledge of Particular Tribe Not Required: Federal law does not define "qualified expert witness" or provide criteria for determining whether a person is qualified to testify as an expert under the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (ICWA), although federal guidelines do allow expert testimony of a professional person having substantial education and experience in the area of the professional's specialty. In the present case, the state called an expert who: (1) was a Blackfeet tribal member with knowledge of Blackfeet culture; (2) worked closely with Indian families while conducting home studies and writing reports relating to adoption and foster care placement of Indian children in Montana; (3) was a teacher in Minnesota and was exposed to the culture of other tribes; (4) worked for the state as a family resource specialist; and (5) was trained and certified by the state as a qualified ICWA expert witness. The father of the Indian youth in need of care objected that the state's witness was not qualified because the witness had no knowledge of the Confederated Tribes of Siletz Indians of Oregon. The objection was overruled, and the father appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. It is not necessary that an expert witness in an ICWA case have knowledge of the cultural standards of a particular tribe. The determination of whether the witness is sufficiently qualified remains within the discretion of the trial court, and it was not an abuse of that discretion for the District Court to accept the state's witness in this case. Introduction of Results of Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test — Explanation of Underlying Scientific Basis of Correlation Between Alcohol Consumption and Nystagmus Required: At Van Kirk's DUI trial, the District Court allowed the arresting officer to testify regarding Van Kirk's performance on a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test. Van Kirk contended that the state failed to lay the proper foundation for admitting the test results. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998), in order to lay the proper foundation, the state must establish a scientific basis for the reliability of the test results and in addition show that the test was properly administered. This requires that a qualified expert explain the underlying scientific basis of the correlation between alcohol consumption and nystagmus. In this case, the arresting officer had a bachelor's degree in medical technology, had worked as a lab supervisor and technician at the state hospital, was certified to administer the HGN test, and testified that the test was properly administered to Van Kirk. However, nothing in the evidence established that the officer was specially trained or educated or had adequate knowledge to qualify as an expert able to explain the underlying scientific basis of the HGN test. Thus, the District Court erred in permitting the officer to offer the test results into evidence without the state first establishing the requisite foundation. However, the error was not prejudicial to Van Kirk, so the DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001). See also St. v. Crawford, 2003 MT 118, 315 M 480, 68 P3d 848 (2003), in which the testimony of an HGN expert was properly admitted given the expert's extensive training and education. Crawford was followed in St. v. Harris, 2008 MT 213, 344 M 208, 186 P3d 1263 (2008), and in St. v. Bollman, 2012 MT 49, 364 Mont. 265, 272 P.3d 650. See also St. v. Chavez-Villa, 2012 MT 250, 366 Mont. 519, 289 P.3d 113 (ruling that although implication of HGN results was improperly admitted, the cumulative evidence of the defendant's intoxication rendered the introduction of the implied results nonprejudicial).

Admissibility of Testimony of Police Officers Not Qualified as Experts: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. In her case in chief, Onstad presented testimony by three police officers who investigated the assault, but the officers had not been qualified as witnesses prior to trial. Notwithstanding that Payless had, in its opening statement, raised issues about which the officers testified, including store security and the escalation of severity in a sexual deviant's actions, Payless objected to the testimony on grounds that the officers were unqualified lay witnesses testifying on issues that required expert opinions. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officers to answer, pursuant to Rule 701, M.R.Ev., because their opinions sprang from their work and experience as police and involved matters about which they were qualified to testify through training and extensive experience. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000). See also Hislop v. Cady, 261 M 243, 862 P2d 388 (1993).

Opinion Testimony Regarding Cause of Accident:

In a case involving the rollover of a tractor-trailer, defendant called a mechanical engineer to give opinion testimony concerning kingpin design, abuse, and misuse, metallurgy, and accident reconstruction and analysis. The foundation concerning the engineer's qualifications as an expert witness was challenged. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the witness qualified as an expert because the engineer possessed knowledge and experience that was not within the common knowledge or experience of people of ordinary education and had a degree of specialization that did not affect the competency to testify as an expert. The court also noted that a witness's specialization in an area goes to the weight of the testimony, rather than to the witness's competency to testify, and that the credibility and weight of a witness's testimony is for the jury to decide. Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng'r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999).

The trial court did not err in allowing the investigating officer to offer opinion testimony regarding the cause of the pedestrian-auto accident when the officer was identified as an expert prior to trial and when he testified as to the cause of the accident, not the negligence of the parties. The evidence obtained by the investigating officer at the scene of the accident, coupled with his experience in accident investigation, provided a sufficient basis for the court to determine that he had a proper foundation to testify. Campbell v. Johnson, 251 M 12, 823 P2d 237, 48 St. Rep. 1097 (1991), followed in St. v. Arrington, 260 M 1, 858 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 905 (1993).

Expert Testimony Regarding Blood Alcohol Levels: In a negligent homicide case arising out of a car accident, when the record contained evidence of factors identified by an expert witness as necessary in order to estimate blood alcohol levels, the expert offered an in-depth explanation of the formula used to make the estimation and the defendant's counsel extensively cross-examined the expert on the formula. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in permitting the expert to estimate the number of drinks that the defendant had consumed on the night of the accident. St. v. Ingraham, 1998 MT 156, 290 M 18, 966 P2d 103, 55 St. Rep. 611 (1998).

DUI Field Sobriety Eye Tests and Admission of General and Novel Scientific Testimony: Not all scientific evidence is subject to the Daubert standard. The Daubert test should be used only to determine the admissibility of novel scientific evidence. In addition, and whether or not the scientific evidence is novel, a court presented with scientific evidence is encouraged to follow the Barmeyer decision and liberally construe the rules of evidence so as to admit all relevant expert testimony, the weight of which may be attacked by cross-examination and refutation. Nystagmus is the involuntary jerking of the eyeball resulting from the body's attempt to maintain balance and orientation. It may be aggravated by alcohol. The inability of the eyes to maintain visual fixation (a jerking movement of the eyes) as they are turned to the side is known as horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN). The HGN test is a common field sobriety test. It measures various aspects of these involuntary, jerking eye movements. This is a scientific test in that science, not common knowledge, provides the legitimacy for the test. The HGN evidence could have a disproportionate impact on the jury's decision because of the test's scientific nature and because the jury may not understand the nature of the test or the methodology of its procedure. The test has been used for decades, and it is not novel scientific evidence. Therefore, the Daubert standard does not apply to its admissibility. However, the court must conduct a conventional analysis under this rule and adhere to Barmeyer to determine admissibility. An officer testifying as to the results of a test that the officer administered must be shown to have proper training in the test and to have administered the test in accordance with that training (though a proper foundation for testifying as to test results does not constitute an adequate foundation to testify as to the scientific basis for the test). In the present case, the officer testified that he had 40 hours of field sobriety tests (including HGN) training, stated how he administered the test to defendant, and stated that defendant failed. However, there was no evidence establishing that the officer had special training or education or adequate knowledge to qualify him to testify that everyone's eyes exhibit nystagmus at maximum deviation and that with the introduction of alcohol, the nystagmus becomes more prevalent and does not cease. Thus, there was insufficient foundation for that statement, and the lower court abused its discretion by allowing the officer to testify as to the test results. Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75, 55 St. Rep. 415 (1998), followed in Bramble v. St., 1999 MT 132, 294 M 501, 982 P2d 464, 56 St. Rep. 532 (1999), and Missoula v. Robertson, 2000 MT 52, 298 M 419, 998 P2d 144, 57 St. Rep. 250 (2000). See also St. v. Crawford, 2003 MT 118, 315 M 480, 68 P3d 848 (2003), in which the testimony of an HGN expert was properly admitted given the expert's extensive training and education. St. v. Clark, 2008 MT 419, 347 M 354, 198 P3d 809 (2008), and St. v. Bollman, 2012 MT 49, 364 Mont. 265, 272 P.3d 650.

Exclusion of Expert Testimony — Insufficient Factual Grounds and Testimony Directed to Question of Law: Plaintiffs contended that they attempted to introduce evidence of the applicability of the National Electrical Code (NEC) and the National Electrical Safety Code (NESC) through testimony of an expert and that it was error for the trial court to deny a jury instruction regarding the NEC and NESC. However, the instruction was properly denied because there were insufficient factual grounds to establish the relevancy of the NEC and NESC and because the expert's testimony was directed to a question of law. Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997).

Opportunity Required to Cross-Examine Expert as to Safety Standards: Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations and American National Standards Institute (ANSI) requirements are not admissible to prove negligence in a case of an individual owner constructing the owner's own home. However, if the owner offers expert testimony that the owner complied with minimum OSHA or ANSI safety standards, despite the general inadmissibility of the evidence, then the issue is injected into the case and opposing counsel must be afforded the opportunity to cross-examine the expert as to the expert's understanding of the standards. The trial court's restriction of cross-examination of the expert left the jury with the impression that the owner had complied with the minimum safety standards, which prejudiced the case. The case was remanded for a new trial. Lynch v. Reed, 284 M 321, 944 P2d 218, 54 St. Rep. 902 (1997).

DNA Evidence — Conflicting Expert Testimony on Statistical Foundation for Test — Weight and Admissibility: Weeks was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent with his stepdaughter. The conviction was based in part upon DNA evidence gained from blood samples taken from Weeks, the stepdaughter, and a child of the stepdaughter. Weeks contended that because of conflicting expert testimony as to the size of the statistical basis necessary to apply the results to a population of 100 million, the DNA results should not be admitted. Citing Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594 (1983), the Supreme Court held that the conflicting evidence was a matter for the jury to consider in deciding the weight of the evidence. St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477, 52 St. Rep. 78 (1995).

Evidence Supporting Discounting of Opinion of Doctor Who Did Not Have Complete Foundation for Conclusion: There was substantial credible evidence to support a finding as to when Sanford's knee was injured, and the Supreme Court would not reweigh that evidence. The Workers' Compensation Court's discounting of the weight attributable to a doctor's testimony was also supported by substantial credible evidence, which included evidence that the doctor, at the time that he gave his opinion on the knee, did not have a complete foundation from which to make a conclusion. Sanford v. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund, 268 M 8, 885 P2d 444, 51 St. Rep. 1187 (1994).

Defense Complaint Concerning DNA Analysis Evidence Admission — Lack of Statistical Evidence: DNA statistical analysis evidence was excluded on defendant's motion. Defendant could not complain on appeal that the jury had no valid statistics to assist it in understanding the DNA analysis evidence. St. v. Moore, 268 M 20, 885 P2d 457, 51 St. Rep. 1151 (1994).

DNA Testing Challenges That Go to Weight of Evidence, Not to Admissibility: Whether DNA paternity analysis probes lacked consistency because of alleged anomalies, whether the thermal cyclor used was the proper one and properly constructed, whether proper testing procedures were followed, whether the lab technician was qualified, and whether DNA PCR analysis is sufficiently reliable for forensic use were matters of weight for the jury, not questions of lack of foundation for or of admissibility of the DNA test results. The standard for the admission of expert scientific testimony is: (1) whether the theory or technique can be and has been tested; (2) whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error in using a particular scientific technique and the existence and maintenance of standards controlling its operation; and (4) whether the theory or technique has been generally accepted or rejected in the particular scientific field. An alleged error in the application of a reliable methodology is grounds for exclusion of an opinion only if the error negates the basis for the reliability of the principle itself. St. v. Moore, 268 M 20, 885 P2d 457, 51 St. Rep. 1151 (1994), followed in St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477, 52 St. Rep. 78 (1995).

Threshold Test for Admissibility of DNA Evidence: The threshold test for admissibility of DNA evidence should require only a preliminary showing of reliability of the particular data to be offered, that is, some indication of how the laboratory work was done and what analysis and assumptions underlie the probability calculations. St. v. Moore, 268 M 20, 885 P2d 457, 51 St. Rep. 1151 (1994).

Test for Determining Whether Witness Qualifies as Expert — "Generally Accepted" Reliability Test Rejected: Hart-Albin sued Leviton under a strict liability theory for manufacture of an extension cord connector that caused a fire in the Hart-Albin store. Leviton defended, alleging that the connector was misused because it was improperly assembled by a store employee. Dr. Dorris, a human factors expert, testified that warnings and instructions should have been provided with the extension cord connector. Citing Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786 (1993), the Supreme Court rejected the "general acceptance" standard for admitting expert testimony and adopted a standard based upon Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence. Under this test, the District Court properly admitted the testimony of the witness. Hart-Albin Co. v. McLees, Inc., 264 M 1, 870 P2d 51, 51 St. Rep. 112 (1994). See also St. v. Cline, 275 M 46, 909 P2d 1171, 53 St. Rep. 32 (1996).

"Defendant's Admissions" Exception to Expert Testimony Requirement Not Applicable: The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff could not rely on the "defendant's admissions" exception to the requirement for expert medical testimony in a malpractice suit against a veterinarian because the defendant had not made any admissions during his testimony. Zimmerman v. Robertson, 259 M 105, 854 P2d 338, 50 St. Rep. 703 (1993).

Not Allowing Testimony on Simple Physics Not Error: Plaintiff argued that the lower court erred in not allowing his expert witness to testify concerning fundamental laws of physics and the angle of his tires when his vehicle left the road. The Supreme Court held that the trial court had wide discretion in determining whether to admit expert testimony and had not abused its discretion. Thomsen v. St., 253 M 460, 833 P2d 1076, 49 St. Rep. 533 (1992).

Opinion Testimony Regarding Nonparty Driver: The trial court did not err in allowing the investigating officer to offer opinion testimony regarding the unsafe behavior of a nonparty driver. When plaintiff failed to offer any evidence tending to show that the testimony was significant, plaintiff's argument was merely speculative and it was not reversible error for the trial court to allow the testimony. Campbell v. Johnson, 251 M 12, 823 P2d 237, 48 St. Rep. 1097 (1991).

Social Worker With Only Sexual Abuse Treatment Experience Not Qualified as Expert — Reversible Error: In determining that the District Court improperly allowed into evidence opinion testimony by a social worker on whether the victim had been sexually abused, the Supreme Court held that allowing the testimony constituted reversible error because the social worker had no experience in treating children who had not been sexually abused and thus had no controlled standard that allowed her to arrive at the conclusion that abuse had occurred. St. v. Scheffelman, 250 M 334, 820 P2d 1293, 48 St. Rep. 1023 (1991), followed in St. v. Whitlow, 285 M 430, 949 P2d 239, 54 St. Rep. 1227 (1997). See also St. v. Scott, 257 M 454, 850 P2d 286, 50 St. Rep. 353 (1993).

Expert Testimony on Custom of Architectural Profession Proper: An architect was obligated under contract to supervise construction of a building, using the ordinary care exercised by members of his profession. Therefore, expert testimony on the custom of the architectural profession constituted rebuttable proof aimed at assisting the trier of fact in determining whether the architect negligently performed the contract and the testimony was properly admitted. N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991).

Valuation of Insurance Business — Determination of Qualification of Expert Witness: The determination of the qualification of an expert witness is a matter of discretion for the trial court. Absent a showing of abuse of that discretion, the decision will not be disturbed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it found a certified public accountant qualified to testify as an expert witness on the value of goodwill of an insurance business in a dissolution hearing. In re Marriage of Arrotta, 244 M 508, 797 P2d 940, 47 St. Rep. 1775 (1990), followed in In re Marriage of Lee, 282 M 410, 938 P2d 650, 54 St. Rep. 409 (1997).

Evaluation of Expert Testimony: An expert witness for the defendant in a DUI case testified that in his opinion, a wide number of chemicals could affect breath alcohol tests. The District Court disregarded the testimony and found the defendant guilty. The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that the evaluation of expert testimony lies within the province of the trier of fact. St. v. Holman, 241 M 238, 786 P2d 667, 47 St. Rep. 256 (1990). See also Wyo-Ben, Inc. v. Bixby, 2014 MT 334, 377 Mont. 318, 339 P.3d 1255.

Proper Foundation Laid for Expert's Qualifications as Auditor: Plaintiff laid a proper foundation for an expert's qualifications as an auditor when testimony reflected that the expert: (1) had been employed by the Local Government Service Division of the Department of Administration as an auditor for 17½ years; (2) had 5 years of accounting experience before working for the state; (3) held a 2-year degree in business administration and accounting; (4) trained new employees and auditors, conducted audits, wrote audit programs, and conducted special examinations; and (5) received training from the Lower Court Commission on examination of City Judges' accounts. Fairview v. Deming, 238 M 496, 778 P2d 876, 46 St. Rep. 1446 (1989).

Limitation of Testimony of Statistician With Regard to Age Discrimination — Union Versus Nonunion Employees: The District Court correctly limited the age discrimination testimony of plaintiff's statistical expert to testimony of statistical tests performed only on nonunion employees when the inclusion of union employees (whose employment contracts contained seniority rights) in the statistical population would skew the figures affecting older terminated nonunion employees as to the probability that older nonunion employees were discriminated against on the basis of age. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Expert Testimony by Highway Patrolman That No Arrest Made After Accident — Prejudicial Error: Statement by a highway patrolman, testifying as an expert, that he had not issued a citation following an accident because of his determination that the driver was not negligent constituted prejudicial error. Questions as to why an arrest was not made were objectionable at least on the following grounds: (1) they were irrelevant; (2) they were argumentative in form; (3) they described as crimes things that were not crimes; (4) they called not for objective evidence but for the mental conclusions of the witness; and (5) they were hearsay. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989), and distinguished in Campbell v. Johnson, 251 M 12, 823 P2d 237, 48 St. Rep. 1097 (1991).

Attorney as Expert Witness — Not to Advise Jury as to Law of Case: Insurance company argued that the District Court's instructions implying that company's position was frivolous as a matter of law were reinforced by detailed attorney opinion testimony on the law applicable to insurance coverage, in violation of 25-7-102 and Rule 704, M.R.Ev. The Supreme Court, citing Energy Oils, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 626 F2d 731 (9th Cir. 1980), adopted the finding that admission of opinion testimony as to the legal effect of a contract is erroneous, but in view of the District Court holding that there was insurance coverage as a matter of law, the Supreme Court concluded that counsel's testimony regarding the law of the case did not constitute reversible error under the unique facts of this case. The court found no abuse of discretion in allowing attorneys who appear as expert witnesses to state their opinion on an insurer's duty to evaluate the facts, on what constitutes a reasonable evaluation of the facts, or on how an insurer should have approached the negotiations with the plaintiff; however, as a general rule an attorney cannot advise the jury as to the law of the case. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 44 St. Rep. 508 (1987) (opinion withdrawn and replaced by 230 M 63, 748 P2d 937, 45 St. Rep. 18 (1988)).

No Formal Acknowledgement of Qualifications Required: The trial court did not formally rule on whether a psychologist was qualified as an expert. The Supreme Court stated that the determination that the witness was qualified as an expert was made when the trial court overruled objections to the witness and permitted him to testify. Objections to the qualification of an expert go to the weight rather than the admissibility of the expert's testimony. In re J.W.K., 223 M 1, 724 P2d 164, 43 St. Rep. 1483 (1986).

Expert — Duty to Determine Qualifications — Relevance of Degree of Qualifications: Whether a witness is an expert is largely within the discretion of the trial judge. Defendant objected that a witness was not qualified. The trial judge said: "The court is going to permit her to testify. If the jury doesn't believe she is qualified—well, that will be up to the jury to decide". The judge did not leave to the jury the decision whether the witness was qualified. He made that decision when he permitted the testimony and then stated that the jury could determine the degree of the qualifications. The degree of qualification affects the weight, not the admissibility, of the testimony. St. v. Berg, 215 M 431, 697 P2d 1365, 42 St. Rep. 518 (1985), followed in St. v. Martin, 226 M 463, 736 P2d 477, 44 St. Rep. 804 (1987), Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989), and in St. v. Baker, 249 M 156, 815 P2d 587, 48 St. Rep. 685 (1991). See also St. v. Evans, 247 M 218, 806 P2d 512, 48 St. Rep. 170 (1991).

Eyewitness to Automobile Accident Also Expert Witness — Deputy Sheriff: A Deputy Sheriff, who was not the investigating officer at an automobile accident but was an eyewitness to the accident involving another Deputy Sheriff who was driving in front of him going to the same emergency, could be qualified as an expert witness to testify regarding the cause of the accident. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984).

Intoxication — Expert Testimony Within Court's Discretion: Plaintiff was injured when she opened an elevator door and fell 15 feet because the car was not on the floor level. After a verdict was returned for plaintiff, defendants appealed, alleging the trial court erred in excluding testimony from a toxicology expert regarding the number of drinks consumed by the plaintiff on the night of the accident. Plaintiff's alcoholic blood content of .16% was admitted without objection. Over objection, the toxicologist testified about the effect upon a person of different ranges of alcohol blood content. The trial court then excluded testimony as to the amount of alcohol necessary to be consumed to reach plaintiff's blood alcohol content. The Supreme Court said the admission of this kind of testimony was discretionary with the trial court. The relevant consideration is whether plaintiff was intoxicated, and if so, how that affected her conduct on the night in question. The trial court received testimony on the relevant matters. The trial court is vested with great latitude in ruling on the admissibility of expert testimony. Exclusion of the offered evidence was not clearly erroneous or sufficiently prejudicial to require a new trial. Cash v. Otis Elevator Co., 210 M 319, 684 P2d 1041, 41 St. Rep. 1077 (1984), followed in Niles v. Big Sky Eyewear, 236 M 455, 771 P2d 114, 46 St. Rep. 504 (1989).

Investigator Not Expert — Investigation Not Opinion Based on Perceptions: Defendant was charged with eight counts of sexual intercourse without consent with his stepdaughter. After defendant pleaded not guilty and noticed an alibi defense, the State amended the information to allege the times of the rapes less precisely. Defense counsel hired Goddard to investigate the charges alleged in the original information. At trial, the trial court refused to allow Goddard to synopsize evidence gleaned from 40 interviews to establish an alibi for defendant to the original information. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the trial court ruling. Goddard's proposed testimony about defendant's alibi defense and the victim's credibility did not involve scientific, technical, or specialized knowledge. The testimony was not a proper subject matter for expert testimony, so Goddard's "opinion" was properly excluded. As a lay witness, Goddard's "opinion" was not based on his own perceptions. His opinion was gathered from interviewing other persons regarding the crimes charged. The trial court properly excluded the hearsay and opinion testimony of the investigator. St. v. Clark, 209 M 473, 682 P2d 1339, 41 St. Rep. 833 (1984), followed in St. v. Haskins, 269 M 202, 887 P2d 1189, 51 St. Rep. 1474 (1994).

General Acceptance Rule Not Governing in State: The "general acceptance rule" requiring that foundation be laid showing that the expert testimony to be offered involves a field of science which has gained general acceptance by the scientific community is not in conformity with the spirit of the new rules of evidence and is not applicable to evidence offered under this rule. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657 P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983), followed in St. v. Clark, 234 M 222, 762 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 1859 (1988), St. v. Walters, 247 M 84, 806 P2d 497, 48 St. Rep. 102 (1991), and St. v. Southern, 1999 MT 94, 294 M 225, 980 P2d 3, 56 St. Rep. 395 (1999).

Defendant's Expert Unrefuted — Effect of Testimony: Because by its very nature it deals with opinion, expert testimony offered by defendant, though unrefuted except for impeachment, does not mandate a result for defendant. The jury should be free to weigh that testimony and accept or reject it. Jacques v. Mont. Nat'l Guard, 199 M 493, 649 P2d 1319, 39 St. Rep. 1565 (1982).

Wrongful Death Action — Highway Patrolman as Expert in Traffic-Control Devices: In a wrongful death action in which the decedent's surviving spouse brought suit against the state and the state's contractor for negligently failing to warn the decedent of an abrupt edge at the shoulder of a highway construction project, a highway patrol officer was properly qualified as an expert in highway control devices and could offer his opinion as to whether a highway was adequately signed. An expert witness may be qualified by reason of practical experience in an area of special knowledge not shared by mankind in general. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980).

Prevailing Party Not Presenting Expert Testimony: Plaintiffs contracted with defendant to build their log home. Before and after occupancy of the home, structural problems requiring repair occurred. At trial, plaintiffs were awarded damages against the defendant. On appeal, defendant claimed that the findings that the roof had not been constructed as planned and bid and that construction defects by defendant brought about the instability and unsafe nature of the house were findings not supported by credible evidence, especially since the District Court did not accord any weight to the testimony of defendant's expert architect. The Supreme Court rejected the claim stating that when substantial evidence in the record supports the findings of the District Court, the fact that the prevailing party does not present expert testimony does not mean that the testimony produced by experts on the other side is inherently superior. When the evidence is conflicting but the findings are supported by substantial credible evidence, the findings of the District Court will be upheld. Carroccia v. Todd, 189 M 172, 615 P2d 225, 37 St. Rep. 1437 (1980).

Expert Qualification and Testing — Timely Objection Required: Plaintiff contends on appeal that the defense's expert witness was not properly qualified and that the experiment conducted by the expert was under conditions differing from those on the night of the accident. These objections were not timely made at the trial level, however, and cannot be raised on appeal. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600, 37 St. Rep. 93 (1980).

WHEN EXPERT TESTIMONY PROPER

Montana Campaign Finance Law — Candidates Required to Disclose Corporate Contributions and In-Kind Contributions: The Commissioner of Political Practices alleged that a state Senator violated campaign finance and practices laws during his 2010 primary campaign for Senate District 35: (1) by failing to report or disclose expenses for services associated with campaign mailings that the Commissioner determined were in-kind contributions, (2) by accepting illegal corporate contributions through coordination, and (3) by failing to maintain or produce campaign finance records. Concluding that the Senator accepted and failed to report nearly $20,000 in campaign contributions, including coordinated in-kind contributions, the District Court denied the Senator's motion for a new trial and entered an order trebling the verdict amount. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's denial of the defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, motion in limine to exclude the expert testimony of the Commissioner, and motion for a new trial. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it concluded that the defendant waived his constitutional argument on appeal, because he asserted his first amendment constitutional issue as an affirmative defense and did not ask the District Court to make a legal ruling on the constitutionality of the statutes underlying the action against him. The Supreme Court also found that the District Court had not abused its discretion when it trebled the verdict amount. Comm'r of Political Practices v. Wittich, 2017 MT 210, 388 Mont. 347, 400 P.3d 735.

Late Disclosure of Expert — Testimony Properly Allowed — No Surprise to Defense: The defendant was charged with felony deceptive practices for cashing several thousand dollars in dishonored checks. At trial, a detective who had investigated the defendant for deceptive practices for earlier offenses testified for the prosecution as an expert. The defendant objected to the detective's testimony because, she argued, the disclosure that he would testify as an expert was late. Following her conviction, the defendant appealed, arguing that the District Court had abused its discretion in allowing the detective to testify. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the detective's testimony was known and expected and did not constitute a surprise to the defense. St. v. Reopelle, 2017 MT 196, 388 Mont. 271, 399 P.3d 903.

Improper Exclusion of Expert Witness Testimony — Subject Matter Too Narrowly Constrained: The defendant was prosecuted for incest, sexual assault, and sexual intercourse without consent based on alleged incidents that occurred between the defendant and the defendant's 11-year-old daughter and her 11-year-old friend. The District Court determined that expert testimony would be appropriate in helping the jury understand issues concerning forensic interview techniques. At trial, the state presented the testimony of a nurse practitioner who had conducted forensic interviews of the girls. The defense sought to introduce expert testimony that would criticize the technique used by the state's witness. The District Court determined that the defense expert lacked specific training in a certain interviewing technique that was the "gold standard" for forensic interviews of children and excluded the defense expert from testifying. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, concluding that it was clear that the defense expert was qualified by both education and experience to critique the interviewing technique of the state's expert and that the District Court too narrowly conceived the subject matter at issue by constraining it to whether the defense expert had specific qualifications under the "gold standard" interview protocols. St. v. Colburn, 2016 MT 41, 382 Mont. 223, 366 P.3d 258.

Reasonably Foreseeable Misuse of Liquid Nail Product by Skin Contact — Erroneous Jury Instructions — Cumulative Error: Before a products liability case concerning an ingredient in a liquid nail product commenced, the District Court properly ruled for the plaintiff on a partial summary judgment motion, holding that the defendant could not argue affirmative defenses, including unreasonable misuse because the skin contact by the liquid nail product was reasonably foreseeable or assumption of the risk because the plaintiff did not subjectively know that the product would cause her injuries. However, the District Court then abused its discretion by allowing the product distributor to present expert testimony that its product was "safe as used" when skin contact was avoided, which erroneously introduced the concept of misuse by skin contact. The District Court compounded the problem by subsequently denying the plaintiff's request to cross-examine the expert witnesses who offered the evidence that the product was "safe as used", instructed the jury as to the meaning of "safe as used" without authority to support the court's definition, and refused to instruct the jury that skin contact is common in the nail industry. Due to cumulative error, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case. Kenser v. Premium Nail Concepts, Inc., 2014 MT 280, 376 Mont. 482, 338 P.3d 37.

Expert Testimony on Automobile Accident Reliable and Admissible — No Irregularities Warranting New Trial: An automobile accident to which there were no witnesses resulted in the death of both drivers. The plaintiff, a deceased driver's estate, filed a wrongful death and survivorship action against the defendant, the estate of the second deceased driver. At trial, each party's expert testified that the other driver caused the accident. The jury found in the defendant's favor, and the plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied. The plaintiff objected that the defendant's expert did not provide a sufficient factual foundation for his opinion testimony and that the scientific methodology used in his accident reconstruction was not reliable. The plaintiff also alleged that the defendant's expert changed the basis of his testimony between his disclosures under Rule 26(b)(4), M.R.Civ.P. (Title 25, ch. 20), and trial, warranting a new trial under 25-11-102(1). On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the defendant's expert opinion testimony was properly admitted under Rule 702, M.R.Ev., because the defendant established on the record that the expert was qualified as an expert in automobile accident reconstruction, that the expert's computer models reconstructing accidents were widely used and extensively tested, and that the information and physical evidence used were reliable. The Supreme Court also held that there was no impermissible surprise under 25-11-102(3), in that the defendant's expert clearly articulated the basis for his expert opinions and the expert's disclosures did not contain incomplete or incorrect information requiring supplementation. Wheaton v. Bradford, 2013 MT 121, 370 Mont. 93, 300 P.3d 1162.

Counsel's Failure to Object to Competency of Child Witnesses, Introduction of Prior Consistent and Inconsistent Statements, and Therapist Testimony in Incest Case — No Ineffective Assistance: The defendant appealed his conviction for incest on the basis of ineffective assistance of counsel due to defense counsel's alleged failure to object to the competency of child witnesses, the introduction of a DVD containing the victim's prior consistent and inconsistent statements, and the testimony of therapists. The Supreme Court found no merit in the defendant's ineffective assistance claim, concluding no objections were warranted to challenge (1) the competency of the child witnesses, as discrepancies in testimony did not constitute grounds for a challenge under Rule 601, M.R.Ev.; (2) the DVD, as it was admissible under St. v. Lawrence, 285 Mont. 140, 948 P.2d 186 (1997); or (3) the testimony of therapists because Montana law allows therapist testimony regarding a child's credibility in a sexual abuse case, as long as the victim testifies, the victim's credibility is attacked, and the therapist is properly qualified. St. v. Howard, 2011 MT 246, 362 Mont. 196, 265 P.3d 606.

Verifying Consistency Not Vouching for Credibility — No Ineffective Assistance of Counsel: When the defense based its case on the allegation that children were coached to accuse the defendant, statements by the children's mother, their former counselor, and the prosecutor verifying the consistency of their testimony over time were properly admitted. The statements did not vouch for the credibility of the testimony, and defense counsel did not perform ineffectively by choosing not to object to admissible statements. Rogers v. St., 2011 MT 105, 360 Mont. 334, 253 P.3d 889.

Expert Testimony Properly Limited After Disclosure Deadline Passed: It was not an abuse of discretion for the District Court to exclude expert testimony in a case in chief when the expert disclosure deadline had passed. The exclusion was well within a trial court's great latitude in ruling on admissibility of expert testimony. DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718.

Accident Reconstruction Expert Testimony in Bad Faith Insurance Action Properly Excluded: In a bad faith insurance action filed pursuant to the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA), the defendant insurer hired an expert to reconstruct the accident scene. The results of the reconstruction were admitted at trial through the claims file and the insurer sought to introduce testimony from the expert. The District Court did not err in denying the expert's testimony since the information had already been introduced through the claims file. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Expert Testimony Regarding Grooming of Victims for Sexual Abuse Properly Allowed: The court in Berosik's incest trial allowed the state's witness to describe the characteristics of the grooming of potential child victims of sexual abuse and then allowed the complaining witnesses and others to testify about Berosik's prior acts that occurred with the victims over several years. The court ruled that the prior acts were evidence that Berosik was grooming his victims and thus were part of the transactions the state sought to prove. On appeal, Berosik asserted that the expert testimony on grooming was irrelevant and highly prejudicial. The Supreme Court disagreed. Expert testimony explaining the complexities of child sexual abuse is admissible, and the evidence of prior sexual activity occurring before the charged offenses was admissible under the transaction rule because the activity formed part of the transaction that was the fact in dispute and was explanatory of the charged offense. St. v. Berosik, 2009 MT 260, 352 M 16, 214 P3d 776 (2009). See also St. v. Derbyshire, 2009 MT 27, 349 M 114, 201 P3d 811 (2009), and St. v. Crosley, 2009 MT 126, 350 M 223, 206 P3d 932 (2009).

Failure of State to Disclose Findings of Forensics Expert in Homicide Trial — Harmless Error: Morrissey retained a forensics expert to testify during Morrissey's homicide trial. The state had a forensics expert as well, and Morrissey moved for disclosure of the state's expert's findings. The state declined to disclose the findings on grounds that its expert would not be called as a witness during the state's case-in-chief, but only to rebut Morrissey's expert. The trial court denied Morrissey's discovery motion. Following trial, Morrissey appealed on grounds that the state violated 46-15-322 by failing to disclose its expert's conclusions. The Supreme Court agreed that under 46-15-322(1)(c), the prosecution was required to disclose the written report of the state's expert who examined the evidence, regardless of whether the expert was a witness in the state's case-in-chief, and noted that by refusing the disclosure request, the prosecution bound itself not to call the expert as a witness. When the state subsequently called its expert to give an opinion on the evidence, that testimony was objectionable. However, Morrissey had the opportunity to cross-examine the state's expert at length, so any error in allowing the expert's testimony was not prejudicial and was considered harmless. The trial court was affirmed. St. v. Morrissey, 2009 MT 201, 351 M 144, 214 P3d 708 (2009).

Failure to Disclose Expert — Testimony Properly Excluded: Plaintiff failed to properly disclose a witness as an expert, despite three requests by defendant to disclose expert witnesses. It was therefore within the authority of the trial court to exclude the witness's testimony as a result of plaintiff's failure to disclose. First Citizens Bank v. Sullivan, 2008 MT 428, 347 M 452, 200 P3d 39 (2008). See also Nelson v. Nelson, 2005 MT 263, 329 M 85, 122 P3d 1196 (2005).

Visual Identification of Dangerous Drug by Expert Witness Held Sufficient — Daubert Hearing Held Unnecessary: Clark was convicted of criminal possession of dangerous drugs after OxyContin and other prescription drugs for which Clark didn't have a prescription were found in the back seat of his vehicle. Clark contended that the method of identification of the drugs by the state's expert, using the unique coding on the drug containers and a visual inspection, was insufficient, that a chemical analysis should have been done, and that a Daubert hearing (see Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993)) should have been held at which the analysis and the state's expert testimony would be offered for evidence. Citing St. v. Damon, 205 MT 218, 328 M 276, 119 P3d 1194 (2005), the Supreme Court held that a Daubert hearing was necessary only for assessing expert testimony on novel scientific evidence but that there was nothing novel about the method used by the state's expert to identify the dangerous drugs in Clark's possession. St. v. Clark, 2008 MT 419, 347 M 354, 198 P3d 809 (2008).

No Error in Disallowing Doctor's Opinion Regarding Condition That Doctor Did Not Treat: Defendant sought to introduce the opinion of a doctor who treated plaintiff for back pain regarding the doctor's opinion concerning plaintiff's brain injury. The District Court disallowed the testimony, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff affirmatively demonstrated that the doctor had not treated plaintiff for a brain injury and had made only incidental and secondary observations concerning plaintiff's brain injury. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by disallowing the doctor's opinion statements concerning plaintiff's brain injury. McCormack v. Andres, 2008 MT 182, 343 M 424, 185 P3d 973 (2008).

Exclusion of Expert Testimony for Discovery Abuse Proper: In a dissolution proceeding, the wife sought to introduce evidence at trial from a medical expert to the effect that she did not have the emotional or mental capacity to reasonably enter into a contract on the day that she signed a property settlement agreement. The District Court disallowed the expert's testimony, and the wife appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. During discovery, the husband had requested production of the wife's medical records with respect to any health care providers that the wife identified as experts, but the wife failed to produce the records until calling the expert at trial. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by disallowing the expert testimony as a sanction for abuse of the discovery process and by failing to act on the husband's assertion of nondisclosure. Moreover, the District Court did not err in holding that the wife was not mentally incapacitated or subject to undue influence, given that it was the wife herself who proposed some of the terms of the settlement agreement. In re Marriage of Gorton, 2008 MT 123, 342 M 537, 182 P3d 746 (2008).

No Error in Allowing Expert Testimony Regarding Validity of Child Sexual Assault Victim's Statements Contained in Police Report: On appeal, Bomar raised numerous arguments asserting trial court error in allowing expert testimony regarding the expert's validity assessment of statements made by a child sexual assault victim that were contained in a report by an Oregon law enforcement officer. The expert opined that many of the victim's statements were consistent with research showing valid statements of sexual abuse. One of Bomar's arguments was that the trial court erred by not granting Bomar's request for a pretrial hearing pursuant to Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993), in order to resolve any dispute as to the reliability or validity of the expert's testimony. However, the trial court indicated that there was not time to hold a separate hearing on the issue and assumed that the issue could be decided without an evidentiary hearing, and Bomar's counsel agreed. In acquiescing to that decision, Bomar waived any right to appeal any alleged error in the failure to hold a Daubert-type hearing. Bomar also argued that the expert's testimony should have been disallowed based on the testimony of two defense experts who testified after the expert's testimony was admitted. However, because Bomar did not present the defense experts' opinions before the expert testified, Bomar could not assert error in the trial court's failure to consider the defense opinions before admitting the expert testimony. Bomar presented no authority that a trial court is required to reverse the admission of expert testimony based on subsequently provided expert opinions; thus, Bomar's assertion of trial court error failed, and the trial court was affirmed. St. v. Bomar, 2008 MT 91, 342 M 281, 182 P3d 47 (2008).

Improper Admission of Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test Results: Michaud appealed his DUI conviction on grounds that the trial court improperly admitted evidence regarding how a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test was administered by the arresting officer and the officer's results or inferences from the test because the state did not establish a proper foundation upon which the nonexpert officer could offer the evidence. The state conceded that a proper foundation was not laid, but contended that the evidence was harmless error as cumulative evidence of Michaud's guilt. The Supreme Court, citing Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998), agreed that there was an insufficient foundation for the admission of the HGN evidence and that the trial court abused its discretion by allowing the officer to testify regarding the test results. To determine whether the error prejudiced Michaud's rights to a fair trial, warranting reversal, the court applied the test in St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001). The error here was trial error and thus not automatically reversible, but contrary to the state's argument that the evidence was cumulative and the state's offer of proof of Michaud's failing several other sobriety tests, the state failed to meet its burden of proving that admission of the HGN evidence was harmless because the HGN test was scientific and likely to be accorded more weight by the jury than more subjective evidence, such as the officer's testimony and less scientific field sobriety tests. The case was reversed and remanded for retrial. St. v. Michaud, 2008 MT 88, 342 M 244, 180 P3d 636 (2008). However, see St. v. Chavez-Villa, 2012 MT 250, 366 Mont. 519, 289 P.3d 113 (ruling that although implication of HGN results was improperly admitted, the cumulative evidence of the defendant's intoxication rendered the introduction of the implied results harmless).

Medical Expert Testimony Regarding Diagnosis of Condition Caused by Stun Gun — Daubert Inapplicable to Medical Diagnosis: At Price's trial for assault with a weapon, a stun gun, the trial court allowed a medical expert to testify as to the victim's diagnosis following the electrical shock. On appeal, Price asserted that the evidence was improperly allowed because the doctor was not an expert on stun guns and thus was not qualified to testify on the potential for injury by a stun gun and that because evidence of the effect of stun guns was novel scientific evidence, the expert's testimony should have been excluded under the rule set out in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993). The Supreme Court disagreed. A medical diagnosis is not novel scientific evidence, so Daubert did not apply. The court adhered to the settled principle of admitting relevant scientific evidence in the same manner as other expert testimony and allowing its weight to be attacked by cross-examination and refutation. Price had ample opportunity through cross-examination to refute the doctor's knowledge of stun guns and the trauma that they may induce, and the trial court did not err in allowing the expert testimony. St. v. Price, 2007 MT 269, 339 M 399, 171 P3d 293 (2007). See also St. v. Clark, 2008 MT 419, 347 M 354, 198 P3d 809 (2008).

Admissibility of Testimony of Forensic Toxicologist Regarding Overdose — Daubert Hearing Required Only for Novel Scientific Evidence: The state offered testimony from a forensic toxicologist that a child in defendant's day-care center died from a toxic and lethal drug overdose and that the unwarranted and unauthorized administration of the drug exposed the child to a risk of a serious or fatal outcome and constituted endangerment. Defendant objected to the testimony, arguing that the toxicologist's reliance on postmortem blood levels to support the claim was flawed because the use of postmortem blood levels to determine premortem blood levels and declare a cause of death was a "novel application of pseudo-science speculations and conjecture" and that a Daubert hearing was necessary to determine the admissibility of the "novel" scientific theory (see Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993)). The District Court admitted the testimony and determined that a Daubert hearing was unnecessary. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant agreed that expert testimony was required and did not challenge the area of forensic toxicology, but rather the novelty of the extension of accepted pathological and toxicological standards that rendered it novel science as applied to this case. The Supreme Court reaffirmed that the Daubert factors apply only to novel scientific evidence and agreed with the District Court that the evidence itself was not novel, rather that defendant's disagreement was with the expert's conclusions, not the methodology or science used to determine the conclusions. St. v. Bieber, 2007 MT 262, 339 M 309, 170 P3d 444 (2007), distinguishing St. v. Clark, 209 M 473, 682 P 2d 1339 (1984).

No Error in Allowing Defendant Contractor to Present Expert Testimony Regarding His Own Work: Defendant ran a concrete company and was sued over services that he provided to plaintiff under written and oral construction contracts. The trial court allowed defendant to testify as an expert even though he was not disclosed as an expert as required by the scheduling order. The Supreme Court concluded that the trial court did not abuse its discretion by allowing defendant's expert testimony. The rule on disclosing experts is based on concerns over prejudice, but those concerns were not evident here. Defendant was both the contractor who performed the work and the party being sued, and it was obvious that he would testify regarding the quality of the work. Plaintiff knew defendant would testify, had ample time to plan his examination of defendant, was prepared to respond to defendant's testimony with his own expert regarding the quality of defendant's work, and thus was not prejudiced by defendant's expert testimony. Weimar v. Lyons, 2007 MT 182, 338 M 242, 164 P3d 922 (2007).

Failure of Both Parties to Abide by Scheduling Order — Neither or Both Parties' Experts Allowed to Testify: Although both parties failed to abide by a scheduling order regarding the presentation of experts, only one party was allowed to present its expert testimony at trial. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the action was an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Either both experts should have been allowed to testify, or neither expert's testimony should have been allowed, and failure to deal with the parties equitably was reversible error. Circle S Seeds of Mont., Inc. v. T&M Transporting, Inc., 2006 MT 25, 331 M 76, 130 P3d 150 (2006).

Failure to Meet Expert Witness Disclosure Deadline — No Error in Disallowing Expert's Report: Prior to trial, defendant moved in limine to exclude a doctor's report interpreting plaintiff's x-rays on grounds that plaintiff disclosed the report 8 months after the expert disclosure deadline, precluding defendant from properly researching and preparing a rebuttal; yet at trial, defendant was allowed to question plaintiff regarding plaintiff's previous fractures. The motion was granted. On appeal, plaintiff contended that disallowing the report constituted prejudice, but the Supreme Court noted that the motion was not granted because of a lack of relevancy, but rather because plaintiff missed the disclosure deadline. Absent a showing of prejudice, the District Court was affirmed. Howard v. St. James Community Hosp., 2006 MT 23, 331 M 60, 129 P3d 126 (2006).

Qualified Expert May Testify — Application of Expert Field to Facts Immaterial — Daubert Hearing Not Required: In a deposition, a documents expert concluded that defendant authored various threatening letters, but the expert could give only representative details of the methods of analysis by which the conclusion was reached and could explain neither how nor why the conclusion was reached that defendant authored the letters. Defendant asserted that the District Court should have held a hearing pursuant to Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993), to determine the reliability of the field of expert methods, but the Supreme Court disagreed. The Daubert test does not require a District Court to determine whether the expert reliably applied expert methods to the facts. Rather, if a reliable field helps the trier of fact and the court determines that that expert is a qualified expert in the field, the expert may testify. Under a Daubert analysis, the reliability of the expert's application of the expert field to the facts is immaterial in determining the reliability of the expert field, so in this case, a Daubert hearing was not required. Additionally, Rule 704, M.R.Ev., allowed the expert to testify to the ultimate conclusion of who wrote the letters. St. v. Clifford, 2005 MT 219, 328 M 300, 121 P3d 489 (2005).

Pretrial Order Allowing Expert Witness Supplementation — Amount of Notice Held Proper: Six months prior to trial, defendant notified plaintiffs that a witness would be called to discuss industry standards related to certain construction materials. Defendant substituted that witness as an expert for its original expert witness, but the witness was not disclosed as an expert until 2 weeks before trial. Plaintiffs complained that the new expert should not have been allowed to testify. The Supreme Court held that the expert's testimony was properly allowed, given that plaintiffs had 6 months' notice of the witness and 2 weeks' notice that the witness would testify as an expert. Tripp v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 2005 MT 121, 327 M 146, 112 P3d 1018 (2005). See also Ostermiller v. Alvord, 222 M 208, 720 P2d 1198 (1986).

Expert Testimony That Would Impermissibly Bolster Defendant's Credibility Properly Excluded: Defendant sought to introduce testimony of a psychologist regarding the outcome of defendant's psychological testing and the expert's opinion of the test results as exculpatory evidence. The District Court disallowed the testimony, and the Supreme Court affirmed. The general rule is that expert testimony offered to bolster the credibility of a party and the party's claims is improper because it invades the province of the jury by placing a stamp of scientific legitimacy on a victim's allegations or by dismissing the validity of the allegations. St. v. Bailey, 2004 MT 87, 320 M 501, 87 P3d 1032 (2004), distinguishing Benjamin v. Torgerson, 1999 MT 216, 295 M 528, 985 P2d 734 (1999). See also St. v. Walker, 2018 MT 312, 394 Mont. 1, 433 P.3d 202.

Defense Expert Testimony Properly Limited to General Review of Legal and Medical Documents: The District Court did not abuse its discretion when it limited the testimony of defendant's medical expert regarding whether defendant's assault victim suffered a seizure on the night of the assault. The expert was allowed to address two of six instances of the victim's previous conduct, to testify that the victim's file had been reviewed and that the expert opinion was based on other incidents, and to give a general explanation of the nature and symptomatology of the victim's disorder, including the effect of medications and alcohol. However, the expert was precluded from testifying about the specific nature of the other documents that were reviewed. The Supreme Court held that it was proper to limit the expert's testimony to general references in light of the prohibition against the introduction of evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts. Thus, defendant was afforded ample opportunity to demonstrate the victim's conditions and limitations in support of the defense theory, and the conviction was affirmed. St. v. Slavin, 2004 MT 76, 320 M 425, 87 P3d 495 (2004). See also Benjamin v. Torgerson, 1999 MT 216, 295 M 528, 985 P2d 734 (1999).

Testimony at Sentencing Hearing by Counselor Who Evaluated Defendant in Different Case Not Violation of Privileged Communication: At defendant's sentencing hearing, the court allowed testimony from a counselor who had performed a psychosexual evaluation on defendant in connection with an earlier unrelated case. Defendant contended on appeal that the counselor's testimony should not have been allowed under the rules of evidence. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that under St. v. Race, 285 M 177, 946 P2d 641 (1997), the rules of evidence are not applicable or controlling in sentencing hearings and that a statement covered by the psychotherapist-patient privilege that may be inadmissible at trial is admissible at a sentencing hearing. Further, the counselor's statement in question here was a matter of public record and did not constitute violation of a privileged communication. A sentencing court is allowed to have the fullest information possible concerning a defendant's life and characteristics in order to individualize punishment, and the testimony at issue helped the sentencing court frame the punishment in this case. St. v. J.C., 2004 MT 75, 320 M 411, 87 P3d 501 (2004).

Failure to Show Good Cause for Endorsing Expert Witness Five Days Before Trial — No Prejudice — Sanction Proper: Only 5 days before trial and more than 1 year after arraignment on criminal charges, DeMary moved to endorse an expert witness to rebut the state's expert. DeMary was aware of the state's expert at least 4 months before trial but failed to provide any explanation for waiting until 5 days before trial to seek endorsement. Although 46-15-323 allows a defendant to add witnesses more than 30 days after arraignment if good cause is shown, DeMary failed to demonstrate good cause for the tardiness of the motion, nor did he show that the state was prepared to address the expert's testimony. DeMary also failed to demonstrate prejudice in the disallowance of his expert's testimony because the state never called the witness that DeMary's proposed expert was to refute. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in sanctioning DeMary for failure to comply with 46-15-323 by disallowing the expert. St. v. DeMary, 2003 MT 307, 318 M 200, 79 P3d 817 (2003). See also St. v. Cooksey, 2012 MT 226, 366 Mont. 346, 286 P.3d 1174.

Nonprejudicial Preclusion of Expert Witness Not Violative of Right to Fair Trial or Effective Counsel: DeMary contended that the District Court's denial of a motion to endorse an expert witness 5 days before trial constituted ineffective assistance of counsel and denied DeMary's right to a fair trial. Under the Strickland test, a defendant must show that counsel's performance was deficient and that the performance prejudiced the defendant and deprived the defendant of a fair trial. However, DeMary failed to comply with 46-15-323 and failed to demonstrate prejudice in the disallowance of his expert's testimony because the state never called the witness that DeMary's proposed expert was to refute. Absent a showing of sufficient prejudice, DeMary could not show that the trial was unfair, and the assertion of ineffective assistance of counsel failed. St. v. DeMary, 2003 MT 307, 318 M 200, 79 P3d 817 (2003).

Exclusion of Expert Testimony on Hypnosis Proper When No Significant New Facts Recalled Through Hypnosis Sessions: In an effort to learn more details about the night of a homicide, police twice attempted to hypnotize a witness, but the witness never achieved a hypnotic state and was able to remember no significant new facts through hypnosis. Nevertheless, the District Court decided to allow the witness's testimony. DuBray then sought to introduce expert testimony regarding the effects of hypnosis on memory, such as memory hardening, but the expert testimony was refused, and DuBray appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Memory hardening was not a factor here because hypnosis was unsuccessful. Further, given the fact that the witness's memory remained substantially unchanged after the unsuccessful hypnosis sessions, exclusion of expert testimony regarding the effects of hypnosis on memory was not erroneous. St. v. DuBray, 2003 MT 255, 317 M 377, 77 P3d 247 (2003).

Expert Testimony Regarding Credibility of Incarcerated Informants Within Knowledge of Jury and Properly Disallowed: DuBray sought to introduce expert testimony regarding the credibility of incarcerated informants, but the testimony was disallowed. The Supreme Court agreed with the trial court that the concept of prisoners bartering information and testimony in exchange for favorable treatment was generally understood by society and one that the jury was capable of understanding without the assistance of expert testimony. St. v. DuBray, 2003 MT 255, 317 M 377, 77 P3d 247 (2003).

When Expert Testimony on Eyewitness Testimony Proper — Limited Admissibility Rule: In determining whether expert testimony on eyewitness testimony is admissible, the Supreme Court adopted the limited admissibility rule set out in People v. McDonald, 690 P2d 709 (Calif. 1984), that when eyewitness identification of a defendant is a key element of the prosecution's case but is not substantially corroborated by evidence giving it independent reliability and the defendant offers qualified expert testimony on specific psychological factors shown by the record that could have affected the accuracy of the identification but are not likely to be fully known or understood by the jury, it will ordinarily be error to exclude the expert testimony. Here, DuBray claimed error when his offered expert testimony on eyewitness testimony was denied. However, inconsistencies existed in the testimony of DuBray's alibi witness, and the conviction did not rest solely on the testimony of only one eyewitness. Given these and other examples of additional evidence supporting DuBray's conviction, it was not erroneous to exclude the expert testimony. St. v. DuBray, 2003 MT 255, 317 M 377, 77 P3d 247 (2003).

State Not Liable for Unforeseeable Accident — Intervening Criminal Act of Third Person — Expert Testimony on Foreseeability Proper: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for negligence. The jury returned a verdict for the state, and Samson appealed. Rather than retry the case and evaluate the facts to determine whether the state was negligent, the Supreme Court reviewed the verdict to determine if there was substantial evidence to support it and determined that there was. In order to sustain a negligence action, plaintiff must establish a legal duty on the part of defendant, a breach of that duty, causation, and damages. In cases involving a dispute over the intervening criminal act of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice—first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and second with regard to proximate causation. Samson contended that the District Court erred in allowing the state to present evidence in the form of expert testimony and to argue that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The state argued that the expert testimony was relevant and aided the jury. Given the need to determine the foreseeability of Bercier's actions, the expert testimony was properly allowed. Further, in cases alleging an intervening cause, juries must be instructed that the specific injury to plaintiff need not have been foreseen. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003), affirming Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and St. v. LaTray, 2000 MT 262, 302 M 11, 11 P3d 116 (2000).

Use by Expert of Likelihood Ratio to Explain Relevance of DNA Evidence: Defendant moved to exclude expert testimony using the likelihood ratio in presenting DNA results, but the motion was denied, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Although there is no set standard for determining whether a scientific technique is novel, the court has consistently given credence not only to previous treatment of a technique by other cases and jurisdictions, but also to how long a technique or theory has been used in the scientific community. Under that standard, the likelihood ratio is not considered a novel scientific technique that warrants analysis under the test in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993). In considering admissibility, the court noted that expert testimony is required in areas that are not within the range of ordinary training or intelligence and that the intricacies and mathematical principles underlying the likelihood ratio and other statistical analyses related to DNA evidence are subjects that require expert testimony. Further, the expert in this case was qualified to testify on the basis of both educational background and experience. Criticisms of specific applications of procedures or concerns about the accuracy of test results go to the weight of the evidence, not the admissibility. Defendant had ample opportunity to question the expert regarding application of the likelihood ratio, so admission of the expert testimony did not prejudice defendant. St. v. Ayers, 2003 MT 114, 315 M 395, 68 P3d 768 (2003). See also St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477 (1995), Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998), and Comm'r of Political Practices v. Wittich, 2017 MT 210, 388 Mont. 347, 400 P.3d 735.

No Violation of Motion In Limine in Allowing Certain Evidence Regarding Tendency of Parent for Sexual Abuse of Child in Custody Modification Proceeding: In a proceeding to revise a parenting plan, the mother made a motion in limine to preclude the testimony of a medical expert who performed a psychosexual evaluation of the father. The District Court ruled that the expert could testify as to whether the father was a person who had a tendency to sexually abuse a minor child, but could not testify about the child's credibility or the polygraph examination that was administered to the father. The mother then appealed on grounds that the court claimed that it would sustain the objection to certain testimony, but then adopted the testimony in its oral statement of findings. The Supreme Court found no violation of the motion in limine. The testimony considered by the trial court was the type of testimony that the trial court said it would allow. Further, deposition testimony by one of the mother's experts essentially affirmed the findings, and there was no motion in limine to preclude any deposition testimony. In re Marriage of Nies & Cooper, 2003 MT 100, 315 M 260, 68 P3d 697 (2003).

Abuse of Discretion in Allowing Testimony of Accident Reconstructionist Absent Foundation for Expert Opinion Testimony: Defendants presented an accident reconstructionist as an expert witness. However, the expert explained that the visibility test about which he testified required no specialized skill or knowledge to perform or analyze, so the foundational requirements for expert testimony in this rule were not met. Further, because defendants never disclosed the expert as a fact witness during discovery or pretrial proceedings, testimony as a lay witness was also precluded under Rule 701, M.R.Ev. Thus, absent establishment of the necessary foundation for expert opinion testimony, the District Court erred in allowing the expert to testify on the visibility test. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003).

Refusal of Opinion Testimony Regarding Defendant's Mental State Not Erroneous: The District Court refused to admit the opinion testimony of two doctors regarding Hoffman's mental state at the time that Hoffman committed aggravated assault. Hoffman asserted that under Rule 704, M.R.Ev., and this rule, the court erred by precluding the opinion testimony, in violation of due process. However, the language of 46-14-213 and the decision in St. v. Santos, 273 M 125, 902 P2d 510 (1995), proscribe such testimony and controlled the situation here. The testimony was properly refused. St. v. Hoffman, 2003 MT 26, 314 M 155, 64 P3d 1013 (2003), distinguishing St. v. Fish, 190 M 461, 621 P2d 1072 (1980).

Witness Without Adequate Knowledge of Intoxilyzer Test Properly Precluded From Testifying as to Validity of Test Results: Russette was arrested for DUI and attempted at trial to introduce as an expert witness a chemistry professor who would testify that an Intoxilyzer analysis constituted a scientific test that was not valid or reliable unless at least two scientific tests had been performed pursuant to the scientific method. The District Court did not allow the professor to testify because he had no specific knowledge regarding the Intoxilyzer, so the testimony would not help the jury to understand the evidence or determine a fact in issue. Russette appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The party presenting a witness as an expert must establish to the satisfaction of the trial court that the witness possesses the requisite knowledge, skill, experience, training, and education to testify to the issue in question. Russette failed to lay any foundation that the professor had adequate knowledge upon which to challenge the validity of the Intoxilyzer, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in precluding the witness from testifying. St. v. Russette, 2002 MT 200, 311 M 188, 53 P3d 1256 (2002).

Reversible Error in Failure to Disclose Expert Witness — Prejudice to Opposing Party: Despite its continuing duty to disclose the identity of each person expected to be called as an expert witness, the subject matter on which the person is expected to testify, and the substance of the person's testimony, defendant failed to disclose an expert witness prior to trial despite several opportunities to do so. Failure to disclose an expert witness constitutes reversible error and will usually prejudice the opposing party because the opposing party has no time to: (1) prepare for the witness; (2) effectively plan for cross-examination of the witness; and (3) obtain an expert to refute or question the testimony of the witness. Here, plaintiff initially listed a person as a witness, but not as an expert, and did not learn that the person would be called as a witness until he was called by defendant as an expert to refute plaintiff's experts. Therefore, plaintiff was prejudiced by defendant's failure to identify the person as an expert witness in response to discovery requests and in the scheduling order agreed upon by the parties, and the District Court abused its discretion by allowing the person to testify. The case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. Superior Enterprises, LLC v. Mont. Power Co., 2002 MT 139, 310 M 198, 49 P3d 565 (2002). See also Folsom v. Livingston, 2016 MT 238, 385 Mont. 20, 381 P.3d 539, holding that the District Court properly excluded expert testimony when a lay witness was first disclosed as an expert 7 months after the expert disclosure deadline.

Improper Admission of Testimony by Highway Patrol Officer Regarding Effect of Prescription Medication on Driving Ability — Harmless Error: During Nobach's DUI trial, the District Court allowed testimony from a highway patrol officer regarding the effect of prescription medications on Nobach's driving ability, without specifically determining whether the testimony would be considered expert or lay opinion. The officer opined that Nobach's ability to drive safely was diminished as a result of the consumption of drugs. Following conviction, Nobach appealed on grounds that the testimony was an expert opinion that was improperly allowed without the requisite foundation. The state contended that the testimony was a lay opinion, and cited St. v. Bradley, 262 M 194, 864 P2d 787 (1993), and St. v. Carter, 285 M 449, 948 P2d 1173 (1997), for the proposition that a lay witness may give an opinion regarding intoxication based on the witness's personal observations. The Supreme Court first distinguished Bradley and Carter because the type of intoxication in those cases involved alcohol, while in Nobach's case, the officer concluded that drugs were involved only when alcohol use was ruled out by the administration of a Breathalyzer test. The court was not convinced that lay people are sufficiently knowledgeable about common symptoms of drug consumption and its effect on driving ability to offer lay testimony on the subject based on personal observation. The officer's opinion testimony was thus considered expert testimony rather than lay testimony, requiring an adequate foundation under this rule. The officer's training and experience did not provide a sufficient foundation for admitting the expert testimony, so the District Court abused its discretion in allowing it. However, because the abuse was trial error rather than structural error, the error did not warrant automatic reversal. Rather, the question was whether the finder of fact was presented with admissible evidence that proved the same facts as the tainted evidence and, if so, whether the tainted evidence would have contributed to the conviction qualitatively by comparison. In this case, the state provided other expert testimony from a pharmacist that tended to prove the same facts as the officer's testimony, and because the officer's testimony would not have contributed to Nobach's conviction, the error was harmless and the conviction was affirmed. St. v. Nobach, 2002 MT 91, 309 M 342, 46 P3d 618 (2002).

Introduction of Results of Horizontal Gaze Nystagmus Test — Explanation of Underlying Scientific Basis of Correlation Between Alcohol Consumption and Nystagmus Required: At Van Kirk's DUI trial, the District Court allowed the arresting officer to testify regarding Van Kirk's performance on a horizontal gaze nystagmus (HGN) test. Van Kirk contended that the state failed to lay the proper foundation for admitting the test results. The Supreme Court agreed. Pursuant to Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998), in order to lay the proper foundation, the state must establish a scientific basis for the reliability of the test results and in addition show that the test was properly administered. This requires that a qualified expert explain the underlying scientific basis of the correlation between alcohol consumption and nystagmus. In this case, the arresting officer had a bachelor's degree in medical technology, had worked as a lab supervisor and technician at the state hospital, was certified to administer the HGN test, and testified that the test was properly administered to Van Kirk. However, nothing in the evidence established that the officer was specially trained or educated or had adequate knowledge to qualify as an expert able to explain the underlying scientific basis of the HGN test. Thus, the District Court erred in permitting the officer to offer the test results into evidence without the state first establishing the requisite foundation. However, the error was not prejudicial to Van Kirk, so the DUI conviction was affirmed. St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001).

Constructive Fraud for Failure to Disclose Risk of Erosion to Field Planted in Old River Channel: The sellers of farm land and an irrigation system failed to disclose to the buyers that the field at pivot three was an old river bed that had been filled but not riprapped and that the field was subject to increased risk of erosion. The buyers spent $99,575 to fix the impairment and sued for damages. The District Court found that the sellers were liable for constructive fraud for failure to disclose, and the sellers contested the District Court findings. The Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court was capable of finding that a risk of increased erosion existed without the benefit of expert testimony. Further, the court's conclusion, that filling the old river bed and creating a greatly increased risk of erosion was a serious impairment, was not clearly erroneous. Moreover, the court did not err in holding that the buyers had no way of knowing of the increased risk, even though a conversation with the sellers' employee who performed the backfill work would have revealed the problem. The buyers were not required to speak with the sellers' employees before purchasing, particularly given the fact that when the field at pivot three was cleared and leveled, it looked like any other field. The sellers also contended that the buyers had merely to ask their own consultant, who would have informed them of the origin and obvious condition of the field. However, the buyers' consultant did not inspect the fields until after closing of the sale and thus could not have provided the buyers with any knowledge. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Admissibility of Expert Testimony on Munchausen Syndrome by Proxy: In her trial for criminally endangering her child by leaving her medicine where the child could access it, the District Court found that the proper foundational requirement had been satisfied to allow expert testimony regarding Hocevar's possible affliction with Munchausen Syndrome by Proxy (MSBP), also known as factitious disorder by proxy, which is a pattern of behavior wherein a caretaker, usually a mother, fabricates or causes illness in another, usually a preverbal child, to gain attention. The expert characterized MSBP as a form of child abuse in the field of pediatrics, rather than a psychiatric disorder. Hocevar appealed the admissibility of the MSBP evidence. The Supreme Court found that expert testimony regarding MSBP was neither novel nor scientific and thus not subject to the standard in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786 (1993), which only applies to the admissibility of novel scientific evidence, so the court applied the conventional analysis of admissibility under this rule. Testimony about MSBP is beyond the range of ordinary training or intelligence and is therefore a subject matter requiring expert testimony. The state established sufficient foundation to show that the expert was qualified to testify on MSBP and had adequate knowledge upon which to base an opinion, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the testimony into evidence. St. v. Hocevar, 2000 MT 157, 300 M 167, 7 P3d 329, 57 St. Rep. 625 (2000). See also Calif. v. Phillips, 175 Cal. Rep. 703 (1981).

Expert Testimony Necessary to Establish Applicable Standard of Care Owed by Physician Who Treats Referred Patient — Functional Capacities Evaluation: Even though a physician-patient relationship may not exist when a test is administered at the request of a third party, a physician nevertheless owes a duty to an examinee who is not that physician's patient to exercise care commensurate with the examiner's professional training and experience. The standard of care applicable to the administration of a functional capacities evaluation (FCE) can be established only through expert testimony that takes into account the training and experience of the physical therapist relative to administering the FCE. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000). See also Webb v. T.D., 287 M 68, 951 P2d 1008, 54 St. Rep. 1502 (1997).

Interpretive Testimony by Defense Experts Regarding Evidence Introduced by Plaintiff's Experts Properly Admitted: Plaintiff who alleged that he was sexually abused as a child claimed District Court error in admitting testimony that was offered by defendant's experts regarding plaintiff's character that was offered by defendant's experts. However, plaintiff opened the door when his own experts testified regarding his character during his case in chief. The defense experts' interpretations of plaintiff's psychiatric history were properly admitted. Benjamin v. Torgerson, 1999 MT 216, 295 M 528, 985 P2d 734, 56 St. Rep. 847 (1999).

Expert Testimony Regarding Credibility of Witness Properly Excluded: Hardy was a primary witness in an arson case against Andersen, who sought to challenge Hardy's credibility at trial through the expert testimony of a psychiatrist who had examined Hardy and concluded that he was incapable of telling the truth. Generally, expert testimony evaluating the credibility of a witness is inadmissible because testimony of that nature invades the jury's function, in that the jury may defer to the expert, when the credibility of a witness properly lies exclusively with the jury. Here, the expert's testimony did not comprise the only evidence regarding Hardy's credibility. Andersen was able to elicit virtually all of the expert's points from other witnesses, so the District Court did not err in excluding the expert's testimony. Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999), following In re Renewal of Teaching Certificate of Thompson, 270 M 419, 893 P2d 301, 52 St. Rep. 200 (1995).

Expert Testimony on Evidence of Microscopic Hair Comparison Admissible: When considering whether expert evidence from microscopic hair comparison is admissible, the Supreme Court found that microscopic hair comparison is not novel scientific evidence; therefore, it was not error for the District Court to fail to consider the factors in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786 (1993), in determining if the expert's testimony was admissible. Nevertheless, when considering admissibility of microscopic hair comparison evidence, the District Court must conduct a conventional analysis under this rule. Applying Hulse v. Dept. of Justice, 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998), the court held that microscopic hair comparison, like the horizontal gaze nystagmus test in Hulse, is beyond the range of ordinary training or intelligence and is thus a subject on which an expert may testify. Here the state established an adequate foundation for the expert's testimony, including education, training, and knowledge, and the District Court did not err in allowing it. St. v. Southern, 1999 MT 94, 294 M 225, 980 P2d 3, 56 St. Rep. 395 (1999), in accord with U.S. v. Matta-Ballesteros, 71 F3d 754 (9th Cir. 1995).

Abuse of Discretion in Admission of Testimony That, Based on Shell Casing Pattern, Shots Fired From Van — Harmless Error: The District Court abused its discretion in admitting expert testimony from a police officer regarding whether shots were fired from a van. The testimony was based on the ejection pattern of shell casings at the scene of a shooting. There was an insufficient foundation to qualify the officer as an expert because he lacked specialized knowledge that would distinguish him from a lay person in opining whether the shots came from a van. Citing 46-20-701, the Supreme Court held nevertheless that, in light of testimony from several eyewitness that the shots were indeed fired from a van, the abuse of discretion was harmless error and should be disregarded. St. v. Maier, 1999 MT 51, 293 M 403, 977 P2d 298, 56 St. Rep. 208 (1999).

Social Worker Must Qualify as Expert Under Federal Law With Respect to Custody of Indian Child: The District Court terminated the parental rights of an Indian parent based in part on the testimony of two social workers that the court treated as expert testimony. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the testimony of the social workers could not be treated as expert testimony unless the social workers qualified as experts under the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 regulations. The Supreme Court further stated that a social worker must possess expertise beyond that of the normal social worker to satisfy the qualified expert witness requirement of the federal Act. In re Adoption of H.M.O., 1998 MT 175, 289 M 509, 962 P2d 1191, 55 St. Rep. 710 (1998), followed in In re K.H. & K.L.E., 1999 MT 128, 294 M 466, 981 P2d 1190, 56 St. Rep. 515 (1999), in which it was found to be highly preferable that an expert qualified for purposes of the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978, particularly a non-Indian expert, possess significant knowledge of and experience with Indian culture (although not necessarily of a particular tribe), family structure, and child-rearing practices in general.

Highway Patrol Officer's Expert Opinion, in DUI Prosecution, That Driver Being Under the Influence Caused Accident: In a DUI prosecution, admission of a highway patrol officer's testimony that in her opinion, based on her investigation at the scene of defendant's accident and her discussion with defendant soon after the accident, defendant was under the influence of alcohol to an extent that diminished his ability to drive safely was not an abuse of discretion. Her training and experience in accident investigation and reconstruction qualified her as an expert for purposes of giving the opinion. She had been an officer for 8 years, was trained at the Montana Highway Patrol Academy for 12 weeks, had 4 weeks of training in traffic investigation, had attended an accident reconstruction school, had taught accident investigation, had special DUI investigation training and had taken a course on being a DUI detection instructor, was a recognized expert in accident reconstruction, had investigated more than 200 accidents, of which 15% to 20% had involved alcohol, and had participated in more than 100 DUI arrests. Her opinion did not invade the province of the jury by calling for a legal conclusion on the issue of guilt or innocence; she was giving an expert opinion as to the cause of the accident. St. v. Gregoroff, 287 M 1, 951 P2d 578, 54 St. Rep. 1469 (1997).

Highway Patrol Officer's Expert Opinion, in DUI Prosecution, That Driver Passed Out While Driving: In a DUI prosecution, admission of a highway patrol officer's testimony that in her opinion, based on her investigation at the scene of defendant's accident and her discussion with defendant soon after the accident, defendant had passed out while driving was not an abuse of discretion. Her training and experience in accident investigation and reconstruction qualified her as an expert for purposes of giving the opinion. She had been an officer for 8 years, was trained at the Montana Highway Patrol Academy for 12 weeks, had 4 weeks of training in traffic investigation, had attended an accident reconstruction school, had taught accident investigation, had special DUI investigation training and had taken a course on being a DUI detection instructor, was a recognized expert in accident reconstruction, had investigated more than 200 accidents, of which 15% to 20% had involved alcohol, and had participated in more than 100 DUI arrests. St. v. Gregoroff, 287 M 1, 951 P2d 578, 54 St. Rep. 1469 (1997).

Expert Testimony Unnecessary on Issue of Standard of Care — District Court Not Directed as to All Expert Testimony on All Claims: Durbins purchased a home through the seller's realtors. Contrary to the representations of the realtors, Durbins discovered that the property had no legal septic system, that the household water was unsafe to use for any purpose, and that the access road was located on the neighbor's property. Durbins brought an action against the realtors, alleging negligent misrepresentation, actual and constructive fraud, and statutory violations involving the Montana real estate licensing laws and the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973. The defendants sought and achieved dismissal of the case on the grounds that Durbins failed to prove through expert testimony the applicable standard of care of the realtors. The Supreme Court held that expert witnesses were unnecessary to prove a standard of care. Durbins also asked that the Supreme Court direct the District Court to exclude testimony of any expert witnesses on any claim asserted by the Durbins. The Supreme Court noted that the District Courts have great latitude concerning the admissibility of evidence and that the District Court would in any event have to comply with this rule. The Supreme Court therefore declined to direct the District Court as requested by the Durbins. Durbin v. Ross, 276 M 463, 916 P2d 758, 53 St. Rep. 471 (1996), followed in May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000).

Sale of Home by Realtors — Negligent Misrepresentation, Actual and Constructive Fraud, and Real Estate Licensing and Consumer Protection Laws — Expert Witnesses Unnecessary to Prove Standard of Care: Durbins purchased a home through the seller's realtors. Contrary to the representations of the realtors, Durbins discovered that the property had no legal septic system, that the household water was unsafe to use for any purpose, and that the access road was located on the neighbor's property. Durbins brought an action against the realtors, alleging negligent misrepresentation, actual and constructive fraud, and statutory violations involving the Montana real estate licensing laws and the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973. The defendants sought and achieved dismissal of the case on the grounds that Durbins failed to prove through expert testimony the applicable standard of care of the realtors. The Supreme Court held that because Durbins did not allege professional misrepresentation, the issues of whether the realtors negligently misrepresented the facts, were guilty of actual or constructive fraud, or were guilty of the statutory violations alleged by Durbins, were questions resolvable by common knowledge. The questions did not turn on a standard peculiarly within the knowledge of an expert witness, and scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge was not necessary to assist the jury. The Supreme Court therefore held that Durbins were not required to provide expert standard of care testimony to establish any of the violations. Durbin v. Ross, 276 M 463, 916 P2d 758, 53 St. Rep. 471 (1996). See also May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000), requiring expert testimony to establish a standard of care in a negligence action against a real estate agent.

Testimony Regarding Age of Latent Fingerprint Properly Admitted: The District Court allowed a fingerprint technician to testify at trial as to the age of Cline's latent fingerprint found at the crime scene. Cline claimed that because there is no reliable scientific procedure to evaluate the age of a fingerprint, the prejudicial effect of the testimony outweighed its probative value. Montana has adopted the standard in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786 (1993), in determining whether to allow expert testimony concerning novel scientific evidence. The Daubert test requires the trial judge to determine whether the expert is proposing to testify to scientific knowledge that will assist the trier of fact to understand or determine a fact in issue. To guide the assessment of the reliability of the evidence, the test in St. v. Moore, 268 M 20, 885 P2d 457 (1994), is applied regarding: (1) whether the theory or technique can be and has been tested; (2) whether the theory or technique has been subjected to peer review and publication; (3) the known or potential rate of error in using a particular scientific technique and the existence and maintenance of standards controlling the technique's operation; and (4) whether the theory or technique has been generally accepted or rejected in the particular scientific field. Acknowledging that fingerprint evidence in general is not novel, the use of magnetic powder to determine the age of a print is novel. The state established the necessary foundation regarding fingerprint age, and the trial court correctly found that this was an area in which experts could disagree, that the testimony would be subject to cross-examination, and that the credibility of the witnesses and the weight of their testimony should be for the jury to decide, not the court. The trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing expert testimony regarding fingerprint age. St. v. Cline, 275 M 46, 909 P2d 1171, 53 St. Rep. 32 (1996).

Admissibility of Expert Testimony in Administrative Proceeding Regarding Sexual Conduct by Teacher: Allegations were made to a school board regarding sexual conduct by a teacher toward students and former students, triggering criminal charges that were later dismissed. The District Court found that conclusions by a hearings examiner denying renewal of the teacher's certificate were based on inadmissible testimony by a drug and alcohol counselor who testified as an expert on sexual abuse. The Supreme Court, examining the issue of expert testimony in administrative proceedings, noted that agencies are bound by common law and statutory rules of evidence and that while the rules of evidence are generally more relaxed in an administrative proceeding than they are in a court of law, they are not to be relaxed to the point of disregarding due process of law and fundamental individual rights. In a criminal case, the question of whether a child is a victim of sexual abuse is a question that may be clarified by expert testimony. However, expert testimony evaluating the credibility of witnesses is generally not admissible, except when the witness is a child victim who testifies at trial and credibility is brought into question. In this case, neither victim was a child, nothing in the record established that any of the witnesses were incompetent or were under any form of mental or physical disability, and the expert's general statements that the victims' conduct was consistent with that of sexually abused children prejudiced the accused because the trier of fact deferred to the expertise of the expert and inferred that the expert believed the witness to be credible. Failure to establish a foundation for the use of any of the expert testimony constituted reversible error. In re Renewal of Teaching Certificate of Thompson, 270 M 419, 893 P2d 301, 52 St. Rep. 200 (1995).

Failure to Comply With Disclosure Requirements of Disclosure Order — Sanctions Appropriate: Under 46-15-323, a defendant is required to provide the prosecution written notice of certain defenses within 30 days after arraignment and to simultaneously make available to the state the names and addresses of experts whom defendant intends to call at trial, together with reports and statements generated by those experts in connection with the case. Because of defendant's late notice of the intention to call an expert and to provide any written report or resume from the witness, the state was precluded from effectively meeting the proposed expert testimony. It was within the discretion and flexibility of the District Court to sanction defendant under 46-15-329 by prohibiting the expert from testifying. St. v. Haskins, 269 M 202, 887 P2d 1189, 51 St. Rep. 1474 (1994).

Lack of Familiarity With Chemicals That Damaged Crops: The trial court properly excluded testimony of the defendant crop sprayer's proffered expert in a suit for negligent damage to crops caused by the sprayer. The expert based his opinion on scientific studies that he performed in the 1960s under different conditions, was not familiar with the chemical mixture used on the plaintiffs' land, and did not examine samples of the damaged crops until the trial. Semenya v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Testimony Not Allowed Due to Witness's Admission of Lack of Qualification: Mannix argued that the lower court erred in not allowing his expert to testify regarding breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing by the board of directors of the defendant corporation. The Supreme Court held that although expert testimony on breach of the covenant was admissible, the witness by his own admission had no knowledge of the relationship between officers and directors or the interpretation of bylaws regarding that relationship. Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 259 M 79, 854 P2d 834, 50 St. Rep. 691 (1993). See also Vincelette v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 1998 MT 259, 291 M 261, 968 P2d 275, 55 St. Rep. 1071 (1998) (holding that a maintenance worker's testimony regarding investigating the incident upon receiving a radio report that plaintiff's fall was because of intoxication rather than worn carpet was inadmissible hearsay offered to prove the truth of the hotel's assertion regarding the cause of the fall).

Admission of Medical Journal Articles Proper: Youngs argued that the introduction of articles from medical journals was improper because the issue of credibility should have been determined by the jury, not by strangers. The Supreme Court held that the articles were admissible as scientific knowledge admitted to assist the jury in understanding evidence concerning a fact in issue. Young v. Horton, 259 M 34, 855 P2d 502, 50 St. Rep. 662 (1993).

Child Sexual Abuse Victim: Expert testimony relating to the contradictory behavior and, when appropriate, the credibility of a child victim of sexual abuse will be allowed to enlighten the jury on a subject with which most people have no common experience and to assist the jurors in assessing the credibility of the victim. St. v. Scott, 257 M 454, 850 P2d 286, 50 St. Rep. 353 (1993), followed in St. v. Alexander, 265 M 192, 875 P2d 345, 51 St. Rep. 474 (1994), and St. v. Morgan, 1998 MT 268, 291 M 347, 968 P2d 1120, 55 St. Rep. 1112 (1998), which was followed in St. v. Robins, 2013 MT 71, 369 Mont. 291, 297 P.3d 1213.

Sexually Abused Child — Not Necessary to Prove Reliability of Expert Witness's Testimony: Because the Supreme Court has recognized and sanctioned expert testimony concerning sexual abuse and specifically has allowed expert testimony concerning a child fitting the profile of a sexually abused child, this area is not a novel area of scientific expertise and the District Court did not err by allowing a medical expert's testimony without requiring a threshold determination of the reliability of her testimony. St. v. Walters, 247 M 84, 806 P2d 497, 48 St. Rep. 102 (1991).

No Expert Testimony Defining Gross Inefficiency Needed: The plaintiff, a terminated Deputy Sheriff seeking reinstatement, wanted to introduce expert testimony on the definition of gross inefficiency. The Supreme Court affirmed the exclusion of the evidence, stating that the court had instructed the jury on the definition and that the concept was not so technical that expert testimony was needed. Smith v. Roosevelt County, 242 M 27, 788 P2d 895, 47 St. Rep. 506 (1990).

Age Discrimination — Scope of Statistical Expert Testimony: Statisticians may testify that their statistics do or do not show patterns of discrimination based on age but may not testify to the ultimate conclusion that age discrimination was or was not exercised in an employment termination. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Expert's Testimony Allowable as to Credibility of Child Abuse Victim if Child Also Testifies: In determining whether the District Court properly refused to allow into evidence out-of-court statements made by a child abuse victim to a counselor, the Supreme Court held that testimony by an expert evaluating the credibility of a witness is inadmissible except when the witness is a child victim of sexual assault and the child also testifies. However, the expert may not identify the alleged perpetrator because identification requires only the common logic that is well within the capacity of a lay jury. St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309, 45 St. Rep. 2373 (1988). See also St. v. Harris, 247 M 405, 808 P2d 453, 48 St. Rep. 62 (1991), St. v. Riggs, 2005 MT 124, 327 M 196, 113 P3d 281 (2005). Thompson and Harris were followed, in a case not involving child abuse, in Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999).

Expert Testimony Required in Legal Malpractice Case—Directed Verdict Proper: An attorney's standard of care depends on the skill and care ordinarily exercised by attorneys—a criteria that rarely falls within the common knowledge of lay persons. Therefore, expert testimony is required in a legal malpractice case. Absent such testimony, a directed verdict was proper. Carlson v. Morton, 229 M 234, 745 P2d 1133, 44 St. Rep. 1929 (1987), followed in Brown v. Small, 251 M 414, 825 P2d 1209, 49 St. Rep. 98 (1992), and Moore v. Does 1 to 25, 271 M 162, 895 P2d 209, 52 St. Rep. 399 (1995), and cited in Newville v. St., 267 M 237, 883 P2d 793, 51 St. Rep. 758 (1994). Newville was followed in May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000), requiring expert testimony to establish a standard of care in a negligence action against a real estate agent.

Expert Testimony Regarding Shoe Prints:

A police officer was properly qualified as an expert witness because he had received special training in footprints and latent prints, attended both the Montana Law Enforcement Academy's basic and intermediate training sessions, received training in identifying and securing footprints and in the observation of individual footprint characteristics, and participated in several criminal investigations where the only physical evidence that was left at the crime scene was footprints and where that evidence had supported arrests and convictions. Admission of his testimony was not an abuse of discretion. St. v. Oliver, 228 M 322, 742 P2d 999, 44 St. Rep. 1567 (1987).

The Supreme Court held that expert testimony in the matter of shoe prints met the requirements of this rule because of the specialized knowledge of the witness which was not within the common knowledge of men or within ordinary education. The foundational requirement for the necessity of expert testimony was met. St. v. Smith, 220 M 364, 715 P2d 1301, 43 St. Rep. 449 (1986).

Admissibility of Expert Testimony in Assessing Credibility of Child Sexual Assault Victim: Expert testimony was admissible for the purpose of helping the jury assess the credibility of a child sexual assault victim since the jury had the discretion to accept or reject the testimony and the testimony merely enlightened the jurors on the subject without impinging on the jury's right to decide the victim's credibility. St. v. Geyman, 224 M 194, 729 P2d 475, 43 St. Rep. 2125 (1986), followed in St. v. French, 233 M 364, 760 P2d 86, 45 St. Rep. 1557 (1988), and in St. v. Donnelly, 244 M 371, 798 P2d 89, 47 St. Rep. 1600 (1990). Geyman and French were both distinguished on the basis of the age of the witness in St. v. Hensley, 250 M 478, 821 P2d 1029, 48 St. Rep. 1018 (1991). See also St. v. St. Germain, 2007 MT 28, 336 M 17, 153 P3d 591 (2007), in which expert testimony regarding the credibility of a 20-year-old who had been abused as a child was properly excluded because the jury was capable of assessing the credibility of the victim without expert testimony. See also St. v. Hall, 244 M 161, 797 P2d 183, 47 St. Rep. 1501 (1990), and St. v. Imlay, 249 M 82, 813 P2d 979, 48 St. Rep. 588 (1991), which overruled Donnelly with regard to augmentation of sentence for failure to admit guilt.

Objection Sustained on Defendant's Cross-Examination of Expert Regarding Motive and Bias: The District Court did not err in sustaining the state's objection to defendant's cross-examination of an expert witness pertaining to the expert's bias and hostile feelings because the cross-examination went beyond the state's direct examination and was irrelevant, having no bearing on the expert's testimony as a coroner. Furthermore, the sustained objection did not prevent the defendant from pursuing a related line of inquiry, the defendant could have called the coroner during his case in chief, and the defendant failed to make any timely offer of proof in accordance with Rule 103(a), M.R.Ev., instead raising the issue for the first time on appeal. St. v. Atlas, 224 M 92, 728 P2d 421, 43 St. Rep. 2042 (1986).

Testimony of Crematorium Operator — Relevance to Arson Testimony: The District Court did not err in allowing brief and clinical evidence by a crematorium operator on the time and temperature necessary for cremation of a human body when the evidence corroborated the state pathologist's and fire marshal's testimony relating to the time and temperature of the fire involved and its effects on the victim. St. v. Atlas, 224 M 92, 728 P2d 421, 43 St. Rep. 2042 (1986).

General Observations of Expert — Admissible as Beyond Common Experience: A herbicide manufacturer argued that expert testimony should not have been admitted since the expert was unable to draw any specific conclusions as to this case based on his greenhouse study of the effects of deep-seeding and herbicide incorporation on spring wheat. The Supreme Court found no error in the admission of the testimony because, although he was unable to draw specific conclusions, the expert made general observations based on studies and years of experience in horticulture that assisted the jury in understanding the evidence and determining facts at issue. Vandalia Ranch, Inc. v. Farmers Union Oil & Supply Co., 221 M 253, 718 P2d 647, 43 St. Rep. 790 (1986).

Highway Patrol Officer — Wide Discretion by Court to Admit Opinion Testimony on Vehicle Speed: A trial judge is granted wide discretion in determining whether to admit opinion testimony of investigating police officers regarding the speed of vehicles. Given the officer's qualifications and experience in this case, as well as the general nature of his testimony, there was no abuse of discretion in allowing his testimony. Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986), followed in Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990).

Employee of General Contractor Expert on Tile Installation — Standard of Review: In an action for breach of warranty brought by the general contractor against a subcontractor regarding installation of a tile floor, plaintiff's employee was allowed to testify as an expert witness on the subject of tile installation. The court rejected subcontractor's argument that the trial court abused its discretion in determining that the witness was an expert. Although the court expressed concern that witness was allowed to express his opinion on a skill of which he had no practical or personal involvement prior to preparation for trial, the fact that it would reach a different conclusion on the determination than that of the trial court does not render the trial judgment infirm. The trial court's ruling must be upheld unless shown to be clearly erroneous. Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Christensen, 215 M 372, 697 P2d 1344, 42 St. Rep. 440 (1985). This standard applied in Goodover v. Lindsey's Inc., 255 M 430, 843 P2d 765, 49 St. Rep. 1059 (1992).

Scope of Expert Testimony — Trial Court Regulation: In a wrongful death action arising out of a head-on car-truck collision, plaintiff attempted to introduce expert testimony regarding the causes of perceptual distortion encountered by the deceased prior to her death. The offered testimony sought to establish that the perception of the deceased was so distorted because of the conditions created by the defendant that a collision was very likely. He intended to establish causation by showing that the conditions caused the distortion and the distortion caused the accident. The trial court allowed testimony as to factors involving perceptual distortion. It did not allow testimony as to how these factors affected the deceased's mental processes. The Supreme Court said that the factors useful in determining the admissibility of expert testimony are: first, qualified expert; second, proper subject; third, conformity to generally accepted explanatory theory; and fourth, probative value compared to prejudicial effect. The trial court must consider the facts of each case and the substance of the expert testimony offered on a case-by-case basis. The trial court was within its discretion in limiting the testimony concerning how the perceptual distortion factors affected the deceased's mental processes. Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

Expert Testimony Required for Title Insurance Company Standard of Care: In 1975, plaintiff negotiated to sell his property and a commitment for title insurance was ordered from defendant. The defendant issued a title commitment, but it contained no reference to a quiet title action or decree whereby plaintiff and his father had determined separate ownership of various parcels. In 1977, a judgment against plaintiff's father was entered and a Writ of Execution was levied on the father's and plaintiff's property. Plaintiff then brought an action to amend the judgment in the quiet title action nunc pro tunc to reflect the separate ownership. Plaintiff then brought this action to recover costs of the nunc pro tunc action. Plaintiff presented no expert testimony as to the standard of care of a title insurance company. Defendant appealed from an adverse judgment, contending the absence of expert testimony failed to establish a prima facie case of negligence. The Supreme Court, relying on Prosser, Law of Torts, 4th Ed. (1971), and Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383 (1979), held that title examination is complex and intricate and beyond the common understanding of lay persons. Plaintiff must produce expert testimony to establish the standard of care required of a title insurance company. Without such testimony a prima facie case of negligence was not established. Doble v. Lincoln County Title Co., 215 M 1, 692 P2d 1267, 42 St. Rep. 128 (1985), distinguished in Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Labor Expert — Evidence on Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing: The instant case is not a scenario of simple facts. Fault arising from breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is not easily comprehensible to the average person. Dr. Vinton's testimony was based on professional expertise and experience that the individual jury members were unlikely to possess. Her testimony assisted the trier of fact by providing the jury with information about hospital disciplinary procedures and labor relations beyond the common experience of a lay juror. Contrary to the hospital's reading of Rule 702, it does not exclude expert testimony on all matters about which jury members have any knowledge or experience. The courts must continue with the spirit of the new rules of evidence and recognize that individuals in fields other than medicine, especially in the complex domain of labor relations, are a new legion of experts. Crenshaw v. Bozeman Deaconess Hosp., 213 M 488, 693 P2d 487, 41 St. Rep. 2251 (1984), followed in Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986), Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989), and in Niles v. Big Sky Eyewear, 236 M 455, 771 P2d 114, 46 St. Rep. 504 (1989), and distinguished in May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000).

Admissible for Expert to Give Opinion on Whether Violation of Law Occurred: It was not inadmissible for a Deputy Sheriff qualified as an expert to give his opinion on whether a violation of the law was the cause of an automobile accident. Adequate opportunity was given the plaintiff to elicit any assumptions or facts underlying the expert opinion. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989), and Hauck followed in Hislop v. Cady, 261 M 243, 862 P2d 388, 50 St. Rep. 1304 (1993).

Proper Subject Matter for Use of Expert Testimony: When parties allege different factors regarding the cause of an automobile accident, it is proper subject matter for the testimony of expert witnesses. Such an accident involves complicated matters beyond the ordinary understanding of the jury and is therefore distinguishable from Ployhar v. Bd. of Trustees, 187 M 363, 609 P2d 1226, 37 St. Rep. 744 (1980), which involved an accidental death caused by heavy equipment. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984).

Rape-Trauma Syndrome — Expert Testimony Admissible on Whether There Was Consent: Testimony of experts on whether the complaining witness in a sexual intercourse without consent case suffers from rape-trauma syndrome is admissible to aid a jury in determining whether there was consent to engage in the sexual intercourse that all parties acknowledge occurred. St. v. Liddell, 211 M 180, 685 P2d 918, 41 St. Rep. 1293 (1984), followed in St. v. Brodniak, 221 M 212, 718 P2d 322, 43 St. Rep. 755 (1986).

Highway Patrolman — Vehicular Speed in Complicated Collision: Whether or not a highway patrolman is qualified to testify as an expert witness in estimating vehicular speed in a complicated collision is a matter within the discretion of the trial judge. As long as the cross-examiner is given adequate opportunity to elicit any assumptions or facts underlying an expert's opinion, the weight to be given the expert's testimony is for the jury to determine. Goodnough v. St., 199 M 9, 647 P2d 364, 39 St. Rep. 1170 (1982), followed in Cline v. Durden, 246 M 154, 803 P2d 1077, 47 St. Rep. 2306 (1990). See also St. v. Arrington, 260 M 1, 858 P2d 343, 50 St. Rep. 905 (1993).

Test for Admission of Expert Opinion: The test of whether one can give an expert opinion is whether the subject is one of such common knowledge that men of ordinary education could reach a conclusion as intelligently as the witness whose expert opinion is sought to be introduced or whether the matter is sufficiently beyond common experience that the opinion of an expert would assist the trier of fact. St. v. Howard, 195 M 400, 637 P2d 15, 38 St. Rep. 1980 (1981), followed in Durbin v. Ross, 276 M 463, 916 P2d 758, 53 St. Rep. 471 (1996).

Pathological Testimony Based on Photos Held Admissible — Death by Blunt Instrument: Where, in a prosecution for deliberate homicide caused by blows struck to the head of the deceased, the prosecution attempted to prove how the fatal blows were applied through the testimony of a pathologist, based on photographs, the court did not err in overruling the defendant's objection to the pathologist's testimony. The competency of a witness to testify as an expert is a question for the trial court's discretion. The pathologist had the knowledge, skill, training, education, and experience to qualify him to express an opinion on how the fatal blows were inflicted. St. v. Close, 191 M 229, 623 P2d 940, 38 St. Rep. 177 (1981).

Expert Opinion Concerning Cause of Accident — Subject Matter Not Beyond Ordinary Understanding — New Trial: An expert gave his opinion concerning the cause of an accident. The accident was relatively simple, and since opinion evidence concerning the cause of the accident is admissible only if the subject matter is beyond the ordinary understanding of the jury, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in granting a motion for a retrial because the expert's opinion should not have been admitted. Ployhar v. Bd. of Trustees, 187 M 363, 609 P2d 1226, 37 St. Rep. 744 (1980).

Purpose of Expert Testimony: Testimony as to the usual fee charged by an attorney to workers' compensation clients is relevant in a prosecution of the defendant on charges of larceny by bailee. The purpose of expert testimony is to aid the jury, but it does not limit the jury's capacity to decide for itself. Since the statute at the time in question provided that an agreement as to attorney fees could be implied, some standard as to what such an implied agreement might be was essential. St. v. Bretz, 185 M 253, 605 P2d 974, 36 St. Rep. 1037 (1979).

Expert Evidence Required: In matters where it is possible that a layman could have no knowledge at all, the court and jury must depend on expert evidence. Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383, 36 St. Rep. 651 (1979).

Expert Testimony Required: A plaintiff must produce expert testimony to sustain an action against a drug company for failure to warn adequately of side effects of its products. Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383, 36 St. Rep. 651 (1979).

Hypothetical Question Not Required: A hypothetical question is not a prerequisite in the testimony of an expert witness. It is only required that the witness testify as to the facts upon which he bases his opinion. St. v. Hallam, 175 M 492, 575 P2d 55 (1978).

MEDICAL EXPERTS

Medical Malpractice Claim Improperly Dismissed — Medical Expert's Report Established Genuine Issues of Material Fact on Standard of Care and Breach Elements — Reversed and Remanded. Kipfinger v. Great Falls Obstetrical & Gynecological Associates, 2023 MT 44, 411 Mont. 269, 525 P.3d 1183.

Educational Testimony Regarding General Causes of False Reports Distinguishable From Improper Comment on Victim Credibility: An expert in the field of child sexual abuse testified as a blind witness with no knowledge of the facts in the case on general issues concerning children's sexual abuse disclosures. The defendant was convicted and, on appeal, argued that the expert's testimony had improperly undermined his presumption of innocence. The Supreme Court found that the expert's discussion of general issues underlying sexual abuse disclosures did not infringe on the defendant's fundamental rights because the expert did not simply introduce statistics regarding false reporting to improperly comment on the credibility of the victim. St. v. Sinz, 2021 MT 163, 404 Mont. 498, 490 P.3d 97. However, see St. v. Byrne, 2021 MT 238, 405 Mont. 352, 495 P.3d 440.

Mixed Expert and Lay Testimony by Nurse Practitioner Erroneously Permitted — Plain Error Reversal Not Warranted: The District Court allowed a nurse practitioner to present mixed expert and lay testimony without qualifying her as an expert or providing a cautionary instruction to the jury. The defendant did not object during trial but raised the issue on appeal. The Supreme Court found that the District Court had erred but that plain error review was not warranted because there was nothing to suggest the nurse practitioner could not have been qualified as an expert, that her testimony itself had been improper or objectionable, or that the testimony resulted in manifest unfairness to the defendant. St. v. Rodriguez, 2021 MT 65, 403 Mont. 360, 483 P.3d 1080.

Plaintiff's Physician and Physical Therapist Precluded — Causation Testimony — Directed Verdict Proper: The plaintiff was injured in a vehicle collision with the defendant. The plaintiff claimed the accident injured her shoulder, and the defendant argued that the shoulder injury was preexisting and unrelated to the accident. The plaintiff's treating physician and physical therapist were ultimately unable to testify that the accident caused the injury but both mentioned that it was possible the accident exacerbated a preexisting shoulder injury. At trial, the District Court limited the testimony of the physician and physical therapist regarding causation and later granted a directed verdict in favor of the defendant relating to causation of the shoulder injuries. The plaintiff appealed, arguing that limiting the testimony and granting the directed verdict were improper. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, holding that the plaintiff failed to produce expert testimony that the shoulder injury was more likely than not caused by the collision and failed to present evidence or otherwise argue that the collision aggravated a preexisting condition. Cleveland v. Ward, 2016 MT 10, 382 Mont. 118, 364 P.3d 1250.

Abuse of Discretion in Admitting Report of Three Nontestifying Doctors: The admission of the report of a panel of three doctors without opportunity for cross-examination affected the outcome of the trial and affected a substantial right of the plaintiff, justifying a new trial. Reese v. Stanton, 2015 MT 293, 381 Mont. 241, 358 P.3d 208.

Admissibility of Expert Opinions on Causation: Two years after the plaintiff was involved in a serious car accident, she was diagnosed with amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS), after which she submitted claims to the defendant insurer for underinsured motorist insurance coverage benefits for damages associated with her ALS. The defendant denied the claims on the basis that the car accident did not cause the plaintiff's ALS. The plaintiff filed suit, alleging the defendant breached the insurance contract. The plaintiff depose two experts, including her treating neurologist, who opined that trauma could contribute to ALS but did not state that the plaintiff's ALS was caused by the car accident, and a neurologist retained for the litigation, who opined that the car accident had caused tissue damage to the plaintiff's spine that was more probably than not the proximate cause of her ALS but who also opined that no neurologists can designate themselves as experts in determining the causation of ALS. The District Court excluded both experts' testimony and granted summary judgment to the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed in part and reversed in part, finding that a medical expert's opinion is admissible if it is based on an opinion that it is more likely than not that the alleged wrongdoing caused a plaintiff's injury. Because the treating neurologist did not testify that it was more likely than not that the car accident caused the plaintiff's ALS, the neurologist's testimony was properly excluded. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court, misinterpreting its role when it assessed the reliability of the opinion of the neurologist retained for litigation, erred in concluding that the contradictory statements of the neurologist retained for litigation undermined his credibility and excluded his testimony. McClue v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2015 MT 222, 380 Mont. 204, 354 P.3d 604.

Connection Between Causal Theory and Facts of Case Required — Expert Testimony on Seizures Properly Excluded: After the defendant drove on the wrong side of the interstate, forcing vehicles off of the road before colliding with a vehicle and killing its occupants, the state charged the defendant with negligent homicide and negligent endangerment on the basis that the defendant was under the influence of alcohol at the time of the incident. At trial, the District Court excluded the defendant from presenting expert testimony about the typical symptoms of partial seizures and the difficulty in diagnosing them, without giving the jury an opinion as to whether the defendant actually suffered from a partial seizure while driving. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, concluding that the defendant failed to establish a connection between partial seizures and his driving and that testimony about a causal theory that was not factually connected to the case was irrelevant and would confuse the jury. The Supreme Court also concluded that excluding the testimony did not abridge the defendant's constitutional right to present a defense because Rule 702, M.R.Ev., is rationally related to the important goal of admitting only expert testimony that is logically related to the central issues of a case. St. v. Jay, 2013 MT 79, 369 Mont. 332, 298 P.3d 396.

Attorney Not Qualified to Offer Expert Medical Opinions: The District Court relied on the testimony of an attorney and dismissed a legal malpractice case by concluding that the underlying medical malpractice case would not have been successful. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the attorney was not qualified to offer expert medical opinions, and the case was remanded to the District Court. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160, following Maulding v. Hardman, 257 Mont. 18, 847 P.2d 292 (1993), and Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 Mont. 342, 916 P.2d 122 (1996).

Admissibility of Infectious Disease Specialist Testimony — Qualified to Testify on Standard of Care and Causation for Radiologist's Procedure: Plaintiffs, as representatives of the estate of a deceased patient, filed a medical malpractice claim against a radiologist and a hospital based on allegations that the defendants departed from the applicable standard of care by failing to adhere to proper infection control measures, which negligently caused the patient's death. On a summary judgment motion, the District Court excluded the testimony of the plaintiffs' proposed expert witness, an infectious disease specialist, on the grounds that he was not qualified to testify as an expert under 26-2-601 because he is not a radiologist and does not perform the procedure at issue. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that the infectious disease specialist satisfied the requirements of 26-2-601 based on his qualifications and that the District Court's holding to the contrary was an abuse of discretion. The proposed expert was qualified to give testimony regarding the standard of care for the radiologist and the hospital as well as an opinion regarding causation. Beehler v. E. Radiological Associates, P.C., 2012 MT 260, 367 Mont. 21, 289 P.3d 131, distinguishing Butler v. Domin, 2000 MT 312, 302 Mont. 452, 15 P.3d 1189.

Testimony From Expert Witness Properly Excluded When Based on Anecdote and Not Scientifically Tested: The defendant was charged with the deliberate homicide of the decedent, his neighbor, after shooting the decedent during a verbal altercation. At trial, the District Court excluded testimony from the defendant's expert witness regarding the significance of the presence of a subtherapeutic level of Paxil in the decedent's body at the time of his death. The expert based his testimony regarding Paxil on anecdotal evidence of one case in which a person with Paxil in his system committed murder, though the expert did not know whether the Paxil had influenced that person's conduct. The Supreme Court held that the District Court's exclusion of this testimony was proper. Even though the expert had previously testified regarding other drugs found in the decedent's body, he lacked scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge about the relationship, if any, between Paxil and aggressive behavior. St. v. Cooksey, 2012 MT 226, 366 Mont. 346, 286 P.3d 1174.

Failure to Provide Expert Medical Testimony on Causation — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: Following a patient's death from cancer several days after being admitted to the hospital, her estate filed suit against her doctors and the hospital, alleging that their treatment had expedited her death. Based on the estate's failure to provide expert medical testimony on causation, the defendants moved for summary judgment, which the District Court granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed that the defendants were entitled to summary judgment because the estate failed to demonstrate a genuine issue of material fact regarding causation. Estate of Willson v. Addison, 2011 MT 179, 361 Mont. 269, 258 P.3d 410.

Medical Malpractice — Requisite Expert Testimony Regarding Standard of Care in Securing Informed Consent: A neuro-ophthalmologist is qualified to render an expert opinion in a medical malpractice case regarding the standard of care for informed consent as to whether a neurosurgeon should have discussed alternative treatments prior to attempting surgery. Griffin v. Moseley, 2010 MT 132, 356 Mont. 393, 234 P.3d 869.

Sufficient Explanation of DNA Evidence to Jury — Prosecutor's Reference to Defendant's DNA Not Violative of Due Process: A prosecution expert testified that the presence of Jackson's DNA could not be excluded from a weapon used to kill a deputy. During closing, the prosecutor referenced the presence of Jackson's DNA on the weapon where it should never have been. Jackson asserted that the reference to Jackson's DNA violated his due process rights because the testimony did not state that it was Jackson's DNA on the weapon, but rather that Jackson could not be eliminated as a contributor to the DNA sample. However, the jury was given a correct explanation of the DNA evidence numerous times throughout the trial, and the state's case did not rest solely on DNA evidence. The Supreme Court concluded that the prosecutor's brief incorrect reference, to which Jackson did not object, did not implicate Jackson's fundamental rights or compromise the judicial process, so plain error review of the claim was inappropriate. St. v. Jackson, 2009 MT 427, 354 M 63, 22 P3d 1213 (2009), distinguishing U.S. v. Massey, 594 F2d 676 (8th Cir. 1979), and Brown v. Farwell, 525 F3d 787 (9th Cir. 2008).

Admissibility of Pathologist's Testimony Regarding Radiological Tests — Reliability of Testimony: Plaintiff sued three doctors who failed to detect plaintiff's breast cancer through several radiological mammograms. Defendants offered expert testimony from a pathologist who was not a radiologist but who nevertheless opined that plaintiff's particular cancer would be invisible by x-ray and that it had been present for years prior to the mammograms in question. Plaintiff objected to the testimony and asserted that it was overreaching, misled the jury, and constituted expert testimony without a legitimate scientific foundation. The Supreme Court noted that in Montana an expert's reliability is tested in three ways and depends on whether: (1) the expert field is reliable; (2) the expert is qualified; and (3) the qualified expert reliably applies the reliable field to the facts. Here, the expert was an admittedly well-qualified pathologist and pathology is a recognized field of scientific study, so the expert and the field were reliable. Whether the expert gathered and examined sufficient facts to reach an opinion was a question for the jury to decide after cross-examination, presentation of contrary evidence, and application of the law, but the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the expert's opinions to be presented to the jury. Harris v. Hanson, 2009 MT 13, 349 M 29, 201 P3d 151 (2009). See also St. v. Clifford, 2005 MT 219, 328 M 300, 121 P3d 489 (2005).

No Error in Disallowing Doctor's Opinion Regarding Condition That Doctor Did Not Treat: Defendant sought to introduce the opinion of a doctor who treated plaintiff for back pain regarding the doctor's opinion concerning plaintiff's brain injury. The District Court disallowed the testimony, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiff affirmatively demonstrated that the doctor had not treated plaintiff for a brain injury and had made only incidental and secondary observations concerning plaintiff's brain injury. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by disallowing the doctor's opinion statements concerning plaintiff's brain injury. McCormack v. Andres, 2008 MT 182, 343 M 424, 185 P3d 973 (2008).

Medical Expert Testimony Regarding Diagnosis of Condition Caused by Stun Gun — Daubert Inapplicable to Medical Diagnosis: At Price's trial for assault with a weapon, a stun gun, the trial court allowed a medical expert to testify as to the victim's diagnosis following the electrical shock. On appeal, Price asserted that the evidence was improperly allowed because the doctor was not an expert on stun guns and thus was not qualified to testify on the potential for injury by a stun gun and that because evidence of the effect of stun guns was novel scientific evidence, the expert's testimony should have been excluded under the rule set out in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993). The Supreme Court disagreed. A medical diagnosis is not novel scientific evidence, so Daubert did not apply. The court adhered to the settled principle of admitting relevant scientific evidence in the same manner as other expert testimony and allowing its weight to be attacked by cross-examination and refutation. Price had ample opportunity through cross-examination to refute the doctor's knowledge of stun guns and the trauma that they may induce, and the trial court did not err in allowing the expert testimony. St. v. Price, 2007 MT 269, 339 M 399, 171 P3d 293 (2007). See also St. v. Clark, 2008 MT 419, 347 M 354, 198 P3d 809 (2008).

Admissibility of Testimony of Forensic Toxicologist Regarding Overdose — Daubert Hearing Required Only for Novel Scientific Evidence: The state offered testimony from a forensic toxicologist that a child in defendant's day-care center died from a toxic and lethal drug overdose and that the unwarranted and unauthorized administration of the drug exposed the child to a risk of a serious or fatal outcome and constituted endangerment. Defendant objected to the testimony, arguing that the toxicologist's reliance on postmortem blood levels to support the claim was flawed because the use of postmortem blood levels to determine premortem blood levels and declare a cause of death was a "novel application of pseudo-science speculations and conjecture" and that a Daubert hearing was necessary to determine the admissibility of the "novel" scientific theory (see Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993)). The District Court admitted the testimony and determined that a Daubert hearing was unnecessary. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Defendant agreed that expert testimony was required and did not challenge the area of forensic toxicology, but rather the novelty of the extension of accepted pathological and toxicological standards that rendered it novel science as applied to this case. The Supreme Court reaffirmed that the Daubert factors apply only to novel scientific evidence and agreed with the District Court that the evidence itself was not novel, rather that defendant's disagreement was with the expert's conclusions, not the methodology or science used to determine the conclusions. St. v. Bieber, 2007 MT 262, 339 M 309, 170 P3d 444 (2007), distinguishing St. v. Clark, 209 M 473, 682 P 2d 1339 (1984). See also St. v. Clark, 2008 MT 419, 347 M 354, 198 P3d 809 (2008).

Expert Testimony of Mere Possibility of Paradoxical Drug Reaction Properly Disallowed: In attempting to establish a defense for attempted deliberate homicide, Vernes sought to have a medical expert testify regarding the possibility of Vernes' alleged paradoxical reaction to a prescription anxiety drug, asserting that instead of reducing anxiety, the drug may have had the opposite effect and caused Vernes to become aggressive or violent. The trial court restricted the expert's testimony because the testimony fell short of the standard for admissibility, in that the expert could not testify within a reasonable degree of medical certainty or even that it was more probable than not that Vernes suffered a paradoxical reaction. Vernes appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Medical testimony of this type may not be admitted unless it meets the reasonable medical certainty test. The "more likely than not" standard ensures that expert testimony does not represent mere conjecture, but rather is sufficiently probative to be reliable. The expert could verify only that there was a mere possibility of a paradoxical reaction, and the trial court did not err in disallowing the evidence based on conjecture. St. v. Vernes, 2006 MT 32, 331 M 129, 130 P3d 169 (2006), following Dallas v. Burlington N., Inc., 212 M 514, 689 P2d 273 (1984).

Test Whether Witness May Testify as Expert on Child Abuse: Factors in the three-part test set out in St. v. Scheffelman, 250 M 334, 820 P2d 1293 (1991), for whether a witness may testify as an expert on child abuse are: (1) the expert must have extensive first-hand experience with children who both have and have not been sexually abused; (2) the expert must have a thorough and current knowledge of the professional literature on child abuse; and (3) the expert must have objectivity and neutrality regarding individual cases. In Riggs's case, the state called a child abuse expert who met the qualifications but who had a therapeutic relationship with one of the victims to testify concerning interviewing techniques applied in a sexual abuse investigation. Riggs contended that the trial court erred by allowing the expert to testify and by limiting the defense's ability to cross-examine the expert. The Supreme Court disagreed on both issues. Given the limited scope of the expert's testimony, the objectivity with which the expert could testify regarding interviewing techniques was not susceptible to being compromised by the therapeutic relationship with one of the victims, so the trial court did not err in qualifying the witness as an expert. Additionally, Riggs was afforded a fair and full opportunity to expose any potential bias of the expert, so Riggs's right to confront witnesses was not infringed. St. v. Riggs, 2005 MT 124, 327 M 196, 113 P3d 281 (2005). See also St. v. Whitlow, 285 M 430, 949 P2d 239 (1997).

Proper Finding That Youths in Need of Care — Expert Testimony Based in Part on Hearsay — Adequate Exercise of Independent Factfinding Judgment: The District Court found that two youths were in need of care. The mother appealed on grounds of insufficient evidence and contended that the District Court erroneously adopted the state's findings of fact and conclusions of law without substantial change, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The record contained sufficient credible evidence to support the findings that the children were abused and neglected by the mother's actions that injured the children's capacity to function emotionally or psychologically and thus were youths in need of care. Additionally, it was not error for the District Court to rely on the testimony of a psychology expert, even though the testimony was based in part on hearsay, because the facts and data relied on by the expert were of the type typically relied on by experts in the field of psychology. Moreover, although the verbatim adoption of findings and conclusions of the prevailing party is not favored, the District Court in this case did not in fact adopt the state's findings and conclusions verbatim, but rather exercised independent factfinding judgment. In re A.R. & I.R., 2005 MT 23, 326 M 7, 107 P3d 457 (2005), distinguishing In re Inquiry Into J.L. & D.L., 2000 MT 289, 302 M 254, 14 P3d 473 (2000).

Admissibility of Expert Testimony on Blood Alcohol Content — Elimination Phase Versus Retrograde Extrapolation: Larson contended that the trial court improperly allowed expert testimony concerning Larson's blood alcohol content (BAC) because the expert estimated the BAC using the retrograde extrapolation method in violation of state crime lab policy. The Supreme Court disagreed. Retrograde extrapolation is a method of estimating BAC at a specified time using a person's known BAC at a later time. However, the expert in this case opined that Larson would have reached the peak alcohol phase earlier in the evening and would have been in the elimination phase when the blood was drawn, so the expert did not engage in retrograde extrapolation. Crime lab policy was not violated, and the testimony was properly admitted. St. v. Larson, 2004 MT 345, 324 M 310, 103 P3d 524 (2004).

Expert Testimony Not Targeting Defendant's State of Mind During Crimes Properly Admitted: In Sandroek's trial for sexual intercourse without consent, incest, and witness tampering, Sandroek maintained that he was suffering from a mental disease or defect and could not have committed the crimes because he could not have formed the requisite mental state. A medical expert testified that although Sandroek was an oddball, he knew right from wrong when he wrote several letters to his wife outlining his intended actions. Sandroek moved for a mistrial because the expert's testimony violated the prohibition on ultimate issue testimony. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a medical expert may not offer an opinion on the ultimate issue of whether a defendant had a particular state of mind that is an element of an offense, the expert may state the nature of a medical examination and the medical or psychological diagnosis of the defendant's mental condition, and testimony in the form of an opinion or inference that would otherwise be admissible is not objectionable because it embraces the ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact. Here, the expert's testimony did not target the ultimate issue of whether Sandroek actually possessed the requisite mental states at the time that the crimes were committed, so the mistrial motion was properly denied. St. v. Sandroek, 2004 MT 195, 322 M 231, 95 P3d 153 (2004). See also St. v. Santos, 273 M 125, 902 P2d 510 (1995).

No Abuse of Discretion in Allowing Expert Testimony by Both Parties — Opportunity to Cross-Examine: Both parties in a wrongful death action were allowed to present expert medical testimony and to fully cross-examine the experts, and the court instructed the jury that they were not bound by either expert's opinion but should determine the weight to be given to each expert's testimony based on the expert's qualifications and credibility. Plaintiff contended that the District Court abused its discretion by allowing testimony by defendant's expert that was irrelevant and prejudicial. The Supreme Court disagreed. For a court to abuse its discretion, it must act arbitrarily, without employing conscientious judgment, or exceed the bounds of reason, resulting in substantial injustice. Error may not be predicated on a ruling that admits evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected, and plaintiff failed to show that admitting defendant's expert testimony affected substantial rights, so no abuse of discretion occurred. Christofferson v. Great Falls, 2003 MT 189, 316 M 469, 74 P3d 1021 (2003).

Proper Exclusion of Lay Testimony of Paramedics Regarding Resuscitability — Expert Testimony Required: Plaintiff requested that a medical team be sent to her home to attend to her husband who was in respiratory arrest, but the police dispatcher sent the medics to the wrong address. The husband subsequently died, and the wife brought a wrongful death and negligence action against the city. In their depositions, the paramedics testified that had they been correctly dispatched, they would have arrived at the home and begun resuscitation procedures several minutes earlier, enhancing the chances of survival. The city argued that the prospects for survival were a subject for expert testimony and that such testimony by the paramedics lacked foundation and was speculative. The District Court agreed and granted the city's motion in limine to exclude the testimony. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The paramedics' proposed testimony clearly extended beyond their observations at the scene or a description of their actions and into the realm of expert medical testimony. Absent a foundation establishing the expertise of the paramedics to give an expert opinion on resuscitability, their lay testimony was properly excluded. Christofferson v. Great Falls, 2003 MT 189, 316 M 469, 74 P3d 1021 (2003).

Objection to Medical Testimony Regarding Effects of Personality Disorder on Parenting Sustained — Cross-Examination Properly Limited: A medical expert who evaluated a mother regarding her parenting ability was asked about opinions that could be made based on the evaluation. The expert responded that it would require an explanation of personality and cognitive features and limitations. The guardian ad litem contended that inquiry should be allowed on cross-examination into the effects of a personality disorder on parenting. The mother objected, and the District Court sustained as beyond the scope of direct examination. The Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in limiting the latitude of cross-examination because the expert testimony in this case centered on the expert's observations and because the expert had not diagnosed the mother with a personality disorder. In re B.B., 2001 MT 285, 307 M 379, 37 P3d 715 (2001).

Objection to Qualifications of Pathologist to Testify Regarding Gunshot Wound: At Clausell's deliberate homicide trial, objection was made to the testimony of a Board-certified clinical pathologist who offered opinions regarding a gunshot wound, on grounds that the pathologist was not a Board-certified forensic pathologist and therefore was not qualified to testify. However, the doctor had performed over 400 autopsies, including about 40 that involved gunshot wounds. Clausell did not offer any applicable legal theory that a clinical pathologist with such experience who is not a forensic pathologist is not qualified to testify in a homicide case, and the Supreme Court declined to adopt a rule to that effect. Further, Clausell failed to preserve any other objection at trial to the pathologist's testimony and was precluded from raising other issues regarding the testimony on appeal. St. v. Clausell, 2001 MT 62, 305 M 1, 22 P3d 111 (2001), distinguishing In re K.H. & K.L.E., 1999 MT 128, 294 M 466, 981 P2d 1190 (1999).

Expert Testimony Necessary to Establish Applicable Standard of Care Owed by Physician Who Treats Referred Patient — Functional Capacities Evaluation: Even though a physician-patient relationship may not exist when a test is administered at the request of a third party, a physician nevertheless owes a duty to an examinee who is not that physician's patient to exercise care commensurate with the examiner's professional training and experience. The standard of care applicable to the administration of a functional capacities evaluation (FCE) can be established only through expert testimony that takes into account the training and experience of the physical therapist relative to administering the FCE. Romans v. Lusin, 2000 MT 84, 299 M 182, 997 P2d 114, 57 St. Rep. 363 (2000). See also Webb v. T.D., 287 M 68, 951 P2d 1008, 54 St. Rep. 1502 (1997).

Professional Testimony Not Speculative as to Defendant's Identity Admissible: Hamby was charged with felony sexual assault on a 10-year-old girl with Down syndrome. The girl was not competent to testify, but the District Court did allow a counselor to testify regarding the counselor's observations of the girl. Hamby argued that the expert's testimony was highly prejudicial because it had the same effect on the jury as if the expert had identified Hamby as the perpetrator. However, Hamby's identity as the person involved in the alleged assault was never in question, only his actions. The expert did not speculate about the reason for the girl's reactions or provide any testimony to imply that Hamby sexually abused the girl, so the District Court did not err in allowing the expert to testify about her observations of the girl. St. v. Hamby, 1999 MT 319, 297 M 274, 992 P2d 1266, 56 St. Rep. 1272 (1999).

Limited Statements by Expert and Comparisons of Objectively Observable Behavior Not Considered Opinion on Credibility: Generally, an expert may not comment on the credibility of an alleged victim. Here, an emergency room physician who treated an alleged rape victim carefully limited his testimony to observations of the victim as compared to other women in his professional experience who reported being raped but did not state that the victim's emotions were consistent with and appropriate for women who had been raped. Such limited statements and comparisons of objectively observable behavior do not constitute an opinion on credibility, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the physician's testimony. St. v. Rogers, 1999 MT 305, 297 M 188, 992 P2d 229, 56 St. Rep. 1228 (1999).

Opinion Regarding Standard of Care in Obtaining Informed Consent Not Novel Scientific Evidence: The plaintiff's expert opined that the defendant physician violated the standard of care regarding informed consent when the physician failed to inform a patient that a greater risk was posed by placement of a thoracic spinal epidural catheter while the patient was anesthetized. The District Court decided that the expert's opinion regarding the standard of care was inadmissible because it was not based on scientific evidence supported by reliable methodology or research and awarded summary judgment to defendant on the basis that without a qualified medical opinion, plaintiff could not prove medical malpractice. In excluding the expert's opinion, the court concluded that plaintiff had attempted to introduce novel scientific evidence of the type contemplated by Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579, 125 L Ed 2d 469, 113 S Ct 2786 (1993), and Hulse v. St., 1998 MT 108, 289 M 1, 961 P2d 75 (1998). Applying the twofold threshold obligation of a plaintiff in a medical malpractice action set out in Mont. Deaconess Hosp. v. Gratton, 169 M 185, 545 P2d 670 (1976), the Supreme Court noted that the Daubert test is limited to novel scientific evidence. Here, plaintiff sought to establish through expert testimony the amount of information that an anesthesiologist should provide to a patient in order to obtain the patient's informed consent, which is not novel scientific evidence. Thus, the District Court erred in relying on Daubert when excluding the expert testimony and in awarding summary judgment based on the conclusion that without a qualified medical opinion, plaintiff could not establish the existence of a legal duty as part of the prima facie case. The case was reversed and remanded. Gilkey v. Schweitzer, 1999 MT 188, 295 M 345, 983 P2d 869, 56 St. Rep. 734 (1999).

Evidence of Battered Woman Syndrome Admissible to Explain Recantation on Stand if Just Notice and Test Met: Stringer argued that the testimony of an expert regarding his wife's battered woman syndrome was inadmissible because it was used to bolster her credibility. The Supreme Court held that evidence of the syndrome was admissible to explain the victim's recantation on the stand of earlier testimony. The Supreme Court also stated that to be admissible, a foundation of prior abuse must be established. In order to do so, the notice and test established in St. v. Just, 184 M 262, 602 P2d 957 (1979), would apply. In the case before it, the Supreme Court held that the foundation had not been laid for admitting the testimony. St. v. Stringer, 271 M 367, 897 P2d 1063, 52 St. Rep. 473 (1995). See also St. v. Lotter, 2013 MT 336, 372 Mont. 445, 313 P.3d 148, in which the Supreme Court held that the defendant failed to produce an adequate evidentiary foundation for the admission of expert testimony about the behaviors of individuals in abusive relationships when the defendant presented no evidence other than demeaning comments that her victim husband allegedly made and vague testimony about episodes of the husband's rage.

Standard of Care for Nonemergency Dental Care: Burlinghams sued dentist Mintz, alleging that Mintz's negligence caused Candance Burlingham's injury. Applying the standard of care set out in Negaard v. Fedra, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968), the District Court excluded two of Burlinghams' standard of care experts, one a suburban dentist from St. Louis and the other an oral surgeon from Albany, Oregon, on grounds that the experts had no idea of the standard of care in Eureka, Montana, or a similar community, and lacking expert testimony, the court summarily dismissed plaintiffs' case. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the standard of care enunciated in Negaard was no longer appropriate for nonemergency dental care in Montana. The Supreme Court noted that the foundation for testimony must necessarily include evidence that the witness is familiar with the standard of care at the time when and the place where the alleged act of negligence occurred. Expert testimony may consist of direct or indirect knowledge of the standard of care in the community where the act occurred or in a similar community and may be based on evidence that the standard of care for a procedure at issue is the same in all communities, regardless of size or location. If the basis of the witness's familiarity with the applicable standard of care is that the standard is uniform throughout the country and evidence to the contrary is presented, then the issue raised by the contrary evidence goes to the weight of the witness's testimony but does not preclude its admission. In the case at hand, Burlinghams presented two appropriate experts who were familiar with the applicable nonemergency standard of care for dentists in the community, by either direct or indirect knowledge, thereby meeting their burden of establishing a prima facie case. The District Court erred by excluding the experts and granting summary judgment. Burlingham v. Mintz, 270 M 277, 891 P2d 527, 52 St. Rep. 181 (1995), overruling, to the extent in conflict, Negaard v. Fedra, 152 M 47, 446 P2d 436 (1968).

Social Worker Qualified to Testify on Custodial Placement: An expert with a master's degree in social work and extensive experience working with children who was familiar with the parties' situation and who had conducted the home study and responded to several complaints alleging abuse or neglect of the parties' children was qualified to testify regarding the appropriate custodial placement of the children. Exclusion of the expert's opinion testimony by the trial court on the grounds of competency was error. In re Marriage of Johansen, 261 M 451, 863 P2d 407, 50 St. Rep. 1403 (1993).

Testimony Excluded for Lack of Foundation on Which to Base Opinion: In a personal injury case, the lower court excluded the defendant's medical expert's testimony. The Supreme Court affirmed the decision on the basis that the doctor had no foundation on which to base his opinion because, among other things, he had never examined the plaintiff and had no information concerning the activities that the plaintiff was engaged in when the plaintiff alleged that he was injured. Cottrell v. Burlington N. RR Co., 261 M 296, 863 P2d 381, 50 St. Rep. 1323 (1993), distinguished in Fauque v. Mont. Pub. Employees' Retirement Bd., 2014 MT 184, 375 Mont. 443, 329 P.3d 593.

Admission of Medical Journal Articles Proper: Youngs argued that the introduction of articles from medical journals was improper because the issue of credibility should have been determined by the jury, not by strangers. The Supreme Court held that the articles were admissible as scientific knowledge admitted to assist the jury in understanding evidence concerning a fact in issue. Young v. Horton, 259 M 34, 855 P2d 502, 50 St. Rep. 662 (1993).

National Standard of Care Rejected to Ensure Provision of Medical Services to Rural Communities — Expert Witness Subject to Locality Rule: Falcon brought a medical malpractice suit on behalf of his mother's estate, alleging that the treatment she had received in 1988 was not up to the legal standard of medical care promulgated by the national accrediting organization under which the hospital had elected to operate. The Supreme Court held that, as a matter of public policy, in order to ensure that medical services would be provided to rural communities, the national standards did not apply. The court also affirmed the lower court's decision to exclude the testimony of the plaintiff's expert witness because the witness was not familiar with the standard of practice in Glasgow or a similar Montana locality. The court also held that a defendant doctor is entitled to summary judgment as a matter of law if the plaintiff fails to establish the applicable standard of care by competent medical testimony. Falcon v. Cheung, 257 M 296, 848 P2d 1050, 50 St. Rep. 276 (1993). See also Estate of Willson v. Addison, 2011 MT 179, 361 Mont. 269, 258 P.3d 410.

Clear and Convincing Evidence Required — Allegation in Complaint, Statements in Judgment, and Unqualified Expert Medical Opinion Insufficient: Because of allegations that alcohol was involved in a car accident, the District Court awarded $25,000 for punitive damages to Maulding as part of a default judgment against Hardman. The Supreme Court noted that the only evidence of the use of alcohol was an unsubstantiated allegation in the complaint and that the only rationale by the District Court was a statement in the judgment that "evidence showed" that the accident was caused by the use of alcohol. The Supreme Court also noted that at the hearing on the matter, Maulding's counsel was allowed to give unqualified expert medical opinion, which the District Court should not have accepted. For these reasons, the Supreme Court reversed the denial of a motion to set aside the default. Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Expert Testimony Required to Establish Hospital's Duty of Care — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff's hip replacement surgery was terminated after an incision was made because an improperly sized prosthetic device was shipped by the supplier and was not discovered by hospital staff prior to surgery. The District Court did not err in granting summary judgment for defendant hospital when plaintiff failed to name an expert witness who would testify as to the duty owed by the hospital and a breach of that duty. The fact that the hospital changed its procedures several months after plaintiff's injuries did not establish the hospital's standard of care at the time of the injury. The standard of care in this case was not readily ascertainable by laypeople, so the case did not fall into the exception to the general requirement of establishing a medical standard of care through expert testimony. Dalton v. Kalispell Regional Hosp., 256 M 243, 846 P2d 960, 50 St. Rep. 54 (1993).

Proper Disallowance of Testimony on Subject Doctor Admitted He Was Not Competent to Discuss: The trial judge did not abuse his discretion when he refused to allow a doctor to testify as an expert witness on the subject of the pudendal nerve in its relation to the sphincter muscle because the doctor stated in a deposition that the sphincter muscle is a very complex system that he had not studied in a long time and that he was thus not competent in that area. O'Leary v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992), followed in Seal v. Woodrows Pharmacy, 1999 MT 247, 296 M 197, 988 P2d 1230, 56 St. Rep. 959 (1999).

Refusing to Allow Doctor to Use Lab Slides of Removed Tissue in Giving Opinion on Depth of Surgery: In a medical malpractice case, defendant's expert was asked on cross-examination for his opinion on the depth of defendant doctor's laser surgery. The expert asked if he could use certain slides of the removed tissue to answer the question, and the judge said, "Just answer the question." The judge's statement was not improper. O'Leyar v. Callender, 255 M 277, 843 P2d 304, 49 St. Rep. 1008 (1992).

Evidence of Serious Bodily Injury Sufficient to Prove Assault Without Expert Medical Testimony: Based on the nature of victim's injuries and his uncontroverted testimony as to how he was injured, any rational trier of fact could have found without the aid of expert medical testimony that serious bodily injury occurred. The state's failure to present such testimony was not fatal to establishing serious bodily injury under the circumstances. St. v. Bower, 254 M 1, 833 P2d 1106, 49 St. Rep. 586 (1992).

Testimony Regarding Secondary Gain Prejudicial: The lower court allowed the defendant's medical expert to testify that in his opinion, the plaintiff was not permanently injured but, rather, that his symptoms were attributable to secondary gain. The Supreme Court held that the expert was not qualified to speculate about the plaintiff's possible motivation for making complaints that the expert felt could not be substantiated by his physical findings. Linden v. Huestis, 247 M 383, 807 P2d 185, 48 St. Rep. 241 (1991).

Chiropractor Barred From Testifying as to Impairment Rating: Public policy suggests that only qualified physicians, but not chiropractors, should be allowed to render opinions on impairment ratings based on the American Medical Association's Guides to Evaluation of Permanent Impairment. Restricting use of the guides in this way ensures reliable, authoritative opinions on which juries can depend in making their determinations. Wacker v. Park Rural Elec. Co-op, Inc., 239 M 500, 783 P2d 360, 46 St. Rep. 1864 (1989).

Qualifications Required of Expert Medical Witness in Physician Negligence Case: The party presenting a witness as an expert must establish, to the satisfaction of the trial court, that the witness possesses the requisite knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education to testify as to the diagnosis and treatment in question and as to the standard of care applicable to the physician charged with negligence. Whether such a witness is qualified lies within the discretion of the trial court. Glover v. Ballhagen, 232 M 427, 756 P2d 1166, 45 St. Rep. 1168 (1988).

Treating Physician's Opinion Based on Incomplete Knowledge — Evidentiary Weight: Because the treating physician normally has more contact with and greater knowledge of an injured worker, the treating physician should generally be in the best position to give an informed opinion. However, when an initial conclusion was based on incomplete knowledge, it was error for the court to ignore the physician's subsequent acknowledgment of medical probability and rely on his initial conclusion. Snyder v. San Francisco Feed & Grain, 230 M 16, 748 P2d 924, 44 St. Rep. 2216 (1987), followed in White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992), and Wright v. ACE Am. Ins. Co., 2011 MT 43, 359 Mont. 332, 249 P.3d 485.

Evidence of Abused Spouse Syndrome Not Applicable in Support of Credibility: The District Court did not err in refusing to authorize expenditures for retention of an expert who would testify to the effects of abused spouse syndrome when the defendant did not seek the testimony in regard to whether the necessary state of mind was present to justify homicide, but rather to support the defendant's credibility. St. v. Dannels, 226 M 80, 734 P2d 188, 44 St. Rep. 472 (1987), distinguished in St. v. Stringer, 271 M 367, 897 P2d 1063, 52 St. Rep. 473 (1995).

Expert and Defendant — No Mutual Exclusivity: A doctor who is also the defendant may be called to testify as an expert. The status of defendant is not mutually exclusive to that of expert witness. Clark v. Norris, 226 M 43, 734 P2d 182, 44 St. Rep. 444 (1987).

Psychologist Qualified to Testify on Reliability of Children's Testimony: A licensed psychologist with experience in psychological evaluations relating to sexual abuse was qualified to testify on the reliability of testimony by children in sexual assault cases. In re J.W.K., 223 M 1, 724 P2d 164, 43 St. Rep. 1483 (1986).

Expert Testimony — Character Evidence: A physician's expert testimony about the defendant dentist's ability to recognize and treat infections and his capability and conscientiousness as a dentist was not impermissible character evidence and was properly admitted on cross-examination. Ostermiller v. Alvord, 222 M 208, 720 P2d 1198, 43 St. Rep. 1180 (1986).

Improper Comment on Credibility of Complainant: In a case where defendant was charged with sexual intercourse without consent, the psychologist who examined the complainant testified with regard to malingering and the statistical percentage of false accusations. His testimony constituted improper comment on the credibility of the complainant and should not have been admitted. It is well settled in Montana that the determination of the credibility of witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony is solely within the province of the jury. St. v. Brodniak, Qualified Sexual Assault Victim Expert — Psychologist: In prosecution for sexual assault, witness was a qualified expert where she was educated, trained, and experienced in a relevant area; testified that the victim fit the statistical picture of assaulted juveniles; had counseled the victim for some time; was a certified psychologist; and had a doctorate in psychology. St. v. Berg, 215 M 431, 697 P2d 1365, 42 St. Rep. 518 (1985), followed in St. v. Eiler, 234 M 38, 762 P2d 210, 45 St. Rep. 1710 (1988).

Doctor's Testimony Concerning Defendant's State of Mind — Not Character Evidence: A doctor's testimony that, in his opinion, the defendant had the capacity to act purposefully and knowingly at the time of the crime was properly admissible as his professional opinion as an expert witness. The doctor's testimony was not character evidence. St. v. Doll, 214 M 390, 692 P2d 473, 42 St. Rep. 40 (1985).

Admissibility of Serologist Testimony: D.K. was forcibly raped at knife point in her home in Butte. After the rape, D.K. called the police, who took D.K. to the hospital where staff acquired pubic hair and blood samples and took vaginal swabs to secure semen samples. The samples were tested by a serologist. At trial, the serologist testified as to blood types, PGM subtypes, and "H" factors present in secreted body fluids. Defendant contended that the testimony was more prejudicial than probative and should have been excluded. Defendant relied on People v. Robinson, 27 NY 2d 864, 265 NE 2d 543 (1970), where the court concluded that evidence of blood type was not probative in view of the large portion of the general population having the same blood type. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that evidence of blood type, secretor status, and PGM subtype correlates with the significantly smaller population of Silver Bow County. The court also found, as in Robinson, that there was other independent evidence of defendant's guilt. The court found the evidence admissible. St. v. Bauer, 210 M 298, 683 P2d 946, 41 St. Rep. 1066 (1984).

Expert Testimony on Ultimate Issue: In a prosecution for sexual intercourse without consent, the County Attorney asked a doctor if he had formed a clinical impression of the victim. The doctor replied that it was his impression that the woman had been raped. The doctor's statement was admissible under Rule 704, M.R.Ev., since he was qualified by experience and personal observation. Further, the statement was not sufficiently prejudicial to constitute reversible error. St. v. Dickens, 198 M 482, 647 P2d 338, 39 St. Rep. 1137 (1982).

Inadmissible Medical Opinion of Intent Behind Force: Prostitute testified that she and a customer had two fights over the course of an evening and that he choked her during the first and attempted to strangle her with her pantyhose during the second. The customer testified they had one fight and did not say he choked or strangled her. The doctor who had examined the prostitute that night testified that she had strangulation marks, a bluish tinge in her face, and tiny purple spots caused by strangulation. The jury was as qualified as the doctor to draw from the evidence an inference as to customer's intent, and it was thus error to allow the doctor to testify that he thought someone tried to murder the prostitute and that he could not believe one could sustain as much trauma as she with any other intent. However, the error was harmless and did not prejudice defendant or affect his substantial rights, as the jury did not rely on doctor's opinion, since: (1) it returned a verdict of aggravated assault and kidnapping rather than the charged attempted homicide, and the latter, but neither of the former, requires an intent or purpose to cause death; (2) intent was not a major issue in the trial; and (3) there was overwhelming evidence that defendant purposefully or knowingly inflicted bodily injury on the prostitute with a weapon, the pantyhose. St. v. Howard, 195 M 400, 637 P2d 15, 38 St. Rep. 1980 (1981).

Psychiatric Testimony on Intent Element — Permissible for Rebuttal: Defendant Fish had an argument with Miller at the bar where Miller worked over money Miller owed Fish. A fight ensued, which was broken up by patrons. Fish left saying he would settle with Miller. Fish recruited some friends and went to Miller's trailer park. Miller had already arrived and had friends with him. Fish, upon discovering that Miller was at home, began knocking and pounding on the door. Fish's friends, Hubbard and Lodge, were with him. Lodge began kicking the door. Miller got a gun and shot through the door, killing Lodge. Hubbard got in his truck, and Miller put the gun through the truck window. Hubbard took the gun away from Miller, who ran from the truck. Hubbard shot and killed Miller. Fish was convicted of attempted burglary, and Hubbard was convicted of mitigated deliberate homicide. Hubbard contends the trial court erred by refusal to allow a psychiatrist to testify as to his mental state at the time Miller was shot. With respect to either deliberate homicide or mitigated deliberate homicide, the State must prove that the defendant "purposely or knowingly" caused the death of another human being. "Purposely or knowingly" are statutory descriptions of various states of the human mind. They are particular elements included in the definition of the offense. No element of an offense can be presumed, and thus the requisite state of mind must be established by the prosecution and believed by the jury beyond a reasonable doubt. The offered testimony included a conclusion that Hubbard, under the surrounding circumstances, more than likely did not intend to kill Miller when he shot but only intended to stop or apprehend him. The testimony would have gone to support a general rebuttal of the intent requirement. This was a proper subject for expert psychiatric testimony. To exclude testimony offered by Hubbard as rebuttal to an essential element of the crime denied him a full evidentiary hearing and deprived him of a fair trial. St. v. Fish, 190 M 461, 621 P2d 1072, 37 St. Rep. 2065 (1980).

Third Party Expert Testimony: Third party expert testimony is not necessary if a defendant doctor's own testimony establishes the standard of care and departure from it. Hill v. Squibb & Sons, 181 M 199, 592 P2d 1383, 36 St. Rep. 651 (1979), distinguished in Hunter v. Missoula Community Hosp., 230 M 300, 750 P2d 106, 45 St. Rep. 220 (1988).

General Practitioner Testifying Against Specialist: A general practitioner may testify in a negligence suit against a specialist since the training and specialization of the witness go to the weight of the evidence rather than to the admissibility. Hunsaker v. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation, 179 M 305, 588 P2d 493, 35 St. Rep. 1647 (1978).

Expansion of Locality Rule — Medical Standards: Montana's "locality rule" imposes on a physician undertaking the care of a patient the legal duty of possessing and exercising that reasonable and ordinary degree of learning, skill, and care possessed and exercised by physicians of good standing of the same school of practice in the same or similar (emphasis added) locality in Montana. A "similar locality in Montana" within the meaning of this rule is a locality of similar geographical location, size, and character in a medical context. Tallbull v. Whitney, 172 M 326, 564 P2d 356 (1977), geographical limit eliminated, Chapel v. Allison, 241 M 83, 785 P2d 204, 47 St. Rep. 101 (1990).

VALUATION

Determination of Fair Market Value Proper — Expert Testimony Properly Allowed: In condemning a parcel of defendants' property for a state highway project, the state's expert testified considering possible depreciation of the remainder of the property based on how the property was being used, the impact of any buildings on the property, no unreasonable impairment of access to the remainder of the property, comparable land sales in the area, and the value of comparable land without highway access. This testimony regarding fair market value was not considered speculative or conjectural, and the District Court properly allowed it. Dept. of Transportation v. Simonson, 2004 MT 60, 320 M 249, 87 P3d 416 (2004).

Qualifications of Real Estate Experts — Differing Valuation: At a hearing concerning the valuation and division of property in the dissolution of Maureen and Joseph's marriage, an agricultural real estate broker testified for Maureen that the parties' ranch was worth $398,000 to $400,000, while a certified and licensed property appraiser testified for Joseph that the ranch was worth $182,500. Joseph contended that the District Court erred in accepting the value of the ranch as testified to by the real estate broker because the broker had no experience as a real property appraiser. Citing Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994), the Supreme Court held that whether an adequate foundation has been established for the admission of expert testimony is an issue largely within the discretion of the District Court and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it relied upon the testimony of the real estate broker. The Supreme Court therefore affirmed the part of the District Court's order that valued the parties' ranch at $400,000. In re Marriage of Ortiz, 282 M 500, 938 P2d 1308, 54 St. Rep. 446 (1997).

Failure to Disclose Identity of Expert Witnesses During Discovery — Reversible Error: It was an abuse of the trial court's discretion to allow the testimony of a land use consultant, a real estate agent, and an appraiser as to the market value of a parcel of land when none of the witnesses were named in interrogatories as experts. Determining the value of the land required expert testimony beyond the scope of ordinary training and intelligence to aid the trier of fact in determining facts in issue. Failure to disclose the names of the witnesses during discovery constituted a violation of former Rule 26(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), and was reversible error. United First Fed. S&L Ass'n v. White-Stevens, Ltd., 253 M 242, 833 P2d 170, 49 St. Rep. 490 (1992).

Imprecision of Expert Opinion — Relates to Weight of Evidence, Not Admissibility: An expert witness testified that shoe prints found at the scene of a crime were exactly like the defendant's shoes, but that he could not positively identify the defendant's shoes as making the shoe prints. The Supreme Court dismissed the defendant's contention that unless the expert could positively identify the prints to a degree of scientific certainty, the testimony should be inadmissible. The Supreme Court said that relevance means having a tendency to make a fact more or less probable than it would have been without the testimony, and this testimony linked the defendant to the scene of the crime. Any imprecision of expert opinion goes to the weight of evidence, not admissibility. St. v. Smith, 220 M 364, 715 P2d 1301, 43 St. Rep. 449 (1986).

Hearsay Evidence Admissible in Workers' Compensation Court: On appeal from the Workers' Compensation Court, appellant contended opinion evidence of a real estate appraiser not qualified as an expert was hearsay and should not have been admitted. The Supreme Court noted that the Workers' Compensation Court was not bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence and found that the lower court in its findings did not unduly rely on the questionable hearsay evidence offered. Krause v. Sears Roebuck & Co., 197 M 102, 641 P2d 458, 39 St. Rep. 394 (1982).

Property Disposition — Expert Testimony on Valuation: The District Court in a dissolution of marriage proceeding made a substantially equitable property disposition. The husband contended that the trial court erred in determining the per-acre value of the couple's ranch. Conflicting testimony was presented. The husband's expert presented a much higher figure based upon the possibility of subdividing the land. The District Court, as the trier of fact in the trial without a jury, accepted the valuation of the wife's expert. This is not reversible error. The trier of fact has the discretion to give whatever weight he sees fit to the testimony of an expert. Dickerson v. Dickerson, 188 M 492, 614 P2d 521, 37 St. Rep. 1286 (1980).

Expert Appraisal Based on Use Other Than Highest: The court did not err in admitting testimony of the landowner's appraiser relative to valuation of the landowner's property for a recreational use in small tracts rather than as a whole because that portion of the cattle ranch subject to condemnation had a strong potential for river frontage tracts. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 175 M 460, 575 P2d 38 (1978).

POLYGRAPHS

Introduction of Polygraph Results in Custody or Visitation Dispute Prohibited: As part of a modification of Robert's visitation rights, the District Court required that Robert undergo a sex offender evaluation. Robert argued that the results of a polygraph test taken as a part of the sex offender evaluation should not be introducible. Citing St. v. Staat, 248 M 291, 811 P2d 1261 (1991), and 37-62-302 (now repealed), the Supreme Court held that the results of a polygraph test taken as part of a court-ordered sex offender evaluation would not be admissible in subsequent proceedings in the case. In re Marriage of Njos/Allard, 270 M 54, 889 P2d 1192, 52 St. Rep. 74 (1995), followed in St. v. Anderson, 1999 MT 58, 293 M 472, 977 P2d 315, 56 St. Rep. 243 (1999).

Polygraph Results Inadmissible: Iocca, Baugh, and the defendant lived together until Iocca's death. Shortly after the death, both Baugh and the defendant fled the state. Authorities apprehended Baugh and convicted him of deliberate homicide. Later the authorities apprehended the defendant and convicted him of obstructing justice by assisting Baugh in the burial of Iocca. Before the defendant's trial, Baugh submitted to a polygraph examination at which time he asserted that he alone had murdered and buried Iocca. The defendant attempted to introduce the result of the polygraph test. The Supreme Court held that the only thing the polygraph result can accomplish in this instance is to support the credibility of Baugh as to his testimony. Baugh's credibility is not a fact in issue in this action; thus, the opinion of the polygraph operator as to the truthfulness of the statements made does not fall within the scope of Rule 702, M.R.Ev. St. v. Beachman, 189 M 400, 616 P2d 337, 37 St. Rep. 1558 (1980).

Polygraph Test Results — Expert Testimony of Polygraphists: The defendant in a deliberate homicide case appealed the trial court granting of a motion in limine to prevent the introduction of expert testimony regarding polygraph test results of a friend of the defendant who had accompanied the defendant as a passenger in the defendant's car on the night of the shooting. The Supreme Court said that if the trial judge's ruling that as matter of law the testimony of the polygraph examiner was inadmissible was a correct ruling, it was not error for the District Court to refuse to consider the defendant's offer of proof or for it to refuse to admit into evidence this particular area of testimony and evidence. The Montana rule is that the results of polygraph examination are not admissible as evidence in a criminal trial. The polygraph test results in this case do not fall into the same category as other scientific evidence that is admissible to assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue. Here only the friend's understanding of the defendant's motives could be established by the test, and that was not an issue in the case. St. v. Bashor, 188 M 397, 614 P2d 470, 37 St. Rep. 1098 (1980).

Rule 703. Basis of opinion testimony by experts.Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 702. It is concerned with the sources of information upon which an expert may rely in forming an opinion. Rule 705 is concerned with when those particular sources of information should be placed before the trier of fact.

According to the Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 703, 56 F.R.D. 183, 283 (1972), there are three possible sources upon which an expert may base his opinion. The first, as indicated in the rule, is facts or data perceived by the expert which he may testify to as part of his personal knowledge. The second, also indicated in the rule, is facts or data made known to the expert at the trial, either through listening to other testimony or a hypothetical question. Id. Therefore, the first sentence of this rule allows the traditional bases or foundation upon which an expert may rest his opinion.

The second sentence of Rule 703 provides the third source of information and allows information which "...consists of presentation of data to the expert outside of court and other than by his own perception". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 283. As the rule indicates, this source of information need not be admissible evidence if it meets the test of a type of fact or data reasonably relied upon by experts in that particular field. The Advisory Committee's Note also indicates that this step was taken "to broaden the bases for expert opinion beyond that current in many jurisdictions and to bring the judicial practice into line with the practice of the experts themselves when not in court". Id. The comment to a similar provision, California Evidence Code, Section 801(b), indicates that because of the wide variety of information upon which an expert may base his opinion, he must be able to rely on information that may not be admissible in evidence if he is going to give an opinion which will aid the jury. The comment also states "... It is not practical to formulate a detailed statutory rule that lists all of the matters upon which an expert may properly base his opinion, for it would be necessary to prescribe specific rules applicable to each field of expertise. This is clearly impossible...". The solution to this problem is the general requirement found in the rule and to allow the court to determine whether or not the sources of information are reliable.

The first sentence of this rule is consistent with existing Montana law. It has always been required that an expert have some basis for this opinion. Story v. Maclay, 3 Mont. 480, 483 (1880). An expert may base his opinion upon personal observation. Nesbitt v. City of Butte, 118 Mont. 84, 93, 163 P2d 251 (1945). Montana law also supports the rule that an expert may base his opinion upon hypothetical questions. Pickett v. Kryger, 151 Mont. 87, 96, 439 P2d 57 (1968). Also, case law supports the rule which allows an expert to base his opinion upon facts testified to by other witnesses. State v. Peel, 23 Mont. 358, 364, 59 P 169 (1899).

Montana law has allowed some experts to base their opinion upon inadmissible evidence. Physicians have been allowed to give opinions based upon the statements of their patients (Kelly v. John R. Daily Co., 56 Mont. 63, 78, 181 P 326 (1919) and Bingham v. Nat'l Bank of Montana, 105 Mont. 159, 173, 72 P2d 90 (1937)) or upon the information given by nurses (In re Sales' Estate, 108 Mont. 202, 207, 89 P2d 1043 (1939)) or upon the reports of other physicians. Klaus v. Hilberry, 157 Mont. 277, 285, 485 P2d 54 (1971); Pachek v. Norton Concrete Co., 160 Mont. 16, 22, 499 P2d 766 (1972); and Bush v. Wardell, (165 Mont. 312, 318, 528 P2d 213 (1974)). Experts in land valuation have been allowed to base their opinion upon hearsay as to comparable sales. State Highway Comm'n v. Greenfield, 145 Mont. 164, 169, 399 P2d 989 (1965) and State Fish and Game Comm'n v. District Court, 163 Mont. 298, 301, 517 P2d 359 (1973). Further, it is apparent that highway patrolmen are allowed to reconstruct and give the cause of an accident based upon their investigation and interviews of persons involved in the accident. State v. Deshner, 158 Mont. 188, 193, 489 P2d 1290 (1971). Therefore, the second sentence of Rule 703 is consistent with existing Montana law but expands the rule of the cases just cited to allow any expert to base his opinion upon reliable, inadmissible information.

COMMISSION COMMENT TO JUNE 1990 AMENDMENT

The revision establishes gender neutral format only. No substantive change.

Compiler's Comments

1990 Amendment: Substituted gender neutral language for gender specific language. Amendment effective June 7, 1990.

Case Notes

Involuntary Commitment — Hearsay Referenced in Expert Testimony Admitted — No Abuse of Discretion: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by admitting otherwise inadmissible hearsay referenced in an expert's testimony for the limited purpose of explaining the basis of the expert's opinion rather than proving the facts asserted in the statement. In re C.K., 2017 MT 69, 387 Mont. 127, 391 P.3d 735. But see St. v. Brasda, 2021 MT 121, 404 Mont. 178, 486 P.3d 703, holding that when evidence offered by the defense could have been admitted because it was not being offered for the truth of the matter asserted, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse evidence when the trial objection was premised on speculation about the contamination of evidence that was unproven.

Appraiser Not Agent of Buyer — Property Owner Qualified as Lay Witness: After the defendants defaulted on a mortgage, the buyer of the property at a sheriff's sale (and holder of the property's mortgage note) sought a deficiency judgment. At a hearing concerning the property's value, over the buyer's objection, an appraisal that the defendants used to form their valuation of the property was admitted into evidence. On appeal, the buyer argued that the appraisal was hearsay, and the defendants argued that it was properly admitted because the appraisal was the vicarious admission of value made by the buyer through its agent, the appraiser, under Rule 801, M.R.Ev. However, although the appraiser was hired to perform an appraisal by the buyer, he was an independent appraiser, not an agent of the buyer. Further, although as an owner a defendant was permitted to testify as a lay witness about the property's worth, she was not an expert witness who could rely on inadmissible opinions under Rule 703, M.R.Ev. Thus, the District Court abused its discretion by admitting the appraisal. Whitefish Credit Union v. Prindiville, 2015 MT 328, 381 Mont. 443, 362 P.3d 53.

Exclusion of Third-Party Generated Medical Data — No Error: The District Court granted the defendant's motion to exclude testimony by the plaintiff's treating physician about the results of a medical scan that the treating physician did not perform or interpret but relied on in diagnosing the plaintiff. The Supreme Court affirmed. An expert may base the expert's testimony on reasonably reliable information but may not simply transmit out-of-court statements without adding anything. The District Court expressed concern about the reliability of the medical scan and notified the plaintiff that the doctor who interpreted the scan should be called to lay a foundation for the treating physician's testimony. Because the plaintiff failed to do so, the District Court did not err in refusing to allow the treating physician to testify about the medical scan results. Weber v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2011 MT 223, 362 Mont. 53, 261 P.3d 984.

Waste of Game Animal — Testimony of Meat Processor Based Only On Photographs Properly Allowed — Need for Expert Testimony: At Wilmer's prosecution for waste of a game animal, Stroot, a meat processor, testified, based only on photographs, that Wilmer's deer carcass was not fit for human consumption. Because Stroot testified that he could make that determination based only on photographs and because that testimony was helpful to the jury in determining whether Wilmer had wasted a game animal, the Supreme Court held that Stroot's testimony was properly admitted by the District Court. The Supreme Court also held that just because some jurors might be able to determine for themselves whether the carcass was fit for human consumption did not mean that Stroot's testimony was improperly admitted. St. v. Wilmer, 2011 MT 78, 360 Mont. 101, 252 P.3d 178.

Hearsay Evidence and Parental Rights Termination — Admission of Hearsay Evidence at Show Cause, Adjudicatory, and Termination Hearings Held Proper Because Children "Unavailable" — J.C.E. Case Distinguished — No Offer of Proof Made: Hearsay evidence in the form of videotaped interviews of young children talking with investigators about sexual abuse by their parents was admitted after the District Court found that the children were "unavailable" to testify because they would be traumatized by testifying against their parents in a courtroom setting. The Supreme Court held that the videotaped testimony was properly admitted by the District Court, based upon the thorough findings by the District Court, at the show cause hearing, the adjudicatory hearing, and the parental rights termination hearing. The Supreme Court distinguished St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309 (1988), because that case was a criminal case in which the right of confrontation under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., applied, whereas the case now before the Supreme Court was a civil case. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court properly analyzed the mother's attempt to call the children as witnesses as one of relevance, and because no offer of proof was made under Rule 103, M.R.Ev., by the mother, the Supreme Court could not conclude that the District Court acted arbitrarily. In re O.A.W., 2007 MT 13, 335 M 304, 153 P3d 6 (2007).

Test Whether Witness May Testify as Expert on Child Abuse: Factors in the three-part test set out in St. v. Scheffelman, 250 M 334, 820 P2d 1293 (1991), for whether a witness may testify as an expert on child abuse are: (1) the expert must have extensive first-hand experience with children who both have and have not been sexually abused; (2) the expert must have a thorough and current knowledge of the professional literature on child abuse; and (3) the expert must have objectivity and neutrality regarding individual cases. In Riggs's case, the state called a child abuse expert who met the qualifications but who had a therapeutic relationship with one of the victims to testify concerning interviewing techniques applied in a sexual abuse investigation. Riggs contended that the trial court erred by allowing the expert to testify and by limiting the defense's ability to cross-examine the expert. The Supreme Court disagreed on both issues. Given the limited scope of the expert's testimony, the objectivity with which the expert could testify regarding interviewing techniques was not susceptible to being compromised by the therapeutic relationship with one of the victims, so the trial court did not err in qualifying the witness as an expert. Additionally, Riggs was afforded a fair and full opportunity to expose any potential bias of the expert, so Riggs's right to confront witnesses was not infringed. St. v. Riggs, 2005 MT 124, 327 M 196, 113 P3d 281 (2005). See also St. v. Whitlow, 285 M 430, 949 P2d 239 (1997).

No Error in Disallowing Expert to Testify Regarding Nonwitness Third-Party Experiences With Product Given Minimal Probative Value: Plaintiffs sought to introduce testimony from an expert regarding the functioning of a type of subflooring that was installed in plaintiffs' home, resulting in a squeaky floor. The District Court allowed the expert to testify concerning the expert's experiments on pieces of the subflooring and concerning the experience of another witness who previously testified to a squeaky floor after using the subflooring, but the court did not allow the expert to speak to the experiences of nonwitness third parties concerning other experiences with the subflooring. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that the expert's testimony on other incidents of subflooring failures should have been allowed because they formed the basis for the expert's opinion and demonstrated notice. The Supreme Court concluded that excluding the testimony was not an abuse of the trial court's discretion. Although under this rule, an expert witness may testify to evidence that might be otherwise inadmissible, if the probative value of the evidence is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice or confusion, the evidence may be excluded under this rule. With the expert's foundational testimony already in evidence, the probative value of the expert's testimony regarding experiences of nonwitness third parties would likely have been minimal, particularly since plaintiffs had declined the opportunity to cross-examine the witness who testified to a squeaky floor after using the subflooring. Tripp v. Jeld-Wen, Inc., 2005 MT 121, 327 M 146, 112 P3d 1018 (2005). See also Kissock v. Butte Convalescent Center, 1999 MT 322, 297 M 307, 992 P2d 1271 (1999).

Improper Use of Hearsay to Bolster Expert Testimony: This rule anticipates that experts form opinions and inferences based on first-hand observation, facts presented at trial, and information obtained outside the courtroom prior to trial, and an expert may rely on inadmissible evidence when forming an opinion. However, the rule does not allow an expert witness to repeat inadmissible out-of-court statements to bolster the expert's opinions before the jury. Here, an officer provided accident reconstruction evidence gleaned from interviews with others on direct defense examination for the purpose of asserting the truth of out-of-court statements and fortifying the conclusions of the officer as a result of the accident investigation. The hearsay testimony was improperly allowed, constituting reversible error. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003), followed in St. v. Bailey, 2004 MT 87, 320 M 501, 87 P3d 1032 (2004). However, see In re C.K., 2017 MT 69, 387 Mont. 127, 391 P.3d 735.

Measure of Loss as Jury Question: Alternative approaches to measure loss are within the meaning of Rule 401, M.R.Ev., and it is up to the jury to decide which approach is more or less probable as a measure of loss. It was not error for the trial court to deny plaintiffs' motion in limine to preclude a defense expert witness from testifying as to an alternate measure of loss. Simmons Oil Corp. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., 1998 MT 129, 289 M 119, 960 P2d 291, 55 St. Rep. 508 (1998).

Lack of Foundation for Opinion on Validity of Child's Sexual Abuse Statements — Testimony Improper: In answer to a voir dire inquiry regarding generally accepted criteria used in validating a child's allegations of sexual abuse, the state's medical expert responded that the criteria involved reviewing the child's statements and determining the consistency of those statements. However, the expert formed her opinion of consistency based largely on the children's limited personal statements, without reviewing any of the children's written statements or medical reports, viewing videotaped depositions, or talking to any of the investigators assigned to the case. Because the expert's opinion was not based on the generally accepted criteria for validating such statements, her testimony was improperly allowed. St. v. Henderson, 265 M 454, 877 P2d 1013, 51 St. Rep. 606 (1994).

Medical Expert Who Is Not Patient's Attending Physician — Reading From Patient's Medical Records: It was not an abuse of discretion to allow two doctors testifying as experts for defendant to read from the medical records of plaintiff, even though neither was plaintiff's attending physician. The records were admissible under this rule because the doctors were experts who followed the practice of medical experts in basing their opinions on medical records. Mason v. Ditzel, 255 M 364, 842 P2d 707, 49 St. Rep. 986 (1992).

Social Worker With Only Sexual Abuse Treatment Experience Not Qualified as Expert — Reversible Error: In determining that the District Court improperly allowed into evidence opinion testimony by a social worker on whether the victim had been sexually abused, the Supreme Court held that allowing the testimony constituted reversible error because the social worker had no experience in treating children who had not been sexually abused and thus had no controlled standard that allowed her to arrive at the conclusion that abuse had occurred. St. v. Scheffelman, 250 M 334, 820 P2d 1293, 48 St. Rep. 1023 (1991), followed in St. v. Whitlow, 285 M 430, 949 P2d 239, 54 St. Rep. 1227 (1997).

Expert Commenting on Practices of Insurance Company That Never Employed Him: The Supreme Court held that the fact that the plaintiff's expert witness had never worked for the defendant insurance company did not preclude him from commenting on the company's practices. The Supreme Court stated that the lower court had broad discretion with respect to expert testimony and that the question of the witness's nonemployment by the defendant only went to the weight to be given his testimony. Schneider v. Minn. Mut. Life Ins. Co., 247 M 334, 806 P2d 1032, 48 St. Rep. 224 (1991).

Expert's Testimony Regarding Defendant's Statements Inadmissible: The defendant desired to have his psychiatric expert testify as to the defendant's statements to him describing the events surrounding the alleged crime. The Supreme Court held that the statements were properly excluded because the defendant's testimony was not reliable enough to overcome the possible prejudicial effect of the evidence. St. v. Van Dyken, 242 M 415, 791 P2d 1350, 47 St. Rep. 835 (1990).

Field Investigation of User Experience as Appropriate in Forming Opinion on Product Design: Plaintiff qualified a witness as an expert in vehicle transfer case design, and the expert testified regarding a conversation with a technician about a similar accident the technician had involving a transfer case that was the same as the transfer case in question. Field investigation of user experience is an appropriate method for an expert to form opinions as to whether a particular transfer case design is effective or dangerous, and the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the expert's testimony concerning one of the bases upon which he formed his opinion, despite defendant's claim of hearsay. Krueger v. Gen. Motors Corp., 240 M 266, 783 P2d 1340, 46 St. Rep. 2114 (1989).

Medical Records Prepared by Predecessor to Testifying Doctor — Not Inadmissible Hearsay: Medical records prepared by the predecessor of a testifying doctor that were used as part of his testimony did not constitute inadmissible hearsay evidence because a foundation was laid wherein the testifying doctor stated that he would never treat a patient of the predecessor doctor without first reviewing the patient's records. Thus, the records constitute records both for the purposes of medical treatment under Rule 803, M.R.Ev., and data relied on by experts when forming opinions on the subject under Rule 703, M.R.Ev. Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986). See also Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

Expert Testimony Regarding Defendant's Blood Alcohol Level: Both the defendant and the prosecution presented expert witness testimony regarding defendant's blood alcohol level at the time of an automobile accident that killed defendant's companion. Defendant challenged the qualifications of the State's expert. The Supreme Court observed that both experts were testifying as to hypothetical averages which would result from drinking certain amounts of alcohol under certain conditions. The hypothetical questions were within the scope of the evidence presented. The trial court instructed the jury that it could reject an expert's opinion. Therefore, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in admitting the expert testimony. St. v. Gould, 216 M 455, 704 P2d 20, 42 St. Rep. 946 (1985).

Involuntary Commitment — Appointment of Two Professionals — One May Testify: The lower court appointed two psychiatrists—one to examine G.S. and one to present those findings at the commitment hearing since the examining doctor would be unavailable. The Supreme Court held that the lower court did not err in allowing the second psychiatrist to offer an opinion on the subject's mental condition without formally examining the patient, but relying, instead, on the first doctor's report. Of critical importance is the fact that the doctor who ultimately did diagnose G.S.'s mental condition was available for cross-examination. The critical requirement of professional justification was satisfied. Rule 703, Montana Rules of Evidence, clearly provides that one doctor can state his expert opinion based on another doctor's report. Section 46-14-213(1) does not apply since the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure apply to involuntary commitment procedures. In re G.S., 215 M 384, 698 P2d 406, 42 St. Rep. 451 (1985).

Admissible for Expert to Give Opinion on Whether Violation of Law Occurred: It was not inadmissible for a Deputy Sheriff qualified as an expert to give his opinion on whether a violation of the law was the cause of an automobile accident. Adequate opportunity was given the plaintiff to elicit any assumptions or facts underlying the expert opinion. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989).

Admission of Opinion Testimony Not Based on Personal Observation — Not Reversible Error: In a custody dispute, when a social worker testified on the children's environment in their mother's home even though the social worker had not been to the home, the Supreme Court ruled that this was not reversible error because there was no evidence that the trial judge had relied on the social worker's testimony on this matter since there was other similar evidence in the record. Connolly v. Connolly, 209 M 298, 680 P2d 568, 41 St. Rep. 720 (1984).

No Autopsy — Medical Testimony as to Cause of Death: Testimony showed that no autopsy was performed on persons defendant purposely hit and killed with auto he was driving while they were riding a bicycle. The medical experts stated that their conclusion that the collision brought about the injuries which caused death was an educated guess. The medical testimony also showed that the type of injuries suffered was consistent with the injuries one might expect to receive if struck by an auto. The weight of the testimony was for the jury, and the testimony was properly admitted. St. v. Woods, 203 M 401, 662 P2d 579, 40 St. Rep. 533 (1983).

Property Disposition — Expert Testimony on Valuation: The District Court in a dissolution of marriage proceeding made a substantially equitable property disposition. The husband contended that the trial court erred in determining the per-acre value of the couple's ranch. Conflicting testimony was presented. The husband's expert presented a much higher figure based upon the possibility of subdividing the land. The District Court, as the trier of fact in the trial without a jury, accepted the valuation of the wife's expert. This is not reversible error. The trier of fact has the discretion to give whatever weight he sees fit to the testimony of an expert. Dickerson v. Dickerson, 188 M 492, 614 P2d 521, 37 St. Rep. 1286 (1980).

Expert Qualification and Testing — Timely Objection Required: Plaintiff contends on appeal that the defense's expert witness was not properly qualified and that the experiment conducted by the expert was under conditions differing from those on the night of the accident. These objections were not timely made at the trial level, however, and cannot be raised on appeal. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600, 37 St. Rep. 93 (1980).

Opinion Testimony Based on Hearsay: Under certain circumstances an expert witness giving medical testimony may offer an opinion based on hearsay information. Hunsaker v. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation, 179 M 305, 588 P2d 493, 35 St. Rep. 1647 (1978).

Hypothetical Question Not Required: A hypothetical question is not a prerequisite in the testimony of an expert witness. It is only required that the witness testify as to the facts upon which he bases his opinion. St. v. Hallam, 175 M 492, 575 P2d 55 (1978).

Expert Appraisal Based on Use Other Than Highest: The court did not err in admitting testimony of the landowner's appraiser relative to valuation of the landowner's property for a recreational use in small tracts rather than as a whole because that portion of the cattle ranch subject to condemnation had a strong potential for river frontage tracts. Highway Comm'n v. Marsh, 175 M 460, 575 P2d 38 (1978).

Rule 704. Opinions on ultimate issue.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 704. Its effect is to specifically abolish the rule against opinions on ultimate issues of fact not currently followed in Montana. Therefore, this rule is consistent with existing Montana law. Kelly v. John R. Daily Co., 56 Mont. 63, 79, 181 P 326 (1919); State v. Shannon, 95 Mont. 280, 286, 26 P2d 360 (1933); State v. Campbell, 146 Mont. 251, 258, 405 P2d 978 (1965); Rude v. Neal, 165 Mont. 520, 525, 530 P2d 428 (1974); and McGuire v. Nelson, 167 Mont. 188, 536 P2d 768 (1975).

The Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 704, 56 F.R.D. 183, 284 (1972), indicates that the "basic approach to opinions, lay and expert, in these rules is to admit them when helpful to the trier of fact". The language of the rule allows lay witnesses to give their opinions on an ultimate issue if the requirements of Rule 701 are met. In any case, the rule is not intended to allow all opinions and would exclude those "which would merely tell the jury what result to reach...". Advisory Committee's Note, supra, 56 F.R.D. at 285. In other words, the Commission intends this rule to follow the existing Montana practice of not allowing the witness to give a legal conclusion or to apply the law to the facts in his answer. Daniels v. Andes Ins. Co., 2 Mont. 78, 88 (1874); Allen v. Bearcreek Coal Co., 43 Mont. 269, 281, 115 P 673 (1911); Parsons v. Rice, 81 Mont. 509, 526, 264 P 396 (1928); and McGonigle v. Prudential Ins. Co., 100 Mont. 203, 219, 46 P2d 687 (1935).

Finally, it should be noted that this rule is also consistent with case law which holds that either lay or expert opinion testimony may be rejected by the trier of fact. Reser v. Ziebarth, 59 Mont. 7, 9, 195 P 98 (1928); Watts v. Billings Bench Water Ass'n, 78 Mont. 199, 219, 253 P 260 (1927); Putman v. Pollei, 153 Mont. 406, 411, 457 P2d 776 (1969); and Richardson v. Ford Motor Co., 163 Mont. 347, 353, 516 P2d 1153 (1973). Therefore, if the jury properly performs its duty, there should be no fear that an opinion admissible under this rule constitutes an invasion of the province of the jury.

Case Notes

English Professor's Testimony Interpreting Reservation of Royalty Interest Improperly Admitted: Because the construction and interpretation of a contract is a legal conclusion for the court to decide, the District Court improperly admitted an English professor's expert testimony on the signatories' intent with respect to the meaning of a deed's language. Wicklund v. Sundheim, 2016 MT 62, 383 Mont. 1, 367 P.3d 403.

Insurance Law Attorney Allowed to Testify in Bad Faith Insurance Trial — Cautionary Instruction Proper: The plaintiff filed a bad faith insurance claim under the Montana Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) against the insurer. The plaintiff sought to have an attorney who practices in the area of insurance law testify about industry insurance standards. The insurer moved to strike the attorney's expert testimony. The District Court denied the motion. During the trial, the District Court overruled an objection to testimony concerning whether the insurer violated industry standards but issued a cautionary instruction to the jury concerning the testimony. The Supreme Court held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by allowing the attorney to testify since the insurer was not prejudiced and a cautionary instruction was provided. Peterson v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 2010 MT 187, 357 Mont. 293, 239 P.3d 904.

Testimony of Chief of Police Concerning Legality of Traffic on Controlled Access Highway Properly Excluded: Plaintiffs sued the state for inverse condemnation and taking for constructing a highway improvement project that allegedly impaired access by large trucks to plaintiffs' business on a main street in Dillon. Plaintiffs asserted that the trial court improperly excluded evidence from the city Chief of Police regarding the illegality of maneuvering trucks on the reconstructed limited access highway. The Supreme Court found no error in the trial court's decision because all questions of law, including the admissibility of testimony and the rules of evidence, must be decided by the court. Williams Feed, Inc. v. St., 2007 MT 79, 336 M 493, 155 P3d 1228 (2007).

Qualified Expert May Testify — Application of Expert Field to Facts Immaterial — Daubert Hearing Not Required: In a deposition, a documents expert concluded that defendant authored various threatening letters, but the expert could give only representative details of the methods of analysis by which the conclusion was reached and could explain neither how nor why the conclusion was reached that defendant authored the letters. Defendant asserted that the District Court should have held a hearing pursuant to Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 US 579 (1993), to determine the reliability of the field of expert methods, but the Supreme Court disagreed. The Daubert test does not require a District Court to determine whether the expert reliably applied expert methods to the facts. Rather, if a reliable field helps the trier of fact and the court determines that that expert is a qualified expert in the field, the expert may testify. Under a Daubert analysis, the reliability of the expert's application of the expert field to the facts is immaterial in determining the reliability of the expert field, so in this case, a Daubert hearing was not required. Additionally, this rule allowed the expert to testify to the ultimate conclusion of who wrote the letters. St. v. Clifford, 2005 MT 219, 328 M 300, 121 P3d 489 (2005).

Expert Testimony Not Targeting Defendant's State of Mind During Crimes Properly Admitted: In Sandrock's trial for sexual intercourse without consent, incest, and witness tampering, Sandrock maintained that he was suffering from a mental disease or defect and could not have committed the crimes because he could not have formed the requisite mental state. A medical expert testified that although Sandrock was an oddball, he knew right from wrong when he wrote several letters to his wife outlining his intended actions. Sandrock moved for a mistrial because the expert's testimony violated the prohibition on ultimate issue testimony. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although a medical expert may not offer an opinion on the ultimate issue of whether a defendant had a particular state of mind that is an element of an offense, the expert may state the nature of a medical examination and the medical or psychological diagnosis of the defendant's mental condition, and testimony in the form of an opinion or inference that would otherwise be admissible is not objectionable because it embraces the ultimate issue to be decided by the trier of fact. Here, the expert's testimony did not target the ultimate issue of whether Sandroock actually possessed the requisite mental states at the time that the crimes were committed, so the mistrial motion was properly denied. St. v. Sandroock, 2004 MT 195, 322 M 231, 95 P3d 153 (2004). See also St. v. Santos, 273 M 125, 902 P2d 510 (1995).

Legal Conclusions by Expert Witness Inadmissible: Under Rule 705, M.R.Ev., an expert may testify as to opinions or inferences, and under this rule, an expert may present opinions and inferences that embrace the ultimate issues to be decided by the jury. However, legal conclusions offered by an expert invade the province of the jury and can be highly prejudicial. Therefore, expert opinion that states a legal conclusion or applies the law to the facts is inadmissible. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003). See also Cartwright v. Scheels All Sports, Inc., 2013 MT 158, 370 Mont. 369, 310 P.3d 1080, and Citizens for a Better Flathead v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Flathead County, 2016 MT 256, 385 Mont. 156, 381 P.3d 555.

Refusal of Opinion Testimony Regarding Defendant's Mental State Not Erroneous: The District Court refused to admit the opinion testimony of two doctors regarding Hoffman's mental state at the time that Hoffman committed aggravated assault. Hoffman asserted that under Rule 702, M.R.Ev., and this rule, the court erred by precluding the opinion testimony, in violation of due process. However, the language of 46-14-213 and the decision in St. v. Santos, 273 M 125, 902 P2d 510 (1995), proscribe such testimony and controlled the situation here. The testimony was properly refused. St. v. Hoffman, 2003 MT 26, 314 M 155, 64 P3d 1013 (2003), distinguishing St. v. Fish, 190 M 461, 621 P2d 1072 (1980).

Expert Opinion Testimony Regarding Train Crew's Obligations Allowed: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train and sought damages. At trial, members of the train crew were allowed to express their opinions as to the cause of the accident, including the obligations and duties Mickelson and the train crew had at the railroad crossing. Mickelson claimed error because opinions about statutory or regulatory violations had been specifically excluded by the trial court pursuant to Heltborg v. Modern Mach., 244 M 24, 795 P2d 954, 47 St. Rep. 1254 (1990). The Supreme Court noted that under Heltborg, an expert may not state a legal conclusion or apply the law to the facts in an answer, but the expert may properly testify to the ultimate issue of fact. Here, the District Court did not err in allowing the train crew to testify as to the crew's obligations as they approached the crossing. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000).

Highway Patrol Officer's Expert Opinion, in DUI Prosecution, That Driver Being Under the Influence Caused Accident: In a DUI prosecution, admission of a highway patrol officer's testimony that in her opinion, based on her investigation at the scene of defendant's accident and her discussion with defendant soon after the accident, defendant was under the influence of alcohol to an extent that diminished his ability to drive safely was not an abuse of discretion. Her training and experience in accident investigation and reconstruction qualified her as an expert for purposes of giving the opinion. She had been an officer for 8 years, was trained at the Montana Highway Patrol Academy for 12 weeks, had 4 weeks of training in traffic investigation, had attended an accident reconstruction school, had taught accident investigation, had special DUI investigation training and had taken a course on being a DUI detection instructor, was a recognized expert in accident reconstruction, had investigated more than 200 accidents, of which 15% to 20% had involved alcohol, and had participated in more than 100 DUI arrests. Her opinion did not invade the province of the jury by calling for a legal conclusion on the issue of guilt or innocence; she was giving an expert opinion as to the cause of the accident. St. v. Gregoroff, 287 M 1, 951 P2d 578, 54 St. Rep. 1469 (1997).

Victim's Deathbed Statements Admissible as to State of Mind of Victim — Cautionary Instruction Required: As Turner was dying, he made statements to several witnesses to the effect that Fuhrmann stabbed him "on purpose" and that the stabbing was "not an accident". The trial court admitted the statements into evidence. On appeal, Fuhrmann contended that the testimony by the witnesses was inadmissible hearsay because the statements regarding Fuhrmann's intent addressed Fuhrmann's, rather than Turner's, state of mind and thus did not fall within the hearsay exception in Rule 803(3), M.R.Ev. Following St. v. Magruder, 234 M 492, 765 P2d 716 (1988), and St. v. Losson, 262 M 342, 865 P2d 255 (1993), the Supreme Court concluded: (1)

Turner's statements that Fuhrmann stabbed him "on purpose" and that the stabbing was "not an accident", if the statements were construed as providing evidence that Turner feared Fuhrmann, could only be construed as providing circumstantial evidence of Turner's fear and, under that construction, would not be considered as hearsay and would be admissible; (2) such statements must be offered only for the purpose of showing the declarant's state of mind and may not be offered for the truth of the matter asserted; and (3) to prevent any potential prejudicial effect on a defendant and to uphold the integrity of both the hearsay rule and the state of mind exception of Rule 803(3), M.R.Ev., a trial court must instruct the jury as to the limited purpose for which it may consider this type of testimony. Nevertheless, in Fuhrmann's case, failure by the court to offer a limiting instruction was harmless error given the overwhelming independent evidence of guilt. St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996).

DNA Evidence — Province of Jury Not Invaded on Issue of Identity of Father: Weeks was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent with his stepdaughter. The conviction was based in part upon DNA evidence. Weeks argued that the province of the jury was invaded on the ultimate question of the identity of the perpetrator. The Supreme Court held that Weeks's argument had no merit, noting the language of this rule, the fact that Weeks himself offered statistical probabilities of the DNA match, and case law from another state. St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477, 52 St. Rep. 78 (1995).

Expert Opinion on a Conclusion of Law: In a personal injury suit, the lower court allowed the plaintiff's expert witness to testify on certain issues to be decided by the jury. The Supreme Court held that while testimony on ultimate factual issues is admissible, an expert may not express an opinion on a conclusion of law. Heltborg v. Modern Mach., 244 M 24, 795 P2d 954, 47 St. Rep. 1254 (1990), followed in Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 199, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991). See also Wenger v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2021 MT 37, 403 Mont. 210, 483 P.3d 480.

Testimony of Human Rights Commission Compliance Officer Properly Disallowed: Plaintiff in an age discrimination case sought to introduce the record of the hearing in which a compliance officer determined plaintiff had been discriminated against. The District Court properly found that the investigative information was specifically excluded under Rule 803, M.R.Ev. Further, under this rule, the compliance officer was not allowed to testify as an expert regarding his opinion on the ultimate issue because there was sufficient evidence presented from which the jury could make a reasonable determination of whether there was age discrimination. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Expert Opinion on Medical Evidence Not an Opinion on Weight and Credibility of Victim's Evidence: A physician's opinion that his medical findings led him to believe victim had been sexually assaulted did not constitute a comment on the weight and credibility of the evidence given by the victim or on the ultimate issue of whether it was defendant who was involved in the rape. St. v. Laird, 225 M 306, 732 P2d 417, 44 St. Rep. 254 (1987).

Attorney as Expert Witness — Not to Advise Jury as to Law of Case: Insurance company argued that the District Court's instructions implying that company's position was frivolous as a matter of law were reinforced by detailed attorney opinion testimony on the law applicable to insurance coverage, in violation of 25-7-102 and this rule. The Supreme Court, citing Energy Oils, Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 626 F2d 731 (9th Cir. 1980), adopted the finding that admission of opinion testimony as to the legal effect of a contract is erroneous, but in view of the District Court holding that there was insurance coverage as a matter of law, the Supreme Court concluded that counsel's testimony regarding the law of the case did not constitute reversible error under the unique facts of this case. The court found no abuse of discretion in allowing attorneys who appear as expert witnesses to state their opinion on an insurer's duty to evaluate the facts, on what constitutes a reasonable evaluation of the facts, or on how an insurer should have approached the negotiations with the plaintiff; however, as a general rule an attorney cannot advise the jury as to the law of the case. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 44 St. Rep. 508 (1987) (opinion withdrawn and replaced by 230 M 63, 748 P2d 937, 45 St. Rep. 18 (1988)). See also Kizer v. Semitool, Inc., 251 M 199, 824 P2d 229, 48 St. Rep. 1115 (1991).

Admissible for Expert to Give Opinion on Whether Violation of Law Occurred: It was not inadmissible for a Deputy Sheriff qualified as an expert to give his opinion on whether a violation of the law was the cause of an automobile accident. Adequate opportunity was given the plaintiff to elicit any assumptions or facts underlying the expert opinion. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989).

Expert Testimony on Whether Rape Occurred: In a prosecution for sexual intercourse without consent, the County Attorney asked a doctor if he had formed a clinical impression of the victim. The doctor replied that it was his impression that the woman had been raped. The doctor's statement was admissible under this rule, since he was qualified by experience and personal observation. Further, the statement was not sufficiently prejudicial to constitute reversible error. St. v. Dickens, 198 M 482, 647 P2d 338, 39 St. Rep. 1137 (1982).

Opinion as to Objective of Force or Violence: Defense objection, which stated that a prosecution question asking the doctor who examined assault victim if he had an opinion as to what the force applied to victim was designed to do was a question invading the province of the jury, was not adequate to justify exclusion of doctor's opinion, as it was merely another way of saying that the opinion embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the jury, and this rule provides that such an opinion is not objectionable if otherwise admissible. St. v. Howard, 195 M 400, 637 P2d 15, 38 St. Rep. 1980 (1981), followed in St. v. Dickens, 198 M 482, 647 P2d 338, 39 St. Rep. 1137 (1982), and St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994).

Wrongful Death Action — Highway Patrolman as Expert in Traffic-Control Devices: In a wrongful death action in which the decedent's surviving spouse brought suit against the State and the state's contractor for negligently failing to warn the decedent of an abrupt edge at the shoulder of a highway construction project, a highway patrol officer was properly qualified as an expert in highway control devices and could offer his opinion as to whether a highway was adequately signed. An expert witness may be qualified by reason of practical experience in an area of special knowledge not shared by mankind in general. Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980).

Basis for Investigating Patrolman's Testimony:

In a wrongful death action involving a fatal car accident, it was proper to admit testimony concerning the cause of the accident given by a highway patrolman who had 29 years of experience and who had investigated the accident. Scofield v. Estate of Wood, 211 M 59, 683 P2d 1300, 41 St. Rep. 1212 (1984).

The opinion of the investigating patrolman as to the cause of the accident (failing to yield the right-of-way) is admissible. Here the investigating officer had lost notes made during his investigation and based his opinion on recollection, photographs, and documents he examined during the trial. As long as the cross-examiner is given adequate opportunity to bring forth for the jury's consideration the weaknesses of any assumptions or facts underlying the opinion, the weight to be given the expert's testimony, even on the ultimate issue, is for the jury to determine. Wollaston v. Burlington N., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277, 37 St. Rep. 1015 (1980), followed in Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994).

Identification of Marijuana: Since the proper identification of marijuana requires chemical testing conducted by a qualified person and since a prosecution witness was properly qualified to give such an opinion based on tests he ran on the substance seized, such testimony was properly received even though it embraced an ultimate issue to be decided by the jury. St. v. Petko, 177 M 229, 581 P2d 425 (1978).

Rule 705. Disclosure of facts or data underlying expert opinion.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 705. Its effect is to abolish the traditional requirement for a hypothetical question. Hypothetical questions have "...been the target of a great deal of criticism as encouraging partisan bias, affording an opportunity for summing up in the middle of a case, and as complex and time consuming". Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 705, 56 F.R.D. 183, 285 (1972). The Commission intends this rule to be consistent with the policy of Article VII, making expert testimony helpful to the trier of fact.

Disclosure of the facts or data underlying an expert's opinion through a hypothetical question or otherwise is initially a matter of discretion with counsel offering the expert witness. If the court believes that the expert's opinion is not helpful without the disclosure of the basis of that opinion, it then has the discretion to order such a disclosure. Under the second sentence of the rule, the adverse party has the burden to demonstrate an opinion faulty through cross-examination of the expert as to the basis of his opinion. The cross-examiner should be aware of the underlying facts or data of the opinion through discovery under [former] Rule 26(b)(4) of M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded].

Therefore, the commission intends this rule to abolish the time-consuming practice of disclosing the basis of an expert's opinion when unnecessary and provide a clearer presentation of expert opinion to aid the trier of fact.

Existing Montana law is inconsistent with this rule to the extent that it no longer absolutely requires that an expert testify without prior disclosure of the basis of his opinion through a hypothetical question, his own observation, or testimony of other witnesses. The rationale for allowing an expert to testify through the use of hypothetical questions is found in Trogdon v. Hanson Sheep Co., 49 Mont. 1, 5, 149 P 792 (1914): "An expert is not required to know the actual facts respecting the subject matter under consideration. He may base his opinion, not upon facts, but upon an assumed state of facts". The Montana practice in connection with hypothetical questions was concisely stated in De Sandro v. Missoula Light and Water Co., 52 Mont. 333, 338, 157 P 641 (1916):

In putting a hypothetical question to a witness, counsel has the right to assume as established, for the time being, all the facts in evidence tending, directly or by fair inference, to establish his theory of the case.... He need not embody all the evidence on the subject to which it relates. If opposing counsel does not think the question incorporates all the facts in evidence, he can include them in questions propounded by himself.... It is then for the jury to say whether the facts assumed by the question are really established and whether the opinion of the witness has any probative value.

A possible exception to this statement is that a hypothetical question may be asked based on evidence not in the record if counsel promises to later introduce that evidence. Risken v. N. Pac. Ry., 137 Mont. 57, 70, 350 P2d 831 (1960). Although there is no requirement for a hypothetical question when an expert gives an opinion based upon fact gained through his own personal knowledge or through testimony of other witnesses (State v. Shannon, 95 Mont. 280, 286, 26 P2d 360 (1933)), if an expert is testifying from those sources. Montana law clearly requires that the expert testify as to those facts upon which he rests his opinion. Irion v. Hyde, 110 Mont. 570, 576, 105 P2d 666 (1940); Boehler v. Sanders, 146 Mont. 158, 164, 404 P2d 885 (1965); Jangula v. United States Rubber Co., 147 Mont. 98, 108, 410 P2d 462 (1966); and State Highway Comm'n v. Barnes, 151 Mont. 300, 307, 443 P2d 16 (1968). To the extent that these cases require an expert to testify as to the facts upon which he rests his opinion, they are superseded under the practice of the rule.

COMMISSION COMMENT TO JUNE 1990 AMENDMENT

The revision establishes gender neutral format only. No substantive change.

Compiler's Comments

1990 Amendment: Substituted gender neutral language for gender specific language. Amendment effective June 7, 1990.

Case Notes

English Professor's Testimony Interpreting Reservation of Royalty Interest Improperly Admitted: Because the construction and interpretation of a contract is a legal conclusion for the court to decide, the District Court improperly admitted an English professor's expert testimony on the signatories' intent with respect to the meaning of a deed's language. Wicklund v. Sundheim, 2016 MT 62, 383 Mont. 1, 367 P.3d 403.

Abuse of Discretion in Admitting Report of Three Nontestifying Doctors: The admission of the report of a panel of three doctors without opportunity for cross-examination affected the outcome of the trial and affected a substantial right of the plaintiff, justifying a new trial. Reese v. Stanton, 2015 MT 293, 381 Mont. 241, 358 P.3d 208.

Reasonably Foreseeable Misuse of Liquid Nail Product by Skin Contact — Erroneous Jury Instructions — Cumulative Error: Before a products liability case concerning an ingredient in a liquid nail product commenced, the District Court properly ruled for the plaintiff on a partial summary judgment motion, holding that the defendant could not argue affirmative defenses, including unreasonable misuse because the skin contact by the liquid nail product was reasonably foreseeable or assumption of the risk because the plaintiff did not subjectively know that the product would cause her injuries. However, the District Court then abused its discretion by allowing the product distributor to present expert testimony that its product was "safe as used" when skin contact was avoided, which erroneously introduced the concept of misuse by skin contact. The District Court compounded the problem by subsequently denying the plaintiff's request to cross-examine the expert witnesses who offered the evidence that the product was "safe as used", instructed the jury as to the meaning of "safe as used" without authority to support the court's definition, and refused to instruct the jury that skin contact is common in the nail industry. Due to cumulative error, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case. Kenser v. Premium Nail Concepts, Inc., 2014 MT 280, 376 Mont. 482, 338 P.3d 37.

Proper Admission of Evidence of Preexisting Conditions in Suit for Damages From Auto Accident — Denial of Judgment as Matter of Law on Causation Affirmed: The District Court limited but did not preclude defendant's admission of evidence of plaintiff's preexisting conditions in a case following an auto accident that injured plaintiff. Following admission of the evidence, plaintiff contended that defendant failed to prove preexisting conditions and moved for judgment as a matter of law on the issue of causation, but the trial court denied the motion and allowed the issue to go to the jury. On appeal, plaintiff contended that the trial court erred in allowing the evidence and in denying the motion for judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's holding that plaintiff's preexisting head, cervical, and lumbar injuries, chronic pain, and depression were similar if not identical to the types of injuries attributed by plaintiff to the accident. The evidence was relevant and properly admitted. Because the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the evidence, denial of plaintiff's motion for judgment was also proper, correctly leaving the causation issue to the jury. Clark v. Bell, 2009 MT 390, 353 M 331, 220 P3d 650 (2009). See also Truman v. District Court, 2003 MT 91, 315 M 165, 68 P3d 654 (2003), and Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003).

No Error in Denial of Motion to Suppress Evidence Based on Failure to Record 9-1-1 Emergency Call and Promptly Provide Officer's Belt Recording: Saxton made a 9-1-1 emergency domestic violence call that ultimately resulted in officers entering Saxton's home and arresting her on drug charges. Saxton maintained that the evidence should be suppressed because the police improperly entered the home but failed to record the emergency call and promptly provide the audio recording from the belt recorder of the investigating officer, which might have provided exculpatory evidence. The Supreme Court found that entry into the home was not unlawful and affirmed. Although the state may not interfere with a defendant's right to gather exculpatory evidence, the state is not required to collect it. Here, there was no deliberate suppression of evidence by failing to record the 9-1-1 call, and Saxton was eventually allowed to review and enhance the belt recording, but it yielded no evidence that was material to Saxton's defense. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion by failing to suppress the evidence under these circumstances. St. v. Saxton, 2003 MT 105, 315 M 315, 68 P3d 721 (2003), following St. v. Heth, 230 M 268, 750 P2d 103 (1988).

Legal Conclusions by Expert Witness Inadmissible: Under this rule, an expert may testify as to opinions or inferences, and under Rule 704, M.R.Ev., an expert may present opinions and inferences that embrace the ultimate issues to be decided by the jury. However, legal conclusions offered by an expert invade the province of the jury and can be highly prejudicial. Therefore, expert opinion that states a legal conclusion or applies the law to the facts is inadmissible. Perdue v. Gagnon Farms, Inc., 2003 MT 47, 314 M 303, 65 P3d 570 (2003). See also Cartwright v. Scheels All Sports, Inc., 2013 MT 158, 370 Mont. 369, 310 P.3d 1080, and Citizens for a Better Flathead v. Bd. of County Comm'rs of Flathead County, 2016 MT 256, 385 Mont. 156, 381 P.3d 555.

Preclusion of Cross-Examination of Legal Expert as Error — Montana Case Law Preferred: Defense counsel sought to cross-examine an attorney testifying as plaintiff's expert regarding cases on liability in rear-end collisions, cases litigated by the attorney's firm, and case law from the Montana Supreme Court, Montana District Courts, and related cases from California, Idaho, Texas, and Tennessee. The questioning, although objected to, was designed in part to test the attorney's expertise. It was error for the District Court to preclude cross-examination on the Montana cases and on cases involving the attorney's firm. The Supreme Court further found that Montana cases are preferred in cross-examination of this kind, especially when the expert has conceded his familiarity with Montana law. To hold otherwise would unduly restrict the right to cross-examination. Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 44 St. Rep. 508 (1987) (opinion withdrawn and replaced by Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 230 M 63, 748 P2d 937, 45 St. Rep. 18 (1988)), distinguished in Waller v. Hayden, 268 M 204, 885 P2d 1305, 51 St. Rep. 1291 (1994).

Admissible for Expert to Give Opinion on Whether Violation of Law Occurred: It was not inadmissible for a Deputy Sheriff qualified as an expert to give his opinion on whether a violation of the law was the cause of an automobile accident. Adequate opportunity was given the plaintiff to elicit any assumptions or facts underlying the expert opinion. Foreman v. Minnie, 211 M 441, 689 P2d 1210, 41 St. Rep. 1478 (1984), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989).

Experiment Need Not Duplicate Exact Situation Concerning Which Expert Testimony Is Being Offered: The conditions under which an experiment is conducted need not be identical to the conditions existing at the time of an accident. If the conditions of an experiment are substantially similar to the actual occurrence and the experiment will assist the jury in more intelligently considering the issue, then it should be permitted. Barmeyer v. Mont. Power Co., 202 M 185, 657

P2d 594, 40 St. Rep. 23 (1983), followed in Harwood v. Glacier Elec. Co-op, Inc., 285 M 481, 949 P2d 651, 54 St. Rep. 1257 (1997).

Basis for Investigating Patrolman's Testimony: The opinion of the investigating patrolman as to the cause of the accident (failing to yield the right-of-way) is admissible. Here the investigating officer had lost notes made during his investigation and based his opinion on recollection, photographs, and documents he examined during the trial. As long as the cross-examiner is given adequate opportunity to bring forth for the jury's consideration the weaknesses of any assumptions or facts underlying the opinion, the weight to be given the expert's testimony, even on the ultimate issue, is for the jury to determine. Wollaston v. Burlington N., 188 M 192, 612 P2d 1277, 37 St. Rep. 1015 (1980), followed in Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994).

Article VIII Hearsay

Article Case Notes

Hearsay Entered Into Evidence Along With Overwhelming Substantial Evidence — District Court Abused Discretion Regarding Hearsay — Harmless Error — Conviction Proper: At trial for partner or family member assault and homicide, the state entered numerous hearsay statements into evidence regarding the victim's state of mind, including the victim's fear of the defendant. The defendant challenged admission of the evidence. The Supreme Court reviewed hearsay and hearsay exceptions. The Supreme Court noted that out-of-court statements revealing a victim's fear of the defendant when the victim is unavailable to testify raise special concerns due to the potential prejudice that jurors will use the evidence to make impermissible inferences beyond the limited scope for which the evidence was admitted. The Supreme Court found that the District Court abused its discretion in admitting the hearsay evidence. The Supreme Court continued to review for whether the District Court's error was harmless and ultimately affirmed the conviction, finding that the hearsay was cumulative with overwhelming substantial evidence. St. v. Gomez, 2020 MT 73, 399 Mont. 376, 460 P.3d 926.

Admission of Psychological Evaluation — Hearsay Exception Not Required — Unique Statutory Scheme of Youth in Need of Care Proceedings: The District Court ordered a mother's treatment plan, which required her to undergo a psychological evaluation, and she signed the treatment plan, agreeing to follow the evaluation's recommendations. The psychological evaluation became part of the court proceedings, allowing the court to consider any part of the evaluation through the abuse and neglect proceeding. After the District Court terminated the mother's parental rights, she appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, finding that the District Court properly admitted the mother's psychological evaluation at the hearing to determine whether to terminate the mother's parental rights and that it did not need to be admitted as a hearsay exception. In re M.C., 2017 MT 252, 389 Mont. 78, 403 P.3d 1266, distinguished in In re R.J.F., 2019 MT 113, 395 Mont. 454, 443 P.3d 387, relating to valid hearsay or foundational objections.

Inconsistent Hearsay on a Collateral Matter — Harmless Error: Armstrong was convicted of deliberate homicide. During his trial, Armstrong's sister testified about a separate incident in which Armstrong was shot. On cross-examination, the State impeached her testimony and then called a rebuttal witness who testified that her husband had indicated that the shooting was intentional. The State concedes that it was error to admit this rebuttal testimony as inconsistent hearsay on a collateral matter. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt because it did not contribute to Armstrong's conviction. St. v. Armstrong, 189 M 407, 616 P2d 341, 37 St. Rep. 1563 (1980).

Rule 801. Definitions.

Commission Comments

(a) Statement. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 801(a). It is necessary because of the word "statement" in the definition of hearsay in subdivision (c) of this rule. The first clause, defining statement as an oral or written assertion, speaks for itself. The second clause covers the situation where nonverbal conduct is a substitute for speech, and therefore nonverbal conduct should be considered the equivalent of an oral or written assertion. The definition distinguishes various forms of nonverbal conduct by the intention of the person performing the conduct. If the person intends the nonverbal conduct to be a statement or substitute for speech, this is a statement within the hearsay rule and so would not ordinarily be admissible as hearsay. Any nonverbal conduct not intended as an assertion is therefore admissible so far as the hearsay rule is concerned.

There are no Montana statutes or cases directly concerned with what is a statement in connection with the hearsay rule. Statutes providing exceptions to the hearsay rule refer to acts, declarations, or omissions. R.C.M. 1947, Sections 93-401-7 [26-1-103], 93-401-9 [superseded], and 93-401-10 [superseded]. A recent case defining hearsay, State v. Newman, 162 Mont. 450, 457, 513 P2d 258 (1973), indicates, "Hearsay is testimony or evidence of someone's words or conduct outside the court, when offered in court to prove the truth of the thing being asserted, and thus resting for its value upon the credibility of the out-of-court asserter." (emphasis added). This definition implies that in order for conduct to be within the hearsay rule, it must be assertive, and so is consistent with the definition in this subdivision.

(b) Declarant. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 801(b). Like the definition in subdivision (a), this definition is necessary because of the use of declarant in the definition of hearsay in subdivision (c). The definition is self-explanatory. There is no Montana law concerning this subdivision.

(c) Hearsay. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 801(c). The definition has the effect of placing three types of testimony outside the hearsay rule, making each type admissible as far as the hearsay rule is concerned. First, from the definition in subdivision (a) of statement carried to this subdivision, a statement is not hearsay if it is not intended to be an assertion. Second, from the phrase in the subdivision referring to statements "...made by the declarant while testifying at the trial or hearing...", all such testimony is not hearsay. This is almost never considered a hearsay problem. And third, from the phrase "...offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted," statements offered for purposes other than to prove the truth of their contents are not hearsay.

The third type of testimony is the major concern of this subdivision. It is theoretically correct to say that statements not offered to prove the truth of their contents are not hearsay because their reliability is not in issue, only whether or not the statement was made. Hearsay statements are ordinarily not admitted because their reliability cannot be tested by oath, cross-examination, and the presence of the trier of fact, the three ideal conditions under which testimony is given by witnesses. Advisory Committee's Note, 56 F.R.D. 183, 288 (1972). When a statement is introduced for purposes other than proving the truth of its content, the witness testifying as to the making of the statement by the hearsay declarant is doing so under the three ideal conditions. Therefore, statements which are offered for purposes other than to prove the truth of their content are not hearsay under the definition.

Montana law is consistent with this definition of hearsay, although it has not been concerned with the definition of statement or testimony by declarants at the trial or hearing. As previously noted in the Commission Comments to subdivision (a). State v. Newman, supra 152 Mont. at 457, defined hearsay as testimony: "...offered in court to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and thus resting for its value upon the credibility of the out-of-court asserter". The rule was followed in Brown v. Homestake Exploration Co., 98 Mont. 305, 309, 39 P2d 168 (1934), where hearsay testimony was admitted for a purpose other than to prove the truth of its contents.

(d) Statements which are not hearsay. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 801(d), except that changes have been made in (d)(1)(A) and (d)(1)(B), which will be explained in the discussion of those clauses. The effect of this rule is to place certain statements "...which would otherwise literally fall within..." the hearsay definition outside the hearsay rule. Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 801(d), supra 56 F.R.D. at 295.

Subdivision (d)(1) deals with certain prior statements of the witness who is now testifying and subject to ideal conditions of oath, cross-examination, and presence of the trier of fact. The Commission feels that the application of the conditions at the trial or hearing is sufficient to take these statements out of the hearsay rule, for requiring their application at the time the statement was made would have the effect of excluding almost all prior statements. Therefore, these prior statements are admitted as substantive evidence. It should also be noted that the subdivision limits the types of prior statements placed outside the hearsay rule to three: This is a compromise between allowing "general use of prior prepared statements as substantive evidence" which could lead to an abuse of preferring prepared statements to actual testimony, and allowing no prior statements to be admitted, which is not sensible, for "...particular circumstances call for a contrary result. The judgment is one more for experience than logic". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 295.

Clause 801(d)(1)(A) is not the same as the Federal Rule. The Federal Rule provides "...inconsistent with his testimony, and was given under oath subject to the penalty of perjury at a trial or hearing, or other proceeding, or in a deposition...". The clause deletes the oath requirement as unnecessary and harmful to the usefulness of the rule. The Commission believes that prior inconsistent statements should be admissible as substantive evidence. Although the rule does not specifically call for this result, the Advisory Committee Note to Federal Rule 801(d)(1)(A) states: "Prior inconsistent statements traditionally have been admissible to impeach but not as substantive evidence. Under the rule, they are substantive evidence". Supra 56 F.R.D. at 296. An argument in favor of this position, in addition to the consideration that the hearsay rule should not apply, is that the jury may consider this type of statement (when introduced for impeachment purposes) as substantive evidence because of a failure to regard the typical cautionary instruction. It can also be noted that this statement is always made closer in time to the event, free from any influences, and therefore has an assurance of trustworthiness like many hearsay exceptions.

The clause also indicates that the statement must be inconsistent with the declarant's testimony; this requires that an inconsistency does exist and that practice under Rule 613(b), impeaching with prior inconsistent statements, will be used with this clause. It is the intent of the Commission that a witness' failure to recollect at a trial or hearing is an inconsistency under 801(d)(1)(A) when the witness has made a prior statement on the matter under inquiry. See Commission Comments to Rule 613(b).

Montana law concerning this clause is uncertain. Older Montana cases follow the rule that a prior inconsistent statement cannot be used as substantive evidence, but only for impeachment purposes. State v. Willette, 46 Mont. 326, 330, 127 P 1013 (1912); Wise v. Stagg, 94 Mont. 321, 330, 22 P2d 308 (1933) and State v. Kinghorn, 109 Mont. 22, 36, 93 P2d 964 (1939). However, in State v. Jolly, 112 Mont. 352, 355, 116 P2d 686 (1941), the court indicated that it preferred that rule that a prior inconsistent statement could be used as substantive evidence; it went on to hold that the prior inconsistent statements were not sufficient evidence to convict the defendant and so did not apply the rule that it was announcing. Jolly has not been commented on since it was decided; however, later cases have cited Wise v. Stagg, supra, for the rule that prior inconsistent statements may be used for impeachment purposes, although this particular rule has not been properly applied in those cases. Batchoff v. Craney, 119 Mont. 157, 162, 172 P2d 308 (1946) and Seibel v. Byers, 136 Mont. 39, 48, 344 P2d 129 (1959). There are cases which demonstrate that prior inconsistent statements are given the effect of substantive evidence by the Montana Supreme Court. In State v. Mally, 139 Mont. 599, 608, 366 P2d 868 (1961), the court stated that a witness' testimony concerning a prior inconsistent statement of the defendant's brother was sufficient evidence to convict the defendant. In State v. Borchert, 156 Mont. 315, 320, 479 P2d 454 (1970), the court used an inconsistent statement by the defendant's wife as part of the evidence which sustained the defendant's conviction. Finally, in State v. Longacre, 168 Mont. 311, 542 P2d 322, 32 St. Rep. 1133, 1134 (1975), the court found that a prior inconsistent statement by the defendant's daughter testified to by another witness was part of the evidence supporting the conviction. It should also be noted that the apparent practice in Montana is to give a cautionary instruction that prior inconsistent statements may be used only for impeachment purposes. Therefore, this clause has the effect of clarifying as well as changing existing Montana law.

Clause 801(d)(1)(B) is not the same as the Federal Rule. It provides "...consistent with his testimony and his offer to rebut an express or implied charge against him of recent fabrication or improper influence or motive...". The clause deletes "recent" and "or" following fabrication so that it reads "...consistent with his testimony and is offered to rebut an express or implied charge against him of subsequent fabrication, improper influence or motive...". The Commission changed the language of the Federal Rule to make the clause clearer. Under common law, a witness could not be supported by evidence of prior consistent statements because no amount of repetition makes the story more probable. 4 Wigmore Evidence, Section 1124 (3rd ed. 1940). However, the common law does allow rehabilitation of a witness who has been impeached on the grounds mentioned in the clause. Id. Sections 1128-29. The prior consistent statement is allowed to rehabilitate the witness because it was made prior to the existence of the impeaching evidence; that is, the consistent statement is made and subsequently the impeaching evidence comes into existence. When a witness testifies consistently with these prior statements, it "...will effectively explain away the force of the impeaching evidence; because it is thus made to appear that the statement in the form now uttered was independent of discrediting influence". Id. Section 1128 at 268.

The clause changes traditional common law only to the extent that it allows this type of evidence to be admitted as substantive evidence. This is realistic because of the probability that juries do not understand or choose not to follow instructions limiting this type of evidence to rehabilitative purposes. Further, "The prior statement is consistent with the testimony given on the stand, and, if the opposite party wishes to open the door for its admission in evidence, no sound reason is apparent why it should not be received generally". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 296.

Existing Montana law is consistent with and perhaps broader than the clause. The clause does change Montana law to the extent that it allows prior consistent statements to be admitted as substantive evidence. The traditional common-law rule was discussed in Kipp v. Silverman, 25 Mont. 296, 301, 64 P 884 (1901), although it was not applied. In Farleigh v. Kelly, 28 Mont. 421, 433, 72 P 756 (1903), the court again declined to apply the traditional common-law rule. However, in a recent case, Allen v. Moore, 167 Mont. 330, 538 P2d 1352, 32 St. Rep. 478, 484 (1975), the court did allow a prior consistent statement to be admitted. In that case, the defendant testified that the deceased had grabbed the steering wheel when the vehicle in which they were riding went out of control. He was impeached by evidence of three statements in which he did not mention the deceased's action. The defense introduced a deposition of the owner of the vehicle to show the defendant had mentioned the deceased's action; this statement was made prior to at least one of the statements when the defendant had not mentioned this occurrence. Therefore, this case is consistent with the language of the clause, although it may also be interpreted as expressing concern over which story is the truth and not when the stories were told. Dicta in that case also indicates that the court should allow rehabilitation by prior consistent statements with any form of impeachment. On these two points it is apparent that this case is broader than the clause.

Clause 801(d)(1)(C) is the same as Federal Rule 801(d)(1)(C), as amended in 1975. There is substantial authority for the admissibility of these statements, "often without recognition of the presence of a hearsay problem". McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Evidence 603 (2d ed. 1972). The reasons for admitting these types of statements are first, "the generally unsatisfactory and inconclusive nature of courtroom identification..."; second, the higher reliability of prior identifications "made at an earlier time under less suggestive conditions" (Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 296); and third, questions as to the reliability of identifications are really concerned with constitutional issues and not a hearsay problem. Id.

Montana law is apparently consistent with this clause, although of the two cases considering the problem, neither is on point. In State v. Fisher, 54 Mont. 211, 215, 169 P 282 (1917), the court held that reception of evidence of an identification of the defendant by the victim of the crime was not error. The second case, State v. McSloy, 127 Mont. 265, 273, 261 P2d 263 (1953), dealt with the testimony of the prosecution witness' father as to the identification. The court treated this testimony as corroborating evidence "to show that the prosecuting witness identified the accused at a time when there had been no opportunity for the witness to be swayed by any suggestion of others". Id. at 275.

Rule 801(d)(2) contains five categories of statements which may be offered against a party-opponent as an admission. Each of the clauses is identical to Federal Rule 801(d)(2). It should be noted that Rule 613(b) contains a cross-reference to this subdivision, in that admissions by a party-opponent are not treated as prior inconsistent statements. This subdivision changes existing Montana law to the extent that it defines admission outside the hearsay rule, rather than as an exception to it.

Subdivision (d)(2) deals with admissions of a party-opponent and settles the question of whether admissions are outside the hearsay rule or an exception to it. The subdivision places admissions outside the hearsay rule, but in any event, they have always been admitted as substantive evidence. It is important to remember that this subdivision only has the effect of placing these types of statements outside the hearsay rule; this does not mean that they are to be admitted automatically, for they still are subject to other rules of evidence and constitutional safeguards.

Clause 801(d)(2)(A) refers to an individual's statement and "is the classic example of an admission". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 297. "If he has a representative capacity and the statement is offered against him in that capacity, no inquiry whether he was acting that representative capacity in making the statement is required; the statement need only be relevant to representative affairs". Section 93-401-27(2), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides the equivalent of the clause as far as individuals are concerned: "...evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts:... 2. The act, declaration, or omission of a party, as evidence against such party". Neither the statute nor the cases have specifically referred to admissions made by a person in his representative capacity. Cases construing this statute have followed its plain meaning. Sylvain v. Page, 84 Mont. 424, 438, 276 P 16 (1929) and Edquest v. Tripp and Dragstedt Co., 93 Mont. 446, 458, 19 P2d 637 (1933).

Clause 801(d)(2)(B) is concerned with adoptive admissions or situations where the party-opponent adopts or acquiesces in the statement of another. "Adoption or acquiescence may be manifested in any appropriate manner. When silence is relied upon, the theory is that the person would, under the circumstances, protest the statement made in his presence, if untrue." Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 297. Montana law has only been concerned with adoptive admissions where acquiescence or silence is the method of adoption. Section 93-401-27(3), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], states the equivalent of the clause: "...evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts:... 3. An act or declaration of another, in the presence and within the observation of a party, and his conduct in relation thereto". Case law in Montana has only been concerned with silence as conduct in relation to the statement, which is also denominated the tacit admission rule. The cases dealing with the tacit admission rule are all criminal cases in Montana. Territory v. Big Knot On Head, 6 Mont. 242, 11 P 670 (1886); State v. Lucey, 24 Mont. 285, 302, 61 P 994 (1900); State v. Fisher, 54 Mont. 211, 215, 169 P 282 (1917); State v. Byrne, 60 Mont. 317, 326, 119 P 262 (1921); State v. McLean, 76 Mont. 351, 355, 246 P 956 (1926) and State v. Won, 76 Mont. 509, 518, 248 P 201 (1926). The Advisory Committee's Note to the equivalent of this clause, supra 56 F.R.D. at 298, indicates:

In criminal cases, however, troublesome questions have been raised by decisions holding that failure to deny is an admission: the inference is a fairly weak one, to begin with; silence may be motivated by advice of council or realization that 'anything you say may be used against you'; unusual opportunity is afforded to manufacture evidence; and encroachment upon the privilege against self-incrimination seems inescapably to be involved. However, recent decisions of the Supreme Court relating to custodial interrogation and the right to counsel appear to resolve these difficulties. Hence the rule contains no special provisions concerning failure to deny in criminal cases.

Finally, in Whorley v. Patton-Kjose Co., 90 Mont. 461, 485, 5 P2d 210 (1931), the court held that failure to reply or to protest false statements in a letter "...has no probative value as tending to show an admission of the matter stated, especially when the party failing to reply has taken a final position in the matter of dispute, or for some other reason the correspondence on the subject has ended...". It is apparent that the clause is consistent with existing Montana law.

Clauses 801(d)(2)(C) and (D) are concerned with admissions by an agent or employee against his principal or employer. Clause (C) states the traditional rule that a principal is not bound by statements of his agent unless he had the authority to make such statements. Clause (D) states a rule which changes the traditional common-law view by expanding it. The Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 298, indicates that the usual test of agency to determine the admissibility of statements by agents usually results in exclusion of the statement rather than its admissibility "since few principals employ agents for the purpose of making damaging statements...". Clause (D) changes the usual rule because "dissatisfaction with this loss of valuable and helpful evidence has been increasing. A substantial trend favors admitting statements related to a matter within the scope of the agency or employment". Id.

Section 93-401-27(5), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], states the rule concerning agent's admissions: "...evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts:... 5. After proof of a partnership or agency, the act or declaration of the partner or agent of the party, within the scope of the partnership or agency, and during its existence.

It should first be pointed out that the statute plainly requires a foundation to be laid showing the existence of a partnership or agency before an agent's admissions will be allowed in evidence. Ashley v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 100 Mont. 312, 324, 7 P2d 53 (1935) and Shillingstad v. Nelson, 141 Mont. 412, 419, 478 P2d 393 (1963). Although the clauses (C) and (D) do not explicitly require a foundation, under (C) authorization must be shown before a statement would be admitted and under (D) the terminology "agent or servant" and "scope of agency or employment" indicates that this must be shown before this type of statement would be admitted.

Clause (C) would represent no change to existing Montana law. Montana has always followed the rule that an agent's statements will bind the principal only if they were made with proper authorization. Ryan v. Gilmer, 2 Mont. 517, 520 (1877). It is also certain that unauthorized statements cannot be treated as admissions. Fowlie v. Cruse, 52 Mont. 222, 234, 157 P 958 (1916) and Raish v. Orchard Canal Co., 67 Mont. 140, 144, 218 P 655 (1923). There are cases which have found an implied authority existed to allow an agent's admissions to bind his principal. Callahan v. Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R.R., 47 Mont. 401, 411, 133 P 687 (1913) (admissions by a conductor of a train admissible); Exchange State Bank v. Occident Elevator Co., 95 Mont. 78, 87, 24 P2d 126 (1933) (grain elevator operator's statements admissible because they were within the scope of his employment); and Fox v. Fifth West, Inc., 153 Mont. 95, 99, 454 P2d 612 (1969)

(defendant corporation's president's statement against the corporation's interest admissible). Finally, it should be noted that the Advisory Committee's Note to the Federal Rule, supra 56 F.R.D. at 298, indicates that communications to the agent's principal as well as to third persons are admissible under the clause. To the extent that this question has not arisen in any Montana cases, this is new to Montana law.

Clause (D) represents a change to existing Montana law. Not only may unauthorized admissions be admissible under this clause and so contrary to the cases cited above, but admissions may be admitted regardless of whether or not they were part of the res gestae and regardless of the status of the agent or employee in relation to his principal or employer (as long as the relationship exists and the statement is concerned with the matter within the scope of the agent or employee's duties). Montana cases have always combined the rule that an agent's admissions must be within the scope of his authority with the res gestae rule. Hogan v. Kelly, 29 Mont. 485, 489, 75 P 81 (1903) ("to bind the principal, the declarations of an agent must be made within the scope of his authority, at the time of the transaction, and be a part of the res gestae."); Poindexter and Orr Livestock Co. v. Oregon Shortline R.R., 33 Mont. 338, 340, 83 P 886 (1905); Callahan v. Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R.R., supra 47 Mont. at 411 ("Now, it is a well-settled rule that when an agent is vested with authority to perform any act for his principal, his words... while engaged in that business are part of the res gestae of that business."); Raish v. Orchard Canal Co., supra 67 Mont. at 143 (statements by an agent will bind a corporation "only when made by the officer or agent acting within the scope of his authority and with reference to the transactions then pending...only because the declaration is a verbal act and part of the res gestae that it is admissible at all.") and Rossberg v. Montgomery Ward and Co., 110 Mont. 154, 161, 199 P2d 979 (1939) ("It is elemental that admissions or declarations of the officers or agents of private corporations are not admissible unless they are made while acting within the scope of their authority as part of the res gestae relating to the present transactions.") Therefore, to the extent that this clause separates the res gestae rule from the present rule regarding agent's admissions, it is a change to existing Montana law.

Montana law has also excluded statements by an agent on the ground that they were not made by a person with sufficient status in relation to his principal or employer to bind that principal or employer. In Callahan v. Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R.R., supra 47 Mont. at 412, the court admitted the statement of a conductor of a freight train in part because he had sufficient authority to bind the railroad. That case distinguished Ryan v. Gilmer, supra 2 Mont. at 520, where a sleigh driver had insufficient authority to bind his principal and Poindexter and Orr Livestock Co. v. Oregon Shortline supra 33 Mont. at 340, where a section foreman was held to have insufficient authority to bind the railroad. In Oscarson v. Grain Growers Ass'n, Inc., 84 Mont. 521, 536, 277 P 14 (1929), admissions by the defendant corporation's secretary-treasurer were held admissible because of the high position and extent of control he had over the corporation's affairs. In Rossberg v. Montgomery Ward Co., supra 110 Mont. at 160, the court held that a store manager had insufficient authority to bind the Montgomery Ward Company. It is apparent from that opinion that the court felt that the store manager was a subordinate agent. The latest case dealing with this question is Fox v. Fifth West, Inc., supra 153 Mont. at 99, where the court held that a president of a corporation had sufficient authority to make statements against the corporation's interest. Therefore, to the extent that this clause allows admissibility of statements by any agent or employee, it is a change to existing Montana law.

Section 93-401-27(5), R.C.M. 1947, [superseded], states that the rule applied to statements by agents also "...applies to the act or declaration of a joint owner, joint debtor, or other person jointly interested with the party". The only two cases construing this part of this subsection are Monidah Trust v. Kemper, 44 Mont. 1, 6, 118 P 811 (1911) where the court held that this provision does not affect the limitation of actions against joint obligees; and Credit Counsellors v. Park, 163 Mont. 55, 57, 514 P2d 1330 (1973) where a letter and phone conversation admitting the existence of a debt by a joint debtor was held admissible against another joint debtor. Since clauses (C) and (D) do not mention joint interests, the Commission intends that the existence of this relationship does not give rise to admissions, but should be treated as a declaration against interest under Rule 804(b)(3).

Clause 801(d)(2)(E) provides that statements by coconspirators are admissible as admissions against other conspirators. The clause requires that the statement be made during the course of the conspiracy, which the Commission intends to mean that statements may be admitted only after a foundation establishing the conspiracy has been laid and that statements must be made before the conspiracy terminates. The clause also requires that statements be made in furtherance of the conspiracy. The clause applies to both civil and criminal cases.

This clause is consistent with existing Montana law. Section 93-401-27(6), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides: “evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts:... 6. After proof of the conspiracy, the act or declaration of a conspirator against his coconspirator, and relating to the conspiracy”. Montana case law requires that there be a foundation before a coconspirator’s statement will be admitted. State v. Dotson, 26 Mont. 305, 309, 67 P 938 (1902) and Loncar v. National Union Fire Ins. Co., 84 Mont. 141, 153, 274 P 844 (1929). They require that statements must be made during the existence of the conspiracy and that statements made after the purpose of the conspiracy “has been accomplished and the joint enterprise completed, evidence of acts or declarations of one of the coconspirators is not admissible against another”. State v. Wells, 33 Mont. 291, 297, 83 P 476 (1905); State v. Dotson, supra State v. Allen, 34 Mont. 403, 409, 102 P 988 (1906) and State v. Hopkins, 68 Mont. 504, 509, 219 P 1106 (1923). Finally, they also require that statements must be made in furtherance of the conspiracy. State v. DeWolfe, 29 Mont. 415, 419, 74 P 1048 (1904); State v. Allen, supra 34 Mont. at 409; and State v. Collins, 88 Mont. 514, 526, 294 P 957 (1930). Montana law applies the rule in the statute to civil and criminal cases. Examples of criminal cases are cited above, and civil cases include: Harrington v. Butte and Boston Mining Co., 19 Mont. 411, 419, 48 P 758 (1897); Farleigh v. Kelly, 28 Mont. 421, 432, 72 P 756 (1903) and Lane v. Bailey, 29 Mont. 548, 557, 75 P 191 (1903).

PROOF OF TRUTH OF MATTER ASSERTED

Error in Failing to Dismiss Charge for Failure to Prove Elements of Crime: The defendant was charged with several crimes, including negligent vehicular assault. The District Court admitted the testimony of the investigating officer as nonhearsay for the purpose of showing the officer’s next steps in the investigation. However, the prosecution used this evidence, consisting in part of out-of-court statements by the victim regarding his injuries, to prove the victim was injured, which was a necessary element of the crime charged. This type of evidence cannot be admitted to establish the truth of the matter asserted as was done here, and thus the necessary injury element of negligent vehicular assault was unproven. St. v. Butler, 2021 MT 124, 404 Mont. 213, 487 P.3d 18.

Hearsay Admissible If Offered to Prove Something Other Than Truth of Matter Asserted — Refusal Not Abuse of Discretion: When evidence offered by the defense could have been admitted because it was not being offered for the truth of the matter asserted, it was not an abuse of discretion to refuse evidence when the trial objection was premised on speculation about the contamination of evidence that was unproven. St. v. Brasda, 2021 MT 121, 404 Mont. 178, 486 P.3d 703.

Inconsistent Statements Not Hearsay — Not Used for Truth of Matter Asserted — Not Offered to Prove Intent to Purchase Methamphetamine: The District Court did not abuse its discretion by overruling the defendant’s hearsay objection regarding his two traveling companions’ statements to officers during the defendant’s second jury trial. The state argued that the statements were relevant for their inherent inconsistencies, and not because they went to the truth of the matter asserted. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed with the state, reasoning that the plain meaning of the traveling companions’ statements concerned whether an acquaintance was a family member or close friend of the defendant and his two traveling companions and not whether the trio had met with the acquaintance in Spokane to purchase methamphetamine. Therefore, the two traveling companions’ statements regarding their relationship to the acquaintance constituted nonhearsay and were properly admitted. St. v. Ellerbee, 2019 MT 37, 394 Mont. 289, 434 P.3d 910.

Police Dispatch Vehicle Information Not Hearsay — Used to Show How Officer Started Investigation — Not Used to Prove Vehicle Ownership: The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it admitted testimony concerning vehicle registration information received from police dispatch without a proper foundation for the business records exception. The intent of using the statement from police dispatch was not to prove the truth of who owned the vehicle. Instead, the intent was to explain how the officer proceeded with the investigation and how he came to positively identify the defendant from a prior booking photo. As such, the statement was not hearsay. Billings v. Nolan, 2016 MT 266, 385 Mont. 190, 383 P.3d 219.

Hearsay Objection — Considered by Supreme Court Even Though Not Raised at Previous Trial: The defendant responded to a hearsay objection that was not actually made, giving the District Court the opportunity to consider the objection, which it then overruled. On appeal, the Supreme Court considered the merits of the objection and determined that the evidence at issue was not hearsay and had been properly admitted. Siebken v. Voderberg, 2015 MT 296, 381 Mont. 256, 359 P.3d 1073.

No Error in Admitting Statements Attributed to Homicide Victim: Sanchez contended that the trial court improperly admitted several statements at Sanchez's deliberate homicide trial, including statements that the victim made to her sister and to her neighbor, as well as a note written by the victim implicating Sanchez, on grounds that the statements were inadmissible hearsay. The Supreme Court concluded that the state did not offer the statement made to the sister to prove the truth of the matter asserted, so the statement was not hearsay. The statement to the neighbor was not subject to any hearsay exception, but admission of the statement was harmless error because the state presented other admissible evidence that proved the same facts as the hearsay statement. Similarly, although the trial court incorrectly relied on the "belief of impending death" hearsay exception regarding the note written by the victim, admission of the statement was harmless error in light of other admissible evidence that proved the same facts that the note sought to prove. The trial court was affirmed. St. v. Sanchez, 2008 MT 27, 341 M 240, 177 P3d 444 (2008).

Admission of Mediator's Prejudicial Hearsay Warranting New Trial: Following mediation, the parties entered a formal agreement to settle a District Court action regarding ownership of an aircraft and the aircraft's logbooks. The parties agreed that defendant would execute a promissory note and security agreement in favor of plaintiff to secure an obligation, and the note was secured by defendant's aircraft. When defendant failed to pay the note, plaintiff filed a foreclosure suit. Defendant counterclaimed, alleging that he was fraudulently induced into signing the agreement and that plaintiff had breached the agreement by failing to allow defendant adequate access to the incomplete logbooks. At trial and over objection, defendant testified that the mediator led him to believe that the logbooks were in order when in fact they were incomplete. The jury found for defendant and awarded compensatory and punitive damages, and plaintiff appealed, arguing that the trial court improperly allowed hearsay testimony regarding what the mediator said during negotiations. An error must affect the substantial rights of the appellant to warrant a new trial. In this case, only the mediator could offer first-hand evidence of what the parties were told during negotiations, but the mediator was precluded from testifying pursuant to 26-1-813. The critical evidence tending to prove defendant's counterclaims came from defendant's hearsay recitation of the mediator's statements. The hearsay affected appellant's substantial rights and was therefore prejudicial. The trial court erred in admitting the hearsay portions of defendant's testimony, so the Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a new trial. Murray v. Talmage, 2006 MT 340, 335 M 155, 151 P3d 49 (2006), followed in Cartwright v. Scheels All Sports, Inc., 2013 MT 158, 370 Mont. 369, 310 P.3d 1080, but allowing admission of testimony.

Motion In Limine to Exclude Relevant Statements Made by Defendant During and After Assault Properly Denied: During a bar fight, Brasda brandished a knife and stated that he would use it because he was not afraid to go back to prison. After the fight, Brasda stated to a deputy that he didn't try to stab anyone. At trial, Brasda made a motion in limine to suppress the statements on grounds that they were irrelevant to any fact at issue or, alternatively, that they were statements of other crimes or acts and inadmissible because no exception applied. The trial court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Both statements were clearly relevant and integral to the state's proof of the elements of the crime and to the jury's ability to evaluate witness testimony. Further, the statements were admissible under the mental, emotional, or physical condition exception to the hearsay rule and under the transaction rule in 26-1-103. The court also noted that under St. v. Bauer, 2002 MT 7, 308 M 99, 39 P3d 689 (2002), statements regarding a defendant's history or imprisonment and probationary status that are inextricably linked to circumstances surrounding the crime are admissible. Denial of the motion in limine was proper. St. v. Brasda, 2003 MT 374, 319 M 146, 82 P3d 922 (2003).

Admission of Prejudicial Hearsay Statements Warranting New Trial: The court in defendant's trial admitted statements from two witnesses that were offered solely to prove the truth of the matter asserted. The statements were thus inadmissible hearsay. To decide whether the admission constituted reversible error, the Supreme Court applied the test in St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001), to determine whether the error was structural or trial error, and in this case, the error was trial error. Because it could not be determined whether the jury could have convicted defendant absent the hearsay testimony and because the state did not demonstrate that there was no reasonable possibility that the hearsay testimony contributed to the conviction, defendant's right to a fair trial was prejudiced and a new trial was ordered. St. v. Runs Above, 2003 MT 181, 316 M 421, 73 P3d 161 (2003).

"AA" Meeting Attendance Slips Inadmissible as Hearsay: During a parental rights termination hearing, the appellant appealed the District Court's refusal to admit into evidence documentation of her attendance at alcoholic anonymous (AA) meetings. In affirming the District Court's decision, the Montana Supreme Court ruled that the AA attendance slips were clearly hearsay because they were written assertions made by the leaders of the AA meetings and offered by the appellant as proof of her attendance at the meetings. In re J.M.W.E.H., 1998 MT 18, 287 M 239, 954 P2d 26, 55 St. Rep. 65 (1998).

Admissibility of Victim Testimony as to Sexual Acts Committed by Nondefendants — Not Hearsay: The trial court allowed the victim to testify not only to the sexual acts committed by defendants but also to similar acts committed at about the same time by three other men not on trial. Defendants contended that the court abused its discretion in allowing the testimony because it was hearsay and violated the res gestae doctrine. However, the evidence was admissible because it was closely related to and explanatory of the offense and was therefore part of the transaction, as contemplated under 26-1-103. The testimony was not considered hearsay because the testimony of the other three men was not offered into evidence to prove the sexual acts. St. v. Wing, 264 M 215, 870 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 223 (1994), followed in St. v. Maier, 1999 MT 51, 293 M 403, 977 P2d 298, 56 St. Rep. 208 (1999). See also St. v. Beavers, 1999 MT 260, 296 M 340, 987 P2d 371, 56 St. Rep. 1035 (1999).

Distinction Between Hearsay and Nonhearsay State of Mind Statements: In clarifying the distinction between hearsay and nonhearsay state of mind statements, the Supreme Court relied on U.S. v. Brown, 490 F2d 758 (D.C. Cir. 1973). The distinction turns on whether the statement is evidence that circumstantially or directly proves the declarant's state of mind. If the statement circumstantially proves the declarant's state of mind, then the evidence is not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted and the evidence is not hearsay. Alternatively, when the evidence directly proves the declarant's state of mind, the evidence is introduced to prove the truth of the matter asserted and the evidence is hearsay. St. v. Losson, 262 M 342, 865 P2d 255, 50 St. Rep. 1588 (1993).

Admissibility in Second Trial of Testimony Given by Defendant in First Trial: After having testified in his first trial, which ended in a mistrial, defendant declined to testify in his second trial. The Supreme Court held that the testimony given in the first trial was admissible as evidence in the second trial under both this rule, as an admission of a party-opponent, and under Rule 804, M.R.Ev., as the declaration of an unavailable witness. St. v. Hall, 234 M 57, 761 P2d 1283, 45 St. Rep. 1726 (1988).

Testimony Offered to Show Statement Made and to Evidence State of Mind Not Hearsay: The Supreme Court cited Brown v. Homestake Exploration Corp., 98 M 305, 39 P2d 168 (1934), in holding that when an utterance is offered to evidence the state of mind that ensued in another person in consequence of the utterance, it being obvious that no assertive or testimonial use was sought to be made of it, the utterance was admissible so far as the hearsay rule is concerned. Therefore, a statement offered not to prove the truth of the matter asserted but for the purpose of showing that the statement was made and the resulting state of mind was properly admitted. Moats Trucking Co., Inc. v. Gallatin Dairies, Inc., 231 M 474, 753 P2d 883, 45 St. Rep. 772 (1988), distinguished in Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 259 M 79, 853 P2d 1258, 50 St. Rep. 691 (1993), Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994), and Vincelette v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 1998 MT 259, 291 M 261, 968 P2d 275, 55 St. Rep. 1071 (1998), and followed in Woolf v. Evans, 264 M 480, 872 P2d 777, 51 St. Rep. 355 (1994).

Anonymous Tip — Hearsay — Plain Error: In the prosecution of defendant for conspiracy to commit arson and attempted criminal mischief, admission of the contents of an anonymous tip was error as the tip was hearsay. However, because defendant did not object to admission of the tip at trial, the inquiry of whether admission constituted reversible error extends only to determining whether the admission was plain error affecting substantial rights of the defendant under Rule 103, M.R.Ev. St. v. Cain, 220 M 509, 717 P2d 15, 43 St. Rep. 568 (1986).

Decedent's Statements About His Stress Not Hearsay: Workers' Compensation Court did not err in admitting testimony about statements decedent made on the day of his death. The statements allegedly showed decedent's job-related mental and emotional stress. The court is not bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence, and even if it were, the statements were not hearsay. Their purpose was to show what decedent thought and felt shortly before he died of heart failure. Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160, 43 St. Rep. 310 (1986).

Admission of Hearsay Statements Harmless Error: Recollection by a witness of statements made by out-of-court declarants regarding paternity of an infant in a proceeding to terminate parental rights was hearsay, but was admissible to determine if the infant fell within the definition of "Indian child" under the Indian Child Welfare Act, and not to prove the truth of paternity. Other hearsay objections overruled by the trial court were properly raised, but the court failed to reverse the District Court since the erroneous admission of evidence was harmless. The objectionable statements were cumulative and amply corroborated by competent evidence. In re R.M.B., Youth in Need of Care, 213 M 29, 689 P2d 281, 41 St. Rep. 1925 (1984).

Rape Testimony Not Held Hearsay — Recent Fabrication: Where the defendant was charged with sexual intercourse without consent and offered the defense of consent by the victim, the court did not err in admitting into evidence the statements of two friends and a rape counselor recounting statements of the victim. The first two witnesses' statements, recalling that the victim called the defendant a "son of a bitch" and asking "Why is God doing this to me?", were not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted and were therefore not hearsay. The rape counselor's testimony repeating the statements of the victim was offered after the defendant's attempt to impeach the testimony of the victim. The rape counselor's testimony was clearly offered to rebut a charge of recent fabrication and is therefore not hearsay. St. v. Mackie, 191 M 138, 622 P2d 673, 38 St. Rep. 86 (1981), followed in St. v. Hibbs, 239 M 308, 780 P2d 182, 46 St. Rep. 1705 (1989).

Observation of Signing Stolen Property Report: A police officer testified that he traveled in order to observe the owner of a stolen vehicle signing a stolen property report. The testimony was inadmissible hearsay because it was testimony about an extrajudicial statement in an effort to prove the truth of the statement, i.e., to show that a theft was committed. The actions of the officer in traveling and observing the signing are not admissible, not because they are hearsay but because those actions are irrelevant, having no probative value to the case at hand. In re D.W.L., A Youth, 189 M 267, 615 P2d 887, 37 St. Rep. 1452 (1980), followed in Heisler v. Boule, 226 M 332, 735 P2d 516, 44 St. Rep. 698 (1987).

Hearsay — Waiver of Objection: In an action by the respondent for damages occasioned by wrongful discharge from employment, the court correctly received a copy of a report of the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) into evidence over the objection of appellant that the report constituted hearsay. The report was not hearsay since it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but only to show that the EEOC had not terminated its intervention. Council for appellant also waived any valid hearsay objection by agreeing to a pretrial stipulation of exhibits. Strong v. St., 183 M 410, 600 P2d 191, 36 St. Rep. 1665 (1979).

Inadmissible Hearsay — Child's Statement: The court committed reversible error when it allowed witnesses to testify, over defendant's objection, to statements made by a 4-year-old child that defendant had beaten her and her sister, because the alleged statement went to the very facts which the state was trying to prove, was offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and was therefore inadmissible hearsay. St. v. Campbell, 176 M 525, 579 P2d 1231 (1978), distinguished in In re S.M. & P.L.M., 2001 MT 11, 304 M 102, 19 P3d 213 (2001).

PRIOR STATEMENT BY WITNESS

Testimony From Civil Hearing Improperly Admitted at Criminal Trial — Motive to Develop Testimony Different: The defendant was charged with felony assault with a weapon and misdemeanor partner or family member assault after allegedly pointing a gun at his wife and firing to the side of her head. In a separate dissolution of marriage proceeding, the wife sought an order of protection and the District Court held a hearing on the matter. The defendant, unrepresented at this hearing, did not contest the order or cross-examine the wife. At the subsequent criminal trial, the wife did not appear; however, the District Court admitted her prior testimony under Rule 804(b)(1)(B), M.R.Ev. On appeal, the defendant argued that this violated his confrontation clause rights. The Supreme Court agreed with the defendant, holding that in order to introduce former testimony, the defendant must have had an opportunity to examine the declarant and a similar motive to develop the declarant's testimony. While an opportunity to examine the wife existed, the order of protection hearing and the criminal trial were not similar motives to develop testimony. St. v. Pingree, 2015 MT 187, 379 Mont. 521, 352 P.3d 1086.

Reasonable Apprehension Supported by Prior Inconsistent Statements and Other Evidence Sufficient for Conviction: A victim's statements just after an alleged aggravated assault and independent, reliable evidence corroborating those statements were sufficient to support reasonable apprehension of serious bodily injury even though the victim later retracted those statements. In addition, events occurring around the time of the aggravated assault contributed to the reasonableness of the victim's fear of serious bodily injury but did not result in the charging of a "continuous" offense. Viewed as a whole, the evidence was sufficient for a reasonable jury to find aggravated assault had occurred during a single incident. St. v. Torres, 2013 MT 101, 369 Mont. 516, 299 P.3d 804.

Counsel's Failure to Object to Competency of Child Witnesses, Introduction of Prior Consistent and Inconsistent Statements, and Therapist Testimony in Incest Case — No Ineffective Assistance: The defendant appealed his conviction for incest on the basis of ineffective assistance of counsel due to defense counsel's alleged failure to object to the competency of child witnesses, the introduction of a DVD containing the victim's prior consistent and inconsistent statements, and the testimony of therapists. The Supreme Court found no merit in the defendant's ineffective assistance claim, concluding no objections were warranted to challenge (1) the competency of the child witnesses, as discrepancies in testimony did not constitute grounds for a challenge under Rule 601, M.R.Ev.; (2) the DVD, as it was admissible under St. v. Lawrence, 285 Mont. 140, 948 P.2d 186 (1997); or (3) the testimony of therapists because Montana law allows therapist testimony regarding a child's credibility in a sexual abuse case, as long as the victim testifies, the victim's credibility is attacked, and the therapist is properly qualified. St. v. Howard, 2011 MT 246, 362 Mont. 196, 265 P.3d 606.

Failure to Object to Prior Consistent Hearsay Testimony of Witnesses Not Considered Ineffective Assistance: Notti contended that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to object to the prior consistent hearsay testimony of four state witnesses, asserting that the witness statements were consistent with the declarant's testimony, were not offered to rebut an express or implied charge of subsequent fabrication, and were thus inadmissible hearsay. The District Court found no error. The Supreme Court examined the statements of each witness and affirmed. One statement was admissible as an excited utterance hearsay exception; one statement was admissible as a hearsay exception for medical treatment or diagnosis; the admission of one statement was harmless error because it added no substantive content to the declarant's testimony; and one statement was not a repetition of any prior consistent statement. Notti could not show prejudice based on admission of any of the statements, and thus his ineffective assistance claim failed. Notti v. St., 2008 MT 20, 341 M 183, 176 P.3d 1040 (2008).

Trial Error in Admitting Written Witness Statements Based on Failure to Show That Prior Statements Made Before Alleged Motive to Fabricate — Error Harmless: At McOmber's trial for felony solicitation to issue a bad check, the trial court admitted a written statement and a police interview transcript made by a testifying witness. Admission of the evidence as a prior consistent statement was error because the state failed to show that the statements were made before the witness's alleged motive to fabricate occurred. However, pursuant to the test in St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P.3d 735 (2001), the error was trial error rather than structural error and was therefore subject to harmless error review. Upon review, the Supreme Court concluded that the state had demonstrated, qualitatively and in comparison with the witness's testimony, that there was no possibility that the erroneously admitted prior consistent statements contributed to McOmber's conviction, so the error was harmless, and the conviction was affirmed. St. v. McOmber, 2007 MT 340, 340 M 262, 173 P.3d 690 (2007). See also St. v. Smith, 2021 MT 148, 404 Mont. 245, 488 P.3d 531, St. v. Oliver, 2022 MT 104, 408 Mont. 519, 510 P.3d 1218, and St. v. Pitkanen, 2022 MT 231, 410 Mont. 503, 520 P.3d 305.

No Error in Prohibiting Impeachment of Witness With Another Person's Out-of-Court Statement: Defendant argued that he was not allowed to impeach the testimony of a detective during cross-examination by showing that the detective's characterization of a victim's statement was inconsistent with the victim's prior statement to the police. The state objected to the victim's out-of-court statement as hearsay, and the trial court sustained the objection. Defendant argued on appeal that because the prior statement was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but rather to impeach the detective's testimony, the prior statement was not hearsay and contended that the ruling violated his right to confront the witness. The Supreme Court disagreed. Error may not be predicated upon a ruling that excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected and an offer of proof is made. In this case, no substantial right was affected and no offer of proof was made, so the District Court did not abuse its discretion by excluding the victim's prior statement. St. v. Skinner, 2007 MT 175, 338 M 197, 163 P3d 399 (2007).

Admissibility of Prior Statements Made Before Motivation to Fabricate Arose: Teters contended that prior statements made by his stepdaughter to a child protective services worker regarding Teters' sexual contact with her were inadmissible because she may have been improperly influenced by her mother, who was involved in a contested divorce with Teters. The Supreme Court applied the four factors in St. v. Mensing, 1999 MT 303, 297 M 172, 991 P2d 950 (1999), to determine whether the prior statements were admissible. The first three factors were met because the declarant testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination and because the witness's statements were consistent with the declarant's testimony. The fourth factor requires that the statement rebut an express or implied charge of subsequent fabrication, improper influence, or motive. Here, the fourth factor was also met because the statements were made prior to the time that the alleged motive to fabricate arose, i.e., the beginning of divorce proceedings. Testimony regarding the prior statements was therefore properly admitted. St. v. Teters, 2004 MT 137, 321 M 379, 91 P3d 559 (2004). See also St. v. Lunstad, 259 M 512, 857 P2d 723 (1993), and St. v. Champagne, 2013 MT 190, 371 Mont. 35, 305 P.3d 61.

No Plain Error in Presenting Different Stories of Same Witness for Jury's Consideration: At Daniels' trial for robbery, witnesses presented inconsistent testimony regarding Daniels' involvement. The state was entitled to point out the inconsistencies to the jury, and the jury was entitled to choose which version to believe. There was no fundamental unfairness or error in presenting different stories of the same witness for the jury's consideration, and thus Daniels was not entitled to consideration on appeal under the plain error doctrine. St. v. Daniels, 2003 MT 247, 317 M 331, 77 P3d 224 (2003).

Evidence of Flight Unacceptable as Sole Corroboration of Inconsistent Statement: After Giant's conviction of aggravated assault for attacking his wife in her home, he moved for dismissal on grounds that the evidence was insufficient to convict him as a matter of law because evidence of flight was the only corroboration of the prior inconsistent statements of the victim identifying him as the assailant. The victim initially identified Giant as the assailant in pretrial statements, but at trial, she identified her son as the attacker. No forensic testing was performed on evidence seized from the home, and there was no other testimony to corroborate either statement. The state argued, and the trial court agreed, that undisputed testimony of Giant's flight behavior was sufficient to corroborate the victim's prior inconsistent statements and that evidence seized from the home matched her statements. When considering a motion for a directed verdict to determine whether any rational trier of fact could find the elements of a crime satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, the Supreme Court will consider trial testimony and the evidence properly admitted and before the jury according to the criminal rules of evidence, but will not consider potential unintroduced evidence or other evidence outside the trial setting. A criminal conviction cannot be sustained when the only evidence of some essential element of a crime is a prior inconsistent statement. In Montana, all prior inconsistent statements are admissible as substantive evidence under subsection (d)(1)(A) of this rule; however, prior inconsistent statements admitted as substantive evidence of guilt must be corroborated in order to sustain a conviction. Evidence of flight is not sufficient in itself to prove guilt or to support a conviction as a matter of law because evidence of flight by itself is as consistent with innocence as it is with guilt. Therefore, evidence of flight cannot be the sole corroboration of a prior inconsistent statement admitted as substantive evidence of guilt. Here, the physical evidence recovered from the home and photographs of the victim's injury, which would normally be sufficient corroborating evidence, were insufficient because they did not corroborate the essential element of identity because the victim identified another possible assailant. Further, the victim's prior inconsistent statements alone were insufficient as a matter of law to support Giant's conviction, in light of evidence that the victim stopped cooperating with the County Attorney's office when Giant was released on bail and asked that the case be dismissed after her divorce proceedings against Giant were voluntarily dismissed—actions that affected the reliability of the prior inconsistent statements but did not independently corroborate the statements. Giant's conviction was reversed. St. v. Giant, 2001 MT 245, 307 M 74, 37 P3d 49 (2001). See also St. v. White Water, 194 M 85, 634 P2d 636 (1981).

Recorded Present Sense Impression of Partner Assault Victim Properly Admitted: At Hope's trial for partner assault, the District Court admitted into evidence a note that the victim wrote prior to the assault, describing Hope's angry mood and the victim's apprehension about further problems that might arise. Hope contended error in admission of the note because the note did not meet the requirements of the recorded exception to the hearsay rule in Rule 803, M.R.Ev. The state argued that the note was properly admitted under the recorded present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. A recorded present sense impression is a written assertion describing or explaining an event or condition while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition or immediately thereafter. Further, the note did not impermissibly provide the jury with testimonial material regarding Hope's general character, or give undue emphasis to the critical elements of the state's case, because it described the victim's perception of Hope's anger rather than the assault itself. The trial court correctly advised the jury that it could give the note whatever weight that it considered appropriate, and the note was properly admitted. St. v. Hope, 2001 MT 207, 306 M 334, 33 P3d 629 (2001).

Failure of Counsel to Object to Introduction of Inconsistent Prior Statements on Confrontation Grounds Not Considered Ineffective Assistance: Jenkins was convicted of deliberate homicide, aggravated kidnapping, and robbery after having been implicated in the crimes based in part on statements made to police and at trial by his wife, Mary. Mary suffered from dementia related to Alzheimer's disease and periodic memory lapses. As a result, in some pretrial interviews, she answered questions with declarative statements while in other interviews, even when asked the same or similar questions, she responded that she didn't know or couldn't remember. Nevertheless, at a pretrial hearing, it was determined that she knew the difference between truth and falsity, could express herself in court, and was competent to testify. At trial, she exhibited the same behavior. On direct examination, the prosecutor asked many of the same questions asked during the pretrial interviews, and although she answered some questions definitively, most of her testimony was that she didn't know or couldn't remember. On cross-examination, she often retracted the definitive answers she gave on direct examination, saying again that she could not remember. Following her testimony, the trial court allowed the prosecution to introduce the content of Mary's pretrial interviews through the testimony of the interviewing officers pursuant to the prior inconsistent statement exception to the hearsay rule, as set out in subsection (d)(1)(A) of this rule. Jenkins objected on evidentiary grounds, but not on confrontation grounds, so the issue was not preserved for appeal. In a petition for postconviction relief, Jenkins claimed that he was denied effective assistance of counsel because his attorney should have objected on confrontation grounds. The District Court denied the petition, holding that there was no confrontation clause violation and that even if the objection had been made, it would not have affected the outcome of the trial. Jenkins then appealed the denial of the petition for postconviction relief. The state contended that Jenkins' right to confront witnesses was satisfied by his opportunity to cross-examine Mary and demonstrate to the jury her poor and unreliable memory. The Supreme Court concurred. The implications of admitting prior inconsistent statements was addressed in Calif. v. Green, 399 US 149 (1970), in which it was held that the confrontation clause is not violated by admitting a declarant's out-of-court statements as long as the declarant is testifying as a witness and is subject to full and effective cross-examination. Further, under U.S. v. Owens, 484 US 554 (1988), the confrontation clause guarantees only an opportunity for effective cross-examination, not cross-examination that is effective in a way that the defendant might wish. Even though Mary suffered from memory lapses, she was competent, appeared at trial, and was subjected to unrestricted cross-examination, giving Jenkins ample opportunity to demonstrate her inability to recall past events and giving the jury the opportunity to observe her testimony and judge the reliability of her memory as it pertained to both her in-court and out-of-court statements. Jenkins failed to show that an objection on confrontation grounds would have been sustained, therefore failing to demonstrate that his defense was prejudiced by his trial counsel's failure to preserve the issue for appeal. Jenkins was thus not denied effective assistance of counsel and his petition for postconviction relief was properly denied. St. v. Jenkins, 2001 MT 79, 305 M 95, 23 P3d 201 (2001).

Improper Admission of Hearsay Regarding Rape Victim's Prior Statements — Harmless Error: Four requirements must be met before a witness may testify as to a declarant's prior testimony. It was undisputed that in Mensing's trial for rape, the first three requirements were met: (1) the victim testified at trial; (2) the victim was available for cross-examination about her prior statements; and (3) the victim's statements to which arresting officers were testifying were consistent with the victim's testimony. However, the fourth requirement, that the statements must rebut an express or implied charge of fabrication, improper influence, or motive, was not met. Mensing made none of the requisite charges against the victim, and as a result, the officers' testimony regarding the victim's testimony was inadmissible hearsay and was improperly admitted. However, the hearsay statements were separately admitted through the victim's testimony, and Mensing had an opportunity to cross-examine regarding the statements at issue. Therefore, although the District Court abused its discretion in allowing the officers' testimony regarding prior consistent statements made by the victim, the error did not prejudice Mensing and was harmless. St. v. Mensing, 1999 MT 303, 297 M 172, 991 P2d 950, 56 St. Rep. 1220 (1999), following St. v. Veis, 1998 MT 162, 289 M 450, 962 P2d 1153 (1998).

Inflammatory Statements as Part of Same Transaction That Formed Basis of Criminal Offense Properly Admitted as Part of Res Gestae: Beavers contended that the trial court erred in admitting inflammatory statements made by a passenger in Beavers' car immediately after Beavers was stopped for speeding and just prior to his attempt to avoid arrest on an outstanding warrant. The Supreme Court held that the statements were properly admitted under the res gestae rule, along with the evidence of resisting arrest and the evidence of Beavers' felony warrant and classification as an escape risk, because they were part of the same transaction that included the acts that formed the basis of the underlying offense. Failure to admit the statements and evidence of flight would have left the jury with an incomplete picture of all the acts that transpired to result in the charge against Beavers. Relevance of the evidence outweighed any possible prejudice. St. v. Beavers, 1999 MT 260, 296 M 340, 987 P2d 371, 56 St. Rep. 1035 (1999). See also St. v. Wing, 264 M 215, 870 P2d 1368, 51 St. Rep. 223 (1994).

Investigating Officer's Written Statement of Interview With Victim, Upon Which Victim Wrote Comments: The victim's statement to the investigating officer, upon which the victim had written comments, was initially brought before the jury by the defense for impeachment purposes. The defense attempted to use the written comments as a prior inconsistent statement. However, the comments that the victim wrote on the written statement proved to be fairly consistent with her trial testimony. A prior consistent statement that predates the motive to lie is admissible into evidence. Thus, the state was entitled to use the statement as a prior consistent statement to rehabilitate the witness, and the statement was admissible. St. v. Johnson, 1998 MT 107, 288 M 513, 958 P2d 1182, 55 St. Rep. 408 (1998).

Propriety of Giving Jury Copy of Investigating Officer's Written Statement of Interview With Crime Victim, Upon Which Victim Wrote Comments: The trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the jury's request, during jury deliberations, for a copy of the investigating officer's written statement of his interview with the victim, upon which the victim had written comments and corrections. The jury was interested in the victim's comments and corrections; it was not asking to review trial testimony, which would have violated the case law rule that a jury should not be given a witness's testimony transcript because undue emphasis could thereby be placed on the testimony of that witness. St. v. Johnson, 1998 MT 107, 288 M 513, 958 P2d 1182, 55 St. Rep. 408 (1998).

Inconsistent Statements Both Before and at Trial — Use of Pretrial Statements at Trial: In statements taped before trial and at trial, a witness sometimes directly stated what happened and at other times said that she could not remember. The witness was diagnosed as having dementia resulting in memory lapses and testified at trial to having memory lapses and to sometimes being able to remember something and sometimes not being able to remember it. Thus, both the statements before trial and the statements at trial were inconsistent. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in: (1) concluding that her failures to remember certain things at trial were inconsistent with pretrial statements clearly stating what happened in regard to those matters; (2) ruling that the state was trying to impeach her by using prior inconsistent statements, not trying to bolster her credibility by using prior consistent statements; and (3) admitting some prior consistent statements along with the prior inconsistent ones for reasons of judicial efficiency and assisting the jury. The District Court had ruled that the statements were so mixed together that it was probably necessary to allow all the statements in order for the jury to understand what was said. St. v. Lawrence, 285 M 140, 948 P2d 186, 54 St. Rep. 1082 (1997). See also companion case St. v. Jenkins, 285 M 131, 948 P2d 204, 54 St. Rep. 1078 (1997), St. v. Howard, 2011 MT 246, 362 Mont. 196, 265 P.3d 606, and St. v. Pound, 2014 MT 143, 375 Mont. 241, 326 P.3d 422.

Impeachment With Deposition Testimony Not Allowed if Not Clearly Inconsistent: The District Court did not manifestly abuse its discretion in refusing to allow the impeachment of a witness with deposition testimony when the deposition testimony and the trial testimony were not clearly inconsistent. Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994).

Declarant to Testify and Be Subject to Cross-Examination Before Prior Statements Admissible: Following arrest, Brandon was interviewed by police. During trial, Brandon attempted to have a transcript of the statement admitted into evidence as an exhibit, but the exhibit was refused. On appeal, Brandon argued that the statement should have been admitted under this rule because as a prior statement by a witness, it was not hearsay and was properly offered to rebut an express or implied charge against the declarant of subsequent fabrication, improper influence, or motive. However, before prior statements qualify for admission, the declarant must testify and be subject to cross-examination. In this case, Brandon had not testified at the time that the statement was offered, and the statement was thus clearly inadmissible. St. v. Brandon, 264 M 231, 870 P2d 734, 51 St. Rep. 244 (1994).

Impeachment Required to Trigger Applicability of Rule: This rule applies only when the declarant's in-court testimony has been impeached by another party's allegations of subsequent fabrication, improper influence, or motive. In this case, the trial court denied the state's request to present prior consistent statements to the jury during the state's case in chief. Thereafter, the state questioned defendant and asked him directly if he believed the complainant was lying. When he answered affirmatively, the trial court held that defendant, by suggesting fabrication, opened the door for complainant's prior consistent statements to be admitted. However, the state cannot put a defendant in this tenuous position and then introduce prior consistent statements, which were ruled inadmissible hearsay during the case in chief, to rebut the only answer the defendant can give consistent with his defense. The state cannot use this type of cross-examination to get evidence admitted that was held inadmissible prior to cross-examination, nor can the state itself open the door for opinion testimony regarding the truthfulness of its own witness. St. v. Lunstad, 259 M 512, 857 P2d 723, 50 St. Rep. 916 (1993), following St. v. Webb, 252 M 248, 828 P2d 1351 (1992), distinguishing St. v. Scheffelman, 250 M 334, 820 P2d 1293 (1992), and followed in St. v. Fina, 273 M 171, 902 P2d 30, 52 St. Rep. 887 (1995), and St. v. Maier, 1999 MT 51, 293 M 403, 977 P2d 298, 56 St. Rep. 208 (1999). St. v. Lunstad was followed, with regard to the requirement for a statement to be made before the declarant had a motive to fabricate, in St. v. Veis, 1998 MT 162, 289 M 450, 962 P2d 1153, 55 St. Rep. 651 (1998).

Exclusion of Testimony Presented to Witness Prejudicial to Defendant: Defendant, Stewart, contended that the trial court erred in excluding, on the basis that it was hearsay, testimony that indicated that the state's main witness had authorized Stewart to sign the witness's name to a document. Defendant contended that the testimony would show a prior inconsistent statement by the witness and thus was proper impeachment. The Supreme Court held that the exclusion of the testimony was error and had prejudiced Stewart's case. St. v. Stewart, 253 M 475, 833 P2d 1085, 49 St. Rep. 540 (1992).

Prior Inconsistent Statement: At trial, defendant's 12-year-old daughter testified that she could not remember what defendant had said at the time of the incident and that she did not remember defendant beating the victim. The District Court did not err in admitting the daughter's prior statement. Her trial testimony presented one claimed memory lapse and one positive contradiction. Her prior statement was therefore inconsistent within the meaning of this rule and was admissible as substantive evidence. St. v. Devlin, 251 M 278, 825 P2d 185, 48 St. Rep. 1093 (1991), followed in St. v. Maier, 1999 MT 51, 293 M 403, 977 P2d 298, 56 St. Rep. 208 (1999). See also St. v. Pound, 2014 MT 143, 375 Mont. 241, 326 P.3d 422.

Victim's Prior Statements Admissible — No Motive to Fabricate: During cross-examination, the attorney for a defendant charged with sexual abuse attempted to challenge the victim by claiming that she had a motive to fabricate abuse and was subject to improper influence by the state's attorney. The state was allowed to show prior out-of-court statements made by the victim that were consistent with her testimony. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court did not err in admitting the prior statements because the victim's statement that she did not want the abuser to return to her household and continue the pattern of abuse provided the impetus to report abuse but was not evidence of a motive to lie or fabricate. St. v. Scheffelman, 250 M 334, 820 P2d 1293, 48 St. Rep. 1023 (1991), cited in St. v. Hensley, 250 M 478, 821 P2d 1029, 48 St. Rep. 1018 (1991).

Out-of-Court Statement Consistent With Trial Testimony Properly Excluded as Hearsay: Defendant sought to introduce deposition testimony of the grandmother of a victim of sexual intercourse without consent in order to impeach the victim's trial testimony regarding defendant's motives for the sexual contact. However, because the victim's out-of-court statement to her grandmother was not inconsistent with her trial testimony, it was properly excluded as hearsay. St. v. Goodwin, 249 M 1, 813 P2d 953, 48 St. Rep. 539 (1991).

Prior Consistent Statements by Victim of Sexual Assault, as Repeated by Witness, Properly Admitted: An investigator for the Department of Family Services (functions transferred in 1995 to Department of Public Health and Human Services and Department of Corrections) was called to interview a 15-year-old girl who made statements to the investigator implicating her father in her sexual assault. Defendant was charged with sexually assaulting his 15-year-old daughter. At trial and over the objection of defendant, the investigator repeated the out-of-court statements made by the daughter to the investigator. On appeal by defendant following his conviction, the Supreme Court held that the statements were properly admitted because they were not hearsay under this rule and because all of the requirements of this rule were satisfied: the declarant, the daughter, testified at trial; she was subject to cross-examination; and the witness investigator's testimony was consistent with the daughter's. The statements were used to rebut an allegation of fabrication when the defense attacked the daughter's credibility in opening and on cross-examination, and the statements were usable in the state's case in chief for that reason. St. v. Medina, 245 M 25, 798 P2d 1032, 47 St. Rep. 1832 (1990).

Witness's Prior Statement Implicating Defendant: The defendant argued that the primary reason the prosecution called a witness was to impeach that witness with a prior statement that implicated the defendant. The defendant relied on a federal evidentiary rule that has not been adopted by Montana, indicating that the prior statement was inadmissible. The Supreme Court ruled that the statement was admissible because the witness was subject to cross-examination by the defendant. St. v. Sorensen, 243 M 321, 792 P2d 363, 47 St. Rep. 873 (1990).

Victim's Prior Statements Admissible: The defendant in a rape case argued that the victim's out-of-court statements to others were inadmissible as hearsay. The Supreme Court held that they were admissible to rebut the defendant's attacks on the victim's credibility. St. v. Newman, 242 M 315, 790 P2d 971, 47 St. Rep. 711 (1990).

Deposition Testimony Inadmissible After Close of Trial: Workers' compensation claimant did not request the inclusion of his deposition testimony until after the trial was concluded. These hearsay statements were not admissible because the claimant did not request their inclusion at the trial, thereby giving the insurer the opportunity to rebut the claimant's statements, nor do they fall under one of the exceptions in Rule 803 or 804, M.R.Ev. To allow testimony by the claimant by admission of the deposition after the trial ended would effectively have denied the insurer an opportunity to challenge the statements made by the claimant in the deposition. Varela v. Petroleum Cas. Co., 237 M 300, 773 P2d 299, 46 St. Rep. 819 (1989).

Witness' Statement Not Referred to in Affidavit — No Ex Post Facto Problem — Admissible as Prior Inconsistent Statement: Defendant was convicted of operating a motor vehicle while designated a habitual traffic offender. Proceeding pro se, the defendant argued on appeal that failure to refer to a witness' statement in the affidavit supporting leave to file information constituted an ex post facto problem. The court held that he simply misunderstood that legal theory. The court further held that the statement, which asserted that defendant drove from Great Falls to Loma, was admissible as a prior inconsistent statement because the witness testified at trial that he, not the defendant, drove that distance. St. v. Grant, 217 M 357, 704 P2d 1064, 42 St. Rep. 1248 (1985).

Admissibility of Prior Inconsistent Statements — Impeachment Unnecessary: Under subsection (d)(1)(A) of this section, prior inconsistent statements of a declarant are admissible whether or not the declarant has been impeached by either side. St. v. Anderson, 211 M 272, 686 P2d 193, 41 St. Rep. 1357 (1984).

Prior Inconsistent Statements:

Federal Writ of Habeas Corpus granted for violation of defendant's confrontation rights (sixth amendment, U.S. Const.) because a prior statement by the employee, who had no genuine recollection of the substance of the prior statement, should be excluded as affecting right of cross-examination. Creekmore v. District Court, 571 F. Supp. 992, 40 St. Rep. 1638 (D.C. Mont. 1983), reversed in 745 F2d 1236 (1984).

In an attempt to obtain more money from an insurance company, Creekmore told an insurance company employee that he had taken a polygraph test through the Great Falls police and had been cleared of any wrongdoing. The employee contacted the police and was told that Creekmore had failed to keep his appointment to take the test. At trial the employee and a Great Falls police detective testified. The testimony indicated that the employee had made prior inconsistent statements. The court found no error in admitting the testimony. St. v. Creekmore, 196 M 187, 640 P2d 439, 39 St. Rep. 22 (1982).

Subsequent Insurance Application — Not Prior Inconsistent Statement: Plaintiff applied to defendant for health coverage for himself and his family. He met with an agent who filled out the application, which was signed by both parties. Plaintiff was not given a copy of the application or contract and was not advised that the application was part of the contract. The application was accepted. The family contracted medical bills which defendant declined to pay, claiming that the bills stemmed from "preexisting conditions" not covered by the contract. Defendant then unilaterally canceled the contract, claiming plaintiff had misrepresented his family's health in the application. Plaintiff sued for damages. Immediately after plaintiff's policy was canceled, they applied for similar coverage with Blue Shield. On that application plaintiff denied that any family member had some of the preexisting conditions. Defendant tried to introduce the Blue Shield application to impeach plaintiff with a prior inconsistent statement. Generally, information contained in a subsequent application for insurance is not admissible. Here, there was no convincing evidence that the applications were inconsistent. If the applications were not accurate and not inconsistent, they could not be used as evidence of a prior inconsistent statement. The Blue Shield application was properly excluded. Weber v. Blue Cross of Mont., 196 M 454, 643 P2d 198, 39 St. Rep. 245 (1982).

Discretion to Determine Statement's Reliability: Although the determination of reliability of a prior inconsistent statement is for the trial judge's discretion, he must view the situation in a light most favorable to the party offering the statement in evidence. St. v. White Water, 194 M 85, 634 P2d 636, 38 St. Rep. 1664 (1981).

Guilt Based Solely on Unreliable Prior Inconsistent Statement: An unreliable prior inconsistent statement of a witness should not be the sole substantive evidence upon which a jury is allowed to base guilt, and a conviction supported only by a prior inconsistent statement should not be allowed to stand. St. v. White Water, 194 M 85, 634 P2d 636, 38 St. Rep. 1664 (1981), followed in St. v. Gommenginger, 242 M 265, 790 P2d 455, 47 St. Rep. 681 (1990), and clarified in St. v. Giant, 2001 MT 245, 307 M 74, 37 P3d 49 (2001), which required that prior inconsistent statements admitted as substantive evidence of guilt be corroborated in order to sustain a conviction. Gommenginger was distinguished in St. v. Neary, 284 M 409, 944 P2d 750, 54 St. Rep. 942 (1997). See also St. v. Charlo, 226 M 213, 735 P2d 278, 44 St. Rep. 597 (1987), St. v. Stringer, 271 M 367, 897 P2d 1063, 52 St. Rep. 473 (1995), and St. v. Oliver, 2022 MT 104, 408 Mont. 519, 510 P.3d 1218.

Statutory Rape Not Proved Solely by Unreliable Prior Inconsistent Statement: Charge of sexual intercourse without consent was properly dismissed at the end of the state's presentation of its case where the only evidence upon which conviction could be based was an unreliable prior statement of the alleged victim that was inconsistent with her testimony at trial in which she repudiated the statement. St. v. White Water, 194 M 85, 634 P2d 636, 38 St. Rep. 1664 (1981).

Unsworn Statement by Person With Learning Disability: Although an interview between the Sheriff and the alleged crime victim was witnessed by a social worker, during which interview the Sheriff received a statement sought to be admitted by prosecution as a prior statement inconsistent to alleged victim's testimony at trial, the circumstances under which the statement was made, including that it was not made under oath and that the maker had a learning disability and was susceptible to agreement with suggestions made to her when she could not clearly verbalize her thoughts, tended to indicate the probable unreliability of the statement. St. v. White Water, 194 M 85, 634 P2d 636, 38 St. Rep. 1664 (1981).

When Hearsay Excluded — Repudiated Statements — Alternatives to Admission of Hearsay: A defendant convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault alleged error on appeal relating to testimony of a prosecution witness' former attorney, which was offered but excluded at trial. The testimony related to the alleged denial of the right to counsel to one of the prosecution witnesses and the subsequent use of her statements to the police incriminating the defendant even though she had repudiated them. The Supreme Court on review held that the trial court ruling had been correct. The excluded testimony was inadmissible hearsay. In upholding the District Court ruling, the Supreme Court noted that the defendant could have questioned the police about prior inconsistent statements and he could have questioned the witness herself. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981), followed in St. v. Stuit, 277 M 227, 921 P2d 866, 53 St. Rep. 607 (1996).

Inconsistent Statements: A witness' answer to a question on redirect was that he made a statement to the police that he had not made a statement to anyone authorizing them to take his stereo. This answer includes two statements that must be analyzed within the hearsay rule. The first part of the answer that he "told the police" is not hearsay under Rule 801, M.R.Ev., because it was inconsistent with his prior testimony and it was offered to rebut the state's implied charge of subsequent fabrication, improper influence, or motive. The fact that he had not made a statement authorizing anyone to remove the stereo is admissible under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule under Rule 803, M.R.Ev. St. v. Martinez, 188 M 271, 613 P2d 974, 37 St. Rep. 982 (1980).

Foundation for Prior Inconsistent Statement — Impeaching of Own Witness: When the prosecution called the declarant as a witness and questioned him as to the statement in question knowing that the witness would deny making the statement, the prosecution was not bound by the testimony of the witness and could thereafter impeach the declarant's denial of making the statement through the testimony of a coconspirator regarding a prior inconsistent statement. St. v. Fitzpatrick, 186 M 187, 606 P2d 1343, 37 St. Rep. 194 (1980), followed in St. v. Pease, 222 M 455, 724 P2d 153, 43 St. Rep. 1417 (1986).

Hearsay Exceptions Not Violative of Right to Confront Witnesses When Declarant Subject to Cross-Examination: A defendant is not denied the right to confront the witnesses against him by the admission under Rule 801, M.R.Ev., of a prior inconsistent statement made by a third person or a statement made by a coconspirator, implicating the defendant when the declarant testified as a witness and was subject to full and effective cross-examination. St. v. Fitzpatrick, 186 M 187, 606 P2d 1343, 37 St. Rep. 194 (1980), followed in St. v. Pease, 222 M 455, 754 P2d 153, 43 St. Rep. 1417 (1986), and St. v. Charlo, 226 M 213, 735 P2d 278, 44 St. Rep. 597 (1987). See also St. v. Maier, 1999 MT 51, 293 M 403, 977 P2d 298, 56 St. Rep. 208 (1999), followed in St. v. Baker, 2013 MT 113, 370 Mont. 43, 300 P.3d 696, in which the Supreme Court noted that the right to confront includes only the opportunity for cross-examination, not any guarantee that it will elicit helpful evidence, and in St. v. Pound, 2014 MT 143, 375 Mont. 241, 326 P.3d 422.

Prior Inconsistent Statement Not Required to Be Made Under Oath: Although Rule 801(d)(1)(A), M.R.Ev., is based on 801(d), Federal Rules of Evidence, it differs from its federal counterpart in that the federal rule requires that a prior inconsistent statement was one made under oath subject to a penalty of perjury. The Montana rule deletes that requirement as unnecessary and harmful to the purpose of the rule. Thus, when the declarant testified at the trial and was subjected to cross-examination concerning the prior statement, the testimony of a coconspirator that was inconsistent with the statement of the declarant is admissible despite the fact that the statement was made in the declarant's home rather than in a legal proceeding under oath. St. v. Fitzpatrick, 186 M 187, 606 P2d 1343, 37 St. Rep. 194 (1980), followed in St. v. Charlo, 226 M 213, 735 P2d 278, 44 St. Rep. 597 (1987).

ADMISSION BY PARTY OPPONENT

Text Messages Properly Admitted — Evidence Showing Conspiracy Involving Defendant Properly Admitted Under Coconspirator Exception — Probative Value Outweighed Danger of Unfair Prejudice — Statements Against Interest and Statements by Party Opponent — Defendant's Jury Instruction Regarding Reasonable Doubt Properly Refused. St. v. Wienke, 2022 MT 116, 409 Mont. 52, 511 P.3d 990.

Balancing Factors Applied — No Speedy Trial Violation — Witness Reading from Transcript Error Not Grounds for Reversal: The District Court did not err in balancing the four speedy trial factors as set out in St. v. Ariegwe, 2007 MT 204, 338 Mont. 442, 167 P.3d 815. The Supreme Court balanced the factors, finding no speedy trial violation. The defendant was charged and convicted for sexual intercourse without consent and burglary. Under Rule 801(d)(2) M.R.Ev., the District Court did not abuse its discretion to allow officers to read out loud from a transcript of the defendant's statements to refresh the witnesses' recollection. The Supreme Court did not conduct plain error review of the District Court's failure to instruct the jury on elements of theft, because the alleged error did not compromise the fairness of the trial or the judicial process. The District Court erred in imposing more than one surcharge under 3-1-317. St. v. Bullock, 2017 MT 182, 388 Mont. 194, 398 P.3d 881.

Appraiser Not Agent of Buyer — Property Owner Qualified as Lay Witness: After the defendants defaulted on a mortgage, the buyer of the property at a sheriff's sale (and holder of the property's mortgage note) sought a deficiency judgment. At a hearing concerning the property's value, over the buyer's objection, an appraisal that the defendants used to form their valuation of the property was admitted into evidence. On appeal, the buyer argued that the appraisal was hearsay, and the defendants argued that it was properly admitted because the appraisal was the vicarious admission of value made by the buyer through its agent, the appraiser, under Rule 801, M.R.Ev. However, although the appraiser was hired to perform an appraisal by the buyer, he was an independent appraiser, not an agent of the buyer. Further, although as an owner a defendant was permitted to testify as a lay witness about the property's worth, she was not an expert witness who could rely on inadmissible opinions under Rule 703, M.R.Ev. Thus, the District Court abused its discretion by admitting the appraisal. Whitefish Credit Union v. Prindiville, 2015 MT 328, 381 Mont. 443, 362 P.3d 53.

Summary Judgment Improper — Genuine Issue of Material Fact Surrounding Payment: The District Court's grant of summary judgment, which was based in part on the plaintiffs failure to timely remit payment to the defendant insurance company, was erroneous when the District Court excluded admissible party-opponent statements regarding the nature of the plaintiffs payment. In addition, the District Court erred in granting summary judgment on the alternate ground that the plaintiffs money order was an invalid method of payment. Although the money order was not signed by the plaintiff, summary judgment was not appropriate because a genuine issue of material fact existed regarding whether the money order would have been honored had it been presented to the bank. Smith v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 2011 MT 216, 361 Mont. 516, 260 P.3d 163.

Improper Admission of Coconspirator's Out-of-Court Statements and Confession — Reversible Error: In a videotaped interview with detectives, Steilman admitted that he and Francis had murdered a man to prove their worth to each other in conducting other criminal activity. Steilman was offered a plea agreement and was called to testify at Francis's trial. When called as a witness, Steilman refused to answer any questions on fifth amendment grounds, so the state sought the admission of the videotaped interview and Steilman's out-of-court statements to lay witnesses. The state contended that the statements to lay witnesses were admissible as statements of a coconspirator made in furtherance of a conspiracy and that the statements to police were admissible as admissions against Steilman's penal interests. The District Court allowed the statements, but not the videotape, although the videotape was subsequently shown to the jury pursuant to a motion by defense counsel, in response to the ruling on the admissibility of the out-of-court statements, in order to give the jury an opportunity to observe Steilman. Francis was ultimately convicted of deliberate homicide and appealed on grounds that admission of the out-of-court statements was reversible error. The state conceded on appeal that the statements to lay witnesses were inadmissible because statements made after attainment of the conspirator's object are not admissible unless the movant can prove that an express agreement existed among the coconspirators to continue to act in concert to cover up the crime after its commission, and the state offered no such proof. Moreover, the statements were not admissible as testimony regarding out-of-court statements made by Francis, or admissible as statements made by Steilman and adopted by Francis. The state also conceded on appeal that the statements made to police were not admissible as statements against Steilman's penal interests. Pursuant to St. v. Castle, 285 M 363, 948 P2d 688 (1997), the fact that portions of a declarant's confession are admissible because they are self-inculpatory does not necessarily make the collateral noninculpatory statements either credible or admissible, particularly when the declarant implicates another person, as in this case when Steilman's confession consisted mainly of blaming Francis. The Supreme Court then applied 46-20-701, in light of St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001), to determine whether admission of the out-of-court statements constituted structural error or trial error and whether the error was reversible. The error here was trial error. In order to be considered harmless, it was necessary that the state demonstrate that there was no reasonable possibility that the inadmissible evidence contributed to the verdict. The court agreed that there was sufficient cumulative admissible evidence regarding Francis's purposeful participation in the killing. However, the court was forced to conclude that there was also a reasonable possibility that the erroneously admitted testimony of Steilman's out-of-court statements implicating Francis might have contributed to the conviction, so the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. St. v. Francis, 2001 MT 233, 307 M 12, 36 P3d 390 (2001).

Stipulation Precluding Need to Bring Evidence of Insurance Settlement Before Jury: Dill suffered damages after being hit as a pedestrian by a vehicle operated by Jardine. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company (State Farm) provided both liability insurance for Jardine and underinsured motorist coverage for Dill. Dill maintained that State Farm's settlement of the underlying liability claim against Jardine was admissible as relevant under Rules 401 and 402, M.R.Ev., and as impeachment evidence pursuant to Rule 607, M.R.Ev., and subsection (d)(2) of this rule. However, it was not necessary to bring evidence of the settlement before the jury in light of the fact that State Farm stipulated that it had paid Dill the liability policy limit on behalf of Jardine and would pay any jury verdict that exceeded that amount up to the policy limit under the underinsured motorist policy. Simple knowledge that the policy limits were paid was sufficient. Dill v. District Court, 1999 MT 85, 294 M 134, 979 P2d 188, 56 St. Rep. 350 (1999).

Statements by Defendant Company's Attorney and Principal Owner Admissible: Clews sued Montana Mining Properties, Inc. (MMPI), for failure to pay him for his consulting services. MMPI argued that the lower court erred in admitting into evidence testimony of MMPI's attorney and principal owner, Smith, made in another judicial action that indicated that Smith had the power, as agent for the company, to bind the company to a consulting agreement with Clews. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had made no ruling that MMPI was collaterally estopped from arguing that Smith did not have authority to bind the company to an agreement with Clews and that although the lower court had mistakenly characterized the statements from the other action as judicial admissions, the statements were admissible as admissions by a party-opponent. C. Haydon Ltd. v. Mont. Min. Properties, Inc., 286 M 138, 951 P2d 46, 54 St. Rep. 1341 (1997).

Admission by One Defendant Testified to by Another Defendant: Ferree was called as a state witness and testified concerning statements made by Smith, a codefendant also accused of stealing stolen property. Smith objected to the admissibility of Ferree's testimony, arguing that the state failed to lay a foundation pursuant to subsection (d)(2)(E) of this rule. Citing St. v. Ottwell, 239 M 150, 779 P2d 500 (1989), the Supreme Court held that Smith's statements were an "admission by party-opponent", albeit admissions repeated by another defendant. For this reason, the Supreme Court held that Ferree's repetition of Smith's statement did not constitute hearsay. St. v. Smith, 276 M 434, 916 P2d 773, 53 St. Rep. 459 (1996).

Settlement Documents Inadmissible — Not Statement Against Interest by Party Opponent: In negotiations over damages for loss of business opportunity caused by Montana Rail Link (MRL), an adjuster for Farmers Mutual sent counsel for MRL a letter and a spreadsheet showing business interruption losses. MRL tried to introduce the letter and spreadsheet at trial, but the District Court disallowed the exhibit. Citing Lenahan v. Casey, 46 M 367, 128 P 601 (1912), and Gamble-Skogmo, Inc. v. McNair, 98 F. Supp. 440 (D.C. Mont. 1951), the Supreme Court held that the letter and spreadsheet were properly excluded. The Supreme Court said that the documents constituted statements made in settlement negotiations and were not made as independent statements of fact constituting statements against interest as an exception from the hearsay rule. DeTienne Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 264 M 16, 869 P2d 258, 51 St. Rep. 125 (1994).

Failure to Lay Foundation for Hearsay Affidavit — Failure to Carry Burden Proving Material Facts: Thornton offered to purchase certain real property by executing a buy/sell agreement. The evidence showed that Thornton knew that half of the property was held in trust by Norwest and half was owned by Songstad and her sisters. Thornton obtained the signature of Songstad (representing her sisters) on the buy/sell agreement, but not that of Norwest. In response to Norwest's motion for summary judgment, Thornton submitted an affidavit containing his own hearsay statements that an unidentified trust manager at Norwest had agreed to be bound by the desire of Songstad to sell her half of the property. Citing Eberl v. Scofield, 244 M 515, 798 P2d 536 (1990), and Passovoy v. Nordstrom, Inc., 758 P2d 524 (Wash. 1988), the Supreme Court held that because Thornton's affidavit failed to lay a foundation for the use of the trust manager's statements, the affidavit did not qualify as a statement of a party opponent, an exception from the hearsay rule, and therefore did not meet the requirements of former Rule 56(e), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), by putting into dispute issues of material fact. The Supreme Court held that the District Court was therefore correct in granting Norwest's motion for summary judgment. Thornton v. Songstad, 263 M 390, 868 P2d 633, 51 St. Rep. 104 (1994).

Breach of Contract — Admissibility of Intracorporate Communication: In a breach of contract suit, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting into evidence an internal audit regarding defendant's construction contract with plaintiff. The internal audit was admissible as an admission because it was relevant to the issue being resolved by the trial court. Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 251 M 422, 830 P2d 1230, 48 St. Rep. 1102 (1991), cited in Ganz v. U.S. Cycling Fed'n, 273 M 360, 903 P2d 212, 52 St. Rep. 1030 (1995).

Plaintiff's Letter Written After Firing Admissible in Wrongful Termination Case: After he was fired, the plaintiff wrote a letter to the Social Security Administration and requested benefits on the basis that he was physically unable to take another job as a mechanic. The lower court ruled that the letter was inadmissible. The Supreme Court held that the letter was admissible because it was relevant with respect to the defendant's contention that one of the reasons for the plaintiff's firing was his physical condition. Heltborg v. Modern Mach., 244 M 24, 795 P2d 954, 47 St. Rep. 1254 (1990).

Admission of Wife's Exhibits on Husband's Financial Status: Wife's exhibits documenting husband's assets and liabilities, in husband's own handwriting, were properly admitted as relevant evidence of husband's financial status where husband refused to provide his own evidence. This admission by a party-opponent was not hearsay and met the test of admissibility under this rule. In re Marriage of Powell, 231 M 72, 750 P2d 1099, 45 St. Rep. 441 (1988).

Coconspirator Statements as Hearsay Exemption — Reliability Analysis: Coconspirator statements do not fall within a hearsay exception, but rather a hearsay exemption. Satisfaction of the requirements of Rule 801(d)(2)(E), M.R.Ev., does not ipso facto satisfy the right of defendant to confront witnesses; rather, a separate Confrontation Clause Analysis designed to guarantee the reliability of the challenged coconspirator statements is required. Relevant criteria are: (1) the declarant's knowledge of the identity and role of defendant in the crime; (2) the possibility that declarant was relying on faulty recollection; and (3) the circumstances under which the statements were made, possibly indicating that declarant might be lying about defendant's involvement in the conspiracy. St. v. Stever, 225 M 336, 732 P2d 853, 44 St. Rep. 283 (1987), cited in St. v. Gommenginger, 242 M 265, 790 P2d 455, 47 St. Rep. 681 (1990).

Elements of Proper Foundation Required Before Coconspirator's Statements Admissible: Before a coconspirator's statement may be admitted pursuant to Rule 801(d)(2)(E), M.R.Ev., establishment of a proper foundation is required. The foundation must show that the requisite elements of the rule have been met, specifically: (1) that a conspiracy exists; (2) that the declarant coconspirator and the defendant were members in such conspiracy; and (3) that the declaration was uttered in the course of and in furtherance of the conspiracy. St. v. Stever, 225 M 336, 732 P2d 853, 44 St. Rep. 283 (1987).

Witness Questioned Concerning Prior Inconsistent Statement: If a witness testifies at trial and is cross-examined concerning a prior inconsistent statement, the statement at trial is not hearsay. The defendant's right to confront the witness is not denied because the defendant may cross-examine the declarant and ask him to explain why he is giving a statement inconsistent with his prior one. St. v. Bell, 225 M 83, 731 P2d 336, 44 St. Rep. 56 (1987).

Intercorporate Memoranda — Notice of Hazard — Admission of Party Opponent: The Troy Town Council had passed a resolution requesting a speed limit of 25 miles per hour on trains passing through town, due to the hazardous nature of the crossing where the accident in question occurred. The minutes of the Town Council, letters between the Town Council and the railroad, and intercorporate memoranda between railroad officials on the subject matter of the crossing should have been admitted into evidence. They were relevant to show notice of the claimed hazardous conditions and the intent of the railroad with respect to the same. These documents go to the issue of ordinary care to be exercised by the railroad and may go to the issue of punitive damages as an indication of wantonness or oppressiveness. The intercorporate memoranda are also relevant as possible admissions of a party opponent. Runkle v. Burlington N., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

VERBAL ACT

Verbal Act Exception: The District Court did not err in admitting testimony by the plaintiff and the plaintiff's attorney concerning a Montana Power Company buyout offer of $35,000 when the plaintiff's refusal of the offer was found to be consideration necessary for the creation of an oral contract. Whether the Montana Power Company actually made an offer was not an issue in the case. The fact that the plaintiff believed that there had been such an offer and had communicated that fact to the defendant was a verbal act to which the plaintiff and the attorney could testify. Ragland v. Sheehan, 256 M 322, 846 P2d 1000, 50 St. Rep. 83 (1993).

Statement Containing Two Hearsay Declarations: Plaintiff testified that a third party told him that defendant made statements to the third party to pressure the third party into not awarding a subcontract to the plaintiff. The second hearsay declaration, that defendant made statements to pressure the third party, was admissible as nonhearsay because the statement constituted a verbal act in the sense that it went to prove the operative facts of the alleged tort, i.e., pressuring the third party. Phillip R. Morrow, Inc. v. FBS Ins. Mont.-Hoiness Labar, Inc., 236 M 394, 770 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 455 (1989).

Verbal Act: The District Court did not err by admitting testimony of an alleged statement of defendant that he had been imprisoned for rape since the statement was not offered for the purpose of proving the truth of the assertion regarding the prior felony but merely for the purpose of establishing the fact that the words had been said by the defendant, which constituted a "verbal act" relevant to the issues. St. v. Collins, 178 M 36, 582 P2d 1179, 35 St. Rep. 993 (1978).

Verbal Act Exception: The trial court did not err in admitting out-of-court statements made by defendant as a verbal act exception to the hearsay rule when they were not offered to prove the truth of such statements but rather to show how the investigation of the homicide focused on the defendant as a suspect. St. v. McGuinn, 177 M 215, 581 P2d 417 (1978).

MISCELLANEOUS

Hearsay Evidence Improperly Admitted — Hearsay Statements Repeated Prior Admissible In-Court Testimony — Right to Fair Trial by Impartial Jury Not Violated by Court's Refusal to Interview Juror Who Talked to Witness — Repeated Playing of Recorded Jail Phone Calls to Jury Encouraged by Defendant — Record Insufficient for Ineffective Assistance of Counsel — Cumulative Error Doctrine. St. v. Oliver, 2022 MT 104, 408 Mont. 519, 510 P.3d 1218.

No Error by District Court for Failing to Admit Inadmissible Hearsay Evidence Previously Determined Inadmissible: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in precluding admission of a psychological evaluation report authored by a nontestifying mental health professional. At a show cause hearing, the mother moved for admission of a presumably favorable written psychological evaluation report prepared by an examining mental health professional not called to testify. On the father's objection, the District Court denied admission of the report as inadmissible hearsay. The mother proceeded to examine the court-appointed guardian ad litem about her knowledge of the substance of the report. The record manifests that the testimony elicited by the mother from the guardian ad litem was largely rank hearsay as defined and generally inadmissible under Rules 801 and 802, M.R.Ev. However inconsistent or counterproductive, the father's failure to object to the subsequent admission of the subject hearsay through other means did not render the District Court in error for failing to retroactively admit the previously precluded evidence sua sponte. In re Marriage of Bessette, 2019 MT 35, 394 Mont. 262, 434 P.3d 894.

Testimony on Results of Blood Test From Forensic Pathologist Who Did Not Perform Test — Hearsay: The defendant was convicted of shooting and killing a neighbor who owed him $35. At trial, defense counsel cross-examined the forensic pathologist who performed the autopsy and had sent a blood sample of the victim to the crime lab for testing. The District Court sustained the state's hearsay objection when defense counsel asked the pathologist if the victim's blood test confirmed that he was on methamphetamine at the time of his death. On appeal, the defendant argued that the cross-examination of the pathologist about the results of the blood test was permissible. The state argued that the pathologist's testimony regarding the results of the blood test was hearsay given that the pathologist did not perform the blood work and the defendant did not establish that the pathologist could lay the foundation for the blood work. The Supreme Court agreed with the state and affirmed the District Court's evidentiary ruling. St. v. Hardman, 2012 MT 70, 364 Mont. 361, 276 P.3d 839.

Motion In Limine Properly Denied — No violation of Confrontation Clause: In a Youth Court proceeding, the defendant was adjudicated a serious delinquent youth and committed to the custody of the Department of Corrections until age 18 for various crimes, including the breaking of approximately 75 car windows and firing shots at moving vehicles and at least one pedestrian. During the proceedings, the Youth Court denied the defendant's motion in limine to exclude 10 statements taken from the defendant's interview with police that the defendant alleged constituted inadmissible hearsay because the statements were attributable to witnesses who were not testifying at trial. The Supreme Court affirmed. The Youth Court's admission of the taped interview did not violate the defendant's confrontation rights because the statements constituted adoptive admissions or the witnesses were available for cross-examination. In re T.J.B., 2010 MT 116, 356 Mont. 342, 233 P.3d 341.

Admission of Note Written by Homicide Victim Not Violative of Right to Confront Witnesses — Forfeiture by Wrongdoing Doctrine: Sanchez argued that admission at trial of a note written by Sanchez's admitted deliberate homicide victim violated Sanchez's right to confront witnesses. The Supreme Court noted that the confrontation clause applies only to testimonial hearsay, and in this case, the note was considered testimonial because the purpose of the note was to explain the victim's untimely death or poisoning, the intended audience reasonably included law enforcement, and circumstances surrounding the note indicated that an objective declarant reasonably should have anticipated that the state would use the statement at trial. However, the U.S. Supreme Court set out an equitable exception to the confrontation clause in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), known as the forfeiture by wrongdoing doctrine. The doctrine states that one who obtains the absence of a witness by wrongdoing forfeits the constitutional right to confrontation. The Supreme Court agreed with the holding in U.S. v. Garcia-Meza, 403 F3d-364 (6th Cir. 2005), that a defendant whose intentional criminal act results in a victim-declarant's death benefits from the defendant's wrongdoing if the defendant can use the death to exclude the victim-declarant's otherwise admissible testimony, regardless of whether the defendant specifically intended to silence the victim. Therefore, Sanchez forfeited his right to confront the victim when he killed her and could not claim that his constitutional right to confront witnesses was violated when his admittedly deliberate wrongdoing prevented the confrontation. Although the trial court admitted the note based on hearsay exceptions without addressing the confrontation clause, the court's decision was nevertheless legally correct, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the trial court's decision. St. v. Sanchez, 2008 MT 27, 341 M 240, 177 P3d 444 (2008). See also Sanchez v. St., 2012 MT 191, 366 Mont. 132, 285 P.3d 540, in which the Montana Supreme Court held that the U.S. Supreme Court's holding in Giles v. California, 554 U.S. 353, 128 S. Ct. 2678 (2008), that the forfeiture by wrongdoing doctrine applies only when the defendant kills another person specifically to prevent the person from testifying, was not retroactive and did not apply to Sanchez's conviction, which had become final long before the Giles decision.

Parent's Excited Utterance Following Domestic Disturbance Not Considered Hearsay in Proceeding Adjudicating Child as Youth in Need of Care: In adjudicating a child as a youth in need of care, the District Court relied on statements made by the mother to an officer who was investigating a domestic disturbance at the family residence. Following adjudication, the court implemented a treatment plan, which the father refused to sign. The court subsequently terminated the father's parental rights for failing to comply with the treatment plan. The father contended that the District Court improperly admitted hearsay evidence from the officer that provided the evidentiary support for designating the child as a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court disagreed. The excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule under Rule 803, M.R.Ev., applied to the officer's testimony regarding the mother's statements because the statements were made immediately after the mother had been fighting with the father and while she was still visibly upset. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officer's testimony. In re T.W. & J.M., 2006 MT 153, 332 M 454, 139 P3d 810 (2006), distinguishing In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994).

Prosecutor's Improper Reference to Hearsay Statement in Opening Cured by Court's Instruction: Defendant contended that the prosecutor's reference to a hearsay statement by a person who did not testify at trial was prejudicial. Defendant did not move for mistrial based on the statement, but asserted on appeal that the improper reference should warrant reversal. The Supreme Court noted that a lawyer's statements are not evidence and held that it would be inappropriate to apply the abuse of discretion standard to an action or lack of action that defendant never requested the trial court to take. In this case, the quoting of hearsay was cured by the trial court's instruction that the jury disregard the prosecutor's statement, and the Supreme Court declined to reverse the conviction. St. v. High Elk, 2006 MT 6, 330 M 259, 127 P3d 432 (2006), distinguishing St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001), and St. v. Runs Above, 2003 MT 181, 316 M 421, 73 P3d 161 (2003).

Cross-Examination of Child Witness Concerning Change in Testimony Not Considered Ineffective Assistance of Counsel: Following a break in trial, a child witness changed his testimony, and defense counsel questioned the child regarding who he talked to during the break and whether he was told to say anything different from what he had said before. On rebuttal, the state then introduced the child's prior consistent statements to others, and the trial court allowed the testimony about the child's prior statements over defendant's objections. On appeal, defendant contended that counsel's assistance was ineffective because defendant was prejudiced when counsel opened the door to rebuttal testimony regarding the child's prior consistent statements. The Supreme Court applied the Strickland test for effective assistance of counsel and disagreed that the tactic constituted deficient performance. Rather, counsel would have been remiss if the change in the child's testimony had been ignored. Questioning the child concerning possible improper influence by the state or persons associated with the state during the break was a proper trial strategy and could not be considered ineffective assistance of counsel. St. v. J.C., 2004 MT 75, 320 M 411, 87 P3d 501 (2004).

Inadmissible Recorded Commentary of Crime — Harmless Error: During Strauss's negligent homicide trial, the District Court admitted two videotape recordings of the crime scene. One tape included an audio commentary portion by an investigating officer, and one depicted the positions of Strauss and the victim relative to their positions at the time that the crime was committed. Strauss objected to both tapes, but they were admitted over objection. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the tape with commentary should have been admitted without sound because the commentary was the prior statement of a nonparty witness that the Montana Rules of Evidence classify as nonhearsay. However, the commentary was not offered to rebut an allegation of fabrication, improper influence, or motive or for identification, so it could not be classified as admissible nonhearsay. Nevertheless, the state presented admissible evidence that proved the same facts as the commentary, so its admission was harmless error. As for the second videotape, based on Peschke v. Carroll College, 280 M 331, 929 P2d 874 (1997), the tape was a reenactment of Strauss's crime and was therefore subject to the foundational requirements in St. v. Leroux, 133 N.H. 781, 584 A2d 778 (1990), and Pickren v. St., 269 Ga. 453, 500 SE 2d 566 (1998), including authentication and identification. A recorded reenactment must accurately portray the event in question, and the party presenting the recording must show that the reenactment was filmed under conditions substantially similar to the actual event, which may be satisfied by testimony of a witness who was present at the crime. The state failed to meet its burden by not presenting testimony of a witness who was present at the crime scene and could testify to the accuracy of the tape. However, that error was also considered harmless because the second tape was largely cumulative of the first recording, was not injurious to Strauss's defense, was not probative of any disputed issue, and did not contribute to Strauss's conviction. St. v. Strauss, 2003 MT 195, 317 M 1, 74 P3d 1052 (2003). However, see St. v. Zlahn, 2014 MT 224, 376 Mont. 245, 332 P.3d 247, holding that the District Court did not err in admitting a video existing primarily to document physical distances and vantage points at a time when all of the witnesses were available for cross-examination.

Hearsay Statements of Child Improperly Admitted in Parental Rights Termination Case — Harmless Error: The District Court improperly admitted hearsay evidence related by the child of parents who were subject to a parental rights termination case. However, the improper hearsay was not necessary to the court's determination of proved abuse or neglect of the fitness of the parents and thus did not affect the parents' substantial rights or the result that the court reached. Although the court abused its discretion in admitting the testimony, the error was harmless, and termination of parental rights was affirmed on appeal. In re A.N. & C.N., 2000 MT 35, 298 M 237, 995 P2d 427, 57 St. Rep. 155 (2000).

Hearsay Statement by Witness Not Adopted by Defendant — Requirements for Finding Subpoenaed Witness "Unavailable": After having consumed drinks in Marysville, Widenhofer and Rothschiller were involved in a one-car accident on the Marysville Road. A car picked them up and took them to the closest business, the Silver City Bar. Because Widenhofer was injured, a highway patrol officer was called, who, upon arriving at the Silver City Bar, asked Rothschiller some questions about the accident. When he was in the patrol car with only the officer present, Rothschiller answered one of those questions by stating that Widenhofer was driving the vehicle. The officer then took both Widenhofer and Rothschiller to the hospital in Helena. After Widenhofer's injuries were cared for, the highway patrol officer continued to question Widenhofer; advised him that in the officer's opinion, alcohol was a factor in the accident; asked Widenhofer to submit to a blood-alcohol test; and read Widenhofer the implied consent form. Although Rothschiller was served with a subpoena by the Sheriff the night before a jury trial on Widenhofer's charge of DUI, Rothschiller failed to appear at trial. During the trial, the District Court allowed the highway patrol officer to repeat Rothschiller's answer, that Widenhofer was the driver of the vehicle. The Supreme Court reversed the decision of the District Court allowing the hearsay testimony. The Supreme Court held that the state's reliance on subsection (d)(2)(B) of this rule was misplaced because the District Court did not make an express finding that Rothschiller's statement was adopted by Widenhofer, as the District Court should have under the rationale of U.S. v. Schaff, 948 F2d 501 (9th Cir. 1991), and because the state did not present sufficient evidence that Widenhofer acquiesced in Rothschiller's statement. The Supreme Court noted that Widenhofer could not hear the conversation between the officer and Rothschiller and had no reason to know what Rothschiller was telling the officer. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that Rothschiller's statement as to who was driving the vehicle was not adopted by Widenhofer and that Rothschiller's statement could therefore not be allowed under this exception to the hearsay rule. Widenhofer also objected to the hearsay testimony of the highway patrol officer because it violated Widenhofer's right under the sixth amendment to the United States Constitution and under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., to confront and cross-examine a witness. The Supreme Court held that the "unavailability" exception under Rule 804(a)(5), M.R.Ev., could not be invoked because under the analysis of Ohio v. Roberts, 448 US 56 (1980), that rule requires the prosecution to demonstrate the "unavailability" of a witness before hearsay evidence of the witness's statements may be introduced. The Supreme Court held that the state's "minimal" attempt to procure Rothschiller's testimony by serving a subpoena on him the night before trial did not constitute "reasonable means" of procuring his testimony. St. v. Widenhofer, 286 M 341, 950 P2d 1383, 54 St. Rep. 1438 (1997), followed in St. v. McCollom, 2009 MT 257, 352 M 10, 214 P3d 1230 (2009). Widenhofer was followed, with regard to the standard of reasonable means of procuring witness's testimony, in St. v. Diaz, 2006 MT 303, 334 M 479, 148 P3d 628 (2006).

Admission of Hearsay Held Harmless Error — Refusal to Grant Mistrial Upheld: During the trial of a negligence action against the state for failure to properly supervise on parole a convicted execution-style murderer, the plaintiff testified that during the criminal trial of the parolee in another state, a firearms expert testified as to the age of the parolee's handgun. The state objected to the plaintiff's testimony but was overruled and later moved for a mistrial on the grounds that the plaintiff's counsel knowingly used false testimony because that counsel had a transcript of the previous criminal trial containing the expert's statements. The District Court reviewed the transcript from the criminal trial, concluded that the plaintiff's statements were based upon her own erroneous impressions from that trial, and refused to grant the mistrial. The Supreme Court held that the plaintiff's statement was hearsay and that it was error to admit the statement but, because the plaintiff's statement was cumulative, that admission of the statement was harmless error. The Supreme Court also noted that what the state was requesting by the motion for mistrial was that the Supreme Court substitute its judgment for that of the District Court concerning the District Court's findings that the testimony was presented knowing it was false, which the Supreme Court refused to do. Starkenbug v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018, 54 St. Rep. 214 (1997).

Admissibility of Deputy Sheriff's Testimony of Phone Conversation With Defendant's Attorney: Deputy Sheriff's testimony of phone conversations with defendant's attorney, who was inquiring about and attempting to resolve charges against defendant, was not impermissible hearsay. It was admissible as statements of a party made through an agent. The testimony was not a violation of the attorney-client privilege, which protects communications between an attorney and a client, not those between an attorney and a third party. St. v. Ahmed, 278 M 200, 924 P2d 679, 53 St. Rep. 804 (1996).

Statement Admissible Under One Rule Despite Inadmissibility Under Another Rule: Ferree and Smith conspired to steal stolen property. At trial, on charges of stealing stolen property, the state offered Ferree's direct testimony as part of its case against Smith. Smith objected to Ferree's testimony about Smith's statements, arguing that the state had not laid a proper foundation for admissibility of testimony of a coconspirator under subsection (d)(2)(E) of this rule. The Supreme Court held that Ferree's testimony was admissible under Rule 602, M.R.Ev., because Ferree testified to matters within his own knowledge and that the testimony was also admissible because Ferree was the "declarant" subsection (b) of this rule and his statements therefore did not come within the definition of hearsay in subsection (c) of this rule. Because the statements were admissible under one rule, the Supreme Court held that it made no difference that the testimony was inadmissible under another rule. St. v. Smith, 276 M 434, 916 P2d 773, 53 St. Rep. 459 (1996).

Therapist's Repetition of Children's Testimony — Harmless Error: In an action to terminate a mother's parental rights, the District Court did not commit reversible error by admitting hearsay testimony of a therapist repeating statements made by the mother's children. The court's finding that the mother allowed the children to be sexually abused was supported by the evidence, and any error by the court in admitting the testimony was harmless. In re Inquiry Into M.M., 274 M 166, 906 P2d 675, 52 St. Rep. 1170 (1995).

Prosecutor's Opening Statements Alluding to Testimony of Trial Witnesses — Not Hearsay: Statements made by the prosecutor in the opening comments of a sexual assault trial alluding to testimony of certain witnesses to be called during trial, which chronicled the development and investigation of the case up to the point of charging defendant, did not constitute hearsay or prejudice defendant by alluding to improper witness testimony. St. v. Alexander, 265 M 192, 875 P2d 345, 51 St. Rep. 474 (1994).

Opinion Testimony Regarding Cause of Accident: The trial court did not err in allowing the investigating officer to offer opinion testimony regarding the cause of the pedestrian-auto accident when the officer was identified as an expert prior to trial and when he testified as to the cause of the accident, not the negligence of the parties. The evidence obtained by the investigating officer at the scene of the accident, coupled with his experience in accident investigation, provided a sufficient basis for the court to determine that he had a proper foundation to testify. Campbell v. Johnson, 251 M 12, 823 P2d 237, 48 St. Rep. 1097 (1991).

Error Harmless Absent Contribution to Conviction: Following the rationale of St. v. Brush, 228 M 247, 741 P2d 1333 (1987), the Supreme Court held that only if there is a reasonable possibility that inadmissible evidence might have contributed to a conviction is there reversible error. St. v. Earl, 242 M 279, 790 P2d 464, 47 St. Rep. 691 (1990), followed in St. v. Cline, 275 M 46, 909 P2d 1171, 53 St. Rep. 32 (1996).

Not Error to Refuse to Grant Continuance to Subpoena Witness — Testimony Inadmissible Hearsay: Even if the motion to compel a subpoena had been made in a timely manner, the District Court did not err in refusing to grant a continuance to call the police chief as witness to testify as to what he reported to the Worker's Compensation Crime Compensation Unit because the police chief was not present during the assault and his testimony about the report would have been inadmissible hearsay. Sloan v. St., 236 M 100, 768 P2d 1365, 46 St. Rep. 214 (1989).

Expert Testimony by Highway Patrolman That No Arrest Made After Accident — Prejudicial Error: Statement by a highway patrolman, testifying as an expert, that he had not issued a citation following an accident because of his determination that the driver was not negligent constituted prejudicial error. Questions as to why an arrest was not made were objectionable at least on the following grounds: (1) they were irrelevant; (2) they were argumentative in form; (3) they described as crimes things that were not crimes; (4) they called not for objective evidence but for the mental conclusions of the witness; and (5) they were hearsay. Smith v. Rorvik, 231 M 85, 751 P2d 1053, 45 St. Rep. 451 (1988), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989), and distinguished in Campbell v. Johnson, 251 M 12, 823 P2d 237, 48 St. Rep. 1097 (1991).

Absence of Agency Relationship — Nonparty Statements as Hearsay: Plaintiffs sought to introduce statements attributed to out-of-state nonparty independent fertilizer distributors, contending the statements were evidence of the in-state defendant's fraudulent marketing scheme. The Supreme Court found that absent proof of an agency relationship, the statements were hearsay. Gurnsey v. Conklin Co., Inc., 230 M 42, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988).

Inadmissible Hearsay — Cumulative Evidence — Harmless Error: Defendant charged with witness tampering contended the District Court erred in admitting into evidence a note written by two other inmates containing offers to "talk sense" into a witness, using physical force if necessary. The note was intercepted by jailers before it reached defendant. The state contended the note was offered to prove the witness' state of fear; however, the inference that the witness was fearful could not be reached without the immediate inference that the inmates actually attempted to "talk sense" into the witness. Therefore, the note was offered by the state to prove the contents of the note and as such was inadmissible hearsay under Rule 801, M.R.Ev. The Supreme Court held that the note constituted cumulative evidence in that the charge of witness tampering was also supported by substantial credible testimony of the witness and the defendant himself. The note was erroneously admitted, but the error was harmless. St. v. Woods, 221 M 17, 716 P2d 624, 43 St. Rep. 601 (1986).

No Testimony as to Statement by Declarant — Not Hearsay: Defendant was charged with criminal possession of dangerous drugs with intent to sell. The State wished to introduce tapes of conversations between an informant accomplice and defendant. The informant was not available at the trial. The State had a police officer testify as to the informant's consent to the recording so that the recording would be admissible. Defendant contended that the officer's testimony was hearsay. On appeal, the Supreme Court said that under Rule 801(b), M.R.Ev., the declarant was the informant. The essence of the challenged testimony was that the informant was aware the conversations were being taped and that the taping was done with her consent. The testimony established the fact of an agreement between the informant and the officer. Because the officer did not testify as to any statement made by the informant, there was no hearsay under the definition found in Rule 801(c), M.R.Ev. St. v. Canon, 212 M 157, 687 P2d 705, 41 St. Rep. 1659 (1984), followed in St. v. Dannels, 226 M 80, 734 P2d 188, 44 St. Rep. 472 (1987).

Admissibility of Documents in 1929 Dispute — Weight Accorded: The Water Court improperly relied on the answer filed by the respondent's predecessor in a 1929 water rights case since the answer had no evidentiary value in light of conflicting evidence as to priority dates. Part of that evidence was an attorney-to-client letter that clearly disclosed the intent of the respondent's predecessor to withdraw his claims to particular priority dates. The letter did not constitute inadmissible hearsay, and its admission did not violate the attorney-client privilege. Hill v. Merrimac Cattle Co., Inc., 211 M 479, 687 P2d 59, 41 St. Rep. 1504 (1984).

Hearsay Within Hearsay — One Declarant Not Subject to Cross-Examination — Whole Statement Inadmissible: During rebuttal in a homicide trial, the State had a police officer testify as to what a witness had said the defendant had said to him just prior to the homicide. The witness had testified earlier in the trial but had been excused the day before rebuttal. The Supreme Court held that the officer's testimony was "hearsay within hearsay" as defined in Rule 805, M.R.Ev., and admissible only if both hearsay parts were admissible. Because the witness was absent and thus not subject to cross-examination, that part of the hearsay in which the witness was the declarant was inadmissible under Rule 801(d)(i), and thus the whole statement was inadmissible. St. v. Daniels, 210 M 1, 682 P2d 173, 41 St. Rep. 880 (1984).

Statement of Deceased Hearsay — State of Mind Not at Issue: Moen, an employee of defendant, died of a heart attack. His wife filed suit, alleging that defendant negligently failed to provide help to a worker stricken by a heart attack. Moen's supervisor testified that he asked Moen to work Saturday only upon discovering that he stayed in Decker on Friday night rather than return to Great Falls. The court properly excluded as inadmissible hearsay the testimony of Moen's wife that he called his wife on Friday and told her that he couldn't come home because he had to work on Saturday. One cannot impeach a witness on a collateral matter. The question of when the supervisor asked Moen to work overtime is not relevant or material to the issue of defendant's negligence. The testimony is not saved by being a statement of Moen's state of mind or his intent and hence is not an exception to the hearsay rule. Moen's state of mind is not at issue; rather the negligence of defendant is at issue. Moen v. Peter Kiewit & Sons' Co., 201 M 425, 655 P2d 482, 39 St. Rep. 2209 (1982).

After-the-Fact Exclusion of Evidence: The District Court admitted into evidence in a lien controversy a document prepared for concrete costs at the request of defendant's counsel. Plaintiff objected, contending the document was hearsay. At the conclusion of trial, the District Court Judge issued a memorandum excluding the document as hearsay. Defendant argued the after-the-fact ruling was prejudicial because it precluded him from calling other witnesses or otherwise presenting proof. The Supreme Court held that although the document was properly excluded as hearsay, since not issued in the ordinary course of business, the manner of the ruling was prejudicial and remanded the matter for reconsideration. Anderson v. Hobbs, 196 M 31, 637 P2d 817, 38 St. Rep. 2098 (1981).

Objection to Matter Agreed to at Pretrial: An objection to a fire department report on a fire on grounds of hearsay was properly denied when objecting party had agreed in pretrial order to the admission of the report as requiring no foundation or proof. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Multiple Hearsay: A detective testified that Polotto told him that Polotto had not told anyone that they were authorized to take his stereo. The declarant, Polotto, was not on the stand so Rule 801, M.R.Ev., does not apply. When a hearsay is included within a hearsay, Rule 805, M.R.Ev., requires the exclusion of the multiple hearsay unless each part of the combined statement conforms to an exception to the hearsay rule. Since no exception applies to the first part of the statement, "Polotto told him", the entire statement is inadmissible. St. v. Martinez, 188 M 271, 613 P2d 974, 37 St. Rep. 982 (1980).

Statement of Coconspirator — Conspiracy Still Viable: A statement made 4 hours after the crime was committed and during the first rendezvous of the conspirators following the crime, when the record is replete with evidence that the conspiracy extended for weeks after the statement was made, was not made after the conspiracy had ended but was made during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy and was not hearsay under Rule 801(d)(2). St. v. Fitzpatrick, 186 M 187, 606 P2d 1343, 37 St. Rep. 194 (1980).

Evidence of Other Crimes, Wrongs, or Acts — Hearsay — Prejudicial Error: Direct evidence of other crimes, if such evidence came within the exceptions of Rule 404(3)(b), M.R.Ev., would be admissible. Indirect, hearsay evidence must also conform to the rules relating to the admission of hearsay testimony, including the exceptions. If the severely beaten victim were regarded as an unavailable witness because of her physical condition, her statements would be admissible if they came within the exceptions of Rule 804, M.R.Ev. Here, however, the hearsay declarant was not found to have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness because she admittedly disliked the defendant. Nor could the victim's statements be admitted as "excited utterances" because such utterances are admissible only if they are part of the res gestae of the crime charged. Admission of the statements of the victim to a friend and to her doctor, therefore, constituted prejudicial error. Admission of proof of wholly independent crimes requires a balancing of the relative probative value of the evidence against the prejudicial effect. Evidence of a course of conduct similar to the crime charged tends to prove the crime charged, but such evidence should not be admitted unless the proof thereof tends toward the conclusion that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged with moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. With proper safeguards, the court would allow evidence of previous assaults. St. v. Brubaker, 184 M 294, 602 P2d 974, 36 St. Rep. 1915 (1979).

Statement by Deceased Agent of Defendant — Admissibility: The statement of a corporate agent made to plaintiff within the scope and term of the agency is admissible as testimony by plaintiff when offered against the defendant, although the corporate agent died before trial. McNulty v. Bewley Corp., 182 M 260, 596 P2d 474, 36 St. Rep. 1110 (1979).

Expert Opinion Testimony Based on Hearsay: Under certain circumstances an expert witness giving medical testimony may offer an opinion based on hearsay information. Hunsaker v. Bozeman Deaconess Foundation, 179 M 305, 588 P2d 493, 35 St. Rep. 1647 (1978).

Hearsay — No Applicable Exception: In a wrongful death action, the court properly refused admission of hearsay testimony from people who were not present at the time of the drowning and who attempted to testify to the approximate location where the deceased entered the water. Neither the “present sense impression” exception to the hearsay rule nor the “res gestae” rule operated in this case. Folda v. Bozeman, 177 M 537, 582 P2d 767, 35 St. Rep. 1019 (1978).

Medical Reports Considered: The Workers’ Compensation Court properly considered unsworn written medical reports without violating Montana Rules of Evidence regarding hearsay, since the court is not bound by common law and statutory rules of evidence, and without violating claimant’s right to cross-examination because she had the opportunity at the hearing to present rebutting medical evidence. Stevens v. Glacier Gen. Assurance Co., 167 M 61, 575 P2d 1326, 35 St. Rep. 278 (1978).

Rule 802. Hearsay rule.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 802, except the clause beginning “except as otherwise provided” has been changed so that the language is consistent with other exception clauses found in the rules. The Advisory Committee’s Note to Federal Rule 802, 56 F.R.D. 183, 299 (1972), indicates “the provision excepting from the operation of the rule hearsay which is made admissible by other rules adopted by the Supreme Court or by Act of Congress continues the admissibility thereunder of hearsay which would not qualify under the evidence rules”. The Advisory Committee’s Note then goes on to list several examples of rules of procedure and acts of Congress which allow hearsay to be admitted. Id.

This rule is consistent with existing Montana law. Although a clear statement of the hearsay rule cannot be found in Montana statutes, Section 93-401-2, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], has been interpreted as providing the hearsay rule. Patterson v. Halterman, 161 Mont. 278, 282, 505 P2d 905 (1973). That statute provides: “A witness can testify to those facts only which he knows of his own knowledge; that is, which are derived from his own perceptions except in those few express cases in which his opinion or inferences, or the declarations of others, are admissible”. In Wilson v. Davis, 110 Mont. 356, 366, 103 P2d 149 (1940), the court cited this statute and stated that the exceptions to it are found in R.C.M. 1947, Sections 93-401-6 [superseded], 93-401-7 [26-1-103], 93-401-10 [superseded], and 93-401-27(4) [superseded]. These sections relate to various hearsay exceptions. However, the rule that hearsay is inadmissible has been followed in Montana without question since the early case of Davis v. Blume, 1 Mont. 463, 465 (1872).

Examples of hearsay exceptions are: Rules 803 and 804 of the Montana Rules of Evidence, stating the general hearsay exceptions; Rules 5(f), 43(e), and 56(e) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, relating to proof by affidavit; Rule 32(a) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, allowing depositions to be admitted as evidence; and Section 95-1802(e) R.C.M. 1947 [46-15-204], allowing depositions to be admissible in criminal actions.

Case Notes

Admission of Hearsay Held Harmless When Declarant Testified and Was Subject to Cross-Examination. St. v. Ripple, 2023 MT 67, 412 Mont. 36, 527 P.3d 951.

Hearsay Evidence Improperly Admitted — Hearsay Statements Repeated Prior Admissible In-Court Testimony — Right to Fair Trial by Impartial Jury Not Violated by Court’s Refusal to Interview Juror Who Talked to Witness — Repeated Playing of Recorded Jail Phone Calls to Jury Encouraged by Defendant — Record Insufficient for Ineffective Assistance of Counsel — Cumulative Error Doctrine. St. v. Oliver, 2022 MT 104, 408 Mont. 519, 510 P.3d 1218.

Testimonial Statement During Autopsy Inadmissible: In a murder trial that occurred 15 years after the criminal act, the state presented evidence of statements to law enforcement by the doctor who performed the autopsy. The doctor died in the intervening years, and the defendant had no prior opportunity to cross-examine him. The defendant appealed his conviction. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, finding that the statements were testimonial statements offered for truth and were therefore inadmissible hearsay. St. v. Laird, 2019 MT 198, 397 Mont. 29, 447 P.3d 416.

No Error by District Court for Failing to Admit Inadmissible Hearsay Evidence Previously Determined Inadmissible: The District Court did not abuse its discretion in precluding admission of a psychological evaluation report authored by a nontestifying mental health professional. At a show cause hearing, the mother moved for admission of a presumably favorable written psychological evaluation report prepared by an examining mental health professional not called to testify. On the father’s objection, the District Court denied admission of the report as inadmissible hearsay. The mother proceeded to examine the court-appointed guardian ad litem about her knowledge of the substance of the report. The record manifests that the testimony elicited by the mother from the guardian ad litem was largely rank hearsay as defined and generally inadmissible under Rules 801 and 802, M.R.Ev. However inconsistent or counterproductive, the father's failure to object to the subsequent admission of the subject hearsay through other means did not render the District Court in error for failing to retroactively admit the previously precluded evidence sua sponte. In re Marriage of Bessette, 2019 MT 35, 394 Mont. 262, 434 P.3d 894.

Admission of Drug Results at Termination Hearing Improper — Sufficient Evidence in Support of Termination of Parental Rights: During a parental rights termination hearing, the District Court, citing 41-3-112(4), admitted the parents' drug test results through a court-appointed special advocate (CASA) and subsequently terminated the parents' rights. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that admitting the drug test results through the CASA was erroneous. The Supreme Court stated that 41-3-112(4) was enacted to allow a guardian ad litem to gather information from collateral sources to form and make recommendations as to the best interest of the child and that the subsection was not enacted as a bypass for the Department of Public Health and Human Services to admit evidence that would otherwise be inadmissible or to cure a party's failure to call a witness to testify. However, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding that admitting the drug test results was harmless and reversal was not warranted because substantial evidence supported the District Court's determination that the parents had failed to complete their treatment plans and that their conduct or the conditions rendering them unfit were unlikely to change within a reasonable time. In re I.M., 2018 MT 61, 391 Mont. 42, 414 P.3d 797.

Evidence and Testimony of Age and Value of Stolen Tool Properly Excluded — Proper Foundation Not Laid: The defendant was on trial for theft of a plasma cutter from a high school's shop classroom. On cross-examination of the current shop teacher, the defendant's counsel attempted to introduce a spreadsheet that contained an inventory list that had been created and maintained by a prior shop teacher in an effort to show the plasma cutter had been acquired a few years earlier and therefore had a value of less than the $1,500 threshold to reduce the defendant's potential theft conviction to a misdemeanor. Though the District Court made suggestions to the defendant's counsel to aid him in laying a proper foundation for the spreadsheet, the defendant's counsel was unable to get the spreadsheet into evidence after several attempts. The defendant's counsel also called an investigator as a witness in the defense case and questioned him as to whether the plasma cutter was new but was unable to successfully introduce evidence of the lesser value of the plasma cutter after the District Court sustained the state's objection for lack of foundation. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the inventory spreadsheet would be admissible as an exception to hearsay under the business records exception, the defendant's counsel failed to properly prepare for laying the foundation for admission of the inventory list. Likewise, the defendant's counsel had failed to lay the foundation for the investigator's testimony and his conclusions about the value of the plasma cutter. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying admission of the inventory list or by making evidentiary rulings regarding the investigator's testimony. St. v. Weber, 2016 MT 138, 383 Mont. 506, 373 P.3d 26.

Abuse of Discretion in Admitting Report of Three Nontestifying Doctors: The admission of the report of a panel of three doctors without opportunity for cross-examination affected the outcome of the trial and affected a substantial right of the plaintiff, justifying a new trial. Reese v. Stanton, 2015 MT 293, 381 Mont. 241, 358 P.3d 208.

Defendant's Offer of Own Out-of-Court Statement in Support of Justifiable Use of Force Claim Inadmissible: Following a fatal shooting, the defendant was charged with deliberate homicide and claimed justifiable use of force. Through cross-examination of law enforcement and in order to demonstrate what he knew and relied on at the time of the shooting, the defendant sought to introduce into evidence an out-of-court statement that he had made to law enforcement in which he described violent acts allegedly committed by the victim that a third party had described to the defendant. After the District Court ruled in the defendant's favor, the state petitioned for supervisory control. The Supreme Court vacated the District Court ruling, concluding that evidence introduced at trial must be admissible under the Montana Rules of Evidence and that the defendant's attempt to offer his own out-of-court statement did not fit within a hearsay exception and was not allowed under the Rules of Evidence. The defendant also argued that 45-3-112 and 46-16-131 rendered the Rules of Evidence inapplicable and required disclosure of the statement to the jury. The Supreme Court disagreed, concluding that 45-3-112 does not mandate disclosure of investigative materials to the jury in violation of the Rules of Evidence and that requiring the defendant to comply with the Rules of Evidence does not shift the burden of proof in violation of 46-16-131. St. v. Ninth Judicial District Court, 2014 MT 188, 375 Mont. 488, 329 P.3d 603.

Hearsay Testimony Regarding Statements Made By Witnesses at Scene Permitted — No Assertion of Error When Introduced by Defense: Defense counsel introduced the amended information from the prosecution's case that recalled statements made by witnesses identifying Dewitz at the scene of a crime. The prosecution then elicited testimony from an officer recalling the witnesses' testimony. Dewitz asserted that the testimony was inadmissible hearsay and contended that because the witnesses were unavailable, his right to confront witnesses was violated. The Supreme Court agreed that the testimony was hearsay but held that Dewitz waived the right to allege error on appeal because the objectionable testimony was elicited by defense counsel's own action in introducing the testimony into evidence. St. v. Dewitz, 2009 MT 202, 351 M 182, 212 P3d 1040 (2009). See also St. v. Harris, 1999 MT 115, 294 M 397, 983 P2d 881 (1999), and St. v. Smith, 2005 MT 18, 325 M 374, 106 P3d 553 (2005).

Failure to Object to Prior Consistent Hearsay Testimony of Witnesses Not Considered Ineffective Assistance: Notti contended that trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance by failing to object to the prior consistent hearsay testimony of four state witnesses, asserting that the witness statements were consistent with the declarant's testimony, were not offered to rebut an express or implied charge of subsequent fabrication, and were thus inadmissible hearsay. The District Court found no error. The Supreme Court examined the statements of each witness and affirmed. One statement was admissible as an excited utterance hearsay exception; one statement was admissible as a hearsay exception for medical treatment or diagnosis; the admission of one statement was harmless error because it added no substantive content to the declarant's testimony; and one statement was not a repetition of any prior consistent statement. Notti could not show prejudice based on admission of any of the statements, and thus his ineffective assistance claim failed. Notti v. St., 2008 MT 20, 341 M 183, 176 P3d 1040 (2008).

Admissibility of Documents Held by Insurer When Adjusting Claim — Hearsay Exception Inapplicable: Plaintiffs asserted that defendant insurance company committed unfair trade practices in settling plaintiffs' claim against two insured doctors for malpractice. At trial, the District Court refused to admit as hearsay correspondence written to the insurer by plaintiffs' counsel during settlement negotiations, allowing the insurer to suggest that plaintiffs did not want or try to settle the malpractice claim. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion and committed reversible error by not admitting the correspondence. The unfair trade practices claims tested the propriety of actions taken or not taken by the insurer in light of information possessed by the insurer at the time that the underlying malpractice claim was adjusted, so the correspondence was not merely testimonial evidence subject to a hearsay objection in the absence of the author. Thus, the insurer could not block admission of documents held when adjusting the claim. Peterson v. The Doctors' Co., 2007 MT 264, 339 M 354, 170 P3d 459 (2007), followed in Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008).

Parent's Excited Utterance Following Domestic Disturbance Not Considered Hearsay in Proceeding Adjudicating Child as Youth in Need of Care: In adjudicating a child as a youth in need of care, the District Court relied on statements made by the mother to an officer who was investigating a domestic disturbance at the family residence. Following adjudication, the court implemented a treatment plan, which the father refused to sign. The court subsequently terminated the father's parental rights for failing to comply with the treatment plan. The father contended that the District Court improperly admitted hearsay evidence from the officer that provided the evidentiary support for designating the child as a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court disagreed. The excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule under Rule 803, M.R.Ev., applied to the officer's testimony regarding the mother's statements because the statements were made immediately after the mother had been fighting with the father and while she was still visibly upset. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officer's testimony. In re T.W. & J.M., 2006 MT 153, 332 M 454, 139 P3d 810 (2006), distinguishing In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994).

Hearsay Statement of Assault Victim Properly Admitted as Excited Utterance: Following a sexual assault, the victim told her sister that Cameron tried to rape her. The trial court admitted the sister's statement under the present sense impression exception, but Cameron appealed on grounds that the statement was inadmissible hearsay. The Supreme Court disagreed. The statement was made when the victim was still laboring under the stress of excitement caused by the attack and was thus admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Although the trial court admitted the statement for the wrong reason, the statement was nevertheless admissible, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting it. St. v. Cameron, 2005 MT 32, 326 M 51, 106 P3d 1189 (2005).

Admissibility of Prior Statements Made Before Motivation to Fabricate Arose: Teters contended that prior statements made by his stepdaughter to a child protective services worker regarding Teters' sexual contact with her were inadmissible because she may have been improperly influenced by her mother, who was involved in a contested divorce with Teters. The Supreme Court applied the four factors in St. v. Mensing, 1999 MT 303, 297 M 172, 991 P2d 950 (1999), to determine whether the prior statements were admissible. The first three factors were met because the declarant testified at trial and was subject to cross-examination and because the witness's statements were consistent with the declarant's testimony. The fourth factor requires that the statement rebut an express or implied charge of subsequent fabrication, improper influence, or motive. Here, the fourth factor was also met because the statements were made prior to the time that the alleged motive to fabricate arose, i.e., the beginning of divorce proceedings. Testimony regarding the prior statements was therefore properly admitted. St. v. Teters, 2004 MT 137, 321 M 379, 91 P3d 559 (2004). See also St. v. Lunstad, 259 M 512, 857 P2d 723 (1993).

Lacking Business Records Foundation by Records Custodian, Medical Reports Considered Inadmissible Hearsay: In an employment discrimination case, Pannoni sought to introduce written medical reports in letter form that contained observational information and opinions regarding Pannoni's medical condition and ability to return to work. The letters were accompanied by written certification that the reports had been prepared as part of a mental health center's regularly conducted business and were made at or near the time of Pannoni's diagnosis, but no one testified as to the contents of the reports or their status as regular business records. The employer objected to the evidence as hearsay, but Pannoni contended that they were admissible under the business records exception. The District Court concluded that because Pannoni had attempted to lay the foundation for the evidence through written certification prepared by a records custodian who did not testify, the foundational evidence itself was hearsay that could not establish the foundation for admission of otherwise inadmissible hearsay documents. Absent a proper foundation for admission of the evidence, the Supreme Court affirmed. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004), followed in St. v. Baze, 2011 MT 52, 359 Mont. 411, 251 P.3d 122.

Hearsay Statements of Child Improperly Admitted in Parental Rights Termination Case — Harmless Error: The District Court improperly admitted hearsay evidence related by the child of parents who were subject to a parental rights termination case. However, the improper hearsay was not necessary to the court's determination of proved abuse or neglect of the fitness of the parents and thus did not affect the parents' substantial rights or the result that the court reached. Although the court abused its discretion in admitting the testimony, the error was harmless, and termination of parental rights was affirmed on appeal. In re A.N. & C.N., 2000 MT 35, 298 M 237, 995 P2d 427, 57 St. Rep. 155 (2000).

Hearsay Evidence Presented by Out-of-State Residents Who Failed to Appear — Dismissal Proper: Plaintiffs, who resided in Ohio, sought recovery in a contract dispute but failed to appear in person or by counsel, claiming that the trial court could "fairly judge" the case based on documents submitted to the court. However, an examination of the documents showed they were replete with hearsay and that the unsworn written statements were made out of court and did not afford defendant with the opportunity to confront the writers or question them as to the veracity of the statements. The District Court properly dismissed the complaint with prejudice and awarded costs to defendant. Fields v. Wells, 239 M 392, 780 P2d 1141, 46 St. Rep. 1775 (1989).

Deposition Testimony Inadmissible After Close of Trial: Workers' compensation claimant did not request the inclusion of his deposition testimony until after the trial was concluded. These hearsay statements were not admissible because the claimant did not request their inclusion at the trial, thereby giving the insurer the opportunity to rebut the claimant's statements, nor do they fall under one of the exceptions in Rule 803 or 804, M.R.Ev. To allow testimony by the claimant by admission of the deposition after the trial ended would effectively have denied the insurer an opportunity to challenge the statements made by the claimant in the deposition. Varela v. Petroleum Cas. Co., 237 M 300, 773 P2d 299, 46 St. Rep. 819 (1989).

Hearsay Evidence Admitted Through Other Testimony — No Prejudice: Exclusion of a memorandum as hearsay did not prejudice or adversely affect appellant's rights when the substance of the memorandum was presented through the testimony of a witness and admission of the document would have added nothing to the evidence. Niemen v. Howell, 234 M 471, 764 P2d 854, 45 St. Rep. 2058 (1988), followed in Carl Weissman & Sons, Inc. v. D&L Thomas Equip. Corp., 1998 MT 213, 290 M 433, 963 P2d 1263, 55 St. Rep. 896 (1998).

Admission of Tape Recorded Statement Without Foundational Testimony — Neither Cumulative Nor Harmless Error: A tape recorded statement made by decedent to an insurance claims representative, edited to remove evidence of insurance, was held clearly prejudicial and not merely harmless cumulative evidence because it was introduced to the jury as evidence without explanation about the circumstances under which it was taken and without information that the jury needed to put the statement into proper perspective and because the jury was not exposed to any foundational information reflecting biases or prejudices on the part of the adjuster in asking the questions or decedent in answering them. Heisler v. Boule, 226 M 332, 735 P2d 516, 44 St. Rep. 698 (1987).

Applicability of False Exculpatory Statement Not Related to Crime Charged: Defendant claimed that a false voluntary statement he gave to a deputy sheriff prior to the time he was a suspect in the homicide should not have been admitted. He argued that since the statement was not made regarding the homicide, it showed no consciousness of guilt and unlawful intent. The Supreme Court found that the suspicious circumstances about which he gave a false explanation tended to connect him to the homicide regardless of the reason for the statement. The court cited its decision in St. v. Goltz, 197 M 361, 642 P2d 1079 (1982), that a false exculpatory statement may be used as evidence of consciousness of guilt and unlawful intent. St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Child Support Action — Affidavit of Officer of State Seeking Reimbursement: In North Dakota's action for a declaration of paternity and to obtain child support, it was proper to exclude the affidavit of a North Dakota welfare administrator setting forth what North Dakota had paid for public assistance to the mother, the child's medical costs, and blood tests to establish paternity, for which North Dakota sought reimbursement. The affidavit was hearsay, was made by a person not available for cross-examination, and did not fit within any of the hearsay exceptions. However, under 40-5-121 (now repealed) the welfare administrator's deposition as to his state's pleaded costs could be taken and the case was remanded to allow a deposition to be taken. Because North Dakota did not plead its expenditures for the child's medical costs, they could not be recovered and the deposition could not cover those costs. St. of N. Dak. ex rel. B.J.D. v. S.P.R., 219 M 26, 710 P2d 702, 42 St. Rep. 1817 (1985).

Hearsay and Violation of United States Constitutional Right of Confrontation: Although the Confrontation Clause (sixth amendment, U.S. Const.) does not prevent the introduction of all hearsay statements, the federal District Court granted a Writ of Habeas Corpus to petitioner where, at his trial, testimony as to a prior inconsistent statement was admitted, but because of a genuine lapse of memory, the witness could not recall the basis for the statement, thus effectively denying the petitioner of his right of cross-examination. Creekmore v. District Court, 571 F. Supp. 992, 40 St. Rep. 1638 (D.C. Mont. 1983).

False Exculpatory Statements: The defendant in a criminal action falsely assured her employer that the money she is accused of stealing was deposited in her personal checking account. The statements made by the defendant are admissible to impeach the defendant and also to prove consciousness of guilt and unlawful intent. Her statements are not admissions but false exculpatory statements which are admissible. St. v. Goltz, 197 M 361, 642 P2d 1079, 39 St. Rep. 613 (1982).

Unreliable, Uncorroborated Statement Attributed to Another: Employee's foreman stated that employee's supervisor had told him that employee was injured off the job while moving a refrigerator. Supervisor could not recall such a discussion with foreman, and employee stated that he had not moved a refrigerator. Foreman's statement was not reliable, was uncorroborated hearsay which if anything was contradicted by supervisor, and had little force when considered against the far more convincing and consistent explanation by claimant, supported by the depositions of two doctors who treated him, that he was injured on the job. Jones v. St. Regis Paper Co., 196 M 138, 639 P2d 1140, 38 St. Rep. 2201 (1981).

When Hearsay Excluded — Repudiated Statements — Alternatives to Admission of Hearsay: A defendant convicted of sexual intercourse without consent and sexual assault alleged error on appeal relating to testimony of a prosecution witness' former attorney, which was offered but excluded at trial. The testimony related to the alleged denial of the right to counsel to one of the prosecution witnesses and the subsequent use of her statements to the police incriminating the defendant even though she had repudiated them. The Supreme Court on review held that the trial court ruling had been correct. The excluded testimony was inadmissible hearsay. In upholding the District Court ruling, the Supreme Court noted that the defendant could have questioned the police about prior inconsistent statements and he could have questioned the witness herself. St. v. Camitsch, 192 M 124, 626 P2d 1250, 38 St. Rep. 563 (1981), followed in St. v. Stuit, 277 M 227, 921 P2d 866, 53 St. Rep. 607 (1996).

Reversible Error — Opening Statement About Evidence Later Held Inadmissible Hearsay: Where the prosecutor in his opening statement to the jury made the statement that a witness would testify to a conversation in which a third party said that he saw the defendant drive a car away from a car lot and where this conversation was later held inadmissible as a hearsay violation, there is a “reasonable possibility” that the inadmissible evidence entered in the opening statement contributed to the conviction of the defendant and thus is grounds for reversal. St. v. West, 190 M 38, 617 P2d 1298, 37 St. Rep. 1772 (1980), following St. v. Zachmeier, 151 M 256, 441 P2d 737 (1968).

Radio Dispatch to Police — Hearsay Admissible to Establish Probable Cause: Testimony of a police officer regarding a radio dispatch received regarding a motorcycle theft, introduced to establish the officers probable cause for stopping the vehicle in which defendant was riding and subsequently to arrest him, was not hearsay in this context and was properly admitted. St. v. White, 185 M 213, 605 P2d 191, 37 St. Rep. 84 (1980).

Evidence of Other Crimes, Wrongs, or Acts — Hearsay — Prejudicial Error: Direct evidence of other crimes, if such evidence came within the exceptions of Rule 404(3)(b), M.R.Ev., would be admissible. Indirect, hearsay evidence must also conform to the rules relating to the admission of hearsay testimony, including the exceptions. If the severely beaten victim were regarded as an unavailable witness because of her physical condition, her statements would be admissible if they came within the exceptions of Rule 804, M.R.Ev. Here, however, the hearsay declarant was not found to have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness because she admittedly disliked the defendant. Nor could the victim’s statements be admitted as “excited utterances” because such utterances are admissible only if they are part of the res gestae of the crime charged. Admission of the statements of the victim to a friend and to her doctor, therefore, constituted prejudicial error. Admission of proof of wholly independent crimes requires a balancing of the relative probative value of the evidence against the prejudicial effect. Evidence of a course of conduct similar to the crime charged tends to prove the crime charged, but such evidence should not be admitted unless the proof thereof tends toward the conclusion that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged with moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. With proper safeguards, the court would allow evidence of previous assaults. St. v. Brubaker, 184 M 294, 602 P2d 974, 36 St. Rep. 1915 (1979).

Federal Law Compelling Exception to Hearsay Rule — Administrative Psychological Assessment Report Admitted: When an assessment of a child’s psychologic and mental condition is made as part of administrative proceedings, the report is part of the administrative record and accordingly it is a part of the evidence that the District Court had to consider. Federal law requires this, and it overrides any other consideration with respect to the reception into evidence of the report, including the inherent evil in accepting hearsay evidence not subject to cross-examination. In re the “A” Family, 184 M 145, 602 P2d 157, 36 St. Rep. 1898 (1979).

Inadmissible Hearsay — Child’s Statement: The court committed reversible error when it allowed witnesses to testify, over defendant’s objection, to statements made by a 4-year-old child that defendant had beaten her and her sister, because the alleged statement went to the very facts which the state was trying to prove, was offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted, and was therefore inadmissible hearsay. St. v. Campbell, 176 M 525, 579 P2d 1231 (1978), distinguished in In re S.M. & P.L.M., 2001 MT 11, 304 M 102, 19 P3d 213 (2001).

Admissibility of Medical Reports — Workers’ Compensation Court: It is well settled that it is not an abuse of discretion for the Workers’ Compensation Court to consider the contents of medical reports contained in the case file before the court in spite of their alleged hearsay nature when counsel for defendant fails to object. Hayes v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 513, 579 P2d 1225 (1978).

Rule 803. Hearsay exceptions: availability of declarant immaterial.Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal Rule 803, except that changes have been made in several of the exceptions. Explanation of the changes appears in the Commission Comments to those exceptions. The Commission adopted the Federal scheme of setting out hearsay exceptions in Rules 803 and 804, which are differentiated by the requirement of availability of the hearsay declarant. Rule 803, contains exceptions which possess circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness of such a high standard that the availability of the declarant is immaterial; that is, these statements may be admitted whether or not the declarant is available as a witness. Rule 804(b) contains exceptions which do not possess such a high circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness and so require that the hearsay declarant be unavailable, as defined in Rule 804(a).

The Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 803, 56 F.R.D. 183, 303 (1972), indicates that the rule is phrased so that statements are admissible only so far as the hearsay rule is concerned "...in order to repel any implication that other possible grounds for exclusion are eliminated from consideration". It also notes that it is intended that the firsthand knowledge rule applies to this rule and Rule 804. Id.

Finally, it should be mentioned that the Commission adopted, in Exception (24) of this rule, an exception which allows hearsay statements to be admitted if they have "...comparable circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness..." of the other exceptions. In light of this exception, the theory of admissibility of each exception is set out in its Commission Comments.

Exception (1). Present sense impression. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(1). The guarantee of trustworthiness is provided by the spontaneity of the event and the reduced likelihood of deliberate misrepresentation; direct and cross-examination of either the declarant or witness who heard the hearsay statement adds to accuracy and aids in evaluation. Advisory Committee's Note, supra, 56 F.R.D. at 304. A slight time lapse is allowed because "...in most instances, precise contemporaneity is not possible...". Id. The subject of the statement may only concern the event because the trustworthiness attributed to spontaneity goes no further. Id., at 305.

This exception is consistent with existing Montana law. There is one case which can be analyzed as coming within this rule, Sellers v. Montana-Dakota Power Co., 99 Mont. 39, 55, 41 P2d 44 (1935), and one case which has stated that present sense impression is an exception to the hearsay rule found within the res gestae rule. State v. Newman, 162 Mont. 450, 457, 513 P2d 258 (1973). However, the res gestae rule is broader than any of the first three exceptions to the hearsay rule considered under Rule 803: first, because it goes beyond the time limits usually allowed (eleven years in Burns v. Smith, 21 Mont. 251, 275, 53 P 742 (1898) and 25 years in Welch v. All Persons, 85 Mont. 114, 128, 278 P 110 (1927)); and second, because it applies to events or actions outside the hearsay rule as defined in Rule 801; that is, in Montana evidence of other crimes occurring within the criminal transaction which is the basis of the case are admissible under the res gestae rule. State v. Howard, 30 Mont. 518, 524, 77 P 50 (1904); State v. Russell, 93 Mont. 334, 336, 18 P2d 611 (1933) and State v. Meidinger, 160 Mont. 310, 321, 502 P2d 58 (1972). The statutory basis of the res gestae rule is Sections 93-401-7, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-103], and 93-401-27(7), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded].

Exception (2). Excited utterance. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(2). The guarantee of trustworthiness is provided by the spontaneity of the statement, caused by the excitement "...which temporarily stills the capacity of reflection and produces utterances free of conscious fabrication". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 304. The exception obviously requires an event which causes excitement and that the declarant be under the stress of excitement when he makes the statement. Id. The subject matter of the statement is broader than allowed under Exception (1), in that need only "relate" to the event.

This exception is also consistent with existing Montana law. As noted in the Notes for Exception (1), the res gestae rule is broader than any exception to the hearsay rule; however, excited utterances were included as hearsay exceptions within that rule in the analysis found in State v. Newman, supra 162 Mont. at 457. The Montana cases combine this hearsay exception with res gestae rule, but provide the same requirement noted above. Callahan v. Chicago, Burlington and Quincy R.R., 47 Mont. 401, 409, 133 P 687 (1913); Sullivan v. Metropolitan-Life Ins. Co., 96 Mont. 254, 266, 29 P2d 1046 (1934) and State v. Medicine Bull, 152 Mont. 34, 44, 455 P2d 916 (1968).

Exception (3). Then-existing mental, emotional, or physical condition. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(3) except the phrase "unless it relates to the execution, revocation, identification, or terms of declarant's will", found at the end of the exception in those rules, is deleted from the exception. The Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(3), state of mind exception, generally follows the rule of Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hillmon, 145 U.S. 285 (1892), which allows hearsay statements to prove state of mind from which future actions of the declarant may be inferred. Advisory Committee's Note, supra at 305. However, the state of mind exception is not allowed to be used to infer past actions of the declarant. Shepard v. United States, 290 U.S. 96 (1933). The Advisory Committee's Note, supra at 305, explains:

The exclusion of "statements of memory to prove the fact remembered or believed" is necessary to avoid the virtual destruction of the hearsay rule which would otherwise result from allowing state of mind, provable by a hearsay statement, to serve as the basis for an inference of the happening of the event which produced the state of mind.

The deleted phrase is an exception to this limitation which allows declarations of the testator's state of mind to infer his past actions in connection with his will. The Commission rejects this phrase because it is inconsistent with existing Montana probate law which the Commission felt should not be changed by rules of evidence. Montana case law holds the declarations of the testator are not admissible as to the existence or revocation of the will (In re Colbert's Estate, 31 Mont. 461, 471, 78 P 971 (1904)) and the testator's attitude toward the contestee of the will. In re Miller's Estate, 71 Mont. 330, 341, 229 P 851 (1924). It is also apparent that the deleted phrase is inconsistent with Montana statutes: Section 91A-2-603, R.C.M. 1947 [72-2-501, now repealed], provides that the "intention of the testator as expressed in his will controls the legal effect of his dispositions". Section 93-401-13, R.C.M. 1947 [28-2-905, 70-20-202, and 72-11-304, now repealed], provides that no evidence other than the will itself is admissible concerning its terms, as part of the parol evidence rule.

The guarantee of trustworthiness of the state of mind exception is also the spontaneity of the statement, for this exception is really a "specialized application of Exception (1), presented separately to enhance its usefulness and accessibility". Advisory Committee's Note, supra at 305.

The exception, as adopted, is consistent with existing Montana law. It is possible to interpret Burles v. Oregon Shortline Ry., 49 Mont. 129, 134, 140 P 513 (1914), as allowing hearsay statements relating to a physical condition. Statements of state of mind were held admissible in conjunction with the res gestae rule in Ross v. Industrial Accident Bd., 106 Mont. 486, 495, 80 P2d 362 (1938) and Thompson v. Steinkamp, 120 Mont. 475, 481, 187 P2d 1018 (1947). Finally, this exception was recognized in the analysis of the res gestae rule in State v. Newman, supra 162 Mont. at 457. (See Comments to Exception (1) for discussion of res gestae rule.)

Exception (4). Statements for purposes of medical diagnosis or treatment. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(4). The guarantee of trustworthiness is provided by the patient's motivation for proper diagnosis and treatment. However, it is apparent that when the patient is obtaining the physician's diagnosis only for purposes of litigation, as under Rule 35 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, this guarantee is not present. However, these types of statements would be admissible as the basis for an expert's opinion under Rule 703, and the likelihood of the jury not distinguishing between the basis of an opinion and substantive evidence is strong enough that statements for purposes of diagnosis only are also admissible. Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 306. The exception allows statements made to any person and about any pertinent subject, so long as within the purpose of the exception. Id. The rule expands the law to allow statements of past medical history because the trustworthiness factor still applies and because it is apparent that statements of this type could be admissible as the basis for an opinion or under Rule 803(6), which could admit hospital or physicians' records.

This exception is a change to existing Montana law to the extent that it allows statements dealing with medical diagnosis and treatment to be admitted as substantive evidence rather than as the basis for an expert's opinion. Montana law allows physicians to base their opinion on statements of this kind (Kelly v. John Daily Co., 56 Mont. 63, 78, 181 P 326 (1919) and Bingham v. Nat'l Bank of Montana, 105 Mont. 159, 173, 72 P2d 90 (1937)) and upon unsworn medical reports. Klaus v. Hilberry, 157 Mont. 277, 285, 485 P2d 766 (1972).

Exception (5). Recorded recollection. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(5). The guarantee of trustworthiness "is found in the reliability inherent in a record made while events were still fresh in mind and accurately reflecting them". Advisory Committee's Note supra 56 F.R.D. at 306. It is important to distinguish this hearsay exception, recorded recollection, from Rule 612, writings used to refresh memory. As noted in the Commission Comments to Rule 612, a writing used to refresh the witness' memory is used only for that purpose and not as evidence, for the witness is able to testify after referring to such a writing. A recorded recollection is used in the situation where the witness is unable to testify independently of the writing because he has an insufficient memory of the subject.

This exception is consistent with existing Montana law as found in Section 93-1901-6, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and the leading case construing that statute, Marron v. Great N. Ry., 46 Mont. 593, 601, 129 P 1055 (1913). That case construed the statute to require that the witness "not retain any recollection of the particular facts recorded in the memoranda after he examines the entries...". This requirement was affirmed in O'Rourke v. Grand Opera House, 47 Mont. 459, 470, 133 P 965 (1913). Exception (5) complies with that requirement by stating: "a witness... had knowledge but now has insufficient recollection to enable him to testify fully and accurately...". Marron, supra at 602, construed the statute as requiring a three-part foundation:

(a) The entries must have been written by the witness himself or under his direction; (b) they must have been written at the time the facts occurred or at a time when the facts were fresh in the witness' memory; and (c) the witness must have known at the time the entries were made that they correctly stated the facts.

Exception (5) complies with these foundational requirements by stating: "...shown to have been made or adopted by the witness when the matter was fresh in his memory and to reflect that knowledge correctly." It is also obviously required under existing Montana law and the exception that the witness have personal knowledge of the matter. Spurgeon v. Imperial Elevator Co., 99 Mont. 432, 436, 43 P2d 891 (1935).

However, the exception changes existing Montana law in its last sentence which provides that the memorandum may be read into evidence but not received as an exhibit unless offered by an adverse party. Existing Montana law provides in Section 93-1901-6, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], that the recorded recollection may be read to the jury and received with caution. In State v. Deidtman, 58 Mont. 13, 22, 190 P 117 (1920), the court stated the reason for this provision in the statute: "Recognizing the possibility of error in the memorandum, and the fact that the opposite party is practically precluded from testing its accuracy, the statute has wisely declared the testimony of the witness...shall be received by the jury with caution". The Commission believes the exception states the better policy of not generally allowing the memorandum to be admitted into evidence because the jury may give written testimony undue emphasis. The same policy is found in Section 93-5104, R.C.M. 1947 [25-7-404], which provides that the jury may deliberate with all papers received as evidence "except depositions or copies of such papers as ought not, in the opinion of the court, to be taken from the person having them in possession...", and Section 93-5106, R.C.M. 1947 [25-7-405], which provides the procedure for the jury's review of testimony.

Exception (6). Records of regularly conducted activity. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803 (6) except the phrase "by or from information transmitted by, a person with knowledge," is deleted and the phrase "of the acts, events, conditions, opinions or diagnoses," is added. It is apparent that the Federal drafters were following the Federal statute (28 U.S.C. Section 1732) in stating the personal knowledge requirement. However, the Commission made this change because existing Montana law had not specifically called for the personal knowledge rule to have the effect of excluding such records. It was felt that the admissibility of business records presently admitted under Montana law could be restricted by strict construction of the deleted phrase. The Commission also felt that the deleted phrase had the effect of requiring the proponent of the evidence and the custodian of the record to establish personal knowledge. If there is insufficient personal knowledge or lack of regularly conducted activity leading up to the entry in the record, the burden should be on the opponent of the evidence to show it and argue for exclusion under the authority of the phrase in the exception allowing the court to exclude records if the "source of information or method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness".

The guarantee of trustworthiness is provided by the nature of the record and the circumstances of preparation, enhanced by "systematic checking, by regularity and continuity which produce habits of precision, by actual experience of business in relying upon them, or by a duty to make an accurate record as part of a continuing job or occupation". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 308.

The exception, as amended, is consistent with existing Montana law. Sections 93-1101-17, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-607], and 93-1101-18, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded] contain the common-law exceptions for the shop book rule and regular business entry exceptions, and R.C.M. 1947, Sections 93-801-1 through 801-6 [all superseded] contain the Uniform Business Records as Evidence Act. Section 93-801-1, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], contains a definition of business substantially the same as that contained in the last sentence of the exception. Section 93-801-2, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], contains a provision for the admissibility of business records like the first sentence of the exception. The Commission amended the Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(6) to conform to what it believes to be the existing law and practice in Montana under the Uniform Act.

It should be noted that the exception allows opinions and diagnosis (contained in the record) to be admissible; this is consistent with Klaus v. Hilberry, 157 Mont. 277, 285, 485 P2d 54 (1971), which allowed medical reports containing opinions and diagnosis to be admitted and referred to Section 93-801-2, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. It should also be noted that the exception could be seen as an expansion of existing Montana law to the extent that records of regularly conducted activity in a wide variety of forms, including computer printouts, are admissible.

Exception (7). Absence of entry in records kept in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (6). This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(7). The guarantee of trustworthiness is found in the logical assumption that if records under Exception (6) are allowed to prove the existence of a fact or occurrence of an event because the records are systematically, regularly, and accurately kept and relied upon, then the absence of an entry of a matter which would ordinarily appear should be allowed to prove the nonexistence or nonoccurrence of that matter. This exception has never been dealt with under existing Montana law, although an analogous exception presently exists in [former] Rule 44(b), M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded]. See Notes to Exception (10).

Exception (8). Public records and reports. This exception is not the same as Federal Rule 803(8), but is identical to Uniform Rule (1974) 803(8). The Commission chose to adopt the Uniform provision because it was clearer than the Federal Rule and because it expressed better policy with certain reports in requiring the official to testify rather than admitting his report as a hearsay exception.

The guarantee of trustworthiness of this exception can be found partly under Exception (6), records of regularly conducted activity, partly under the assumption that official duty is regularly performed (Section 93-1301-7(15), R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-602]), and "the unlikelihood that he will remember details independently of the record", Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 311.

This exception is consistent with existing Montana law except that it clarifies several areas where official reports are to be excluded. Section 93-1001-32, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-605], provides that the entries in official books or records, made in the performance of official duty, are prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein. Section 93-901-1, et seq., R.C.M. 1947 [all superseded], the Uniform Official Reports as Evidence Act, modernizes this exception to the hearsay rule. Section 93-901-1, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides: "Written reports or findings of fact made by the officers of this state, on a matter within the scope of their duty as defined by statute, shall, insofar as relevant, be admitted as evidence of the matter stated therein". The adoption of the exception is intended to remove the restriction of admitting only reports from state officials, found in the statute and applied in Richardson v. Farmers' Union Oil Co., 131 Mont. 535, 553, 312 P2d 134 (1957). Note that a police report was excluded in a civil case, but on grounds that it stated the cause of an injury, in Gagnier v. Zook, 141 Mont. 214, 377 P2d 101 (1962). This exception is inconsistent with State v. Snider, 168 Mont. 220, 541 P2d 1204, 32 St. Rep. 1056, 1062 (1975), which held a state chemist's report admissible under Section 93-901-1, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and so this case is overruled by this exception.

Exception (9). Records of vital statistics. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(9). The circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness is the same as found with Exception (8); the only distinction between the two is that the source of information is not necessarily a public official, although a public official does make the record or entry. This guarantee of trustworthiness is enhanced by the unlikelihood of a false entry being made when the report is of such an incident and is made pursuant to requirements of law.

This exception is consistent with existing Montana statutes. Section 93-1001-2, R.C.M. 1947 [2-6-101 (now repealed)], provides that records of this sort are public writings, Section 93-1001-32, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-605], provides that entries in official books are prima facie evidence of their contents, Section 69-4412, R.C.M. 1947 [50-15-109], provides that certificates concerning vital statistics are prima facie evidence of their contents, and Section 69-4435, R.C.M. 1947 [50-15-108], provides the duty of any person with knowledge to furnish information concerning vital statistics.

Exception (10). Absence of public record or entry. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(10). The circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness is found in the same assumption made with Exception (7); that is, where a record is systematically, regularly, and accurately kept and relied upon, the absence of such a record or entry should be allowed to prove the nonoccurrence of the event.

This exception is consistent with Rule 44(b), Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides: "A written statement that after diligent search no record or entry of a specific tenor is found to exist in the records designated by the statement...is admissible as evidence that the records contain no such record or entry". Note that Rule 44(a), as well as this exception, require proper authentication procedures. See Rule 902.

Exception (11). Records of religious organizations. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(11). These records would be admitted under Section 93-901-1, et seq., R.C.M. 1947 [all superseded], the business records exception, and therefore have the same guarantees of trustworthiness as the records admitted under Exception (6). This guarantee is enhanced by the unlikelihood of false information being provided to religious organizations. Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 314. There are possible restrictions under Exception (6), relating to the source of information being within the regular course of business, which should not apply here, and so a separate exception is provided. Id.

Exception (12). Marriage, baptismal, and similar certificates. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(12). This exception is similar to Exceptions (8) and (9), official records and records of vital statistics, and the guarantee of trustworthiness is found under these exceptions. It is consistent with Montana law as noted under those exceptions, but goes beyond those exceptions in the area of sacrament and so expands Montana law. Note the certification procedure requires authentication. See Rule 902.

Exception (13). Family records. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(13). The guarantee of trustworthiness is provided by the unlikelihood that a false family record would exist. This represents the common law exception which has long received such records; the common law exception is found in Section 93-401-27(13), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], which allows evidence of "...entries in family Bibles, or other family books or charts, engravings on rings, family portraits and the like...". A family Bible was admitted into evidence, even though it appeared it had been altered, for whatever probative value it might have in the case of In re Colbert's Estate, 51 Mont. 455, 467, 153 P 1022 (1916). Therefore, this exception is consistent with existing Montana law.

Exception (14). Records of documents affecting an interest in property. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(14). The guarantee of trustworthiness is provided by Exception (8), official records, and is enhanced by the procedures associated with the recording process of this type of document. Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 315. This guarantee is strong enough to allow proof of execution and delivery of the document, even though the recorder probably does not have personal knowledge of those facts. Id. It should be noted that the importance of documents of this nature lends credibility to their contents.

This exception is consistent with existing Montana law as pointed out in the Commission Comments to Exception (8); Section 93-401-12(4), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], which provides that evidence of contents of a writing are provable when the original has been recorded; and recording statutes such as R.C.M. 1947 Sections 16-2909 [7-4-2616], 39-129 [not codified], 52-310 [repealed], and 89-814 [repealed].

Exception (15). Statements in documents affecting an interest in property. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(15). The guarantee of trustworthiness is the same as that found in Exception (14), enhanced by "The circumstances under which dispositive documents are executed and the requirement that the recital be germane to the purpose of the document...particularly in view of the nonapplicability of the rule if dealings with the property have been inconsistent with the document". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 315.

The exception is consistent with existing Montana law to the extent set out in the Commission Comments to Exception (14). Note that the document itself and not the record of the document is admissible under this exception and some of those statutes allow the record to be prima facie evidence of the contents of the document.

Exception (16). Ancient documents. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(16). There are two problems which arise in connection with ancient documents: authenticity and hearsay objection. The exception requires that the document be authenticated and in so doing lends trustworthiness to the document. The trustworthiness is enhanced by the fact that the written document predated the controversy in which it is used as evidence. Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 315. It is also likely that the written document made 20 years before will be the most accurate evidence available.

Generally, existing Montana law is consistent with this exception. Section 93-1301-7(34), R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-602], provides a rebuttable presumption that a document more than thirty years old which is authenticated and acted upon as genuine by persons having an interest is genuine. Cook v. Hudson, 110 Mont. 263, 284, 103 P2d 137 (1940), construed this statute as presuming the contents of documents are genuine and prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein. King v. Schultz, 141 Mont. 94, 98, 375 P2d 108 (1962), construed the statute and Cook

v. Hudson, supra by stating “the ancient document rule does not change the basis for admission of evidence other than as to genuineness of the document”. This statement can be explained by later remarks that “ancient documents may be admitted in evidence as proof of the facts therein, provided the writers would have been competent to testify to such facts”. This is apparently concerned with the firsthand knowledge rule which applies to this and all exceptions. The exception changes existing Montana law by allowing the age of the document to be twenty instead of thirty years and it need not be acted upon.

Exception (17). Market reports, commercial publications. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(17). The guarantee of trustworthiness is provided by “general reliance by the public or by a particular segment of it, and the motivation of the compiler to foster reliance by being accurate”. Advisory Committee’s Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 316.

The exception is consistent with existing Montana law. Section 87A-2-724, R.C.M. 1947 [30-2-724], the Uniform Commercial Code, provides that prevailing price or value of goods regularly bought and sold may be proven by “reports in official publications or trade journals or in newspapers or periodicals of general circulation...”. Section 93-1101-8, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that “historical works, books of science or art, and published maps or charts... are prima facie evidence...” of facts of general notoriety and interest. Cases construing this provision have allowed various commercial publications to be admitted: tables showing stopping distances of locomotives (Lynes v. N. Pac. Ry. Co., 32 Mont. 317, 326, 117 P 81 (1911)); and mortality and annuity tables. Ralph v. MacMarr Stores, 103 Mont. 421, 430, 52 P2d 1285 (1936). Safety reports and regulations may or may not be admissible. See Hackley v. Waldorf-Hoerner Paper Co., 149 Mont. 286, 294, 425 P2d 712 (1967).

Exception (18). Learned treatises. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(18). Exception (17) is really a limited application of the learned treatises exception, and so the guarantees of trustworthiness mentioned there are applicable to this exception. The adoption of this exception represents a change in existing Montana law. (See below). Arguments against the admissibility of learned treatises deal with the lack of cross-examination and potential misuse of treatises. Advisory Committee’s Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 316. These arguments are met, first, by the trustworthiness of the exception and, second, by provisions in the exception to prevent misuse. Id. The guarantees of trustworthiness of the exception, that experts in the area generally rely on the work, that the motivation of the writer is to be accurate in order to gain acceptance, and that the treatise was written impartially and without concern for litigation, are strong enough to displace the argument of lack of cross-examination of the author. Id. The provisions in the exception which prevent misuse are: first, that the treatise be called to the attention of an expert or relied upon by him; second, the treatise must be established as a reliable authority on the subject; and third, the learned treatise, if admitted, may only be read into evidence and not received as an exhibit.

This exception, as noted above, is contrary to Montana law. Although Section 93-1101-8, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], discussed in Exception (17), would seemingly provide that learned treatises are admissible, case law has provided otherwise. First, cases have held that it is proper to cross-examine an expert using a learned treatise. Emerson v. Butte Elec. Ry., 46 Mont. 454, 458, 129 P 319 (1922) and State v. Bess, 60 Mont. 558, 569, 199 P 426 (1921). However, it is not permissible to read or frame questions from treatises on direct examination of an expert. Schumacher v. Murray Hosp., 58 Mont. 447, 456, 193 P 397 (1920) and State v. Bess, supra. The adoption of this exception overrules these cases which prohibit the use of learned treatises on direct examination. It should be noted that learned treatises concerned with legal topics are apparently admissible to prove the contents of the treatise. In re Nielsen’s Estate, 118 Mont. 304, 307, 165 P2d 792 (1945).

Exception (19). Reputation concerning personal or family history. This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(19), except the phrase “or dissolution of marriage” is added to be consistent with the concepts contained in Section 48-316, R.C.M. 1947 [40-4-104], the Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act. The guarantee of trustworthiness of this and other reputation exceptions that follow is found “when the topic is such that the facts are likely to have been inquired about and that persons having personal knowledge have disclosed facts which have thus been discussed in the community; and thus the community’s conclusion, if any has been formed, is likely to be a trustworthy one”. Advisory Committee’s Note, 56 F.R.D. supra at 317, quoting 5 Wigmore, Evidence, Section 1580 at 444. This exception is somewhat broader than that found at common law in that the circle of persons allowed to testify as to reputation is enlarged to include associates, a change consistent with conditions in today’s society, and the range of matters about which reputation evidence may be used is broadened to include more than just marriage. Id.

This exception is consistent with existing Montana law, although it does represent an expansion as to persons who may testify and topics which may be proven. Section 93-401-9, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides "the declaration, act, or omission of a member of a family, who is a decedent, or out of the jurisdiction, is also admissible in evidence of common reputation, in cases where, on questions of pedigree, such reputation is admissible". Section 93-401-27(11), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that among the facts provable at trial are "common reputation existing previous to the controversy, respecting facts... in cases of pedigree". Two cases have held this sort of evidence admissible. In re Colbert's Estate, 51 Mont. 455, 468, 153 P 1022 (1915) and In re Wehr's Estate, 96 Mont. 245, 251, 29 P 856 (1934). This exception is a change to Montana law to the extent that the exception no longer requires the reputation to predate the controversy.

Exception (20). Reputation concerning boundaries or general history. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(20). The guarantee of trustworthiness of reputation evidence is discussed in the Commission Comments to Exception (19). This exception is generally consistent with existing Montana law. Section 93-401-27(11), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that among the facts provable at trial are "common reputation existing previous to the controversy respecting facts of a public or general interest more than 30 years old, and cases of ... boundary". Section 93-1301-7(12), R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-602], provides the rebuttable presumption "that a person is the owner of property...from common reputation of ownership". Cases recognize the exception in relation to boundaries. Kurth v. LaJeune, 83 Mont. 100, 109, 269 P 408 (1928); Nemitz v. Reckards, 98 Mont. 229, 240, 38 P2d 930 (1934) and Brennan v. Mayo, 105 Mont. 276, 278, 72 P2d 463 (1937) and cases cited therein.

Exception (21). Reputation as to character. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(21). The guarantee of trustworthiness for reputation evidence is discussed in the Commission Comments to Exception (19). This exception is adopted to allow character evidence to be proved by reputation under Rules 404, 405, and 608 without a hearsay problem. See Commission Comments under those rules for discussion of existing Montana law which is consistent with this provision.

Exception (22). Judgement of previous conviction. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 802(22), except prosecution is substituted for Government and the phrase "for purposes other than impeachment" because of the Commission's action in relation to Rule 609, not allowing impeachment by conviction of crime. The effect of this exception is to admit judgments of previous convictions for what they are worth and to prove any fact essential to sustain the judgment. Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 318.

This exception is inconsistent with existing Montana law. Doyle v. Gore, 15 Mont. 212, 213, 38 P 939 (1895), held that evidence of conviction for assault was inadmissible in the civil action arising out of the same incident. The rule was followed in State v. Vuckovich, 61 Mont. 480, 492, 203 P 491 (1921). The Commission felt that the guarantee of trustworthiness of this exception, the high standard of proof in criminal cases and the result of a jury's deliberations or plea of guilty, is equal to that of any of the other exceptions and so changed the rule in Montana. It should be noted that the Montana Supreme Court sanctioned a trial court taking judicial notice of a criminal conviction in a civil action. Sikora v. Sikora, 160 Mont. 27, 34, 497 P2d 808 (1972).

Exception (23). Judgment as to personal, family, or general history, or boundaries. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 803(23). The guarantee of trustworthiness is that a judgment based on reputation is at least as reliable as the reputation itself. Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 319. Therefore, when evidence admissible under Exceptions (19) and (20) is the basis for a judgment, this exception allows that judgment to be admissible. It is probable that this exception will be used when other reputation evidence is not available. There is no Montana law specifically on this exception, but reputation evidence of this sort is currently admissible. See Commission Comments to Exceptions (19) and (20).

Exception (24). Other exceptions. This exception is identical to the Exception (24) contained in the version of the Federal Rules submitted to Congress. Congress amended that exception to require, in addition to circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, that the statement is offered as evidence of material fact, that it is more probative on the point for which it is offered than any other evidence, that the general purposes of the rules and interests of justice will be served, and that notice be served on the adversary.

The Commission believed this exception should allow "room for growth and development of the law of evidence in the area of hearsay" (Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 320) and that the amendments by Congress are too restrictive and contrary to the purpose of the provision. These amendments can be criticized as follows: the requirement that the statement be offered as evidence of a "material" fact is redundant in requiring relevance as defined in Rule 401 and uses outmoded language so indicated in the Commission Comments to that rule. The requirement that the evidence be more probative on the point for which it is offered restricts the use of these types of exceptions by imposing a requirement similar to that of unavailability under Rule 804; this restriction would have the effect of severely limiting the instances in which the exception would be used and be impractical in the sense that a party would generally offer the strongest evidence available regardless of the existence of this requirement. The requirement that the general purposes of these rules and interests of justice will be served is unnecessarily repetitive in view of Rule 102. Finally, the notice requirement is unnecessary because of discovery procedures and the discretion of the court in allowing advance rulings on the admissibility of evidence.

The guarantee of trustworthiness set out in the Commission Comments to each of the other exceptions is the criteria to be used in determining whether to apply this open-ended exception and find a “comparable circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness”.

There is no equivalent Montana law to this exception. The adoption of this exception changes existing Montana law to the extent that it allows a court to admit hearsay because an equivalent guarantee of trustworthiness exists even though there is no specific exception allowing it.

EXCITED UTTERANCE

Utterances by Testator Lacked Excitement and Closeness in Time: A statement in an affidavit for a summary judgment alleged that several hours after she signed a will, the testator said that she was “hoodwinked” by signing it. The testator did not have any appearance of undue stress at the time of signing. The statement did not rise to the level of an excited utterance required under this rule to be an exception to the hearsay rule. Case law has a more demanding standard for excitement and closeness in time. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

Incriminating Spontaneous Utterance — Miranda Warning Unnecessary: After stopping Hurlbert for speeding, officers noticed additional behavior that led them to believe that Hurlbert might be engaged in illegal activity. The officers asked Hurlbert for permission to search the vehicle, but Hurlbert declined because the vehicle belonged to his wife. The officers then called the wife, who gave permission to search the vehicle, although Hurlbert initially declined permission for a warrantless search of his personal items in the vehicle. While the search was underway, Hurlbert spontaneously admitted that there was drug paraphernalia in his personal possessions in the vehicle. Hurlbert then consented to a search of his possessions, and a search of his backpack indeed revealed drugs and paraphernalia. Hurlbert contended on appeal that the officers failed to properly advise Hurlbert of his Miranda rights before asking further questions about the spontaneous statement, but the officers testified that Hurlbert was in fact Mirandized. The statement was made voluntarily and not in response to the officers’ questioning, and no Miranda warning was required before Hurlbert spontaneously uttered the incriminating statement. The District Court found the officers’ testimony regarding whether Hurlbert received a Miranda warning prior to further questioning to be more credible than Hurlbert’s testimony, and the Supreme Court deferred to the District Court's determination on the issue. St. v. Hurlbert, 2009 MT 221, 351 M 316, 211 P3d 869 (2009). See also St. v. Braulick, 2015 MT 147, 379 Mont. 302, 349 P.3d 508.

Failure to Challenge Admissibility of Victim's Statements on All Grounds as Precluding Consideration on Appeal: English challenged the admissibility of statements made by a negligent homicide victim, contending that the trial court erred in admitting the statements as excited utterances or medical diagnosis. However, the court admitted the statements on other grounds as well, including present sense impression, mental or physical condition, and circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and English failed to challenge these additional bases for admissibility. Because English failed to challenge each of the alternative bases, the Supreme Court declined to address the admissibility issue on appeal. St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Parent's Excited Utterance Following Domestic Disturbance Not Considered Hearsay in Proceeding Adjudicating Child as Youth in Need of Care: In adjudicating a child as a youth in need of care, the District Court relied on statements made by the mother to an officer who was investigating a domestic disturbance at the family residence. Following adjudication, the court implemented a treatment plan, which the father refused to sign. The court subsequently terminated the father's parental rights for failing to comply with the treatment plan. The father contended that the District Court improperly admitted hearsay evidence from the officer that provided the evidentiary support for designating the child as a youth in need of care. The Supreme Court disagreed. The excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule under this rule applied to the officer's testimony regarding the mother's statements because the statements were made immediately after the mother had been fighting with the father and while she was still visibly upset. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officer's testimony. In re T.W. & J.M., 2006 MT 153, 332 M 454, 139 P3d 810 (2006), distinguishing In re Marriage of Bonamarte, 263 M 170, 866 P2d 1132 (1994).

Admissibility of Hearsay Statements Made in Emergency Following Family Member Assault: During Mizenko's trial for partner or family member assault, the trial court admitted several hearsay statements made by the victim, Mizenko's wife, who did not testify. Mizenko contended that admitting the hearsay statements violated his constitutional right to confront witnesses against him, even though Mizenko had the opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses who related the hearsay statements, including a neighbor whom the wife had gone to for help, the emergency dispatcher who received the 9-1-1 call, and the investigating deputy. The dispatcher's testimony regarding the contents of the call was admitted without objection, and the deputy's testimony verified that the acts related on the call had occurred, so their testimony, even if objectionable, was cumulative and therefore harmless. The neighbor's testimony related statements that the wife made while in distress and while addressing a nongovernmental agent. The wife's cursory statements describing the circumstances, though evidence, were not created by the judicial process, and the wife had no reason to believe that her excited utterances would be used in court, so the statements were considered nontestimonial and properly admitted under the excited utterance exception of this rule. St. v. Mizenko, 2006 MT 11, 330 M 299, 127 P3d 458 (2006), followed in St. v. Paoni, 2006 MT 26, 331 M 86, 128 P3d 1040 (2006). See also St. v. Cameron, 2005 MT 32, 326 M 51, 106 P3d 1189 (2005).

Hearsay Statement of Assault Victim Properly Admitted as Excited Utterance: Following a sexual assault, the victim told her sister that Cameron tried to rape her. The trial court admitted the sister's statement under the present sense impression exception, but Cameron appealed on grounds that the statement was inadmissible hearsay. The Supreme Court disagreed. The statement was made when the victim was still laboring under the stress of excitement caused by the attack and was thus admissible under the excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule. Although the trial court admitted the statement for the wrong reason, the statement was nevertheless admissible, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting it. St. v. Cameron, 2005 MT 32, 326 M 51, 106 P3d 1189 (2005).

Evidence of Victim's Statements as to Perpetrator of Crime Not Within Concept of Corpus Delicti or Res Gestae — Use of Terms "Corpus Delicti" and "Res Gestae" Discouraged: The Supreme Court extensively reviewed the use of the terms "corpus delicti" and "res gestae", examining definitions and the historical development of Montana case law referencing the concepts. Here, statements by the victim to family members and friends regarding her troubled relationship with her husband, were not within the bounds of the concept of the corpus delicti because they tended to establish the perpetrator of the crime, which is not an element of the corpus delicti, and should not have been admitted under that rule. The statements were also inadmissible under the concept of res gestae. However, the admission of the victim's statements was merely cumulative and constituted harmless error. The Supreme Court urged that these vague and imprecise terms not be used in the future and advised that the court will henceforth review claims of error in the admission of evidence by determining whether the evidence was admissible under some provision of the Montana Code Annotated or under the Montana Rules of Evidence. St. v. Hansen, 1999 MT 253, 296 M 282, 989 P2d 338, 56 St. Rep. 997 (1999), clarifying numerous Montana cases that have properly or improperly applied the concepts.

Substance of 9-1-1 Call — Double Hearsay Rule Inapplicable — Admission Into Evidence Harmless Error: In a trial for sexual intercourse without consent, the District Court allowed a dispatcher to testify as to the substance of a 9-1-1 call related to the offense. The double hearsay rule did not apply. The caller's statement was hearsay, and the police dispatcher was too far removed to testify as to the victim's statements to the caller. It was error for the court to admit the substance of the 9-1-1 call into evidence; however, it was harmless error because all of the basic elements were established without question by other testimony properly admitted at trial. St. v. Graves, 272 M 451, 901 P2d 549, 52 St. Rep. 755 (1995), followed in St. v. Veis, 1998 MT 162, 289 M 450, 962 P2d 1153, 55 St. Rep. 651 (1998).

Present Sense Impression and Excited Utterance Exceptions to Hearsay Denied Absent Facts in Offer of Proof: When defendant presented no facts in offer of proof that would place an obvious hearsay statement within either the present sense impression or excited utterance exception to the hearsay rule, the offer of proof was properly denied. Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 239 M 444, 781 P2d 1116, 46 St. Rep. 1817 (1989).

Admission of Defendant's Spontaneous Remarks — Motion to Strike During Cross-Examination: Defendant was charged with and convicted of sexual intercourse without consent. During his trial, the arresting officer was asked if defendant had made any statements. Defense counsel objected on the grounds of hearsay. The court was prepared to accept the evidence under the "excited utterance" exception to the hearsay rule. The officer testified defendant said, "Which bitch did it?". No immediate objection was raised, but during cross-examination defense counsel made a motion to strike, which was denied. The prosecution made no further reference to the statement. On appeal, the Supreme Court relied on Poindexter & Orr Livestock Co. v. Oreg. Short Line Ry., 33 M 338, 83 P 886 (1905), which held that "the practice, whether in civil or criminal cases, of deliberately permitting evidence to be given without objection in the first instance, and then moving to strike it on grounds which might readily have been availed of to exclude it when offered, is not to be tolerated". The court said that even if it were to focus on the allegations of prejudice, there was no reasonable possibility that the evidence might have contributed to the conviction. St. v. Bauer, 210 M 298, 683 P2d 946, 41 St. Rep. 1066 (1984).

"Excited Utterance Exception" — Time Lapse — Event Precipitating Excitement: The Supreme Court did not reverse District Court's discretionary decision to deny admission of statement under "excited utterance exception" to hearsay rule where 1 hour had elapsed between the time of the event precipitating the statement and the statement itself and the precipitating event had been verbal argument rather than an assault with a weapon. St. v. Norgaard, 201 M 165, 653 P2d 483, 39 St. Rep. 2028 (1982).

Time Element of Present Sense Impression and Excited Utterance: Testimony of a witness, a week after the incident, with respect to statements made by a man who left with a broken jaw from the bar in which defendant allegedly used force in self-defense was properly excluded because the time element is important under the exceptions to hearsay made for present sense impressions and excited utterances. St. v. Cooper, 180 M 68, 589 P2d 133, 36 St. Rep. 30 (1979).

BUSINESS RECORDS

Defendant Charged With Bail Jumping — Minute Entries by Deputy Clerk Admitted Into Evidence Without Subjecting Clerk to Cross-Examination — Minute Entry Regularly Conducted and Regularly Recorded — Substantial Rights Not Prejudiced. St. v. Staudenmayer, 2023 MT 3, 411 Mont. 167, 523 P.3d 29.

Affidavit to Summary Judgment — Personal Knowledge — Hearsay Exception Applicable: In a foreclosure action, the plaintiff bank moved for summary judgment, and the motion was supported by an affidavit and its attached documents. The defendant objected to the affidavit and the attachments, arguing that they were hearsay. However, the District Court properly relied on the affidavit because the individual making the affidavit testified that as an authorized signer he had personal knowledge and firsthand experience regarding the bank's business records and home loan procedures, and he testified to the authenticity of the attached documents kept in the regular course of business. Although not all of the documents attached to the affidavit were certified, the affidavit certified the remaining documents and they were properly authenticated as business records. Capital One, NA v. Guthrie, 2017 MT 75, 387 Mont. 147, 392 P.3d 158.

Evidence and Testimony of Age and Value of Stolen Tool Properly Excluded — Proper Foundation Not Laid: The defendant was on trial for theft of a plasma cutter from a high school's shop classroom. On cross-examination of the current shop teacher, the defendant's counsel attempted to introduce a spreadsheet that contained an inventory list that had been created and maintained by a prior shop teacher in an effort to show the plasma cutter had been acquired a few years earlier and therefore had a value of less than the $1,500 threshold to reduce the defendant's potential theft conviction to a misdemeanor. Though the District Court made suggestions to the defendant's counsel to aid him in laying a proper foundation for the spreadsheet, the defendant's counsel was unable to get the spreadsheet into evidence after several attempts. The defendant's counsel also called an investigator as a witness in the defense case and questioned him as to whether the plasma cutter was new but was unable to successfully introduce evidence of the lesser value of the plasma cutter after the District Court sustained the state's objection for lack of foundation. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the inventory spreadsheet would be admissible as an exception to hearsay under the business records exception, the defendant's counsel failed to properly prepare for laying the foundation for admission of the inventory list. Likewise, the defendant's counsel had failed to lay the foundation for the investigator's testimony and his conclusions about the value of the plasma cutter. The Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not abuse its discretion by denying admission of the inventory list or by making evidentiary rulings regarding the investigator's testimony. St. v. Weber, 2016 MT 138, 383 Mont. 506, 373 P.3d 26.

Failure to Provide Foundation for Evidence and Testimony Key to Defendant's Defense — Ineffective Assistance of Counsel: The defendant was found guilty of felony theft of a tool valued at more than $1,500. On appeal, the defendant raised claims of ineffective assistance of counsel. Under the first Strickland prong, the defendant's counsel's performance was deficient because he failed to properly prepare to lay the foundation to introduce a spreadsheet into evidence, and he failed to properly prepare to question a defense witness on the estimated value of the stolen tool. Under the second Strickland prong, the defendant asserted that he was prejudiced by his counsel's deficient performance because he was deprived of the opportunity to establish a lesser value for the stolen tool that would have resulted in misdemeanor penalties. The Supreme Court agreed that the defendant demonstrated a reasonable probability that, but for his counsel's deficient performance, the outcome of the proceeding would have been different. The Supreme Court concluded that the defendant had received ineffective assistance of counsel and reversed and remanded for a new trial. St. v. Weber, 2016 MT 138, 383 Mont. 506, 373 P.3d 26.

E-mails and Photographs Not Admissible into Evidence as Business Records: Defendant sought to introduce e-mails and photographs into evidence as business records pursuant to the hearsay exception. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that nowhere in the record did defendant offer the e-mails and photographs for admission as business records, nor did defendant establish the necessary foundation for admission. The District Court did not err in excluding the unauthenticated e-mails and photographs as evidence. Apple Park, L.L.C. v. Apple Park Condominiums, L.L.C., 2008 MT 284, 345 M 359, 192 P.3d 232 (2008).

Failure to Satisfy Evidentiary and Foundational Requirements for Admission of Documents — Summary Judgment Reversed: After Phillip Smith was killed at a railroad crossing, his daughter filed a wrongful death and survival action against the railroad. The District Court accepted affidavits and records from railroad and state officials indicating that federal funds had been used to install double reflectorized crossbucks at the crossing and held that pursuant to Norfolk S. Ry. Co. v. Shanklin, 529 US 344 (2000), in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that state law tort claims are preempted when federal funds are used to install warning devices at railroad crossings, the preemption clause of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (FRSA), 49 U.S.C. 20106 (1994), preempted the wrongful death claim in this case. Therefore, summary judgment was granted for the railroad, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed on grounds that the affiants did not have personal knowledge that federal funds were used to install safety measures at the crossing and could not testify as to the authenticity of some of the documents, and because the railroad did not establish a foundation for the documents under the public and business records exception to the hearsay rule, the unauthenticated documents could not be used to support a summary judgment motion. Thus, the railroad did not meet the evidentiary requirements for summary judgment, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Smith v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 225, 344 M 278, 187 P.3d 639 (2008). See also Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 M 391, 15 P.3d 864 (2000), and Hiebert v. Cascade County, 2002 MT 233, 311 M 471, 56 P3d 848 (2002), followed with regard to introduction of hearsay evidence in Apple Park, L.L.C. v. Apple Park Condominiums, L.L.C., 2008 MT 284, 345 M 359, 192 P3d 232 (2008).

(8) Lacking Business Records Foundation by Records Custodian, Medical Reports Considered Inadmissible Hearsay: In an employment discrimination case, Pannoni sought to introduce written medical reports in letter form that contained observational information and opinions regarding Pannoni's medical condition and ability to return to work. The letters were accompanied by written certification that the reports had been prepared as part of a mental health center's regularly conducted business and were made at or near the time of Pannoni's diagnosis, but no one testified as to the contents of the reports or their status as regular business records. The employer objected to the evidence as hearsay, but Pannoni contended that they were admissible under the business records exception. The District Court concluded that because Pannoni had attempted to lay the foundation for the evidence through written certification prepared by a records custodian who did not testify, the foundational evidence itself was hearsay that could not establish the foundation for admission of otherwise inadmissible hearsay documents. Absent a proper foundation for admission of the evidence, the Supreme Court affirmed. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004), followed in St. v. Baze, 2011 MT 52, 359 Mont. 411, 251 P3d 122.

Admissibility of Prison Work Logbooks as Business Records: Struble was charged with falsifying work records at the state prison where he was employed. Struble argued that prison logbooks should not have been allowed as evidence under the business records exception because the logbooks were inaccurate, untrustworthy, and unreliable. The state argued that the logbooks were regularly recorded business records of employees' comings and goings in the prison and that the jury was not misled with the notion that the logbooks kept time records of employees' work. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. The prison logbooks were prepared as an essential part of routine prison operations and, being kept in the regular course of prison business, were considered trustworthy and admissible under the business records exception to the hearsay rule. St. v. Struble, 2004 MT 107, 321 M 89, 90 P3d 971 (2004). See also St. v. Edmundson, 246 M 241, 805 P2d 1289 (1990), and Bean v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 1998 MT 222, 270 M 253, 891 P2d 516 (1998).

Failure to List Fire Marshal's Report in Pretrial Order — Report Not Considered Rebuttal Evidence and Thus Properly Excluded: At an arson trial, Andersen sought to introduce into evidence a report written by a Deputy State Fire Marshal who had assisted local law enforcement in investigating the fire but who had died prior to trial and was unavailable to testify. Andersen contended that, even though it had not been endorsed as an exhibit in the pretrial order, the report was admissible under subsection (6) of this rule as a record kept in the ordinary course of business. The District Court disallowed the report under subsection (8)(i) of this rule because it was an investigative report. The Supreme Court did not reach the question of whether the report was admissible under this rule because Andersen conceded that the report had not been endorsed as an exhibit in the pretrial order; moreover, the report could not be considered rebuttal evidence because it was not offered to counter new evidence, but rather had been presented during plaintiff's case in chief. Because Andersen failed to list the report in the pretrial order, it was properly excluded. Travelers Indem. Co. v. Andersen, 1999 MT 201, 295 M 438, 983 P2d 999, 56 St. Rep. 782 (1999). See also Workman v. McIntyre Constr. Co., 190 M 5, 617 P2d 1281, 37 St. Rep. 1637 (1980), and State ex rel. St. Comp. Mut. Ins. Fund v. Berg, 279 M 161, 927 P2d 975, 53 St. Rep. 1098 (1996).

Incident Report Not Qualified as Admissible Business Record: The language of subsection (6) of this rule not only requires that the reported activity be a regularly conducted business activity but precludes admission of regularly prepared business records when the source of information or method or circumstances of preparation indicate lack of trustworthiness. In the present case, an incident report was prepared as part of an activity incidental to the employer's main business activity, in anticipation of litigation, and the information was provided by a third party who was not employed by the employer and who thus had no duty to report accurately to the employer. In light of these facts, the incident report lacked any circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness and thus did not qualify as a business record, but rather was considered inadmissible hearsay and was improperly admitted into evidence. Bean v. Bd. of Labor Appeals, 1998 MT 222, 270 M 253, 891 P2d 516, 55 St. Rep. 927 (1998).

Hearsay Exception Applicable to Testimony of Release Center Director in Considering Revocation of Conditional Release: The defendant asserted that testimony of the director of the release center where the defendant was committed was improperly admitted at a hearing to determine whether revocation of release was proper based on the defendant's behavior. The Supreme Court held that the director's testimony, based on regularly written reports of behavioral problems and counseling sessions kept in the regular course of business and prepared by a staff therapist, was credible, reliable, and well-grounded within the hearsay exception established in subsection (6) of this rule. St. v. Edmundson, 246 M 241, 805 P2d 1289, 47 St. Rep. 1937 (1990).

Hearsay Objection Not Permitted as to Stipulated Documents: When plaintiff made no objection and stipulated on the pretrial order to the admission of certain documents without foundation, he may not later raise a hearsay objection questioning whether the documents are admissible as business records under Rule 803(6), M.R.Ev. Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813, 45 St. Rep. 1751 (1988).

Authentication of Records by Stipulation — Hearsay Exception: The District Court admitted certain hospital and ambulance records as business records exceptions to the hearsay rule. Ordinarily such documents would not be self-authenticating; however, the defense stipulated to the authenticity of the records and agreed there was no need to call a medical librarian. Admissibility was affirmed because the defense was unable to identify any specific portion of the records as inaccurate. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

"Catchall" Exception to Hearsay Rule — Certain Business Records Inadmissible: In an action for unpaid wages mandated by 18-2-401, et seq., appellant claimed error in the trial court's admission of certain documentary evidence. Of the total $8,777.39 damage award, only $1,365.27 was based on oral testimony of witnesses. The balance was proved by evidence admitted under exceptions to the hearsay rule. The Commissioner of Labor introduced unverified letters of three construction companies under Rule 803(24), M.R.Ev. These letters are not business records, as they were not kept in the ordinary course of business, but were compiled for litigation purposes. The court held that sufficient guaranties of trustworthiness do not exist when documents are compiled for litigation purposes and that the letters should not have been admitted. The matter was remanded for trial on damages only. Hunter v. Bozeman, 216 M 251, 700 P2d 184, 42 St. Rep. 784 (1985).

Proof of Money Paid to Third Party Introducible Without Testimony of Third Party: Where the plaintiff made two agreements with a photographer to take aerial photos of property owned by the defendant, the District Court erred in refusing to allow the plaintiff, in an action against the defendant to recover his payments to the photographer, to introduce, without supporting testimony from the photographer, an itemized statement showing the plaintiff's costs and disbursements. The statement was made by the plaintiff in the regular conduct of his business and is therefore admissible under this rule. An employee of the plaintiff may testify as to the amount plaintiff claims it paid to the photographer, but an employee of the photographer may testify to establish a stronger credibility for the charges. Survco v. Kenyon Noble Ready-Mix, 204 M 411, 664 P2d 943, 40 St. Rep. 971 (1983).

Admissibility of Ledger of Accounts for Legal Services Rendered: As attorney performed work for client, he prepared a slip listing services performed and time involved. The client was shown the work slips on a monthly basis. The contents of the slips were then transferred in memorandum form by the attorney to client's account book. Then the slips were destroyed. In a suit for attorney fees, the account book was admissible under this rule. Morse v. Cremer, 200 M 71, 647 P2d 358, 39 St. Rep. 1162 (1982).

Testimony as to Procedures Followed in Certain Business Circumstances: In determining whether defendant had acted as an attorney in a suit brought against a corporation, the testimony of a staff attorney of the corporation that the corporation's policy was to immediately notify its insurance carrier by mail of any claims against the corporation and that no such letter appeared in their files regarding defendant's suit was admissible even though the staff attorney had not been employed by the corporation when the alleged suit was filed. St. v. Bretz, 185 M 253, 605 P2d 974, 36 St. Rep. 1037 (1979).

OTHER RECORDS

Government Weather Report Deemed Self-Authenticating Public Record — Hearsay Exception — Personal Knowledge of Witness Not Required: The District Court did not err when it admitted a U.S. Department of Commerce weather report into evidence while the defendant was questioning a plaintiffs' witness despite the fact that the plaintiffs' witness was not an expert and despite the plaintiffs' objections. The weather report at issue satisfied Rule 902, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), requirements because it was certified by the custodian of public records. The report also satisfied the public records hearsay exception under Rule 803, M.R.Ev. Lastly, the plaintiffs' witness was not testifying as an expert about the amount of snowfall. As a self-authenticating document, the report gave that information and did not need further foundation or personal knowledge of the weather report. Nolan v. Billings Clinic, 2020 MT 167, 400 Mont. 326, 467 P.3d 545.

Lab Report Properly Admitted in Evidence — Toxicology Report Author Present at Trial — Confrontation Clause Rights Not Violated: The defendant crashed his motorcycle, was transported to the hospital by an investigating officer, and then consented to a blood draw. He was eventually convicted of driving under the influence. On appeal, the defendant argued that the District Court should have excluded the crime lab report because the state did not provide written notice of its intention to offer the report into evidence, as required by Rule 803(6), M.R.Ev. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that because the state disclosed the report in discovery, the state provided notice of the toxicologist as a witness, and the toxicologist signed the disclosed report, any confrontation clause concern was not present and the defendant was afforded the opportunity to cross-examine the report's author. St. v. Schwarzmeier, 2015 MT 98, 378 Mont. 456, 346 P.3d 358.

Water Rights — Ancient Documents Hearsay Exception: Claimants sharing a diversion point filed statements of claim for existing rights based on notices of appropriation filed between 1895 and 1913. The Chief Water Judge found that the flume historically limited the quantity of water that had been put to beneficial use. This finding was partly based on historical documentation prepared in anticipation of potential litigation. The Supreme Court held that the ancient document exception applied and that it had not created a per se rule to exclude all documents prepared in anticipation of litigation. Skelton Ranch, Inc. v. Pondera County Canal & Reservoir Co., 2014 MT 167, 375 Mont. 327, 328 P.3d 644.

Challenge to Intoxilyzer Certification Reports: Rule 803(6), Montana Rules of Evidence, is a foundational rule that allows the state to admit into evidence Intoxilyzer certification reports that would normally be excluded as hearsay, and a defendant's failure to challenge Intoxilyzer certification reports prior to trial does not result in forfeiture of the right to do so at trial. St. v. Gai, 2012 MT 235, 366 Mont. 408, 288 P.3d 164.

Admission of Public Law Board Report — Reversible Error: The railroad fired an employee for failing to report a workplace injury. The Public Law Board (PLB) upheld his termination. The employee filed a claim against the railroad under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for not providing a safe work environment and filed a motion in limine to exclude any reference to his termination in front of the jury. The District Court denied the motion; during the trial, the employee's termination was mentioned over a dozen times, and the PLB report was admitted into evidence. After the jury found in favor of the railroad, the employee appealed, alleging the report was inadmissible hearsay, and the Supreme Court agreed. The court reversed and remanded the case to the District Court, stating that under Rule 803(8), M.R.Ev., the PLB report was inadmissible because it included results of the railroad's special investigation and lacked the trustworthiness of proceedings conducted by a neutral arbiter. Boude v. Union Pac. RR Co., 2012 MT 98, 365 Mont. 32, 277 P.3d 1221.

Admissibility of Archive and Historical Documents in Determining Navigability of Montana Rivers: In determining the historical navigability of the Missouri, Clark Fork, and Madison Rivers, the District Court accepted records from the state archives, state and federal studies of varying ages, and reports from old newspapers and books, including even the journals of Lewis and Clark. Plaintiff moved to strike the exhibits and attached affidavits on grounds of inadmissible hearsay. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly held that the state could lay a foundation at trial for the admission of the records either under exceptions to the hearsay rule or as ancient documents or data compilations. The District Court properly admitted the documents as historical evidence when applying the navigability for title test. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, reversed and remanded on other grounds in PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US 576, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

Admissibility of Evidence of Prior Conviction Based on Certified Copy of Judgment: When determining whether an aggravating circumstance existed in deciding whether to terminate a father's parental rights, the District Court admitted a certified copy of a judgment from a Texas court showing that the father pleaded guilty to and was convicted of a sexual offense. The father asserted that the evidence should not have been admitted because it could not be determined from the document whether a nolo contendere plea was accepted, which would have disallowed the evidence under subsection (22) of this rule, and because the judgment or other evidence did not show the essential facts necessary to sustain the judgment. The state argued that the hearsay exception did apply because the father clearly entered a guilty plea and because no proof of the underlying facts was required. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. There was no evidence that the father entered a nolo contendere plea, and the Texas conviction was presumed valid absent direct evidence presented by the father that the conviction was invalid. Additionally, In re L.M.A.T. & B.L.F.T., 2002 MT 163, 310 M 422, 51 P3d 504 (2002), provided that when the state relies on a prior conviction to establish an aggravating circumstance, the state is not required to present evidence of the circumstances of the conviction. Thus, the certified copy of the judgment adjudicating guilt was adequate evidence of the conviction and was properly admitted. The state met its burden of proving that an aggravating circumstance existed, and the District Court's findings of fact were supported by substantial credible evidence supporting the conclusion that the father's prior conviction constituted an aggravating circumstance. In re. M.A.L., D.L., & T.L., 2006 MT 299, 334 M 436, 148 P3d 606 (2006).

Use of Nontestimonial Intoxilyzer Certification Reports in DUI Trial Not Violative of Defendant's Right to Confront Witnesses — Crawford Rule: At Carter's DUI trial, the state introduced three certification reports in order to demonstrate that an Intoxilyzer 5000 was working properly when Carter was tested. The officers who prepared the reports did not testify at trial. Carter initially contended that the reports were hearsay, but on appeal, Carter asserted that admission of the reports violated his right to confront witnesses. Although the Supreme Court will generally not address new arguments raised on appeal, the court applied the exception in Cottrill v. Cottrill Sodding Serv., 229 M 40, 744 P2d 895 (1987), in this case because of the new confrontation clause jurisprudence set out in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), which was decided while Carter's case was pending. In Crawford, the U.S. Supreme Court for the first time distinguished testimonial and nontestimonial out-of-court statements, delineating testimonial statements, at a minimum, as applying to prior testimony at a preliminary hearing, before a grand jury, or at a former trial as well as to police interrogations. States are allowed flexibility in the development of hearsay law when nontestimonial hearsay is at issue. In Carter's case, the state asserted that the certification reports used at Carter's trial were nontestimonial evidence because they did not fall within the core group of statements that the confrontation clause was meant to address. The Supreme Court held that the certification reports were nontestimonial in that they were not substantive evidence of a particular offense, but rather constituted foundational evidence necessary for the admission of substantive evidence. Thus, Carter's confrontation right was not implicated despite the fact that the authors were not present to testify or be confronted. The court noted that a defendant is always free to subpoena authors of such reports if the defendant's pretrial investigation reveals that the reports are erroneous or are otherwise subject to attack. Therefore, in conformance with the Crawford rule, the Supreme Court exempted the certification reports from confrontation clause scrutiny and affirmed Carter's conviction. St. v. Carter, 2005 MT 87, 326 M 427, 114 P3d 1001 (2005), followed in St. v. Paoni, 2006 MT 26, 331 M 86, 128 P3d 1040 (2006).

Limitation on Use of State Pamphlet Concerning Blood Alcohol Content Not Erroneous: In a pretrial order, the District Court ruled that a pamphlet called BAC and You, published by the Department of Transportation and describing the effect of alcohol on blood levels, was admissible in a DUI case as a public document, but not for the truth or accuracy of the information in the pamphlet. Defense counsel further stipulated that the pamphlet would not provide a basis for substantive evidence regarding intoxication. Nevertheless, defense counsel attempted several times to use the pamphlet as proof that defendant was not intoxicated, based on the amount of alcohol that defendant admitted consuming prior to arrest. The court then limited further use of the pamphlet, and defendant contended on appeal that it was error for the court to limit use of a document that had been allowed into evidence. The Supreme Court disagreed. The trial court's limit on use of the pamphlet was not considered a reversal of its previous ruling admitting the pamphlet, but rather an underscoring of the pretrial ruling. Defense counsel's attempt to argue the substantive text of the pamphlet clearly exceeded the original intent and parameters of the pretrial order, so the trial court did not err in limiting its use. Helena v. Kortum, 2003 MT 290, 318 M 77, 78 P3d 882 (2003).

Officer's Use of Arrest Report Allowed for Refreshing of Memory: At Harrington's DUI trial, he objected to the fact that during direct testimony, the arresting officer read a nonadmitted document, the arrest report, into evidence. On appeal, Harrington asserted that the testimony was inadmissible because the foundation required by this rule was not met. However, Rule 612, M.R.Ev., allows witnesses to use writings to refresh their memories while testifying, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the officer to refer to the report to refresh his memory. Columbus v. Harrington, 2001 MT 258, 307 M 215, 36 P3d 937 (2001).

Contents of Safe Deposit Box Not Considered Jointly Held Asset: Silver directed his son to lease a safe deposit box for Silver's cash and signed a statement authorizing his son's access to the box. The lease form was prepared by a bank employee, who indicated that it was a joint agreement. Without Silver's direction, consent, or knowledge, the son subsequently removed the cash and placed it in his own safe deposit box in the same bank. Silver died 8 days later, and the personal representative sought to recover the cash, a substantial portion of which Silver had bequeathed to a charitable foundation. The District Court allowed the personal representative and a family friend to testify regarding statements that Silver made to them about the cash and its disposition. The court also admitted extrinsic evidence regarding the safe deposit box lease, holding that the fact that the lease form was prepared by a bank employee was relevant to interpretation of the document. The son alleged error on both issues, contending that the cash was a jointly held asset. The Supreme Court, citing Thompson v. Steinkamp, 120 M 475, 187 P2d 1018 (1947), and Anderson v. Baker, 196 M 494, 641 P2d 1035 (1982), found that the contested testimony put into context Silver's lease of the box and constituted evidence of Silver's intent to retain ownership of the cash. The fact that Silver did not select the form of lease or check the box on the lease form was supported by substantial credible evidence and was not clearly erroneous. Nevertheless, the son cited 70-1-308 for the contention that the cash was a jointly held asset. However, both the lease agreement and the statute provided for joint access to and possession of the safe deposit box and its contents, but not for joint ownership of the contents. Moreover, the language regarding the rights of surviving joint tenants did not apply here because Silver was still alive when the cash was removed. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that the cash was not a jointly held asset by virtue of the agreement or the statute. The son could cite no contract theory under which he could be declared the owner of the cash, so the District Court did not err in applying gift theory rather than contract theory in determining ownership of the contents of the box or in concluding that the cash was not a gift to the son, based on the fact that Silver retained ownership. The District Court properly awarded the contents of the box to the estate. In re Estate of Silver, 2000 MT 127, 299 M 506, 1 P3d 358, 57 St. Rep. 526 (2000), distinguishing Malek v. Patten, 208 M 237, 678 P2d 201 (1984).

Rule Governing Introduction of Crime Laboratory Reports Violative of Due Process and Confrontation Clause Provisions: Under the Montana Constitution, a criminal defendant is guaranteed the fundamental right to a face-to-face confrontation with an accuser, including the right to cross-examination. Further, the constitution's due process guarantee makes it the state's duty in a criminal prosecution to prove beyond a reasonable doubt every element of the crime charged. Subsection (8) of this rule, which governs the introduction of state crime laboratory reports, effectively requires a defendant to subpoena and produce the state's expert in order to rightfully take advantage of the confrontation clause. The rule also compels the defendant to produce evidence during the case in chief, which in many cases will be incriminating, should the defendant choose to test the state's case. Therefore, the portion of this rule that governs the introduction of state crime laboratory reports violates both the confrontation clause in Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., and the due process guarantee in Art. II, sec. 17, Mont. Const. St. v. Clark, 1998 MT 221, 290 M 479, 964 P2d 766, 55 St. Rep. 919 (1998), distinguished in St. v. Delaney, 1999 MT 317, 297 M 263, 991 P2d 461, 56 St. Rep. 1267 (1999).

Foundational Requirements for Introduction of Recorded Recollection: Citing the ruling case of Marron v. Great N. Ry. Co., 46 M 593, 129 P 1055 (1913), the Supreme Court outlined the following foundational requirements for a recorded recollection: (1) the entries must have been written by the witness or under the witness's direction; (2) the entries must have been written at the time the facts occurred or at a time when the facts were fresh in the witness's memory; and (3) the witness must have known at the time the entries were made that they correctly stated the facts. Absent these foundational criteria, refusal by a trial court to admit a letter was not error. Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994).

Form From State Crime Lab Admissible: Due to the unavailability of the examining technician, the prosecution moved for the admission of a form from the state crime lab to establish the chain of custody of drug evidence. The defense objected on the basis that the evidence did not fall under any exception to the hearsay rule. The Supreme Court held that the form was admissible because it established that the investigating officer obtained the evidence, sent it to the crime lab, received it back from the lab, and identified it as the same evidence sent to the lab, thereby establishing the chain of custody. St. v. Zackuse, 253 M 305, 833 P2d 143, 49 St. Rep. 566 (1992). See also St. v. Romannose, 281 M 84, 931 P2d 1304, 54 St. Rep. 72 (1997), holding certain documents admissible in a criminal trial as the business records exception to the hearsay rule.

Admissibility of Government Pamphlets on Alcohol Consumption — Hearsay Exception: In a DUI trial, Department of Justice pamphlets relating to alcohol consumption were admitted in evidence for the limited purpose of showing that they were Department publications. The judge admonished the jury that the pamphlets were not admitted for their accuracy or truth. Defendant argued that they should have been admitted for their content, truth, and accuracy under the public records exception to the hearsay rule. Defendant failed to lay a proper foundation for admission under that exception because he did not show that the pamphlets were derived from the Department's regularly conducted and recorded activities, were published as a result of a duty imposed on the Department by law, or were the result of an investigation made under authority of law. St. v. Thompson, 237 M 384, 773 P2d 722, 46 St. Rep. 887 (1989).

Admissibility of Certified Abstract of Driving History and Copy of Suspension Notification Letter: Once certified as set out in 61-11-102(6), the authenticity of motor vehicle license information is established for purposes of admissibility without extrinsic evidence. Therefore, a certified abstract of driving history was admissible as was a certified copy of a suspension notification letter, which fell within the class of self-authenticating documents under Rule 902, M.R.Ev., the public document exception to the hearsay rule under this rule, and the requirements of the best evidence rule under Rule 1005, M.R.Ev. Taken together, this evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for driving with a suspended license. Billings v. Lindell, 236 M 519, 771 P2d 134, 46 St. Rep. 557 (1989).

Testimony of Human Rights Commission Compliance Officer Properly Disallowed: Plaintiff in an age discrimination case sought to introduce the record of the hearing in which a compliance officer determined plaintiff had been discriminated against. The District Court properly found that the investigative information was specifically excluded under this rule. Further, under Rule 704, M.R.Ev., the compliance officer was not allowed to testify as an expert regarding his opinion on the ultimate issue because there was sufficient evidence presented from which the jury could make a reasonable determination of whether there was age discrimination. Mahan v. Farmers Union Cent. Exch., Inc., 235 M 410, 768 P2d 850, 46 St. Rep. 96 (1989).

Reasonable Cause Finding of Human Rights Commission — Not Admissible: A reasonable cause finding of the Montana Human Rights Commission is not included in the public records and reports exception to the hearsay rule under Rule 803(8), M.R.Ev., and is inadmissible at trial. Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813, 45 St. Rep. 1751 (1988).

Admission of Death Certificate With Hearsay Statement That Decedent Was Passenger — Harmless Error: In a negligent homicide case, defendant contended decedent was driving. The trial court admitted a death certificate with a statement in it that decedent was a passenger in the truck that crashed. While the death certificate was admissible to prove the victim's death, the statement about the victim being a passenger was based on hearsay and should have been excised. However, the Supreme Court held that failure to do so was harmless error in light of the testimony by other witnesses that established a substantial basis for concluding that decedent was a passenger. St. v. Gould, 216 M 455, 704 P2d 20, 42 St. Rep. 946 (1985), followed in St. v. Thompson, 263 M 17, 865 P2d 1125, 50 St. Rep. 1683 (1993), in which defendant's voluntary statement that First Amendment allowed stepdaughter's punishment was admissible as inconsistent with his innocent plea.

Use of Self-Serving Statements in Pleadings to Advance Cause Some Fifty Years Later: The answer and counter-claim filed by respondent's predecessor in a 1929 water rights case could not be used to advance the cause of the respondent in a current water rights dispute. It did not matter that the pleadings could be classified as "ancient documents" under evidentiary rules that except certain hearsay statements from the prohibition against hearsay. Hill v. Merrimac Cattle Co., Inc., 211 M 479, 687 P2d 59, 41 St. Rep. 1504 (1984).

Town Meeting Minutes and Related Documents: The Troy Town Council had passed a resolution requesting a speed limit of 25 miles per hour on trains passing through town, due to the hazardous nature of the crossing where the accident in question occurred. The minutes of the Town Council, letters between the Town Council and the railroad, and intercorporate memoranda between railroad officials on the subject matter of the crossing should have been admitted into evidence. They were relevant to show notice of the claimed hazardous conditions and the intent of the railroad with respect to the same. These documents go to the issue of ordinary care to be exercised by the railroad and may go to the issue of punitive damages as an indication of wantonness or oppressiveness. The intercorporate memoranda are also relevant as possible admissions of a party opponent. Runkle v. Burlington N., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980), followed in McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that evidence of the defendant's bid on state trust land, for which it had no use, was properly admitted to prove the plaintiffs' punitive damages claim as it was relevant to whether the defendant was acting maliciously toward the plaintiffs.

Report Cards: A child's school report card falls within this rule, subsection (6). In re Declaring T.E.R. Youth in Need of Care, 180 M 340, 590 P2d 1117, 36 St. Rep. 276 (1979).

STATE OF MIND

Hearsay Entered Into Evidence Along With Overwhelming Substantial Evidence — District Court Abused Discretion Regarding Hearsay — Harmless Error — Conviction Proper: At trial for partner or family member assault and homicide, the state entered numerous hearsay statements into evidence regarding the victim's state of mind, including the victim's fear of the defendant. The defendant challenged admission of the evidence. The Supreme Court reviewed hearsay and hearsay exceptions. The Supreme Court noted that out-of-court statements revealing a victim's fear of the defendant when the victim is unavailable to testify raise special concerns due to the potential prejudice that jurors will use the evidence to make impermissible inferences beyond the limited scope for which the evidence was admitted. The Supreme Court found that the District Court abused its discretion in admitting the hearsay evidence. The Supreme Court continued to review for whether the District Court's error was harmless and ultimately affirmed the conviction, finding that the hearsay was cumulative with overwhelming substantial evidence. St. v. Gomez, 2020 MT 73, 399 Mont. 376, 460 P.3d 926.

No Exception for Testator State of Mind — Existence of Will — Attitude Toward Contestee: A statement in an affidavit for a summary judgment that the testator said she was "hoodwinked" was not admissible as a hearsay exception on the grounds it was a statement reflecting the testator's then-existing state of mind. Unlike the similar federal rule of evidence, Montana cases and official comments on this rule provide that declarations of a testator are not admissible as to the existence or revocation of a will or a testator's attitude toward a contestee of a will. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

Failure to Challenge Admissibility of Victim's Statements on All Grounds as Precluding Consideration on Appeal: English challenged the admissibility of statements made by a negligent homicide victim, contending that the trial court erred in admitting the statements as excited utterances or medical diagnosis. However, the court admitted the statements on other grounds as well, including present sense impression, mental or physical condition, and circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and English failed to challenge these additional bases for admissibility. Because English failed to challenge each of the alternative bases, the Supreme Court declined to address the admissibility issue on appeal. St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Motion In Limine to Exclude Relevant Statements Made by Defendant During and After Assault Properly Denied: During a bar fight, Brasda brandished a knife and stated that he would use it because he was not afraid to go back to prison. After the fight, Brasda stated to a deputy that he didn't try to stab anyone. At trial, Brasda made a motion in limine to suppress the statements on grounds that they were irrelevant to any fact at issue or, alternatively, that they were statements of other crimes or acts and inadmissible because no exception applied. The trial court denied the motion, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Both statements were clearly relevant and integral to the state's proof of the elements of the crime and to the jury's ability to evaluate witness testimony. Further, the statements were admissible under the mental, emotional, or physical condition exception to the hearsay rule and under the transaction rule in 26-1-103. The court also noted that under St. v. Bauer, 2002 MT 7, 308 M 99, 39 P3d 689 (2002), statements regarding a defendant's history or imprisonment and probationary status that are inextricably linked to circumstances surrounding the crime are admissible. Denial of the motion in limine was proper. St. v. Brasda, 2003 MT 374, 319 M 146, 82 P3d 922 (2003).

No Dual Residency in Montana Despite Joint Custody Provisions — Affidavit Indicating Future Residency Intent Irrelevant: When the parties were divorced in Nevada, physical custody of their child was granted to the mother, who continued to reside with the child in Nevada, and Umland moved to Montana, having been granted visitation rights. When the child died in an automobile accident, Umland attempted to collect a settlement under his insurance policy, which provided coverage for relatives who were residents of the insured's household. As proof that the child was a resident of Montana, Umland submitted an affidavit asserting that the child had indicated an intent to reside with Umland. The District Court disallowed the affidavit and held that the policy did not apply because the child was not a resident. On appeal, Umland argued that because 1-1-215 establishes a minor's residence as the residence of the parent having legal custody and because Montana allows for joint custody, it naturally followed that Montana allows dual residency. The Supreme Court disagreed. Montana law provides that there may be only one residence. The child customarily resided with the mother and thus was a Nevada resident. Further, the affidavit indicating the child's intent to reside in Montana in the future was irrelevant because the child was a Nevada resident at the time of death. Umland v. Nat'l Cas. Co., 2003 MT 356, 319 M 16, 81 P3d 500 (2003).

Testimony of Child's Statement When Confronted by Abuser Admissible: Testimony concerning a child's statement that she was frightened when suddenly confronted by her abuser was admissible under this rule because it represented the child's present sense impression explanation of her condition, related to the startling event of being confronted by her abuser, represented her existing mental and emotional condition, was made before the child had time to reflect, and was not made in response to questioning. In re S.M. & P.L.M., 2001 MT 11, 304 M 102, 19 P3d 213 (2001).

Victim's Deathbed Statements Admissible as to State of Mind of Victim — Cautionary Instruction Required: As Turner was dying, he made statements to several witnesses to the effect that Fuhrmann stabbed him "on purpose" and that the stabbing was "not an accident". The trial court admitted the statements into evidence. On appeal, Fuhrmann contended that the testimony by the witnesses was inadmissible hearsay because the statements regarding Fuhrmann's intent addressed Fuhrmann's, rather than Turner's, state of mind and thus did not fall within the hearsay exception in subsection (3) of this rule. Following St. v. Magruder, 234 M 492, 765 P2d 716 (1988), and St. v. Losson, 262 M 342, 865 P2d 255 (1993), the Supreme Court concluded: (1) Turner's statements that Fuhrmann stabbed him "on purpose" and that the stabbing was "not an accident", if the statements were construed as providing evidence that Turner feared Fuhrmann, could only be construed as providing circumstantial evidence of Turner's fear and, under that construction, would not be considered as hearsay and would be admissible; (2) such statements may be offered only for the purpose of showing the declarant's state of mind and may not be offered for the truth of the matter asserted; and (3) to prevent any potential prejudicial effect on a defendant and to uphold the integrity of both the hearsay rule and the state of mind exception of subsection (3) of this rule, a trial court must instruct the jury as to the limited purpose for which it may consider this type of testimony. Nevertheless, in Fuhrmann's case, failure by the court to offer a limiting instruction was harmless error given the overwhelming independent evidence of guilt. St. v. Fuhrmann, 278 M 396, 925 P2d 1162, 53 St. Rep. 966 (1996).

Distinction Between Hearsay and Nonhearsay State of Mind Statements: In clarifying the distinction between hearsay and nonhearsay state of mind statements, the Supreme Court relied on U.S. v. Brown, 490 F2d 758 (D.C. Cir. 1973). The distinction turns on whether the statement is evidence that circumstantially or directly proves the declarant's state of mind. If the statement circumstantially proves the declarant's state of mind, then the evidence is not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted and the evidence is not hearsay. Alternatively, when the evidence directly proves the declarant's state of mind, the evidence is introduced to prove the truth of the matter asserted and the evidence is hearsay. St. v. Losson, 262 M 342, 865 P2d 255, 50 St. Rep. 1588 (1993), followed in Rafanelli v. Dale, 278 M 28, 924 P2d 242, 53 St. Rep. 746 (1996).

Declarant Unavailable — No Hearsay Exemption Upon Trustworthiness Guaranty: Plaintiff questioned the admissibility under hearsay rules of the testimony of witnesses who recalled statements of a person who was integral in determining the facts of the case but who died prior to trial. The Supreme Court held that when a declarant is unavailable as a witness, as for reason of death, his statements are not excluded by the hearsay rule if there are comparable circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness. Whether there are guaranties is a matter for determination by the District Court, which will be upheld absent an abuse of discretion. Hobbs v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 236 M 503, 771 P2d 125, 46 St. Rep. 544 (1989).

Testimony on State of Mind — Inference Inadmissible: Witness's testimony that an agreement existed between the parties was based solely on hearsay statements made to him by the respondent as to the respondent's belief that an agreement existed. The Supreme Court ruled that the testimony was not admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule because a statement of the respondent's then-existing state of mind cannot be introduced to prove the fact remembered or believed. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989).

Admissibility of Victim's Statements as Indication of State of Mind — Relevance to Issue of Self-Defense: Testimony relating to the statements of a shooting victim was admissible as a hearsay exception when offered only to show the victim's state of mind. The Supreme Court cited U.S. v. Brown, 490 F2d 758 (D.C. Cir. 1974), in holding that the threshold requirement of admissibility of a victim's statements of fear of defendant in homicide cases is some substantial degree of relevance to a material issue in the case. The most common category involves defendant's claim of self-defense as justification for the killing. Defendant's assertion that the deceased first attacked him may be rebutted by extrajudicial declarations of the victim that he feared defendant, thus rendering it unlikely that deceased was in fact the aggressor. Victim's statement was not hearsay because it was not offered in evidence to prove the truth of the matter asserted.

St. v. Magruder, 234 M 492, 765 P2d 716, 45 St. Rep. 2075 (1988), followed in St. v. Losson, 262 M 342, 865 P2d 255, 50 St. Rep. 1588 (1993).

Decedent's Statements About His Stress Not Hearsay: Workers' Compensation Court did not err in admitting testimony about statements decedent made on the day of his death. The statements allegedly showed decedent's job-related mental and emotional stress. The court is not bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence, and even if it were, the statements were not hearsay. Their purpose was to show what decedent thought and felt shortly before he died of heart failure. Tocco v. Great Falls, 220 M 221, 714 P2d 160, 43 St. Rep. 310 (1986).

Statement of Deceased Hearsay — State of Mind Not at Issue: Moen, an employee of defendant, died of a heart attack. His wife filed suit, alleging that defendant negligently failed to provide help to a worker stricken by a heart attack. Moen's supervisor testified that he asked Moen to work Saturday only upon discovering that he stayed in Decker on Friday night rather than return to Great Falls. The court properly excluded as inadmissible hearsay the testimony of Moen's wife that he called his wife on Friday and told her that he couldn't come home because he had to work on Saturday. One cannot impeach a witness on a collateral matter. The question of when the supervisor asked Moen to work overtime is not relevant or material to the issue of defendant's negligence. The testimony is not saved by being a statement of Moen's state of mind or his intent and hence is not an exception to the hearsay rule. Moen's state of mind is not at issue; rather the negligence of defendant is at issue. Moen v. Peter Kiewit & Sons' Co., 201 M 425, 655 P2d 482, 39 St. Rep. 2209 (1982).

State of Mind Exception: A witness's answer to a question on redirect was that he made a statement to the police that he had not made a statement to anyone authorizing them to take his stereo. This answer includes two statements that must be analyzed within the hearsay rule. The first part of the answer that he "told the police" is not hearsay under Rule 801, M.R.Ev., because it was inconsistent with his prior testimony and it was offered to rebut the State's implied charge of subsequent fabrication, improper influence, or motive. The fact that he had not made a statement authorizing anyone to remove the stereo is admissible under the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. St. v. Martinez, 188 M 271, 613 P2d 974, 37 St. Rep. 982 (1980).

MEDICAL DIAGNOSIS

Hearsay Testimony of Doctor Proper Under Medical Examination Exception: After the victim arrived at work with a black eye and bruises all over her body, a police officer took her to a hospital, where an emergency room doctor examined her. During the examination, the victim identified the defendant as her attacker and described how he had lifted her off the ground by her throat and other details of the attack. The defendant was charged with felony aggravated assault and subsequently convicted. At trial, the defendant sought to exclude the emergency room doctor's testimony about what the victim had told the doctor at the hospital examination. The District Court allowed the testimony under the hearsay exception for medical examinations. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the statements made by the victim to the doctor identifying the attacker and his actions were pertinent to diagnosis and treatment and therefore fell within this hearsay exception. St. v. Porter, 2018 MT 16, 390 Mont. 174, 410 P.3d 955.

Hearsay Evidence and Parental Rights Termination — Admission of Hearsay Evidence at Show Cause, Adjudicatory, and Termination Hearings Held Proper Because Children "Unavailable" — J.C.E. Case Distinguished — No Offer of Proof Made: Hearsay evidence in the form of videotaped interviews of young children talking with investigators about sexual abuse by their parents was admitted after the District Court found that the children were "unavailable" to testify because they would be traumatized by testifying against their parents in a courtroom setting. The Supreme Court held that the videotaped testimony was properly admitted by the District Court, based upon the thorough findings by the District Court, at the show cause hearing, the adjudicatory hearing, and the parental rights termination hearing. The Supreme Court distinguished St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309 (1988), because that case was a criminal case in which the right of confrontation under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., applied, whereas the case now before the Supreme Court was a civil case. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court properly analyzed the mother's attempt to call the children as witnesses as one of relevance, and because no offer of proof was made under Rule 103, M.R.Ev., by the mother, the Supreme Court could not conclude that the District Court acted arbitrarily. In re O.A.W., 2007 MT 13, 335 M 304, 153 P3d 6 (2007).

Failure to Challenge Admissibility of Victim's Statements on All Grounds as Precluding Consideration on Appeal: English challenged the admissibility of statements made by a negligent homicide victim, contending that the trial court erred in admitting the statements as excited utterances or medical diagnosis. However, the court admitted the statements on other grounds as well, including present sense impression, mental or physical condition, and circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and English failed to challenge these additional bases for admissibility. Because English failed to challenge each of the alternative bases, the Supreme Court declined to address the admissibility issue on appeal. St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Acceptance of Expert Testimony Regarding Child's Custodial Preference — Determination of Admissibility Not Necessary When Qualified as Professional Advice: During trial on modification of a parenting plan, the District Court considered statements made by the children during a session with a psychologist hired by the father. During the session, the children indicated their unhappiness living with their mother and their desire to live with their father. The mother objected on grounds that the statements were inadmissible hearsay, arguing that the Supreme Court had previously declined to extend the hearsay exception in this rule to statements made by a child to a counselor and should have appointed an independent counselor. The Supreme Court noted that under 40-4-214, the District Court could have interviewed the children to determine their wishes, but declined to do so in deference to the mother's objection. However, a District Court need not interview children to determine their preferences, but may rely on the evaluation of a professional counselor. Special appointment of an independent counselor is not necessary in all circumstances. Here, the children underwent extensive counseling by a doctor, as well as by counselors hired by both the father and mother, and the District Court admitted the entire testimony of all the professionals. It was not necessary to determine whether the psychologist's testimony was admissible under this rule because it qualified as professional advice available under 40-4-214. The trial court was in the best position to evaluate the credibility of witnesses, and the Supreme Court declined to overturn the custody matter absent a clear abuse of discretion. In re Marriage of Drake, 2002 MT 127, 310 M 114, 49 P3d 38 (2002).

Statements by Minors to Doctor Concerning Sexual Abuse Held Inadmissible — Conviction Upheld Because of Lack of Prejudice: The trial court admitted statements of two minor children made to an examining physician under the medical diagnosis exception to the hearsay rule. The Supreme Court found that the two minors were not in need of immediate medical attention when they spoke with the doctor. Therefore, the statements were not made with an intention consistent with seeking medical treatment and thus were not statements that would be relied upon by the physician regarding diagnosis or treatment and as such were not admissible as an exception to the hearsay rule. However, the Supreme Court also found that the admission of the evidence was harmless because both minors testified at the trial and their testimony was substantially the same as the statements that they made to the doctor. St. v. Whipple, 2001 MT 16, 304 M 118, 19 P3d 228 (2001), distinguishing St. v. Thompson, 263 M 17, 865 P2d 1125 (1993). See also St. v. Alexander, 265 M 192, 875 P2d 345 (1994), holding erroneously admitted evidence as harmless error.

Statements Made by Minor Victim of Assault Held Admissible — Arlington Procedure Complied With: When Huerta was tried on charges of assault of a juvenile, he objected on grounds of hearsay evidence to statements made by the juvenile to a treating physician. The Supreme Court held that the two-step analysis contained in St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307 (1994), had been followed in that the physician had testified that his questions and the minor's responses were necessary for the purpose of medical diagnosis and treatment and that he did rely on the minor's responses in treating the minor. St. v. Huerta, 285 M 245, 947 P2d 483, 54 St. Rep. 1133 (1997).

Medical Diagnosis and Treatment Exception — Applicable Only to Medical Doctors: In determining that the District Court properly refused to allow into evidence out-of-court statements made by a child abuse victim to a counselor, the Supreme Court declined to extend the medical diagnosis and treatment exception under this rule, beyond medical doctors. The counselor is not licensed to render medical diagnoses and therefore cannot testify about such diagnoses under this exception. St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309, 45 St. Rep. 2373 (1988), followed in St. v. Mayes, 251 M 358, 825 P2d 1196, 49 St. Rep. 75 (1992), and St. v. Henderson, 265 M 454, 877 P2d 1013, 51 St. Rep. 606 (1994), distinguishing St. v. Harris, 247 M 405, 808 P2d 453 (1991), and distinguished in St. v. Arlington, 265 M 127, 875 P2d 307, 51 St. Rep. 417 (1994), in which the medical diagnosis and treatment exception was extended to emergency medical technicians as first responders in a medical crisis. See also St. v. Ryan, 691 P2d 197 (Wash. 1984), Idaho v. Wright, 497 US 805, 111 L Ed 2d 638, 110 S Ct 3139 (1990), and St. v. Harris, 247 M 405, 808 P2d 453, 48 St. Rep. 62 (1991).

Medical Records Prepared by Predecessor to Testifying Doctor — Not Inadmissible Hearsay: Medical records prepared by the predecessor of a testifying doctor that were used as part of his testimony did not constitute inadmissible hearsay evidence because a foundation was laid wherein the testifying doctor stated that he would never treat a patient of the predecessor doctor without first reviewing the patient's records. Thus, the records constitute records both for the purposes of medical treatment under Rule 803, M.R.Ev., and data relied on by experts when forming opinions on the subject under Rule 703, M.R.Ev. Garza v. Peppard, 222 M 244, 722 P2d 610, 43 St. Rep. 1233 (1986).

Victim's Statements to Physician — Foundation to Be Laid in Court Not Chambers: The statement of causation made by a victim to her physician was held improperly admitted because no proper foundation was laid for it in court since it was not shown in court (although it was in chambers) that the doctor had received the statement for the purpose of medical diagnosis and/or treatment, to come within the exception of Rule 803(4), M.R.Ev. St. v. Brubaker, 184 M 294, 602 P2d 974, 36 St. Rep. 1915 (1979).

Admissibility of Medical Reports — Workers' Compensation Court: It is well settled that it is not an abuse of discretion for the Workers' Compensation Court to consider the contents of medical reports contained in the case file before the court in spite of their alleged hearsay nature when counsel for defendant fails to object. Hayes v. Aetna Ins. Co., 176 M 513, 579 P2d 1225 (1978).

MISCELLANEOUS

Testimonial Evidence Without Prior Opportunity for Cross-Examination — Nonemergency — Violative of Defendant's Right to Confront Witnesses: In a case involving sexual intercourse without consent, the District Court found a 13-year-old deaf, developmentally delayed victim not competent to testify at trial, and therefore she was unavailable as a witness. At trial, a law enforcement officer who had investigated the incident, a Department of Public Health and Human Services child protection specialist who had interviewed the victim for prosecutorial evidence, and a sexual assault nurse examiner who had gathered evidence of the victim's condition for future criminal prosecution testified about what the victim had told them concerning the incident. Because there was no evidence of an ongoing emergency or concerns for the victim's safety at the time the victim spoke to the three witnesses, the Supreme Court found that these hearsay statements were testimonial evidence. However, because the defendant did not have a prior opportunity for cross examination of the victim, the Supreme Court held that the hearsay statements by the three witnesses violated the defendant's constitutional right of confrontation. Furthermore, the statements were not harmless because the tainted evidence qualitatively contributed to the conviction of the defendant. Thus, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for a new trial. St. v. Tome, 2021 MT 229, 405 Mont. 292, 495 P.3d 54, following Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004).

Admissibility of Intoxilyzer Certification Documents — District Court to Determine Adequate Foundation Regardless of Hearsay Rules — White Overruled: The defendant was charged with felony DUI after a breath test revealed his blood alcohol content exceeded the legal limit. At trial, in the course of the charging police officer's testimony, the state offered into evidence two field certification documents for the Intoxilyzer 8000. The defendant objected to the documents, claiming that because the officer was not the author or custodian of the documents, they were inadmissible hearsay under Rule 803(6), M.R.Ev. The District Court admitted the documents and the defendant appealed his subsequent conviction. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that the admissibility of certification documents is also subject to Rule 104(a), M.R.Ev. This rule allows a court to determine whether there is an adequate foundation for a document without regard to whether it is hearsay. In so ruling, the Supreme Court overruled St. v. White, 2009 MT 26, 349 Mont. 109, 201 P.3d 808, to the extent it is inconsistent with St. v. Delaney, 1999 MT 317, 297 Mont. 263, 991 P.2d 461. St. v. Jenkins, 2011 MT 287, 362 Mont. 481, 265 P.3d 643.

Intent of Testator — Will Not Form Document — No Hearsay Exception: A duly executed will admitted to probate presumptively reflects the true intentions of the testator and is different from a standard form document that is often provided by a bank or other institution and is drafted to protect the institution. A testator's intent is not a disputed fact and is not subject to admission in evidence in an affidavit for a summary judgment under the hearsay rule exception allowing statements with circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness comparable to other hearsay rule exceptions. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

Sanction for Failure to Object to Evidence by Motion In Limine — Admission of Patently Inadmissible Evidence Reversible Error: At Stevenson's trial alleging age discrimination, the trial court's scheduling order required that trial objections that could have been resolved by a pretrial motion in limine would be considered waived if not presented in a timely motion in limine. Defendant sought to introduce a Human Rights Bureau report that was patently inadmissible pursuant to Crockett v. Billings, 234 M 87, 761 P2d 813 (1988), but because plaintiff had not addressed the issue by pretrial motion, the trial court allowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. In this case, the trial court's establishment in the scheduling order of a waiver of the right to object to inadmissible evidence at trial was a sanction, especially when it resulted in the admission of patently inadmissible evidence. The sanction of waiver of the right to object to demonstrably inadmissible evidence is not recognized in the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, and the trial court's admission of patently inadmissible evidence constituted reversible error. Stevenson v. Felco Indus., Inc., 2009 MT 299, 352 M 303, 216 P3d 763 (2009).

Admission of Officer's Personal Observation Testimony Cumulative and Harmless: At Foston's trial for distribution of dangerous drugs, the trial court, pursuant to Rule 803, M.R.Ev., admitted testimony by an officer that conversations overheard between Foston and a confidential informant were consistent with drug transactions. Foston appealed on grounds that the testimony constituted plain error. The Supreme Court noted that the testimony was admissible under Rule 701, M.R.Ev., as a statement of the officer's personal observation. The court further found that even without the officer's testimony, there was ample evidence from which the jury could conclude that Foston was selling drugs, so the testimony was cumulative and harmless if it was error at all. St. v. Foston, 2009 MT 191, 351 M 85, 209 P3d 262 (2009).

Failure to Challenge Admissibility of Victim's Statements on All Grounds as Precluding Consideration on Appeal: English challenged the admissibility of statements made by a negligent homicide victim, contending that the trial court erred in admitting the statements as excited utterances or medical diagnosis. However, the court admitted the statements on other grounds as well, including present sense impression, mental or physical condition, and circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and English failed to challenge these additional bases for admissibility. Because English failed to challenge each of the alternative bases, the Supreme Court declined to address the admissibility issue on appeal. St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Testimonial Versus Nontestimonial Hearsay — Crawford Rule for Admissibility in Criminal Trial — Use of Emergency Calls: In Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), the U.S. Supreme Court bifurcated hearsay law from the constitutional confrontation clause (sixth amendment, U.S. Const.; Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const.) by allowing hearsay against criminal defendants in only two instances: (1) if hearsay is testimonial, a defendant must have had an opportunity to cross-examine the declarant and the prosecution must show that the declarant is unavailable to appear at trial; or (2) if hearsay is nontestimonial, the hearsay must bear adequate indicia of reliability or particularized guarantees of trustworthiness. However, the Crawford court declined to define what constitutes testimonial hearsay. The Montana Supreme Court noted that the sixth amendment itself defines the indicia of reliability or particularized guarantees of trustworthiness necessary to admit testimonial hearsay by establishing confrontation through cross-examination as the minimally adequate index. Crawford characterizes a casual remark to an acquaintance as nontestimonial hearsay, and the word "casual" modifies the declarant's assumption as to what use, if any, the listener might make of the statement. When an objective declarant would reasonably expect the state to use a statement at trial, the sixth amendment demands that courts exclude such statements absent an opportunity for confrontation. When speaking to government agents or officials, a declarant should reasonably expect the government to seek to use those statements at trial, and when a declarant signs an affidavit or gives a recorded statement, the declarant should likewise expect the state to make use of those statements, so those statements are considered testimonial. However, a declarant who is alerting law enforcement of imminent and immediate danger, such as through a 9-1-1 emergency call, has much less of an expectation that the state will seek to make prosecutorial use of the statements at trial, depending on the content of the conversation and the particular circumstances that led to the call. If the declarant has objective reason to believe that an emergency statement would serve only to avert or mitigate imminent or immediate danger and the agent who receives the statement had no intent to create evidence, then the statement is presumed to be nontestimonial. Alternatively, if a declarant has clear reason to believe that the statement would be used in court as substantive evidence against a defendant, statements to a nongovernmental agent are nontestimonial. St. v. Mizenko, 2006 MT 11, 330 M 299, 127 P3d 458 (2006), followed in St. v. Paoni, 2006 MT 26, 331 M 86, 128 P3d 1040 (2006), and followed, with regard to the admissibility of a child victim's nontestimonial statements, in St. v. Spencer, 2007 MT 245, 339 M 227, 169 P3d 384 (2007). See also St. v. Tome, 2021 MT 229, 405 Mont. 292, 495 P.3d 54.

Recorded Present Sense Impression of Partner Assault Victim Properly Admitted: At Hope's trial for partner assault, the District Court admitted into evidence a note that the victim wrote prior to the assault, describing Hope's angry mood and the victim's apprehension about further problems that might arise. Hope contended error in admission of the note because the note did not meet the requirements of the recorded exception to the hearsay rule in this rule. The state argued that the note was properly admitted under the recorded present sense impression exception to the hearsay rule. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. A recorded present sense impression is a written assertion describing or explaining an event or condition while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition or immediately thereafter. Further, the note did not impermissibly provide the jury with testimonial material regarding Hope's general character, or give undue emphasis to the critical elements of the state's case, because it described the victim's perception of Hope's anger rather than the assault itself. The trial court correctly advised the jury that it could give the note whatever weight that it considered appropriate, and the note was properly admitted. St. v. Hope, 2001 MT 207, 306 M 334, 33 P3d 629 (2001).

Sexual Abuse and Violence Against Women Act — Limitation of Evidence of Inappropriate Touching of Another: Evert sought damages against Swick based on Swick's alleged sexual abuse and violation of the federal Violence Against Women Act of 1994 (42 U.S.C. 13981). The District Court excluded proffered testimony of Evert's sister that Swick had also sexually and physically abused her. Swick was ultimately acquitted. Evert asserted on appeal that her sister's testimony was admissible to show opportunity, identity, or absence of mistake, that it was part of the res gestae, and that it should have been allowed as rebuttal testimony. The Supreme Court found no issue of opportunity, identity, or mistake because Swick and Evert had lived together, so the opportunity for abuse clearly existed. Moreover, the sister's testimony did not fall within any of the hearsay exceptions in this rule. The res gestae argument, when properly phrased in the context of the transaction rule, showed no evidence that Swick's contact with the sister involved part of the same transaction contained in Evert's complaint, a necessary element under 26-1-103. The Supreme Court also concluded that the testimony had no rebuttal value that would outweigh its prejudicial effect. The District Court correctly deduced that the evidence of other inappropriate touching was offered to impugn Swick's credibility and bolster Evert's credibility, which is not permitted under Rule 404, M.R.Ev., and the modified Just rule. The court properly exercised its discretion in weighing the probative value of the testimony against its prejudicial effect in limiting the sister's testimony to the allegations contained in the complaint and excluding the portion of her testimony regarding other acts. Evert v. Swick, 2000 MT 191, 300 M 427, 8 P3d 773, 57 St. Rep. 757 (2000).

Videotapes of Child Overdose Victim Properly Excluded as Hearsay: The mother left her child's headache medicine on the table with her own allergy medication, instructing the child to take his headache medicine and then leaving the room. The child took the allergy medicine instead and overdosed. The mother was subsequently charged with criminal endangerment. At trial, the child was not a witness. During her case in chief, she sought to introduce police videotapes taken of the child 5 and 7 days after the overdose. The videotapes were held inadmissible under any exception to the hearsay rule. Defendant appealed. The Supreme Court found the tapes inadmissible under the present sense impression exception, the recorded recollection exception, and other exceptions because of the lack of a timing element and no manifestation of circumstantial guarantees of the trustworthiness of the recollections. St. v. Hocevar, 2000 MT 157, 300 M 167, 7 P3d 329, 57 St. Rep. 625 (2000).

What Form of Compliance of Instrument Used in Breath Test Required as Foundation for Breath Test Results: ARM 23.4.214 requires that all breath analysis equipment be sent to the state Forensic Sciences Division annually for laboratory certification. A person charged with an alcohol-related offense is entitled to the procedural safeguards contained in the administrative rule, so in order for the results of a defendant's breath test to be admissible, the state must lay a proper foundation by establishing that the instrument complied with ARM 23.4.214. During pretrial discovery, Delaney requested documentation that the instrument used to test his breath had been certified, and the state provided a copy of the laboratory certification form. At trial, Delaney moved to dismiss the results of the breath test, contending that the form was inadmissible hearsay that could not be used to lay the requisite foundation, and also maintained that failure to call the custodian of the annual certification records violated Delaney's right to confront witnesses. The state contended that it was not required to have the form admitted in order to lay a foundation for admissibility and that, consequently, it did not matter that the document was hearsay, but rather that all that was necessary was to establish to the satisfaction of the court that the certification had been performed. The District Court sided with the state and admitted the breath test results. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that the determination of whether adequate foundation exists is within the discretion of the District Court and that that determination is made pursuant to Rule 104(a), M.R.Ev., which authorizes the examination of any proffered evidence, regardless of its admissibility, in determining the admissibility of challenged evidence. Under the identical federal Rule of Evidence, federal courts have found that the plain language of the rule extends to consideration of hearsay and other evidence normally inadmissible at trial. (See Bourjaily v. U.S., 483 US 171, 97 L Ed 2d 144, 107 S Ct 1775 (1987), and its progeny.) Thus, the District Court was allowed to consider the certification form in determining whether an adequate foundation existed without regard to whether the form itself was hearsay, and consequently, the state was not required to call the records custodian to testify. St. v. Delaney, 1999 MT 317, 297 M 263, 991 P2d 461, 56 St. Rep. 1267 (1999), distinguishing St. v. Woods, 272 M 220, 900 P2d 320, 52 St. Rep. 762 (1995), and St. v. Clark, 1998 MT 221, 290 M 479, 964 P2d 766, 55 St. Rep. 919 (1998), and followed in St. v. White, 2009 MT 26, 349 M 109, 201 P3d 808 (2009), with regard to necessity of proper foundation for admission of results of alcohol concentration breath analysis. White was overruled, to the extent it is inconsistent with Delaney, in St. v. Jenkins, 2011 MT 287, 362 Mont. 481, 265 P.3d 643. See also St. v. Johnston, 2011 MT 184, 361 Mont. 301, 258 P.3d 417 (holding that a breath analysis instrument must be inspected and calibrated at least every 31 days pursuant to ARM 23.4.213, not every 7 days, or its results may be suppressed).

No Prejudice in Erroneous Admission of Incest Victim's Out-of-Court Statements — Harmless Error: The testimony of the investigating social worker who interviewed an incest victim, even though offered as a summary to a written report, was inadmissible hearsay repetition of allegations of incest. However, in the context of the record, the social worker testified only briefly prior to the victim and did not repeat any allegation to which the victim did not testify in much greater detail under cross-examination. Therefore, the court's error when it admitted the hearsay testimony was harmless. St. v. Riley, 270 M 643, 893 P2d 310, 52 St. Rep. 258 (1995), followed in St. v. Stuit, 277 M 227, 921 P2d 866, 53 St. Rep. 607 (1996), and St. v. Veis, 1998 MT 162, 289 M 450, 962 P2d 1153, 55 St. Rep. 651 (1998).

Self-Preservation Statement Within Hearsay Exception: A coconspirator feigned intoxication during questioning by police following a homicide, stating he did so for "self-preservation". His statements were properly admissible under this rule because his explanation for feigning intoxication related to his then-existing mental or emotional condition. St. v. McCord, 251 M 317, 825 P2d 194, 49 St. Rep. 53 (1992).

Admissibility of ACCRA Index in Child Support Calculations: The American Chamber of Commerce Researchers Association (ACCRA) Cost of Living Index is a public record admissible under subsection (8) of this rule for use in calculating cost-of-living differences that affect the amount of a child support obligation. Use of the ACCRA index by the District Court in adjusting for the cost of living in Alaska did not constitute reversible error. In re Marriage of Fronk v. Wilson, 250 M 291, 819 P2d 1275, 48 St. Rep. 936 (1991).

Admissibility of Evidence Regarding Breathalyzer Printout — Present Sense Impression: An officer who had experienced problems with a Breathalyzer printer prior to testing defendant copied the numerical results of the calibration and test result from the display screen to the printout card. Defendant averred that it was error to admit the officer's testimony regarding the numbers observed on the screen and subsequently recorded on the printout, contending the testimony was inadmissible hearsay that did not fall within any recognized exceptions. However, the numbers were a present sense impression under this rule, constituting a written assertion describing or explaining an event or condition made while the declarant was perceiving the event or condition, and as such they fell within the statutory hearsay exception in 61-8-404 (now repealed and content reorganized in Title 61, chapter 8, part 10). Hoy v. Helena, 248 M 128, 809 P2d 1255, 48 St. Rep. 344 (1991), followed in St. v. Berosik, 1999 MT 238, 296 M 165, 988 P2d 775, 56 St. Rep. 938 (1999).

Hearsay as General Consensus, Not Personal Observation — Reputation Concerning Boundaries: To qualify under the hearsay exception regarding reputation concerning boundaries or general history, the testimony must report a general consensus of opinion and not just an assertion of an individual's personal observation. In this case, the rationale for excepting testimony was lacking because no evidence was presented regarding the reputation of a monument; however, in light of other evidence supporting the testimony, the error was harmless and did not rise to the level of reversible error. Goodover v. Lindey's, Inc., 232 M 302, 757 P2d 1290, 45 St. Rep. 1068 (1988).

Suicide Note Inadmissible as Exception to Hearsay Rule: Defendant was convicted of conspiring to deliver a pistol to her husband who was an inmate in the state prison. The delivery failed, and the inmate committed suicide after writing a note that implied his wife had done something wrong. The note admittedly was not written in furtherance of the conspiracy and contained no direct statement implicating defendant in the scheme. Speculation of defendant's complicity did not rise to a sufficient guarantee of trustworthiness nor did the note establish a fact in issue. Hence, the suicide note did not qualify as a recognized exception to the hearsay rule and was inadmissible. It was not a new and unanticipated situation requiring growth and development of the hearsay law because suicide notes predate the rules of evidence by many years. St. v. Brown, 231 M 334, 752 P2d 204, 45 St. Rep. 660 (1988).

Statements Made to Insurance Claims Adjuster — Circumstantial Guarantees of Trustworthiness Not Met: The grant of a new trial based on prior admitted hearsay was affirmed when tape recorded statements made to an insurance claims adjuster did not satisfy the requirements of trustworthiness under Rule 804(b)(5), M.R.Ev. There was no sense of impending death, no statement against interest, and nothing about personal or family interest; and the statement was not made under oath or subject to cross-examination. Heisler v. Boule, 226 M 332, 735 P2d 516, 44 St. Rep. 698 (1987).

Child Support Action — Affidavit of Officer of State Seeking Reimbursement: In North Dakota's action for a declaration of paternity and to obtain child support, it was proper to exclude the affidavit of a North Dakota welfare administrator setting forth what North Dakota had paid for public assistance to the mother, the child's medical costs, and blood tests to establish paternity, for which North Dakota sought reimbursement. The affidavit was hearsay, was made by a person not available for cross-examination, and did not fit within any of the hearsay exceptions. However, under 40-5-121 (now repealed) the welfare administrator's deposition as to his state's pleaded costs could be taken and the case was remanded to allow a deposition to be taken. Because North Dakota did not plead its expenditures for the child's medical costs, they could not be recovered and the deposition could not cover those costs. St. of N. Dak. ex rel. B.J.D. v. S.P.R., 219 M 26, 710 P2d 702, 42 St. Rep. 1817 (1985).

Telephone Survey by State Employee — Hearsay — No Circumstantial Guarantee of Trustworthiness: Plaintiff was awarded the mechanical subcontract on a research laboratory being constructed by the State. The State received a complaint that plaintiff was not paying the "standard prevailing rate" of wages. The State investigated and concluded that the complaint was legitimate. Plaintiff commenced a declaratory judgment action, and judgment was entered in his favor. At trial, the District Court admitted the testimony of the local job service office manager concerning a telephone wage survey he had conducted. The evidence was inadmissible hearsay and did not have a comparable guarantee of trustworthiness because it was not data compiled as a result of a regularly conducted activity or a duty imposed by law. Thompkins v. Fuller, 205 M 168, 667 P2d 944, 40 St. Rep. 1192 (1983).

After-the-Fact Exclusion of Evidence: The District Court admitted into evidence in a lien controversy a document prepared for concrete costs at the request of defendant's counsel. Plaintiff objected, contending the document was hearsay. At the conclusion of trial, the District Court Judge issued a memorandum excluding the document as hearsay. Defendant argued the after-the-fact ruling was prejudicial because it precluded him from calling other witnesses or otherwise presenting proof. The Supreme Court held that although the document was properly excluded as hearsay, since not issued in the ordinary course of business, the manner of the ruling was prejudicial and remanded the matter for reconsideration. Anderson v. Hobbs, 196 M 31, 637 P2d 817, 38 St. Rep. 2098 (1981).

Admissibility Dependent on Nature of Treatise — Cross-Examination of Expert: Learned treatises are permissible for use in cross-examination of an expert if the treatise is "established as a reliable authority by the testimony or admission of the witness or by other expert testimony or by judicial notice". Here, a treatise on design at grade-railway highway crossings was properly used to test the knowledge of an expert witness in cross-examination. Another treatise concerning the visibility and audibility of trains approaching crossings was properly held to be inadmissible, as it was merely advisory in nature. Treatises may be admitted upon the foundation that they show what is feasible to the jury or show what the defendant knew or should have known about safety precautions. Runkle v. Burlington N., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982, 37 St. Rep. 995 (1980).

Evidence Submitted to Be Timely and in Proper Form: Plaintiff submitted a letter from the State Compensation Insurance Fund in support of a motion to set aside the judgment. The letter was improperly included in appellant's brief for the following reasons: (1) it was not presented in the proper affidavit form as required by former Rule 56, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded); (2) the opinion set forth in the letter could easily have been presented in timely fashion in opposition to respondent's motion for summary judgment, rather than subsequently in support of a motion to set aside the verdict that had been granted on the merits; and (3) the letter sets forth a generalized opinion offered without either foundation or regard to the facts of the case. Since the letter was not in proper form, it cannot be considered under Rule 803(8), M.R.Ev. Scott v. Robson, 182 M 528, 597 P2d 1150, 36 St. Rep. 1273 (1979).

Law Review Articles

Face to Face: The Crime Lab Exception of Rule 803(8) of the Montana Rules of Evidence and the Montana Confrontation Clause, Weilhammer, 60 Mont. L. Rev. 167 (1999).

Rule 804. Hearsay exceptions: declarant unavailable.

Commission Comments

(a) Definition of unavailability. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 804(a) except that in (a)(5) the parenthetical phrase "(or in the case of hearsay exception under subdivision (b)(2), (3), or (4), his attendance or testimony)" has been deleted. The Commission deleted this phrase because it imposes a requirement which not only does away with the concept of uniform application of the unavailability requirement to the exceptions in subdivision (b) but also changes existing Montana law to require a party to take the expensive and time-consuming step of deposing a witness who makes a statement that would fall within Rule 804(b), (2), (3), or (4). The Commission felt that depositions should only be taken by a party at its option for discovery purposes or when the party feels there is a need for the preservation of the testimony. It also felt that it is unfair to make this a requirement of admissibility of a statement when the proponent has acted in good faith and, through no fault of his own, the witness is unavailable and was not deposed. Enacting this parenthetical clause would have the effect of depriving the trier of fact of valuable evidence and would also change Montana law to add a further restriction to the admissibility of hearsay statements.

The Commission adopted this subdivision because it represents a practical and sensible solution to the problem of admitting a hearsay statement or receiving no evidence at all when the witness is unavailable. Whether the witness is unavailable because of an exemption for privilege, refusal to testify, claim of lack of memory, inability to testify, or absence from the jurisdiction, the result will always be loss of his testimony and a need for reliance on his hearsay statement. Therefore this subdivision applies to each of the hearsay exceptions found in subdivision (b) a uniform definition of unavailability which considers whether the testimony of the witness will be received and, if not, then admits the hearsay statement insofar as unavailability is concerned.

This subdivision changes existing Montana law by uniformly applying the definition of unavailability to each of the hearsay exceptions in subdivision (b) and by expanding the unavailability requirement for all of those exceptions. The unavailability requirement under existing Montana law for each of the exceptions will be considered in the Commission Comments for those exceptions. It is sufficient to note here that Montana law does not recognize a claim of privilege, refusal to testify despite a court order, or lack of memory as satisfying the requirement that the hearsay declarant be unavailable. Inability to testify and absence from the hearing meet the unavailability requirement for former testimony under existing Montana law, but the other three exceptions require that the declarant be dead in order that he be considered unavailable. Finally, note under subdivision (a)(5) that absence from the hearing is allowable only if a proponent is unable to procure attendance by "reasonable means" and that this is consistent with the Constitutional requirements set out in State v. LaCario, 163 Mont. 511, 515, 518 P2d 982 (1974).

(b) Hearsay exceptions. (1) Former testimony. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 804 (b)(1) in its treatment of criminal actions and proceedings, and so the language of the introductory clause and clause (B) is the same as that exception. However, the Commission has adopted the more liberal rule contained in the Supreme Court draft of the Federal rule sent to Congress for civil actions and proceedings in clause (A). At common law, former testimony was admissible only when there was an identity of parties and interests; this is the approach taken by the Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) in that they admit former testimony only when the party against whom the testimony is offered had an opportunity and similar motive to develop the testimony, the phrase "similar motive" approximating the requirement of identity of issues. The Supreme Court draft adopted a more liberal rule allowing former testimony to be offered against any party so long as the party who previously cross-examined had a similar motive and interest in examining the witness as the party against whom the testimony is being offered.

The Commission took this action for the following reasons. First, applying the liberalized Supreme Court draft found in clause (A) to criminal cases could easily pose constitutional problems concerned with the right to confrontation, in that former testimony could be admissible against the defendant even though he had never had the opportunity to cross-examine that witness. Therefore, the more conservative common law approach was applied to criminal cases in clause (B). Second, the Commission applied the more liberal Supreme Court version to civil actions and proceedings in clause (A) because it allows trustworthy evidence to be admitted where a stricter rule could exclude. It can be argued that it is unfair to impose the cross-examination of the party in the former action upon the party against whom the former testimony is offered and that it is unfair to admit testimony against any party who has not cross-examined the witness. However, it is apparent that former testimony is like many other hearsay exceptions which do not allow the hearsay deponent to be cross-examined. Further, while it may be unfair to place a burden of another party's cross-examination on the party against whom the testimony is now offered, the requirement that the parties have similar motivation and interest in the cross-examination will usually mean an effective cross-examination has occurred. Most important, when the choice is between no evidence at all and the former testimony, the former testimony should be admitted even though it may result in some unfairness. Third, differentiating between civil and criminal cases with former testimony is consistent with Montana case law, which has applied different rules to civil and criminal cases. (See below.)

Former testimony is admitted as a hearsay exception, like other hearsay exceptions, when the requirements of unavailability and a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness are met. The unavailability requirement with its exception is set out in subdivision (a) of this rule. The circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness can be found in the conditions under which this type of hearsay statement is made; that is, the witness is under oath and subject to cross-examination. The Advisory Committee's Note, 56 F.R.D. 183, 323 (1972), indicates that this exception is the strongest hearsay and perhaps could be included under Rule 803 (which does not require the declarant to be unavailable). However, it also notes that placing this exception under Rule 804 is consistent with tradition, the policy of producing the witness if he is available, and expresses a preference for testimony personally given by the witness, rather than his former testimony.

This exception is generally consistent with existing Montana Law. Section 93-401-27(8), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides:

In conformity with the preceding provisions, evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts...8. The testimony of a witness, deceased, or out of jurisdiction, or unable to testify, given in a former action between the same parties, relating to the same matter.

Use of depositions in the same action or proceeding is governed in civil cases by Rule 32(a)(3) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure (as amended, 1975). Use of depositions in criminal proceedings is governed by Section 95-1802(e), R.C.M. 1947 [46-15-204].

The unavailability requirement contained in Section 93-401-27(8), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], is met in three instances; death, absence from the jurisdiction, or inability to testify. The unavailability requirement of the statute has been construed in Reynolds v. Fitzpatrick, 28 Mont. 170, 172, 72 P 510 (1903) where the court held "the proponent of a former testimony must prove the ground of unavailability by positive testimony or by the existence of circumstances which warrant an inference that the ground of unavailability exists". The foundation showing unavailability in criminal cases is discussed in Petition of Tooker, 147 Mont., 207, 217, 410 P2d 923 (1966), and the Constitutional requirements for unavailability in criminal cases can be found in State v. Zachmeier, 153 Mont. 64, 72, 453 P2d 783 (1969) and State v. LaCario, supra 163 Mont. at 515.

Section 93-401-27(8), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], also states that former testimony is to be allowed "between the same parties, relating to the same matter". This is the requirement found at common law for identity of parties and issues. Early cases strictly construed this requirement. Anaconda Copper Mining Co. v. Heinze, 27 Mont. 161, 167, 69 P 909 (1902) and Leggat v. Carroll, 30 Mont. 384, 389, 76 P 805 (1904).

However it appears that later Montana cases have applied a more liberalized rule in civil cases relating to the identity of parties. In O'Meara v. MacDermott, 40 Mont. 38, 57, 104 P 1049 (1909), the Court held "precise nominal identity of all the parties is not necessary in order to make former testimony competent". In that case, there were coparties on each side in the former action, but not in the action where the former testimony was offered. In Damm v. Damm, 82 Mont. 239, 245, 266 P2d 410 (1948), a case where depositions were offered from a former action where the parties and issues were the same, the Court stated, "admissibility of such depositions is not dependent upon exact identity of parties and causes of action, but rather upon the identity of the question being investigated, and the opportunity of the party against whom the deposition is offered to cross-examine". Finally, in Arnold v. Genzberger, 96 Mont. 358, 372, 31 P2d 396 (1934), the Court admitted the testimony of a deceased witness who was a party in the former action, citing O'Meara v. MacDermott, supra 40 Mont. at 57, and Damm v. Damm, supra 82 Mont. at 245. The reason for the rule requiring identity of parties and issues, as stated in Nelson v. Gough, 61 Mont. 301, 303, 202 P 196 (1921), also appears to be the reason for liberalizing the rule:

If the issues presented on the former occasion were materially different, the cross-examination of the witness 'would not have been directed to the same material point of investigation', and therefore could not have been an adequate test for exposing inaccuracies and falsehoods. (2 Wigmore on Evidence, Sec. 1386.)

Conversely, it is sufficient if the issue was the same or substantially so with reference to the likelihood of adequate cross-examination, because the opponent has thus already had the full benefit of the security intended by the law. (Id., Section 1387).

In criminal cases, however, Montana law has not applied the same liberal standards. While State v. Byers, 16 Mont. 565, 568, 41 P 708 (1895), held that there was no confrontation clause problem as to the admissibility of former testimony, the later cases of State v. Storm, 127 Mont. 414, 417, 265 P2d 971 (1953), and State v. Pivaler, 127 Mont. 427, 430, 265 P2d 969 (1953), held that the confrontation clause did not allow the admissibility of former testimony in a criminal trial. Both of these cases were overruled in State v. Bouldin, 153 Mont. 276, 281, 456 P2d 830 (1969), where the trial court admitted former testimony when the defendant had the opportunity to cross-examine the witness at the time the former testimony was given. Other criminal cases admitting former testimony, cited above in connection with the unavailability requirements, have all been instances where testimony was admitted against a defendant who had the opportunity to cross-examine the witness.

(2) Statement made under belief of impending death. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 804(b)(2) except that an introductory clause reading "in a prosecution for homicide or a civil action or proceeding", is deleted. The Commission deleted this clause because it feels that if statements of this sort are to be admissible in homicide prosecutions, they should also be admissible in any other criminal prosecutions. Section 93-401-27(4), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], admits dying declarations in all criminal actions, and so the adoption of the Federal rule would have been a restriction on existing Montana law. None of the cases have expressed the rule that dying declarations are only admissible in prosecutions for homicide, although the cases considering admitting dying declarations have all been this type of prosecution. Note that the Federal, Uniform, and Montana rule all admit statements of this sort in civil actions; this is a major change from the common law. The Commission feels that if statements of this sort are reliable enough for use in criminal prosecutions, then they should also be used in civil cases where the outcome does not involve personal freedom. It should also be noted that the unavailability requirement, as defined in subdivision (a), allows the hearsay declarant's statement to be admitted even though he is not dead. However, the exception retains a circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness required at common law, that the declarant make a statement under a belief of impending death.

This exception changes existing Montana law. First, it applies to criminal as well as civil cases, an expansion of Section 93-401-27(4), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], which reads "...in criminal actions, the act or declaration of a dying person, made under a sense of impending death, respecting the cause of his death." And second, the unavailability requirement stated in the statute apparently requires the declarant to die in order for the statement to be admissible; this is changed by the unavailability requirement applied to this exception through Subdivision (a).

The other requirements contained in the statute, that the statement be made under a sense of impending death and that it concern the cause of death, are additional circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness found in this exception. There are many Montana cases dealing with whether or not a sufficient foundation has been laid to show a sense of impending death. In State v. Russell, 13 Mont. 164, 167, 32 P 854 (1893), the Court held that it was not required that the declarant state he had no hope of recovery from his injury, for this may be shown by the facts and circumstances surrounding the declarant's making of the statement. In State v. Byrd, 41 Mont. 585, 600, 111 P 407 (1910) the Court held that the sense of impending death foundation was satisfied when it was shown that the declarant died from the wounds from which he was suffering even though an operation was subsequently performed in an attempt to save his life. In State v. Martin, 76 Mont. 565, 568, 248 P 176 (1926) the Court indicated the requirements for the admissibility of this type of hearsay statement, as found in the statute, and concluded "It is the state of mind of the declarant which determines the admissibility of the declaration...". The leading case considering this foundation is State v. Morran, 131 Mont. 17, 30, 306 P 679 (1956), in which the Court reviewed most of the Montana cases in this area. The requirement that the declaration relate to the circumstances of the declarant's death has been construed liberally in State v. Crean, 43 Mont. 47, 56 114 P 603 (1911), "to comprise the facts and circumstances of the killing, and such other facts and circumstances, immediately surrounding and attending it, as properly form a part of the res gestae". In State v. LeDuc, 89 Mont. 545, 557, 300 P 919 (1931), the Court held it was proper to allow a dying declaration which included the fact that defendant had hit another person than the declarant.

(3) Statement against interest. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 804(b)(3), except that the clause "or to make him an object of hatred, ridicule, or disgrace..." is added so that a statement against the declarant's social interests is included under this exception. This particular clause was deleted by Congress from the version of the Federal rules presented it by the Supreme Court. The Commission feels that clause should be included, for statements "against social interest" are of sufficient importance to meet the circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness under this hearsay exception. That guarantee of trustworthiness is that persons do not make statements against their interest unless true. Allowing statements against penal interest to be admitted raises two problems. The first is concerned with statements which exculpate the accused in the criminal action in which he is being tried. This problem is solved by the last sentence in the exception which requires the statement to be corroborated so that false or trumped up confessions could not be used to exculpate. The second problem is concerned with statements against penal interests which inculcate the accused. The admissibility of these statements involves constitutional principles still under development, and so this type of statement is not governed by the rule.

This exception greatly expands existing Montana law concerning statements against interests. Statutes admitting these statements, Section 93-401-6, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], declarations of predecessor in title against interest, Section 93-401-10, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], declarations against pecuniary interest, Section 93-401-27(4), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], declarations against proprietary interest, and Section 93-1101-17(1), R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-607], writings against interest, all require that declarant be deceased. Also see MacDonald v. Protestant Episcopal Church, 150 Mont. 323, 335, 435 P2d 369 (1967), holding that Montana only admits declarations against interest when the declarant is dead. Therefore, to the extent that Federal Rule 804(b)(3) and the definition of unavailability under 804(a) allow declarations against interest when the declarant is not deceased, this is a change to existing Montana law. The statutes just cited (which deal with declarations against interest) only allow statement against the declarant's pecuniary or proprietary interest. This was affirmed in MacDonald v. Protestant Episcopal Church, supra 150 Mont. at 335. This exception changes existing Montana law by allowing statements against penal and social interest as well as those against proprietary and pecuniary interest to be admissible.

This exception as well as existing Montana law requires that the statement be against the declarant's interests, and so the common law circumstantial guarantee of trustworthiness is retained. Cases which have specifically required that the declaration be against the interests of the declarant are: Washoe Copper Co. v. Juanila, 43 Mont. 178, 185, 115 P 916 (1911); Wilson v. Davis, 110 Mont. 356, 366, 103 P2d 149 (1940); McReynolds v. McReynolds, 147 Mont. 476, 481, 414 P2d 531 (1966) and MacDonald v. Protestant Episcopal Church, supra 150 Mont. at 335. It logically follows that when a declaration is self-serving, it is not against the interests of the declarant, the guarantee of trustworthiness fails, and the statement is not admissible under this exception. Welch v. Thomas, 102 Mont. 591, 601, 61 P2d 404 (1936) and King v. Schultz, 141 Mont. 94, 99, 375 P2d 108 (1962).

(4) Statement of personal or family history. This exception is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 804(b)(4) except the phrase "or dissolution of marriage" is added after divorce to be consistent with the concepts contained in Section 48-316, R.C.M. 1947 [40-4-104], The Uniform Marriage and Divorce Act, as well as the language contained in Rule 803(19). The distinction between 803(19) and this exception is that Rule 803(19) allows the same subject matter to be proven by reputation evidence while this exception relies upon the declaration of an unavailable witness to prove the same type of facts. The guarantee of trustworthiness for this exception is identical to that found for Rule 803(19). (See the Commission Comments to that rule.) In addition, it is quite natural for persons to discuss family history among members of the family or close friends and it is highly unlikely that falsehood would be repeated in this context. Common law required that in order for these types of declarations to be admissible, the declaration [must?] be made before the controversy arose. This exception does not contain that requirement, and it is apparent that existing Montana law was already in accord with the exception. The exception expands the common law by allowing the statements to concern more than genealogy and in allowing a person closely associated with the family to be the hearsay declarant. Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 328.

This exception is consistent with existing Montana law, although it is somewhat broader. Section 93-401-9, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides "the declaration, acts, or omission of a member of a family, who is a decedent, or out of a jurisdiction, is also admissible as evidence of common reputation, in cases where, on question of pedigree, such reputation is admissible". It is possible this statute could be construed to apply to declarations concerning reputation and so would be consistent with Rule 803(19). However, Section 93-401-27(4), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides "the act or declaration, verbal or written, of a deceased person in respect to the relationship, birth, marriage, or death of any person related by blood or marriage to such deceased person...". This section plainly allows the declaration of a deceased person but is changed to the extent that the unavailability requirements under Rule 804(a) allow the declarant to be unavailable through means other than death. That section also uses language that is slightly narrower concerning the subject matter of the declaration. That section also restricts declarations to persons related by blood or marriage, while the exception expands this restriction by allowing the declarant to be a person intimately associated with the family. Welch v. All Persons, 85 Mont. 114, 128, 278 P 110 (1929), held that depositions taken on an issue as to whether a marriage existed were admissible in a later trial, and so the court did not apply the common law restriction that the statements must be made before the controversy arose. This is consistent with the exception.

(5) Other exceptions. This exception is identical to the version of Federal Rule 804(b)(6) submitted to Congress but amended by renumbering and adding the exact conditions added to a similar exception found in Federal Rule 803(24). Since the conditions are identical in each exception and have been rejected in Rule 803(24), the Commission Comments to that Rule applies here. Note that the circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness found in the Commission Comments to each of the exceptions in Rule 804(b) are to be applied with this exception in finding "comparable guarantees of trustworthiness".

Case Notes

Text Messages Properly Admitted — Evidence Showing Conspiracy Involving Defendant Properly Admitted Under Coconspirator Exception — Probative Value Outweighed Danger of Unfair Prejudice — Statements Against Interest and Statements by Party Opponent — Defendant's Jury Instruction Regarding Reasonable Doubt Properly Refused. St. v. Wienke, 2022 MT 116, 409 Mont. 52, 511 P.3d 990.

Testimony From Civil Hearing Improperly Admitted at Criminal Trial — Motive to Develop Testimony Different: The defendant was charged with felony assault with a weapon and misdemeanor partner or family member assault after allegedly pointing a gun at his wife and firing to the side of her head. In a separate dissolution of marriage proceeding, the wife sought an order of protection and the District Court held a hearing on the matter. The defendant, unrepresented at this hearing, did not contest the order or cross-examine the wife. At the subsequent criminal trial, the wife did not appear; however, the District Court admitted her prior testimony under Rule 804(b)(1)(B), M.R.Ev. On appeal, the defendant argued that this violated his confrontation clause rights. The Supreme Court agreed with the defendant, holding that in order to introduce former testimony, the defendant must have had an opportunity to examine the declarant and a similar motive to develop the declarant's testimony. While an opportunity to examine the wife existed, the order of protection hearing and the criminal trial were not similar motives to develop testimony. St. v. Pingree, 2015 MT 187, 379 Mont. 521, 352 P.3d 1086.

Loss of Video Footage — Improper Finding That Statements in Brief Opposing Sanctions for Spoliation of Evidence Did Not Constitute Judicial Admissions: The plaintiff requested that a store manager retain footage of her fall at the store the previous day. The plaintiff filed a negligence claim against the defendant related to the fall and, upon learning that the video footage had been erased, filed a motion for discovery sanctions. In its brief opposing sanctions, the defendant agreed with some of the plaintiff's statements regarding the content of the footage.

During trial, however, the defendant made arguments about the video footage that contradicted those made in its earlier brief. The plaintiff appealed the District Court's decision, arguing that the statements in the defendant's brief constituted judicial admissions and that the District Court abused its discretion when it did not treat those statements as judicial admissions at trial. The Supreme Court ruled that the statements in the brief were judicial admissions and remanded the case for a new trial. Bilesky v. Shopko Stores Operating Co., LLC, 2014 MT 300, 377 Mont. 58, 338 P.3d 76.

No Judicial Notice of Prior Testimony When Witness Unavailable to Testify at Criminal Trial — Prior Testimony Not Pertinent to Charges: The defendant was convicted of exploiting her elderly mother by convincing her to take out a reverse mortgage and using the proceeds to pay off the defendant's own debts. Prior to trial, at a hearing regarding the mother's competency, the District Court determined she was competent to testify at trial; however, the mother's health deteriorated by the time of trial, and she was no longer able to testify. The defendant asked the trial court to take judicial notice of the transcript of her mother's testimony at the competency hearing. The court refused to take notice and the defendant was convicted. The defendant appealed to the Supreme Court, which affirmed the District Court's conclusion that the mother's testimony about her own competency was not pertinent to the charges against her daughter. St. v. Homer, 2014 MT 57, 374 Mont. 157, 321 P.3d 77.

Statement of Interest Improperly Excluded: Defendant appealed his felony DUI conviction, arguing that the District Court erred in preventing a defense witness from testifying that a passenger of the vehicle had stated to the witness that the passenger, not the defendant, had been driving the vehicle. The Supreme Court concluded that testimony about the passenger's statement against interest should have been admitted because: (1) the passenger invoked his Fifth Amendment right and was "unavailable" to testify; (2) the passenger's statement was clearly against his own interest; and (3) a number of factors corroborated the trustworthiness of the passenger's statement. St. v. Wing, 2012 MT 176, 366 Mont. 37, 285 P.3d 469.

"Comparable Circumstantial Guarantees of Trustworthiness" — Generally Inapplicable Relating to Statements by Testators: Montana law has historically been hostile to the admissibility of out-of-court statements made by a testator regarding testamentary intentions when a valid will exists and the testator's mental capacity is not at issue. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in concluding that the "comparable circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness" of this rule did not apply to testimony in an affidavit for summary judgment that would otherwise be inadmissible as hearsay. In re Estate of Harmon, 2011 MT 84, 360 Mont. 150, 253 P.3d 821.

Video Deposition Properly Admitted in Absence of Material Witness at Trial: Five days before trial the state deposed a material witness and recorded the deposition on video. Hart was present at the deposition and was able to cross-examine the witness. The witness was subpoenaed to appear at trial, but when the witness did not appear, the state moved for admission of the video deposition. The trial court concluded that the state had followed appropriate procedures and admitted the video deposition into evidence. Hart contended on appeal that admitting the video deposition was error because the witness was not unavailable. The state showed that a good faith effort was made to secure the witness's presence, but the witness nevertheless failed to appear. Hart presented no issue that he was unable to address during the deposition, nor did Hart point to any specific prejudice caused by use of the video. Therefore, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in allowing the video deposition to be played for the jury. The District Court was affirmed. St. v. Hart, 2009 MT 268, 352 M 92, 214 P.3d 1273 (2009).

Admission of Note Written by Homicide Victim Not Violative of Right to Confront Witnesses — Forfeiture by Wrongdoing Doctrine: Sanchez argued that admission at trial of a note written by Sanchez's admitted deliberate homicide victim violated Sanchez's right to confront witnesses. The Supreme Court noted that the confrontation clause applies only to testimonial hearsay, and in this case, the note was considered testimonial because the purpose of the note was to explain the victim's untimely death or poisoning, the intended audience reasonably included law enforcement, and circumstances surrounding the note indicated that an objective declarant reasonably should have anticipated that the state would use the statement at trial. However, the U.S. Supreme Court set out an equitable exception to the confrontation clause in Crawford v. Wash., 541 US 36 (2004), known as the forfeiture by wrongdoing doctrine. The doctrine states that one who obtains the absence of a witness by wrongdoing forfeits the constitutional right to confrontation. The Supreme Court agreed with the holding in U.S. v. Garcia-Meza, 403 F.3d 364 (6th Cir. 2005), that a defendant whose intentional criminal act results in a victim-declarant's death benefits from the defendant's wrongdoing if the defendant can use the death to exclude the victim-declarant's otherwise admissible testimony, regardless of whether the defendant specifically intended to silence the victim. Therefore, Sanchez forfeited his right to confront the victim when he killed her and could not claim that his constitutional right to confront witnesses was violated when his admittedly deliberate wrongdoing prevented the confrontation. Although the trial court admitted the note based on hearsay exceptions without addressing the confrontation clause, the court's decision was nevertheless legally correct, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb the trial court's decision. St. v. Sanchez, 2008 MT 27, 341 M 240, 177 P3d 444 (2008). See also Sanchez v. St., 2012 MT 191, 366 Mont. 132, 285 P.3d 540, in which the Montana Supreme Court held that the U.S. Supreme Court's holding in Giles v. California, 554 U.S. 353, 128 S. Ct. 2678 (2008), that the forfeiture by wrongdoing doctrine applies only when the defendant kills another person specifically to prevent the person from testifying, was not retroactive and did not apply to Sanchez's conviction, which had become final long before the Giles decision.

No Error in Admitting Statements Attributed to Homicide Victim: Sanchez contended that the trial court improperly admitted several statements at Sanchez's deliberate homicide trial, including statements that the victim made to her sister and to her neighbor, as well as a note written by the victim implicating Sanchez, on grounds that the statements were inadmissible hearsay. The Supreme Court concluded that the state did not offer the statement made to the sister to prove the truth of the matter asserted, so the statement was not hearsay. The statement to the neighbor was not subject to any hearsay exception, but admission of the statement was harmless error because the state presented other admissible evidence that proved the same facts as the hearsay statement. Similarly, although the trial court incorrectly relied on the "belief of impending death" hearsay exception regarding the note written by the victim, admission of the statement was harmless error in light of other admissible evidence that proved the same facts that the note sought to prove. The trial court was affirmed. St. v. Sanchez, 2008 MT 27, 341 M 240, 177 P3d 444 (2008).

Hearsay Evidence and Parental Rights Termination — Admission of Hearsay Evidence at Show Cause, Adjudicatory, and Termination Hearings Held Proper Because Children "Unavailable" — J.C.E. Case Distinguished — No Offer of Proof Made: Hearsay evidence in the form of videotaped interviews of young children talking with investigators about sexual abuse by their parents was admitted after the District Court found that the children were "unavailable" to testify because they would be traumatized by testifying against their parents in a courtroom setting. The Supreme Court held that the videotaped testimony was properly admitted by the District Court, based upon the thorough findings by the District Court, at the show cause hearing, the adjudicatory hearing, and the parental rights termination hearing. The Supreme Court distinguished St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309 (1988), because that case was a criminal case in which the right of confrontation under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., applied, whereas the case now before the Supreme Court was a civil case. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court properly analyzed the mother's attempt to call the children as witnesses as one of relevance, and because no offer of proof was made under Rule 103, M.R.Ev., by the mother, the Supreme Court could not conclude that the District Court acted arbitrarily. In re O.A.W., 2007 MT 13, 335 M 304, 153 P3d 6 (2007).

Failure to Challenge Admissibility of Victim's Statements on All Grounds as Precluding Consideration on Appeal: English challenged the admissibility of statements made by a negligent homicide victim, contending that the trial court erred in admitting the statements as excited utterances or medical diagnosis. However, the court admitted the statements on other grounds as well, including present sense impression, mental or physical condition, and circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, and English failed to challenge these additional bases for admissibility. Because English failed to challenge each of the alternative bases, the Supreme Court declined to address the admissibility issue on appeal. St. v. English, 2006 MT 177, 333 M 23, 140 P3d 454 (2006).

Admission of Unrelated Criminal Activity by Informant — Independent Corroboration Unnecessary: An informant who was known to police told the authorities that Meyer was in possession of illegal explosives after witnessing the explosives being delivered to Meyer. The informant admitted several instances of criminal activity, including use and possession of methamphetamine and being present when the explosives were delivered. Meyer sought to suppress evidence of the explosives because the informant's statements were not corroborated, the informant was not charged with transporting illegal explosives, and the drug charges were unrelated to the explosives investigation. The motion to suppress was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Independent corroboration is not required for a reliable informant whose identity is known to law enforcement and whose information is not based on hearsay, and an informant who gives an unequivocal admission against interest is considered reliable without further corroboration. Because corroboration was not necessary, the court declined to address whether admissions unrelated to the underlying offense may be classified as an admission against interest. St. v. Meyer, 2004 MT 272, 323 M 173, 99 P3d 185 (2004), following St. v. Reesman, 2000 MT 243, 301 M 408, 10 P3d 83 (2000).

Improper Consideration of Hearsay Evidence Corroborating Testimony of Child Sexual Abuse Victim — Trustworthiness of Child's Statement Considering Totality of Circumstances: Defendant convicted of incest contended on appeal that the District Court erred in determining that the child victim's hearsay statements were admissible under the residual exception of subsection (b)(5) of this rule because the statements had comparable circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness, in violation of defendant's constitutional right to confront witnesses. Citing Idaho v. Wright, 497 US 805 (1990), the Supreme Court noted that reliance upon exceptions to the hearsay rule is permissible if the declarant's truthfulness is so clear from the surrounding circumstances that the test of cross-examination would be of marginal utility. Factors often identified by courts as indicia of the reliability of statements made by child witnesses in sexual abuse cases, such as spontaneity, use of language unexpected of a child of similar age, and lack of motive to fabricate, all relate to whether the child was likely to be telling the truth when the statement was made, but do not include factors that may be added using hindsight. Thus, in child sexual abuse cases, a court may not consider corroborating evidence when making a determination about the admissibility of hearsay statements under the confrontation clause, and the District Court in this case erred as a matter of law in doing so. However, after considering the totality of circumstances exclusive of the corroborating evidence, the Supreme Court found that the child's statements were supported by the particularized guarantees of trustworthiness necessary to withstand a confrontation clause challenge, so the District Court's admission of the child's hearsay statements was affirmed. St. v. S.T.M., 2003 MT 221, 317 M 159, 75 P3d 1257 (2003). See also St. v. Osborne, 1999 MT 149, 295 M 54, 982 P2d 1045 (1999).

Improper Admission of Coconspirator's Out-of-Court Statements and Confession — Reversible Error: In a videotaped interview with detectives, Steilman admitted that he and Francis had murdered a man to prove their worth to each other in conducting other criminal activity. Steilman was offered a plea agreement and was called to testify at Francis's trial. When called as a witness, Steilman refused to answer any questions on fifth amendment grounds, so the state sought the admission of the videotaped interview and Steilman's out-of-court statements to lay witnesses. The state contended that the statements to lay witnesses were admissible as statements of a coconspirator made in furtherance of a conspiracy and that the statements to police were admissible as admissions against Steilman's penal interests. The District Court allowed the statements, but not the videotape, although the videotape was subsequently shown to the jury pursuant to a motion by defense counsel, in response to the ruling on the admissibility of the out-of-court statements, in order to give the jury an opportunity to observe Steilman. Francis was ultimately convicted of deliberate homicide and appealed on grounds that admission of the out-of-court statements was reversible error. The state conceded on appeal that the statements to lay witnesses were inadmissible because statements made after attainment of the conspirator's object are not admissible unless the movant can prove that an express agreement existed among the coconspirators to continue to act in concert to cover up the crime after its commission, and the state offered no such proof. Moreover, the statements were not admissible as testimony regarding out-of-court statements made by Francis, or admissible as statements made by Steilman and adopted by Francis. The state also conceded on appeal that the statements made to police were not admissible as statements against Steilman's penal interests. Pursuant to St. v. Castle, 285 M 363, 948 P2d 688 (1997), the fact that portions of a declarant's confession are admissible because they are self-inculpatory does not necessarily make the collateral noninculpatory statements either credible or admissible, particularly when the declarant implicates another person, as in this case when Steilman's confession consisted mainly of blaming Francis. The Supreme Court then applied 46-20-701, in light of St. v. Van Kirk, 2001 MT 184, 306 M 215, 32 P3d 735 (2001), to determine whether admission of the out-of-court statements constituted structural error or trial error and whether the error was reversible. The error here was trial error. In order to be considered harmless, it was necessary that the state demonstrate that there was no reasonable possibility that the inadmissible evidence contributed to the verdict. The court agreed that there was sufficient cumulative admissible evidence regarding Francis's purposeful participation in the killing. However, the court was forced to conclude that there was also a reasonable possibility that the erroneously admitted testimony of Steilman's out-of-court statements implicating Francis might have contributed to the conviction, so the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. St. v. Francis, 2001 MT 233, 307 M 12, 36 P3d 390 (2001).

Admission of Prior Testimony of Unavailable Witness at Second Trial Not Violative of Confrontation Clause: Hall was acquitted of aggravated assault at his first trial. At his second trial, the District Court allowed testimony of a witness from the first trial to be read into evidence because the witness was unavailable at the second trial. Hall alleged error because admission of the testimony violated his right to confront the witness in violation of Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const. Under this rule, prior testimony is a recognized exception to the hearsay rule, and the rationale behind the exception is that there is a guarantee of trustworthiness at the time that the testimony is given. Although evidence may have surfaced after the first trial regarding an alleged conversation in which the witness's prior testimony was possibly rendered suspect, the reliability of the prior testimony was nevertheless inferred from the fact that the witness was under oath and subject to cross-examination at the time of the original testimony. Because the evidence was available for the jury to weigh when contemplating the weight to be given to the prior testimony, subsequent admission of the testimony at the second trial was not violative of Hall's right to confront the witness at the second trial. St. v. Hall, 1999 MT 297, 297 M 111, 991 P2d 929, 56 St. Rep. 1190 (1999). See also Hamilton v. Mavros, 284 M 46, 943 P2d 963, 54 St. Rep. 741 (1997).

Child Sexual Abuse — Admissibility of Corroborating Evidence: Osborne was tried for sexual intercourse without consent with his minor stepdaughter. At the trial, the state introduced hearsay statements of the stepdaughter and testimony by a medical examiner that physical injuries to the stepdaughter were consistent with sexual abuse, but it could not be determined from those injuries who the perpetrator was. The District Court, on its own motion, prepared instructions, taken from the child hearsay guidelines set forth in St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309 (1988), admonishing the jury to consider, with regard to hearsay statements of the stepdaughter's testimony, "whether there is any corroboration for the statements" and "if the statement identifies a perpetrator, whether such identification can be corroborated". Osborne claimed that these instructions were given in violation of the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Idaho v. Wright, 497 US 805 (1990), that "corroboration of a child's allegations of sexual abuse by medical evidence of abuse" should not be considered when assessing the reliability of the statements. The state argued that Wright applies only to the determination of admissibility of the hearsay statements and not to whether the jury is entitled to consider corroborating evidence. The Supreme Court held that medical evidence of abuse that does not identify the abuser should not be considered by the District Court when it assesses the admissibility of the hearsay statements and pointed out that the instruction given in this case by the District Court distinguished between evidence that corroborates the occurrence of an act and evidence corroborating that Osborne was the perpetrator. Because the medical examiner testified that it was impossible to identify the perpetrator from the medical evidence, the Supreme Court held that within the context of the instruction taken as a whole, the instruction did not allow the jury to "bootstrap" the medical evidence onto Cassie's identification of Osborne as the perpetrator. St. v. Osborne, 1999 MT 149, 295 M 54, 982 P2d 1045, 56 St. Rep. 589 (1999).

Hearsay by Young Child — Evidence of Material Fact More Probative Than Other Evidence — Circumstantial Guarantees of Trustworthiness — No Abuse of Discretion Found: Heen became suspicious that his 33-month-old granddaughter, Cassie, had been sexually abused by her stepfather, Osborne, Heen's son-in-law. Heen and his daughter, Jamie, Cassie's mother, talked to Cassie, who said or indicated to either or both Heen and Jamie that she had played with "daddy's rubber duck" and that the rubber duck was Osborne's genitalia. Cassie also gave information tending to implicate Heen, whom she called "Papa", as opposed to Osborne, whom she called "Daddy". A medical examination showed that Cassie had physical injuries consistent with sexual abuse. The District Court interviewed Cassie and found her unable to testify because she was extremely shy and may have been intimidated by the courtroom. The state relied upon the hearsay testimony by Heen and Jamie, and based upon that hearsay evidence, Osborne was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent. The Supreme Court applied the requirements of St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309 (1988), in which the Supreme Court required that three findings be made by a trial court in order for hearsay by a child to be admissible, one of those findings being that the hearsay must be evidence of a material fact and be more probative than other evidence. Osborne objected to introduction of the hearsay testimony, claiming that it was not more probative than other evidence, that evidence being Cassie's testimony implicating Heen. The Supreme Court held that Cassie's testimony implicating Heen was evidence of a different fact and was not probative as to the same material fact and that Cassie implicated Osborne. For those reasons, the Supreme Court held that Cassie's hearsay testimony implicating Osborne was admissible. The Supreme Court also reviewed whether, even though the hearsay testimony was admissible under subsection (b)(5) of this rule, the testimony nevertheless violated Osborne's confrontation clause rights and held that pursuant to its opinion in J.C.E., it would defer to the District Court's finding that there were sufficient indicia of trustworthiness, from the evidence taken as a whole, and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in making that finding. St. v. Osborne, 1999 MT 149, 295 M 54, 982 P2d 1045, 56 St. Rep. 589 (1999).

Hearsay Statement by Witness Not Adopted by Defendant — Requirements for Finding Subpoenaed Witness "Unavailable": After having consumed drinks in Marysville, Widenhofer and Rothschiller were involved in a one-car accident on the Marysville Road. A car picked them up and took them to the closest business, the Silver City Bar. Because Widenhofer was injured, a highway patrol officer was called, who, upon arriving at the Silver City Bar, asked Rothschiller some questions about the accident. When he was in the patrol car with only the officer present, Rothschiller answered one of those questions by stating that Widenhofer was driving the vehicle. The officer then took both Widenhofer and Rothschiller to the hospital in Helena. After Widenhofer's injuries were cared for, the highway patrol officer continued to question Widenhofer; advised him that in the officer's opinion, alcohol was a factor in the accident; asked Widenhofer to submit to a blood-alcohol test; and read Widenhofer the implied consent form. Although Rothschiller was served with a subpoena by the Sheriff the night before a jury trial on Widenhofer's charge of DUI, Rothschiller failed to appear at trial. During the trial, the District Court allowed the highway patrol officer to repeat Rothschiller's answer, that Widenhofer was the driver of the vehicle. The Supreme Court reversed the decision of the District Court allowing the hearsay testimony. The Supreme Court held that the state's reliance on Rule 801(d)(2)(B), M.R.Ev., was misplaced because the District Court did not make an express finding that Rothschiller's statement was adopted by Widenhofer, as the District Court should have under the rationale of U.S. v. Schaff, 948 F2d 501 (9th Cir. 1991), and because the state did not present sufficient evidence that Widenhofer acquiesced in Rothschiller's statement. The Supreme Court noted that Widenhofer could not hear the conversation between the officer and Rothschiller and had no reason to know what Rothschiller was telling the officer. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that Rothschiller's statement as to who was driving the vehicle was not adopted by Widenhofer and that Rothschiller's statement could therefore not be allowed under this exception to the hearsay rule. Widenhofer also objected to the hearsay testimony of the highway patrol officer because it violated Widenhofer's right under the sixth amendment to the United States Constitution and under Art. II, sec. 24, Mont. Const., to confront and cross-examine a witness. The Supreme Court held that the "unavailability" exception under subsection (a)(5) of this rule could not be invoked because under the analysis of Ohio v. Roberts, 448 US 56 (1980), that rule requires the prosecution to demonstrate the "unavailability" of a witness before hearsay evidence of the witness's statements may be introduced. The Supreme Court held that the state's "minimal" attempt to procure Rothschiller's testimony by serving a subpoena on him the night before trial did not constitute "reasonable means" of procuring his testimony. St. v. Widenhofer, 286 M 341, 950 P2d 1383, 54 St. Rep. 1438 (1997), followed in St. v. McCollom, 2009 MT 257, 352 M 10, 214 P3d 1230 (2009). Widenhofer was followed, with regard to the standard of reasonable means of procuring witness's testimony, in St. v. Diaz, 2006 MT 303, 334 M 479, 148 P3d 628 (2006).

Nonself Inculpatory Statements Not Admissible: Portions of a statement that tend to subject the declarant to criminal liability are properly admitted under subsection (b)(3) of this rule as an exception to the hearsay rule. The District Court erred in admitting those portions of the statement that tended to implicate the defendant. Rule 106, M.R.Ev., is separate and distinct from the hearsay rule and does not make admissible statements that would otherwise be inadmissible. St. v. Castle, 285 M 363, 948 P2d 688, 54 St. Rep. 1194 (1997).

Testimony of City Court Judge in District Court Recollecting Prior Testimony of Unavailable Witness — Inadmissible Hearsay: Mavros was convicted in City Court of reckless driving and two counts of assault. On appeal to the District Court, one of the original witnesses who was an assault complainant was unavailable to testify. Because the City Court was not a court of record, the District Court Judge allowed the City Court Judge to testify, over objection, from recollection and trial notes as to the feelings of the unavailable witness regarding the incident and the alleged assault, which occurred about 8 months before the City Court trial. The City Court Judge had no personal knowledge of the alleged incident and could not recall how the witness had testified to certain questions in the City Court proceedings. Mavros had no opportunity to cross-examine the unavailable witness in District Court but could only cross-examine the City Court Judge on the recollected testimony given by that witness. The judge's testimony did not fit within the hearsay exception of this rule because the testimony was presented through the judge's memory rather than through a transcript that accurately repeated the direct examination and cross-examination before the City Court jury. The judge's testimony constituted inadmissible hearsay, and without any testimony from the complaining witness or other evidence from the trial, the assault conviction as against that witness failed. Hamilton v. Mavros, 284 M 46, 943 P2d 963, 54 St. Rep. 741 (1997).

Declarant Not Unavailable on Assumption That Declarant Will Invoke Fifth Amendment: Fina argued that he should have been allowed to introduce the written statement of an inmate's testimony as that of an unavailable declarant on the basis that if called, he believed that the inmate would invoke the fifth amendment. The Supreme Court held that the witness had not been called and had not invoked the fifth amendment and therefore was not an unavailable declarant. St. v. Fina, 273 M 171, 902 P2d 30, 52 St. Rep. 887 (1995).

Statements of Counsel as Binding on Client — New Trial Warranted: In closing arguments during a negligence trial that resulted in a jury finding of no negligence on behalf of defendant, defense counsel made unequivocal statements which, when taken in full context with the rest of his closing argument, constituted judicial admissions on the issue of negligence of his client that had the effect of a confessional pleading. Noting that the admissions of counsel are binding on the client, the Supreme Court granted a new trial, notwithstanding counsel's assertion that the statements were merely suggestions on the theory of the case. Kohne v. Yost, 250 M 109, 818 P2d 360, 48 St. Rep. 886 (1991), distinguished in Weaver v. St., 2013 MT 247, 371 Mont. 476, 310 P.3d 495. See also Bilesky v. Shopko Stores Operating Co., LLC, 2014 MT 300, 377 Mont. 58, 338 P.3d 76, in which the Supreme Court ruled that statements made during a pretrial briefing constituted judicial admissions, warranting a new trial.

Limited Hearsay Permitted in Incest Case — Failure to Use Guidelines Not Error: The District Court allowed the Department of Family Services (functions transferred in 1995 to Department of Public Health and Human Services and Department of Corrections) and Lake County personnel to testify from their personal knowledge regarding a child incest victim's unavailability to testify and the timeframe of the victim's charges as stated to them, restricting testimony to those two areas and stating that specific details of the alleged crime were inadmissible. Defendant contended that, however limited, the testimony was still hearsay unexcepted by this rule because the court failed to make preliminary findings under St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309 (1988). The Supreme Court saw no error in the lower court ruling, finding that any possible error was harmless. St. v. Kao, 245 M 263, 800 P2d 714, 47 St. Rep. 2100 (1990).

Issuance of Subpoena Not Required to Meet Due Diligence Obligation: The appellant argued that the lower court had erred in allowing the transcript of the plaintiff's brother's testimony to be entered into the record. The Supreme Court held that the lower court had not abused its discretion because the proceeding was a retrial with identical parties and issues and the brother had been subject to cross-examination in the first trial. The court also held that the plaintiff was not required to subpoena his brother in order to meet due process requirements when there had been no indication that the brother would not attend the trial. Barrett v. Asarco, 245 M 196, 799 P2d 1078, 47 St. Rep. 1980 (1990).

Declarant Unavailable — No Hearsay Exemption Upon Trustworthiness Guaranty: Plaintiff questioned the admissibility under hearsay rules of the testimony of witnesses who recalled statements of a person who was integral in determining the facts of the case but who died prior to trial. The Supreme Court held that when a declarant is unavailable as a witness, as for reason of death, his statements are not excluded by the hearsay rule if there are comparable circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness. Whether there are guaranties is a matter for determination by the District Court, which will be upheld absent an abuse of discretion. Hobbs v. Pac. Hide & Fur Depot, 236 M 503, 771 P2d 125, 46 St. Rep. 544 (1989).

Hearsay Admissible When Alleged Child Abuse Victim Unavailable as Witness — Child Hearsay Guidelines Established: In determining whether the District Court properly refused to allow into evidence out-of-court statements made by a child abuse victim to a counselor and a social worker, the Supreme Court held that subsection (b)(5) of this rule henceforth is the provision under which proffered hearsay, other than expert testimony, is considered for admissibility in cases of sexual abuse of children when the alleged victim is unavailable as a witness. The court also established guidelines for consideration by the trial judge in determining the admissibility of hearsay testimony proffered when the alleged child victim is unavailable. In using these guidelines, the question of admissibility remains in the discretion of the trial judge. St. v. J.C.E., 235 M 264, 767 P2d 309, 45 St. Rep. 2373 (1988), followed in St. v. Mayes, 251 M 358, 825 P2d 1196, 49 St. Rep. 75 (1992), and St. v. Osborne, 1999 MT 149, 295 M 54, 982 P2d 1045, 56 St. Rep. 589 (1999), and distinguishing St. v. Harris, 247 M 405, 808 P2d 453 (1991). See also St. v. Ryan, 691 P2d 197 (Wash. 1984), Idaho v. Wright, 497 US 805, 111 L Ed 2d 638, 110 S Ct 3139 (1990), St. v. Harris, 247 M 405, 808 P2d 453, 48 St. Rep. 62 (1991), and St. v. S.T.M., 2003 MT 221, 317 M 159, 75 P3d 1257 (2003).

Admissibility in Second Trial of Testimony Given by Defendant in First Trial: After having testified in his first trial, which ended in a mistrial, defendant declined to testify in his second trial. The Supreme Court held that the testimony given in the first trial was admissible as evidence in the second trial under both Rule 801, M.R.Ev., as an admission of a party-opponent, and under this rule, as the declaration of an unavailable witness. St. v. Hall, 234 M 57, 761 P2d 1283, 45 St. Rep. 1726 (1988).

Circumstantial Guaranties of Trustworthiness — Factors Considered — Discretion of District Court:

Defendant offered to introduce testimony for the purpose of establishing that a certain person had a conversation with an accomplice to the crime wherein the accomplice allegedly stated that the defendant did not participate in the crime. The offered testimony did not qualify as an exception to hearsay because it was offered to exculpate the accused and no corroborating circumstances clearly indicated the trustworthiness of the statement. Although St. v. LaPier, infra, discusses Rule 804(b) (5), M.R.Ev., this case is persuasive as to the question of abuse of discretion with relation to guarantees of trustworthiness concerning offered hearsay testimony under Rule 804(b)(3), M.R.Ev. St. v. Powers, 233 M 54, 758 P2d 761, 45 St. Rep. 1286 (1988).

Defendant was charged with an attempt to commit burglary. At trial, counsel for defendant attempted to introduce the testimony of a police officer as to his interview with a Canadian citizen who had allegedly witnessed the incident. While admitting that the testimony would constitute hearsay, the counsel argued that it should be admitted under Rule 804(b)(5). The trial court found insufficient circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness and denied admission of the testimony. On appeal, the Supreme Court noted that Montana's version of Rule 804(b)(5), M.R.Ev., differs significantly from the federal counterpart. The commission comment suggests that the circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness found in the commission comments to each of the other exceptions enumerated in Rule 804(b) are to be applied. The only applicable factor in this case was the fact that the citizen was apparently a disinterested observer. The trial court felt that the witness' disinterest alone was insufficient. The Supreme Court deferred to the discretion of the District Court absent a showing of abuse of discretion. St. v. LaPier, 208 M 106, 676 P2d 210, 41 St. Rep. 203 (1984).

Statement Subjecting Accomplice to Liability as Admissible Hearsay: A statement attributed to an alleged accomplice tended to subject her to criminal liability and was therefore admissible under the hearsay exception provided in Rule 804(b), M.R.Ev. St. v. Powers, 233 M 54, 758 P2d 761, 45 St. Rep. 1286 (1988), followed in St. v. McCord, 251 M 317, 825 P2d 194, 49 St. Rep. 53 (1992).

Unavailable Codefendant's Statements Exculpating Defendant Not Warranting New Trial: The District Court denied a motion for a new trial based on written statements of a codefendant exculpating defendant of the crimes. The court held that the statements were hearsay and that even if the statements were admissible, the motion would still be denied due to the conduct and questionable veracity of both defendants. The codefendant refused to testify, so the exclusion of the statements on the grounds of hearsay was error under the witness unavailable exception to this rule. However, the error was harmless in light of the court's explanation that a new trial would not be granted even if the material was not hearsay. St. v. Miller, 231 M 497, 757 P2d 1275, 45 St. Rep. 790 (1988).

Suicide Note Inadmissible as Exception to Hearsay Rule: Defendant was convicted of conspiring to deliver a pistol to her husband who was an inmate in the state prison. The delivery failed, and the inmate committed suicide after writing a note that implied his wife had done something wrong. The note admittedly was not written in furtherance of the conspiracy and contained no direct statement implicating defendant in the scheme. Speculation of defendant's complicity did not rise to a sufficient guarantee of trustworthiness nor did the note establish a fact in issue. Hence, the suicide note did not qualify as a recognized exception to the hearsay rule and was inadmissible. It was not a new and unanticipated situation requiring growth and development of the hearsay law because suicide notes predate the rules of evidence by many years. St. v. Brown, 231 M 334, 752 P2d 204, 45 St. Rep. 660 (1988).

Statements Made to Insurance Claims Adjuster — Circumstantial Guarantees of Trustworthiness Not Met: The grant of a new trial based on prior admitted hearsay was affirmed when tape recorded statements made to an insurance claims adjuster did not satisfy the requirements of trustworthiness under Rule 804(b)(5), M.R.Ev. There was no sense of impending death, no statement against interest, and nothing about personal or family interest; and the statement was not made under oath or subject to cross-examination. Heisler v. Boule, 226 M 332, 735 P2d 516, 44 St. Rep. 698 (1987).

Repair Costs Awarded Based on Repair Bill — No Circumstantial Guaranties of Reliability: District Court awarded respondent $619.13 for tractor repair based solely on a repair bill admitted over appellant's hearsay objection. There was no testimony from a representative of the repair shop. The District Court admitted the bill as having such circumstantial guaranties of reliability as to allow it to come in under the residual exception of the hearsay rule but offered no explanation as to what the guaranties were. The Supreme Court held that the District Court abused its discretion in admitting the bill. Nelson v. Davis Modern Mach., 220 M 347, 715 P2d 1052, 43 St. Rep. 423 (1986).

Statement of Defense Counsel Not Statement Against Interest: A statement by defense counsel to jury in closing argument suggesting that "a fair verdict would be $30,000" was not a statement against interest setting lower limits of a verdict at $30,000. The District Court erred in granting a new trial on grounds that the $25,000 jury award to the plaintiff constituted inadequate damages when there was substantial credible evidence to support the verdict of the jury. Brown v. Markve, 216 M 145, 700 P2d 602, 42 St. Rep. 708 (1985). See also White v. Ford, Bacon & Davis Tex., Inc., 256 M 9, 843 P2d 787, 49 St. Rep. 1117 (1992).

Invocation of Privilege Against Self-Incrimination — "Unavailable" Witness: Where the former wife of a child molester testified to her former husband's admission to acts of child molestation, the District Court did not err in admitting the wife's testimony over objection that the testimony was inadmissible hearsay. The testimony could be admitted under the statement against interest exception if the declarant (the husband) was "unavailable". A witness' privilege against self-incrimination, which was invoked by the husband, is generally regarded as sufficient grounds of unavailability to warrant reception as a statement against interest. Sarsfield v. Sarsfield, 206 M 397, 671 P2d 595, 40 St. Rep. 1736 (1983), followed in St. v. Stuit, 277 M 227, 921 P2d 866, 53 St. Rep. 607 (1996).

Evidence of Other Crimes, Wrongs, or Acts — Hearsay — Prejudicial Error: Direct evidence of other crimes, if such evidence came within the exceptions of Rule 404(3)(b), M.R.Ev., would be admissible. Indirect, hearsay evidence must also conform to the rules relating to the admission of hearsay testimony, including the exceptions. If the severely beaten victim were regarded as an unavailable witness because of her physical condition, her statements would be admissible if they came within the exceptions of Rule 804, M.R.Ev. Here, however, the hearsay declarant was not found to have circumstantial guaranties of trustworthiness because she admittedly disliked the defendant. Nor could the victim's statements be admitted as "excited utterances" because such utterances are admissible only if they are part of the res gestae of the crime charged. Admission of the statements of the victim to a friend and to her doctor, therefore, constituted prejudicial error. Admission of proof of wholly independent crimes requires a balancing of the relative probative value of the evidence against the prejudicial effect. Evidence of a course of conduct similar to the crime charged tends to prove the crime charged, but such evidence should not be admitted unless the proof thereof tends toward the conclusion that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged with moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. With proper safeguards, the court would allow evidence of previous assaults. St. v. Brubaker, 184 M 294, 602 P2d 974, 36 St. Rep. 1915 (1979).

Rule 805. Hearsay within hearsay.

Commission Comments

This Rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 805. The Advisory Committee's Note, 56 F.R.D. 183, 329 (1972), indicates "on principle it scarcely seems open to doubt that the hearsay rule should not call for exclusion of a hearsay statement which includes a further hearsay statement when both conform to the requirements of a hearsay exception". The Commission feels this is the only sensible solution to the problem of hearsay within hearsay or multiple hearsay situations. There is no existing Montana law directly dealing with hearsay within hearsay, perhaps indicating that this rule will help courts properly analyze the problem and admit hearsay statements under this rule.

Case Notes

Substance of 9-1-1 Call — Double Hearsay Rule Inapplicable — Admission Into Evidence Harmless Error: In a trial for sexual intercourse without consent, the District Court allowed a dispatcher to testify as to the substance of a 9-1-1 call related to the offense. The double hearsay rule did not apply. The caller's statement was hearsay, and the police dispatcher was too far removed to testify as to the victim's statements to the caller. It was error for the court to admit the substance of the 9-1-1 call into evidence; however, it was harmless error because all of the basic elements were established without question by other testimony properly admitted at trial.

St. v. Graves, 272 M 451, 901 P2d 549, 52 St. Rep. 755 (1995), followed in St. v. Veis, 1998 MT 162, 289 M 450, 962 P2d 1153, 55 St. Rep. 651 (1998).

Statement Containing Two Hearsay Declarations: Plaintiff testified that a third party told him that defendant made statements to the third party to pressure the third party into not awarding a subcontract to the plaintiff. The second hearsay declaration, that defendant made statements to pressure the third party, was admissible as nonhearsay because the statement constituted a verbal act in the sense that it went to prove the operative facts of the alleged tort, i.e., pressuring the third party. Phillip R. Morrow, Inc. v. FBS Ins. Mont.-Hoiness Labar, Inc., 236 M 394, 770 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 455 (1989).

Testimony May Contain Hearsay Within Hearsay: The trial court excluded the plaintiff's testimony that a third party had told him that the defendant had made statements pressuring the third party not to award a subcontract to the plaintiff. The trial court excluded the evidence because the plaintiff did not have personal knowledge of the statements allegedly made by the defendant to the third party. The Supreme Court overruled, stating that the lower court misconceived the nature of the personal knowledge requirement in the hearsay context. When A testifies that B told him of an event, A usually has personal knowledge only of B's report. It is B who has personal knowledge of the event. The hearsay rules require that the declarant, B, not the witness, A, has such personal knowledge. Phillip R. Morrow, Inc. v. FBS Ins. Mont.-Hoiness Labar, Inc., 236 M 394, 770 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 455 (1989).

Hearsay Within Hearsay — One Declarant Not Subject to Cross-Examination — Whole Statement Inadmissible: During rebuttal in a homicide trial, the State had a police officer testify as to what a witness had said the defendant had said to him just prior to the homicide. The witness had testified earlier in the trial but had been excused the day before rebuttal. The Supreme Court held that the officer's testimony was "hearsay within hearsay" as defined in Rule 805, M.R.Ev., and admissible only if both hearsay parts were admissible. Because the witness was absent and thus not subject to cross-examination, that part of the hearsay in which the witness was the declarant was inadmissible under Rule 801(d)(i), and thus the whole statement was inadmissible. St. v. Daniels, 210 M 1, 682 P2d 173, 41 St. Rep. 880 (1984).

Statement Relevant to State of Mind and Motive: Defendant was convicted of deliberate homicide in the shooting death of Scotty Azure. Defendant's son had been involved with Azure's daughter. At the trial Azure's wife was questioned on her basis for believing the defendant might know of her daughter's whereabouts prior to the shooting. The testimony was objected to as hearsay. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly allowed the statement into evidence with an instruction that it was not offered to prove the truth of the matter asserted but was offered only to show why the wife acted and believed as she did. The statement was relevant to the issue of defendant's state of mind and motive. In a case such as this where self-defense is raised, the state of mind and intent of the defendant are the primary issues. The jury is entitled to know, so far as evidence is available, all the facts and circumstances that tend to throw light upon the parties and their relations and feelings toward each other. St. v. Weinberger, 204 M 278, 665 P2d 202, 40 St. Rep. 844 (1983), followed with regard to a homicide case in St. v. McCord, 251 M 317, 825 P2d 194, 49 St. Rep. 53 (1992).

Multiple Hearsay: A detective testified that Polotto told him that Polotto had not told anyone that they were authorized to take his stereo. The declarant, Polotto, was not on the stand so Rule 801, M.R.Ev., does not apply. When a hearsay is included within a hearsay, Rule 805, M.R.Ev., requires the exclusion of the multiple hearsay unless each part of the combined statement conforms to an exception to the hearsay rule. Since no exception applies to the first part of the statement, "Polotto told him", the entire statement is inadmissible. St. v. Martinez, 188 M 271, 613 P2d 974, 37 St. Rep. 982 (1980).

Evidence of Other Crimes, Wrongs, or Acts — Hearsay — Prejudicial Error: Direct evidence of other crimes, if such evidence came within the exceptions of Rule 404(3)(b), M.R.Ev., would be admissible. Indirect, hearsay evidence must also conform to the rules relating to the admission of hearsay testimony, including the exceptions. If the severely beaten victim were regarded as an unavailable witness because of her physical condition, her statements would be admissible if they came within the exceptions of Rule 804, M.R.Ev. Here, however, the hearsay declarant was not found to have circumstantial guarantees of trustworthiness because she admittedly disliked the defendant. Nor could the victim's statements be admitted as "excited utterances" because such utterances are admissible only if they are part of the res gestae of the crime charged. Admission of the statements of the victim to a friend and to her doctor, therefore, constituted prejudicial error. Admission of proof of wholly independent crimes requires a balancing of the relative probative value of the evidence against the prejudicial effect. Evidence of a course of conduct similar to the crime charged tends to prove the crime charged, but such evidence should not be admitted unless the proof thereof tends toward the conclusion that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged with moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt. With proper safeguards, the court would allow evidence of previous assaults. St. v. Brubaker, 184 M 294, 602 P2d 974, 36 St. Rep. 1915 (1979).

Rule 806. Attacking and supporting the credibility of declarant.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 806. The rule simply ensures that a hearsay declarant or the maker of a statement under Rule 801 (admissions by persons authorized, agents, employees, or coconspirators), may have his credibility attacked as though the person had in fact testified. Advisory Committee's Note, 56 F.R.D. 183, 329 (1972). This is the effect of the first sentence of this rule. The second sentence of the rule provides that the foundation requirements for impeachment by a prior inconsistent statement, as set out under Rule 613(b), are not required under this rule. Rule 613 requires that a person so impeached be afforded an opportunity to explain or deny the statement. It is obvious that this requirement must be waived in the case of a person not present at trial or this method of impeachment would be effectively foreclosed. The final sentence of the rule is intended to ensure the cross-examination is not restricted.

Only two Montana cases have been concerned with attacking the credibility of a hearsay declarant, and each is consistent with this rule. The leading case is State v. Kacar, 74 Mont. 269, 281, 240 P 365 (1925), where the Court held that the credibility of a declarant's dying declaration could be attacked like any other evidence. In Howe v. Messimer, 84 Mont. 304, 310, 275 P 265 (1929), the Court held that an admission by a party may be impeached by a prior inconsistent statement without laying a foundation. Note that the provisions of Section 93-1901-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded] relating to the foundation requirements for impeachment by a prior inconsistent statement, have been changed by Rule 613(b) and that the second sentence of this rule waiving foundation requirements can be construed as a further change to that statute. The final sentence of the rule, allowing open cross-examination of the declarant, could be construed as consistent with Rule 43(b) of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. (Also see Rule 607 and Commission Comments concerning impeachment of one's own witness.)

Article IX

Authentication and Identification

Rule 901. Requirement of authentication or identification.

Commission Comments

(a) General Provision. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(a). The Commission has adopted this general provision to simplify the process of authentication or identification. The Advisory Committee's Note, 56 F.R.D. 183, 323 (1972) indicates “authentication and identification represent a special aspect of relevancy... Thus a telephone conversation may be irrelevant because of an unrelated topic or because the speaker is not identified. The latter aspect is the one here involved”. The standard contained in this subdivision is generally consistent with existing Montana law. In State v. Davis, 60 Mont. 426, 436, 199 P 421 (1921), the Court held the standard for authenticity of a physical object is a prima facie showing of a connection between the object and the offense and that “clear, certain, and positive proof is not required”. This standard has been affirmed in State v. Wilroy, 150 Mont. 255, 258, 434 P2d 138 (1967), and State v. Fitzpatrick, 163 Mont. 220, 230, 516 P2d 605 (1973). In State v. Cooper, 161 Mont. 85, 91, 904 P2d 978 (1972), the Court stated “authenticity for admissibility can be demonstrated by direct or circumstantial evidence and the consistency of evidence for a foundation is within the discretion of the trial judge”. The Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 333, indicates that the Federal drafters intend authenticity to be within the category of relevancy dependent upon fulfillment of a condition of fact under Federal Rule

104(b). Montana Rule 104(b) did not adopt the concept contained in the Federal Rule because it was felt it was impractical and inconsistent with Montana law. (See Commission Comments to Montana Rule 104(b).) The Commission feels that the present practice under existing Montana law of allowing the judge to admit evidence upon a proper authentication foundation should be continued, and the jury need not be allowed to exclude evidence conditionally admitted as under the Federal rule. Montana juries will still be allowed to reject evidence authenticated under this subdivision on grounds other than conditional admissibility. Whether the jury excludes evidence from its consideration because its conditional admissibility has failed or because of lack of credibility of authenticity, the result is the same; the evidence is disregarded. Therefore, the Federal rules concept of conditional relevance in Rule 901(a) has little practical difference from existing Montana law.

This general standard of authentication will supersede any specific provisions in existing Montana law. Two examples of specific provisions not contained in the list of illustrations in subdivision (b) are Sections 93-1101-13, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-107, now repealed], and 93-1101-16, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-108, now repealed]. Section 93-1101-13, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-107, now repealed], provides that evidence of the execution of an instrument is not necessary when the party against whom it is offered has admitted its execution if the instrument is one mentioned in Section 93-1101-16, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-108, now repealed], or produced from the custody of the adverse party and acted upon by him as genuine. Section 93-1101-16, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-108, now repealed], provides that writings more than thirty years old may be authenticated by comparison with specimens purported to be genuine when the specimen has been "generally respected and acted upon as such (genuine) by persons having an interest..." The general standard in this subdivision that the writing or object is what its proponent says it is certainly accomplishes the same end as these statutes, but without having to consider specific provisions relating to various types of writing or objects.

The authentication article does not distinguish the terms "authentication" and "identification", nor does it distinguish between the authentication and identification of writings and other physical objects. Therefore the general standard will govern the introduction of any writing or physical object into evidence.

(b) Illustrations. This subdivision is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b) except for a change in illustration (10) which makes the subdivision consistent in language used in these rules. The change in illustration (10) is intended to allow application of authentication as it is provided by statute or rule in Montana, while Federal Rule 901(b)(10) is intended to allow application under Federal law. Note that the introductory clause to this subdivision indicates that it is intended to list illustrations and is not intended to be a limitation upon the application of the principle found in subdivision (a) of this rule.

(1). Testimony of Witness With Knowledge.

This illustration is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b)(1). The simplest and most convenient form of authentication or identification is provided in this illustration, allowing a witness to simply testify that the matter is what the proponent claims it to be. This illustration is consistent with existing Montana law. A good example of this illustration is the introduction of photographs. In Pilgeram v. Hass, 118 Mont. 431, 449, 167 P2d 339 (1946), the Court stated the foundational requirement for authentication of a photograph.

Where the nature or condition of place is a matter of controversy in a civil action, photographs of the place shown to be true representations of the place at the time in question are generally admissible in evidence, and a photograph may be proved to be a correct representation of a place so as to be admissible by witnesses other than the person who took the photograph....

It can be noted that a photograph may be admissible even when there has been a change in conditions appearing in the photograph, so long as they are explained. Cases following these rules are State v. Peters, 146 Mont. 188, 200, 405 P2d 642 (1965); Pickett v. Kryger, 151 Mont. 87, 97, 439 P2d 57 (1968); and Lamb v. Page, 153 Mont. 171, 176, 455 P2d 337 (1969).

Several statutes also are good examples of the principle of this illustration: Section 93-1001-14, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], allows a witness to testify as to the laws of a sister state or foreign country. Section 93-1001-19, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], allows proof of a copy of a foreign country's judicial records by a witness' testimony that the copy has been compared with the original, that the original was in the custody of the clerk of the court, and that the copy is attested by the clerk of the court to be the original. Section 93-1101-12(1), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], allows a writing to be authenticated by anyone who saw the writing executed, and Section 93-1101-12(3), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], allows a subscribing witness to authenticate the writing. Finally, Section 93-1101-14, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], allows a witness to authenticate his own handwriting by simply so testifying.

(2) Nonexpert opinion on handwriting.

This illustration is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901 (b)(2). It expresses the rule observed at common law and in Montana that a nonexpert may give his opinion on genuineness of handwriting if familiar with that handwriting. Note that familiarity acquired for the purposes of litigation is not within this illustration, but within illustration (3). This illustration is consistent with existing Montana law found in several Montana statutes: Section 93-401-27(9), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides existing Montana law found in several Montana statutes; Section 93-401-27(9), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides: "In conformity with the preceding provisions, evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts:...the opinion of the witness respecting the identity or handwriting of the person, when he has knowledge of the person or handwriting...". Section 93-1101-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides:

Any writing may be proved either:

1. By anyone who saw the writing executed; or
2. By evidence of genuineness of the handwriting of the maker; or
3. By a subscribing witness.

Finally, Section 93-1101-14, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides: "The handwriting of a person may be proved by anyone who believes it to be his, and who has seen him write, or had seen writing purporting to be his, upon which he has acted or been charged, and thus acquired a knowledge of his handwriting". Montana cases have conformed to these statutes and have liberally allowed the foundation to be established. In State v. Mahoney, 24 Mont. 281, 286, 61 P 647 (1900), the prosecutrix was allowed to authenticate the handwriting of a note to her from the defendant even when she was unable to swear positively that the note was in his handwriting. In State v. Howard, 30 Mont. 518, 525, 77 P 50 (1904), a letter was allowed to be authenticated by a witness testifying that he was familiar with the defendant's handwriting and that the letter looked like it was in the defendant's writing. In Ingebrightsen v. Hatcher, 87 Mont. 482, 485, 288 P 1023 (1930), a witness, though not personally acquainted with the writer, had seen and acted upon the signature a number of times in the ordinary course of business, and this testimony was held sufficient foundation for authentication. This rule was followed in Leffek v. Luedeman, 95 Mont. 464, 27 P2d 511 (1933).

(3) Comparison by Trier or Expert Witness.

This illustration is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b)(3). This illustration allows comparison by the trier of fact or by an expert witness of the item of evidence to be introduced with a specimen; it is not intended to be limited to writings, but may include any other authentication by comparison. This illustration is generally consistent with existing Montana law. Montana law allows the comparison by the trier of fact or by expert witness in authentication of a writing under Section 93-1101-15, R.C.M. 1947, [superseded], which provides:

Evidence respecting the handwriting may also be given by comparison, made by the witness or jury, with writings admitted or treated as genuine by the party against whom the evidence is offered, or proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the judge.

The Advisory Committee's Note to this illustration, supra 56 F.R.D. at 334, indicates that this illustration is not intended to require the judge to be satisfied with the genuineness of the specimen, insofar as a high standard of genuineness is required. Therefore, this illustration could provide a slight change to existing Montana law, although certainly it is not intended that specimens be used which are not genuine. It can be noted that Section 93-1101-15, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], has been interpreted by In Re Miller's Estate, 71 Mont. 330, 338, 229 P 851 (1924), so that "witness" means expert witness. The jury, as trier of fact, is free to accept or reject the opinion of an expert as to the genuineness of handwriting through comparison. Grosfield v. First Nat'l Bank, 73 Mont. 219, 239, 236 P 250 (1925). Also, Section 93-1101-16, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-108, now repealed], allows a comparison of handwriting using documents thirty years old and relied upon by persons having an interest as genuine.

Finally, note that evidence of ballistics is another means of authentication through comparison and that this type of evidence is admissible under existing Montana law. State v. Simon, 126 Mont. 218, 223, 247 P2d 481 (1952).

(4) Distinctive Characteristics and the Like.

This illustration is identical to the Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b)(4). This illustration allows a wide variety of circumstantial evidence to be introduced to show authenticity. This is consistent with existing Montana law. State v. Cooper, 161 Mont. 85, 91, 504 P2d 987 (1972). A good example of authentication of a writing by its contents is the reply letter doctrine, observed in Olsen v. Spoya, 129 Mont. 83, 92, 282 P2d 452 (1955), where the court stated:

While ordinarily a letter is not admissible in evidence without proof of its authenticity, a well-recognized exception to this rule is where a letter is received in due course of mail in reply to another communication proved to have been sent to the purported author of the letter sought to be introduced to be in evidence.

(5) Voice Identification.

This illustration is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b)(5). This illustration allows a witness to identify a voice based upon familiarity acquired at any time, whether before or after the speaker's voice is the subject of identification. Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 334. Existing Montana law is consistent with the illustration. In State v. Vanella, 40 Mont. 326, 339, 106 P 364 (1910), the court held that a witness may testify as to a person's identity from identification of his voice. Cases dealing with identification of person's voice on the telephone are covered in illustration (6). Although not dealing with the admissibility or authentication of tape recordings, State v. Warwick, 458 Mont. 531, 494 P2d 627 (1972), established foundational requirements for Montana which were followed in State v. Smith, 164 Mont. 334, 340, 523 P2d 395 (1974). Also, see Johnson v. Whitcombe, 149 Mont. 23, 27, 422 P2d 642 (1967).

(6) Telephone Conversations.

This illustration is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b)(6). The illustration contains two clauses, the first dealing with identification of a person and the second, identification of businesses. Both of the clauses within this illustration are consistent with existing Montana law. As to clause (A), in Wood v. Ferguson, 71 Mont. 540, 547, 230 P 592 (1924), the court allowed identification of a telephone call when the witness testified that a certain person's number was called and the person answering the telephone identified himself as that person. In Bingham v. Nat'l Bank of Montana, 105 Mont. 159, 175, 72 P2d 90 (1937), the court held testimony by the plaintiff identifying two other parties in a telephone conversation to be admissible when the witness testified that she was familiar with the voices of the speakers. Clause (B) of this illustration concerned with business calls is consistent with Ratliff v. the City of Great Falls, 132 Mont. 89, 94, 314 P2d 880 (1957) where the court stated:

The majority of the courts indulge the presumption or inference that a party called over the telephone who responds, as here, as purporting to answer for the office is, in fact, the person called, and that he is authorized to answer the call in the absence of a mistaken connection...and in the absence of proof of an officious intermeddler.

This court went on to hold sufficient identification of the telephone call made under the circumstances set out in the illustration.

(7) Public Records or Reports.

This illustration is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b)(7). The illustration provides the widely accepted method of authentication of public records and reports of certification that the writing was authorized by law to be recorded and in fact was recorded in a public office where such writings are kept. The illustration is consistent with existing Montana law, expressed in several statutes. Sections 93-1001-16, R.C.M. 1947 [1-1-202], and 93-1001-17, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provide for the admissibility of judicial records, the latter section allowing proof by the production through certification procedures as to the correctness of the copy by the Clerk of Court. Section 93-1001-31, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that any public record of a private writing may be proved either by the original or by a copy certified by the legal keeper of the record.

(8) Ancient Documents or Data Compilation.

This illustration is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b)(8). The illustration provides safeguards for the authenticity of this type of document which are slightly different than existing Montana law. Section 93-1301-7(34), R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-602(34), deleted from section by amendment], provides a rebuttable presumption that "a document more than thirty years old is genuine, when the same has been generally acted upon as genuine, by persons having an interest in the question, and its custody has been satisfactorily explained". Differences between this statute and the illustration are: first, the statute requires the document to be thirty years old, but the illustration only twenty; second, the statute requires the custody must be satisfactorily explained, but the illustration only in a place that is likely for a document to be kept if authentic; and third, the statute requires the document to be acted upon as genuine by persons having an interest, but the illustration only requires it to be of such a nature as to not create suspicion concerning authenticity. Therefore, this illustration represents a change in existing Montana law concerning the authentication of ancient documents.

(9) Process or System.

This illustration is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901(b)(9). The Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 335, indicates the illustration "is designed for situations in which the accuracy of a result is dependent upon a process or a system which produces it. X-rays afford a familiar instance. Among more recent developments is the computer..." Existing Montana law is generally consistent with the illustration. Section 32-2150.1, R.C.M. 1947 [61-8-702], states "the speed of any motor vehicle may be measured by the use of radio micro-waves or other electrical device. Results of such measurement shall be accepted as evidence...". There are also Montana cases dealing with the admissibility of x-rays, requiring a foundation as to the qualifications of the person taking the x-ray, the capabilities of the machine, as well as establishing that the x-rays are a fair representation of what they are intended to show. West v. Wilson, 90 Mont. 522, 528, 4 P2d 469 (1931) and Stokes v. Long 52 Mont. 407, 485, 159 P 28 (1916).

(10) Method Provided by Statute or Rule.

This illustration is similar to the Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 901 (b)(10), except that language used throughout these rules for the application of statutes, these rules, or other rules are used. The intent of this illustration is to make clear that other statutory methods or methods provided in Rules of Procedure for authentication are to be allowed. This is consistent with the language of the opening clause of this subdivision, for this list is only intended to be an example of some of the methods of authentication allowable. Therefore, this illustration is consistent with existing Montana law, for if a proponent of the evidence can cite a statute allowing a different method of authentication, then it should be allowed under this illustration. [Former] Rule 44(a), M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded], is an example of a Rule of Procedure providing a method of authentication.

Case Notes

Evidence Improperly Admitted — Lack of Authentication or Identification: The standing master admitted an exhibit consisting of billing statements, copies of checks, handwritten notes, and invoice listings provided by the prevailing party's attorneys. The losing party objected on the basis of insufficient foundation. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that the authentication was improper because the witness used to introduce the compilation had no personal knowledge of the truth or accuracy of the written statements of hourly charges, could not testify to the number of hours spent on the matter, and generally could not testify that the exhibit was what it purported to be. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings to determine the amount of the attorney fees. In re Marriage of Fossen, 2019 MT 119, 395 Mont. 495, 443 P.3d 418.

Lay Witness Testimony Regarding Handwriting Sample — Harmless Error: The defendant was charged with partner or family member assault. While in jail and under a "no contact" order, he wrote his wife five letters directing her to not testify against him and to lie about how she had been injured. The defendant was then charged with tampering with evidence. At trial, an officer who had not been disclosed as an expert was allowed to testify regarding the defendant's handwriting. On appeal, the defendant argued that the officer's authentication testimony constituted expert testimony and that the officer should therefore have been disclosed as an expert. The Supreme Court agreed but concluded that the error in this case was harmless, given that the defendant's handwriting was distinct. St. v. Forsythe, 2017 MT 61, 387 Mont. 52, 390 P.3d 945.

Abuse of Discretion in Admitting Report of Three Nontestifying Doctors: The admission of the report of a panel of three doctors without opportunity for cross-examination affected the outcome of the trial and affected a substantial right of the plaintiff, justifying a new trial. Reese v. Stanton, 2015 MT 293, 381 Mont. 241, 358 P.3d 208.

Medical Documents Provided in Discovery Not Authenticated: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank's predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the bank that she received this loan. However, the bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. On remand from the Supreme Court, the bank sought to introduce the plaintiff's medical records in the form of progress notes provided in discovery. The District Court held that the defendant did not lay a proper foundation and excluded the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed, ruling that documents provided in discovery do not contain an admission of authenticity. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Grant of Summary Judgment Improperly Based on Unsworn Documentation: The plaintiff was injured in a car accident and filed a lawsuit against the other driver's insurer to require it to pay him lost wages. In support of his motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff attached letters from his doctor but did not submit any affidavits. After the District Court granted the plaintiff summary judgment, the insurer appealed. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case. It agreed with the insurer that the District Court had erred in granting summary judgment by relying on unsworn letters that were not supported by a sworn statement. Alfson v. Allstate Property & Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 326, 372 Mont. 363, 313 P.3d 107.

Unauthenticated E-Mail Insufficient to Defeat Summary Judgment: The plaintiff claimed that the city of Billings violated his constitutional and statutory right to know based on a 4-month delay in providing public documents and an allegation that the city ultimately provided incomplete documents. The District Court determined the claim was moot since the documents were provided during the discovery process. On appeal, the Supreme Court upheld the District Court on evidentiary grounds instead of mootness, reasoning that an unauthenticated e-mail in support of the plaintiff's contention could not be used to defeat summary judgment. Albert v. Billings, 2012 MT 159, 365 Mont. 454, 282 P.3d 704, citing Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 Mont. 391, 15 P.3d 864, and PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, reversed on other grounds, PPL Mont., LLC v. Montana, 565 US ___, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

Admissibility of Archive and Historical Documents in Determining Navigability of Montana Rivers: In determining the historical navigability of the Missouri, Clark Fork, and Madison Rivers, the District Court accepted records from the state archives, state and federal studies of varying ages, and reports from old newspapers and books, including even the journals of Lewis and Clark. Plaintiff moved to strike the exhibits and attached affidavits on grounds of inadmissible hearsay. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly held that the state could lay a foundation at trial for the admission of the records either under exceptions to the hearsay rule or as ancient documents or data compilations. The District Court properly admitted the documents as historical evidence when applying the navigability for title test. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, reversed and remanded on other grounds in PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US 576, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

Harmless Error for Detective Nonexpert to Testify Regarding Genuineness of Handwriting: The District Court allowed a detective to testify in Dewitz's trial regarding handwriting samples that the detective believed were from Dewitz. However, the detective was not a handwriting expert and was not familiar with Dewitz's writing outside the litigation, so the testimony was improperly admitted. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court concluded that the error was harmless, based on the existence of other admissible evidence that proved the same facts. Thus, Dewitz's right to a fair trial was not prejudiced. St. v. Dewitz, 2009 MT 202, 351 M 182, 212 P3d 1040 (2009).

Patrol Car Video of Chase and Stop Properly Admitted: Cybulski contended that the trial court improperly admitted video from the patrol car involved in the pursuit of Cybulski's vehicle on the wrong side of an interstate highway. The last few minutes of the video had been erased, and Cybulski asserted that the erased portion would have shown that she was not intoxicated. The trial court determined that the erased portion would not have contained any exculpatory evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the video. The state did not present the video as anything other than a video of the chase and stop, and Cybulski thoroughly cross-examined the officer as to the reason the video stopped where it did and what occurred after the video stopped. St. v. Cybulski, 2009 MT 70, 349 M 429, 204 P3d 7 (2009).

Improper Extrinsic Evidence Delivered to Jury — Evidentiary Error Violative of Right to Confront Witnesses Warranting New Trial: At Parker's trial for assault with a weapon, the state introduced a tape of interviews with Parker's children containing the children's observations of the events in question. Unbeknownst to Parker, the tape also contained an interview with another party that implicated Parker. The tape was submitted to the jury during deliberations. Following conviction, Parker contended on appeal that the jury's exposure to the extrinsic evidence, which was never entered into evidence, violated Parker's right to confrontation. The Supreme Court agreed. The interview was of sufficient quality to prejudice Parker's defense and contribute to the conviction, so Parker's right to confront the witness against him was violated when the tape was delivered to the jury. The court remanded for a new trial. St. v. Parker, 2006 MT 258, 334 M 129, 144 P3d 831 (2006).

Taped Evidence Not Admitted at Trial Submitted to Jury — No Burden on Defendant to Object to Unknown Evidence: At Parker's trial for assault with a weapon, the state introduced a tape of interviews with Parker's children containing the children's observations of the events in question. Unbeknownst to Parker, the tape also contained an interview with another party that implicated

Parker. The tape was submitted to the jury during deliberations. Following conviction, Parker contended on appeal that the jury's exposure to the extrinsic evidence, which was never entered into evidence, violated Parker's right to confrontation. The state asserted that Parker failed to preserve the issue for direct appeal because Parker did not object to delivery of the tape to the jury, that Parker could not establish that the jury actually heard the unintroduced interview and should pursue the claim through postconviction proceedings, and that delivery of the interview to the jury was harmless error, cumulative to other admissible evidence, and did not contribute to Parker's conviction. The Supreme Court disagreed. Parker could not object to evidence that he did not know existed, and it was illogical to saddle Parker with the burden of proving prejudice. Rather, when extrinsic evidence reaches a jury, the burden of disproving prejudice rests with the state. Parker's appeal was properly before the Supreme Court, and the state's invitation to dismiss the claim was declined. St. v. Parker, 2006 MT 258, 334 M 129, 144 P3d 831 (2006), distinguished in St. v. Wing, 2008 MT 218, 344 M 243, 188 P3d 999 (2008).

Police Officer's Testimony Sufficient to Authenticate Photographs of Stabbing Victim to Warrant Admission Into Evidence: Notwithstanding the fundamental notion that a foundation is required for admission of photographs into evidence, there is no authority requiring that the photographer testify. Here, a police officer testified that the photographs in question were taken shortly after a stabbing victim arrived at the hospital and that the photographs were true and accurate depictions of the victim's wounds. The officer's testimony was sufficient to authenticate the photographs, and the trial court properly admitted the photographs into evidence. St. v. High Elk, 2006 MT 6, 330 M 259, 127 P3d 432 (2006), distinguishing St. v. Newman, 162 M 450, 513 P2d 258 (1973).

Impossible to Authenticate Altered Tape Recording — Inadmissibility Affirmed: Defendant in a partnership dispute attempted to introduce a tape recording that purported to show the intent of the other partner that defendant should receive a salary for managing the partnership property. The District Court disallowed the recording on grounds that it could not be authenticated because it had been altered. The Supreme Court affirmed. The standards for admissibility of a sound recording, as set out in St. v. Warwick, 158 M 531, 494 P2d 627 (1972), are: (1) a showing that the recording device was capable of taking testimony; (2) a showing that the operator of the device was competent; (3) establishment of authenticity and correctness of the recording; (4) a showing that changes, additions, or deletions have not been made; (5) a showing of the manner of preservation of the recording; and (6) identification of the speakers. Because the tape recording in this case was shown to have been altered so as to capture only certain phrases or sentences and because the original recording was not available, the recording could not be authenticated and was inadmissible under this rule. McCormick v. Brevig, 2004 MT 179, 322 M 112, 96 P3d 697 (2004).

File Fingerprints Considered Properly Authenticated Public Record: Part of DuBray's defense in a homicide trial was to cast suspicion on others for the crime, including Clark. During its investigation, the state compared fingerprints at the crime scene with various people, including Clark, and to refute DuBray's defense sought to introduce evidence of Clark's fingerprints on file with the County Sheriff. The trial court allowed the fingerprints into evidence, but DuBray objected on grounds that the fingerprints were not authenticated pursuant to this rule. The Supreme Court noted that under 44-5-202, the fingerprints were a public record and were thus properly authenticated, so admission of the fingerprints was not an abuse of discretion. St. v. DuBray, 2003 MT 255, 317 M 377, 77 P3d 247 (2003).

Chain of Custody — Sufficiency of Evidence Demonstrating Chain — Faulty Laboratory Procedure: Weeks was convicted of sexual intercourse without consent with his stepdaughter. The conviction was based in part upon serological DNA evidence gained from blood samples taken from Weeks, the stepdaughter, and a child of the stepdaughter. Weeks challenged the admissibility of the samples because one of the samples was mistakenly sent to another laboratory before being forwarded to the correct laboratory and because when a sample of blood was taken from him, the person marking the sample did not follow the requirements of the laboratory manual. Citing St. v. Bradley, 262 M 194, 864 P2d 787 (1993), the Supreme Court held that the state's evidence as to the chain of custody was sufficient even though the blood sample was inadvertently sent to the wrong laboratory. The Supreme Court also held that although the laboratory manual was not complied with, there was sufficient evidence to prove that the sample of blood tested by the laboratory was the blood that was taken from Weeks. St. v. Weeks, 270 M 63, 891 P2d 477, 52 St. Rep. 78 (1995), followed in St. v. Bowser, 2005 MT 279, 329 M 218, 123 P3d 230 (2005).

Chain of Custody — Drugs Under Official Seal: Briner contended that two packets of methamphetamine he allegedly sold were improperly admitted into evidence because there were several fatal gaps in the chain of custody. The state did not offer testimony from the person who mailed the packets from the Sheriff's office to the state crime lab for testing, the person who received them at the crime lab and mailed them back to the Sheriff, or the person at the Sheriff's office who received them from the crime lab and returned them to the evidence locker. However, the time periods in question were after the drugs were in official custody and under seal, and Briner showed no evidence to overcome the resulting presumption that there was no tampering with the drugs. St. v. Briner, 253 M 158, 831 P2d 1365, 49 St. Rep. 402 (1992).

Lack of Testimony That Letter Arrived Inside Envelope — Letter Inadmissible: Defendant sought to introduce into evidence a letter to his wife dated December 1987 and signed by him and an envelope postmarked December 22, 1987, at Redding, California, that would have established that he was out of state for about a month. His mother-in-law testified that she picked up the mail, including the envelope, before Christmas 1987, but she could not testify that the letter was in the envelope because she did not read her daughter's mail. The wife did not testify at trial. Absent testimony that the letter arrived in the envelope, the letter and envelope were inadmissible because there was no evidence that they were what defendant claimed. St. v. West, 245 M 298, 800 P2d 1047, 47 St. Rep. 2129 (1990).

Proper Foundation Laid for Admission of Audit Materials and Results: A municipal auditor conducted an examination of a City Judge's records, accounts, and reports and discovered discrepancies in money collected and accounted for from tickets. The plaintiff city properly laid the foundation under subsection (b)(7) of this rule for admission of the tickets, a synopsis of the information contained in the tickets, and an examination report prepared by the auditor. Fairview v. Deming, 238 M 496, 778 P2d 876, 46 St. Rep. 1446 (1989).

Difference Between Weapon Described in Search Warrant and Weapon Seized — Insufficient to Deny Admissibility: Defendant contended the weapon described in a search warrant was not what its proponent claimed and did not bear distinctive characteristics or some form of identification required for admissibility under Rule 901(b)(4), M.R.Ev. However, defendant lacked standing to challenge seizure of the weapon, obtained pursuant to a valid search warrant, because he did not demonstrate a property or possessory interest in the apartment searched or in the weapon seized. Further, the weapon was sufficiently identified by testimony, and differences between the weapon described and the weapon seized were not adequate to deny admission into evidence. St. v. Powers, 233 M 54, 758 P2d 761, 45 St. Rep. 1286 (1988).

Admission of Nonexpert Opinion on Handwriting — Familiarity With Writing: Bank officer was permitted to give testimony regarding defendant's signature in criminal trial charging defendant with issuing bad checks. The court held that under this rule of evidence a nonexpert may give his opinion of the genuineness of handwriting if he is familiar with that handwriting. St. v. Fleming, 225 M 48, 730 P2d 1178, 44 St. Rep. 31 (1987).

Chain of Custody Applicable After Acquisition: Defendant was convicted of conspiracy to commit sale of dangerous drugs (now criminal distribution of dangerous drugs) after his son-in-law was apprehended in Texas with marijuana grown on defendant's premises in McCone County. Defendant contended that the state was required to account for the seized marijuana at all times prior to its seizure by law enforcement officials. The chain of custody rule does not require the police or prosecutors to account for the possession of evidence before it comes into their hands. A continuous chain of possession must be established after acquisition of the evidence. If the defendant claims the evidence was tampered with before the prosecution acquired it, he has the burden to show affirmatively that tampering took place. St. v. Walton, 222 M 340, 722 P2d 1145, 43 St. Rep. 1312 (1986), followed in St. v. Conrad, 241 M 1, 785 P2d 185, 47 St. Rep. 32 (1990), and St. v. Southern, 1999 MT 94, 294 M 225, 980 P2d 3, 56 St. Rep. 395 (1999).

Prima Facie Case Showing No Substantial Change in Evidence — Attack of Chain of Evidence at Trial: Defendant questioned whether evidence was properly admitted without the state's establishing a proper chain of evidence. Extensive testimony chronicled the labeling, storing, securing, transferring of possession, and testing of each exhibit. The state made a prima facie case showing that there had been no substantial change in the evidence, and defendant failed to produce any evidence to show if actual or even potential tampering could have occurred. Additionally, defendant vigorously attacked the chain of evidence at trial; thus, the jury had an opportunity to weigh this evidence. The Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion in admitting the evidence. St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986), followed in St. v. Evans, 247 M 218, 806 P2d 512, 48 St. Rep. 170 (1991).

Failure to Object at Trial: In a condemnation action, a landowner objected to the admission of two Highway Department (now Department of Transportation) exhibits on the grounds that the landowner did not believe the exhibits were official records. On appeal, the landowner objected on the basis of lack of foundation. Supreme Court found no error in the admission of the documents and ruled that a party complaining of error must stand or fall on the grounds relied on by the trial court. St. v. DeTienne, 218 M 249, 707 P2d 534, 42 St. Rep. 1557 (1985).

Ready Identification of Evidence — Proper Foundation Laid: In a prosecution of felony theft, although the items are not shown to be in the "chain of custody" for the entire period during which they were stolen, they are uniquely marked and readily identifiable by their owner. Thus, the "chain of custody" is not a foundational prerequisite for their admission in evidence. When introducing a readily identifiable piece of evidence, the foundation is complete if the witness testifies he previously observed the characteristic and presently recalls the characteristic. Only when the item of evidence is so commonplace as to be undistinguishable or not unique is it necessary to lay a chain of custody foundation. St. v. Fox, 212 M 488, 689 P2d 252, 41 St. Rep. 1884 (1984).

Chain of Evidence — Bicycle Ridden by Motor Vehicle Homicide Victims: Defendant purposely hit and killed, with auto he was driving, two persons riding a bicycle. Testimony indicated that investigating officer picked up the bicycle at the scene and that it appeared to be in reasonably the same condition at trial as it was in when he picked it up. There was no indication at trial that it had been tampered with or was in worse condition than when officer picked it up. It was properly admitted in evidence over objection that there was insufficient evidence that it was in the same condition at trial as it was at the scene of the incident and that no chain of evidence establishing to whom it belonged and its condition prior to and after the incident was shown. St. v. Woods, 203 M 401, 662 P2d 579, 40 St. Rep. 533 (1983).

Marked Photograph and Changed Angle of Photographed Door — Evidence Properly Admitted: Where the defendant fired a rifle through a door in his home and was later tried and convicted of aggravated assault on two police officers, the District Court did not err in admitting into evidence photographs on which the bullet holes and shell casings had been circled and a photograph depicting the door open farther than it had been at the time of the incident. The District Courts have wide discretion in admitting photographs. There was no prejudice shown to the defendant by the admittance of the two photographs. St. v. Warnick, 202 M 120, 656 P2d 190, 39 St. Rep. 2369 (1982).

Chain of Evidence — Burden of Proof: The State must identify the particular exhibit as relevant to the criminal charge and must show prima facie that no alteration or tampering with the exhibit has occurred. Once that has been done, the burden of proving alteration shifts to appellant. St. v. Austad, 197 M 70, 641 P2d 1373, 39 St. Rep. 356 (1982).

Chain of Custody of Evidence — Blood Alcohol Test:

Rumley appealed his conviction for negligent homicide. He argued that the court erred in admitting the results of a blood alcohol test because of a break in the chain of possession of the blood sample. He argued that because the police officer did not see the blood sample being drawn, the chain of possession was broken. There was testimony that the police officer gave a vial to a nurse who testified that she drew the blood sample, placed it in the vial, and returned it to the police officer. In light of that testimony, Rumley's claim lacks merit. The State's burden in establishing the chain of custody requires only that the evidence be identified and show prima facie that there has been no substantial change. In this case, the State satisfied its burden. St. v. Rumley, 194 M 506, 634 P2d 446, 38 St. Rep. 1351A (1981).

Blood alcohol test results were admissible in evidence even though there was a discrepancy as to the blood sample seal number, there was a 3-day delay between taking of the sample and its arrival in Helena for analysis, and the sample was left on a desk in the Sheriff's office overnight and no testimony was given as to the overnight period. St. v. Nelson, 178 M 280, 583 P2d 435, 35 St. Rep. 1337 (1978).

Photograph of Rape Victim Held Admissible: Where the defendant was charged with sexual intercourse without consent and offered the defense of consent by the prosecutrix, the trial court did not err in admitting into evidence a photograph depicting linear abrasions or scratches on the victim's back. The longstanding rule in Montana is that a photograph is admissible if it fairly and accurately represents relevant evidence, and it is within the discretion of the trial court to allow into evidence duly verified photographs to aid the jury in factfinding. The prosecution presented a sufficient foundation through the testimony of the nurse who took the pictures. St. v. Mackie, 191 M 138, 622 P2d 673, 38 St. Rep. 86 (1981), cited in St. v. Grant, 221 M 122, 717 P2d 562, 43 St. Rep. 685 (1986).

Chain of Custody — Adequacy of Foundation Left to Discretion of District Court: Armstrong contends that the State must show a complete chain of custody from the time of the homicide until the introduction into evidence and that if a link in the chain is missing, the exhibit may not be admitted. On appeal, the Supreme Court said that the adequacy of the foundation for admission of such evidence is within the District Court's discretion, and the District Court's determination will not be reversed absent a clear abuse of discretion. The State established a complete chain of custody from the time the evidence was found until it was introduced, and that is sufficient. St. v. Armstrong, 189 M 407, 616 P2d 341, 37 St. Rep. 1563 (1980), followed in St. v. Fox, 212 M 488, 689 P2d 252, 41 St. Rep. 1884 (1984), and in St. v. Christenson, 250 M 351, 820 P2d 1303, 48 St. Rep. 1034 (1991).

Chain of Custody — Evidence Tampering — Burden of Proof: Testimony established prima facie that no one tampered with the evidence while it was in police custody. Once this was shown, the burden of proving tampering shifted to the defendant. The fact that the FBI found no blood on the boots when they were initially examined does not mean that there was no blood on them. It merely means that the FBI did not find the blood in the first instance. This is not proof of tampering while in police custody. St. v. Armstrong, 189 M 407, 616 P2d 341, 37 St. Rep. 1563 (1980).

Admissibility of Phone Conversation — Voice Identification: Defendant, charged with mitigated deliberate homicide, alleged as error the admission of evidence overheard on an open telephone line because there was no proper authentication as a condition precedent to admissibility. It was argued that there is no inherent reliability to the evidence that the speaker who identified himself to a police officer over the phone was in fact the defendant. The court found that the fact that the deputy was not familiar with the defendant's voice went to the weight, not the admissibility of the testimony. Corroboration of a statement of identity by the caller sufficient to render the conversation admissible against him may be supplied by the evidence: (1) that the subject matter of the call revealed that only the named party would likely have knowledge of those conversation facts; or (2) of other confirming circumstances which make it probable that the named person was, in fact, the speaker. Circumstances preceding or following a telephone conversation may serve to identify the caller sufficiently so as to render telephone communication admissible. The contention that the evidence of the conversation should have been excluded because it did not fall within Rule 901(b)(6), M.R.Ev., is erroneous also, because the conditions stated therein are examples only. St. v. Hamilton, 185 M 522, 605 P2d 1121, 37 St. Rep. 70 (1980).

Admissibility of Voice Identification — Prior Familiarity With Voice: The court adopted the rationale of U.S. v. Vitale, 549 F2d 71 (8th Cir. 1977), certiorari denied, Vitale v. U.S., 431 US 907, 52 L ED 2d 393, 97 S Ct 1704 (1977), which allowed evidence of a voice identification although the witness had never heard the voice prior to the event testified to, and denied defendant's proposition that voice identification evidence is only admissible when the witness has a familiarity with the voice from hearing it at some time prior to the event testified to, or where the voice has some peculiarity or distinctive quality. St. v. Pendergrass, 179 M 106, 586 P2d 691, 35 St. Rep. 1512 (1978).

Rule 902. Self-authentication.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902 except for changes in paragraphs (2), (4), and (10) which are explained in the Commission Comments for those paragraphs. The Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 902, 56 F.R.D. 183, 337 (1972), indicates that cases and statutes have established a substantial number of instances:

...in which authenticity is taken as sufficiently established for purposes of admissibility without extrinsic evidence to that effect, sometimes for reasons of policy, perhaps more often because practical considerations reduce the possibility of unauthenticity to a very small dimension.

It also notes that while the rule collects these situations in some instances expanding the rules, "in no instance is the opposite party foreclosed from disputing authenticity". Id. This rule changes existing Montana law to the extent that there is no provision which encompasses as much as Federal Rule 902.

(1) Domestic Public Documents Under Seal. This paragraph is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902(1). It is based on Rule 44(a)(1) of the Federal and Montana Rules of Civil Procedure. However, that rule of Civil Procedure deals only with proof of official records, not documents under seal. Broad jurisdictional language is common to each provision. The paragraph is consistent with existing Montana law in that it is based upon [former] Rule 44(a)(1), M.R.Civ.P. [now superseded]. There are also several statutes which deal with public documents under seal: Section 93-1001-17, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides for the admissibility of judicial records under the seal of the Clerk of Court. Section 93-1101-30 [sic, 93-1001-30], R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides in four of its nine subdivisions for the admissibility of official documents as follows: Subdivision 1, acts of the executive office by the records of the state departments of the states and United States, certified by the Secretary of State; Subdivision 5, acts of a municipal corporation by a certified copy of the legal keeper; Subdivision 6, documents of any other class in this state certified by the legal keeper; and Subdivision 9, documents in the departments of the United States government certified by their legal keeper. Sections 93-1001-33, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and 93-1001-34, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provide for the admissibility of records of the Justices of the Peace of other states under certificate of authenticity. Section 93-1001-35, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides for other official documents to be admissible under certificate and official seal, and Section 93-1001-36, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], applies the provisions of the preceding sections to public writings of sister states or public writings of the United States.

(2) Domestic Public Documents Not Under Seal. This paragraph is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902(2), except that the phrase "except as otherwise provided by statute", is added so that the paragraph will be consistent with Montana law. This provision requires that in order for a domestic public document to be self-authenticating, if signed by an officer or employee of the entity included in Paragraph (1) having no seal, then a public officer having a seal with official duties in the same district or political subdivision as the signer must certify and place under seal the former's signature. There are Montana statutes which allow signatures of documents to be presumptive or prima facie genuine or authentic, without the necessity of an officer with a seal certifying its genuineness; for example, Section 4-218, R.C.M. 1947 [16-6-207], which allows an analyst's report and signature to be prima facie evidence of the contents of the report without proof of the appointment of the person or evidence as to the genuineness of his signature. Therefore, in order to be consistent with provisions like this, the paragraph was changed by the addition of the clause.

(3) Foreign Public Documents. This paragraph is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902(3). It is based upon Rule 44(a)(2) of the Federal and Montana Rules of Civil Procedure, but is broader in that it applies to public documents rather than to public records. The paragraph is therefore a slight expansion of existing Montana law. There are several statutes which also allow the admissibility of foreign public documents: Section 93-1001-13, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], allows evidence of foreign written laws or other public writings; Sections 93-1001-18, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and 93-1001-19, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provide for the methods of authentication of a judicial record of a foreign country; Section 93-1001-30(4), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides for the admissibility of the acts of the executive of proceedings of the legislature of a foreign country by records under seal; and Section 93-1001-30(8), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides for the documents of any other class of a foreign country to be admissible under the seal of the country.

(4) Certified Copies of Public Records. This paragraph is identical to Uniform Rule (1974) 902(4), which changes Federal Rule 902(4) in the last clause of the paragraph in order to be appropriate for state jurisdictions. This paragraph intended to allow copies of official records or reports to be admissible if properly certified and authorized to be recorded or filed in a public office where any copy of a document complying with Paragraph (1), (2), or (3) or any law of the United States or of this State. This is consistent with existing Montana law which has several statutory provisions for the admissibility of certified copies. Section 93-1001-30(5), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides for the admissibility of acts of a municipal corporation or a board or department by a certified copy of the legal keeper of a record thereof; Section 93-1001-30(6), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides for documents of any class if certified by the legal keeper; Section 93-1001-30(7), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], for documents of any other class of a sister state if duly certified by the officer having legal custody of the original; Section 93-1001-30(9), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], for documents in the department of the United States government by a certificate of the legal custodian. Section 93-1001-35, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides for proof of contents of a copy of the writing by a certificate of correctness by the legal keeper. Finally, Section 93-1101-21, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that certified copies of records are admissible as evidence without further proof when certified and filed or recorded in the county clerk's office.

(5) Official Publications. This paragraph is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902(5), which allows any book, pamphlet, or other publication issued by a public authority to be considered as self-authenticated. This is consistent with many Montana statutes on this subject. Section 93-1101-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that books containing laws of a foreign country or a sister state are to be presumed correct. The provisions of Section 93-1001-30(1), (2), and (3), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provide that acts of the executives of this state or the United States, the proceedings of the legislative assembly of this state or Congress or of the executive or legislatures of sister states may be proven by official publication of those acts or proceedings. Section 93-1301-7(35), R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-602], provides the rebuttal presumption "that a printed and published book, purporting to be printed or published by a public authority, was so printed and published".

(6) Newspapers and Periodicals. This paragraph is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902(6). The Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 338, indicates that the likelihood of forgery is slight enough that no danger is apparent in receiving this type of writing. However, it also indicates "establishing the authenticity of the publication, may, of course, leave still open questions of authority and responsibility for items therein contained". Id. This paragraph changes existing Montana law. Section 63-605, R.C.M. 1947 [35-11-202], provides that publication of the name of a partnership is presumptive evidence of the fact stated therein only if there is an affidavit from the printer or publisher of the newspaper. The same provision is found in Section 93-1701-2, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-1011], concerning publication of notice as required by law. It can also be noted that in Harvey v. Townsend, 57 Mont. 407, 412, 188 P 897 (1920), the court held that a newspaper article was not sufficient evidence that a notice was published unless there was an affidavit of the publisher.

(7) Trade Inscriptions and the Like. This paragraph is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902(7). The Advisory Committee Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 339, indicates that there are several factors justifying self-authentication of this type of writing: "The risk of forgery is minimal. Trade mark infringement involves serious penalties. Great efforts are devoted to inducing the public to buy in reliance on brand names, and substantial protection is given them". It also cites Section 46-606, R.C.M. 1947 [81-3-105], which provides that a copy of the recorded brand is prima facie evidence of the right to exclusive use of the brand. However, Montana cases are not consistent with this exception. In Ashley v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 100 Mont. 312, 323, 47 P2d 53 (1935), on the issue of whether or not the driver of a truck was the agent of the Safeway Company, the Court held that the fact that the name of the Safeway Company appeared on the side of the truck did no more than to create an inference that Safeway was the owner of the truck. To the same effect is Monaghan v. Standard Motor Co., 96 Mont. 165, 173, 29 P2d 378 (1934), except that the defendant's name appearing on the truck, taken with other circumstances, raised a presumption that the driver was acting within the scope of his employment. To the extent that this paragraph allows a presumption of authenticity without further proof, these cases are superseded. (8) Acknowledged Documents. This paragraph is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902(8). This simply establishes that an acknowledged document is self-authenticating, in accord with existing Montana law. Section 93-1101-19, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that all private writings, except last wills and testaments, which are acknowledged in the manner provided for acknowledgment of proof of conveyances of real property are prima facie evidence of the execution of the writing. The section providing for acknowledgments of real property is 93-1101-21, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], which provides that those instruments when acknowledged may be read into evidence without further proof. It should be noted that Angell v. Lewistown State Bank, 72 Mont. 345, 353, 232 P 90 (1925), held that sections relating to proof of private writings, 93-1101-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and the previously cited sections, did not dispense with the requirement the attesting witness testify as to the execution of the document. However, the interpretation of those sections was dependent upon the existence of what was then Section 10589, R.C.M. 1921, which was subsequently repealed in order to overturn the decision. Finally, as to last wills and testaments, note that Section 91A-2-504, R.C.M. 1947 [72-2-524], provides for a self-proved will, and that the testator and subscribing witnesses execute the will before a notary public so that the will may be admitted to probate under Section 91A-3-406, R.C.M. 1947 [72-3-309, now repealed], without proof of proper execution.

(9) Commercial Paper and Related Documents. This paragraph is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 902(9). The Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 339, indicates that despite use of the phrase "general commercial law", it intends certain provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code to be included under this paragraph. Those sections as enacted in Montana are Section 87A-1-202, R.C.M. 1947 [30-1-202], concerned with the genuineness of documents required under an existing contract; Section 87A-3-307, R.C.M. 1947 [30-3-307], concerned with the genuineness of signatures on negotiable instruments; Section 87A-3-510, R.C.M. 1947 [30-3-510], concerned with the admissibility of formed certificates of protest and stamped by the drawee that payment was refused, or bank records as a presumption of dishonor; and Section 87A-8-105(2), R.C.M. 1947 [30-8-105, now repealed], concerning a presumption as to the genuineness of signatures on negotiable instruments. (10) Presumption Created by Law. This paragraph is identical to Uniform Rule (1974) 902(10). It is an equivalent to Federal Rule 902(10) except that it applies to Montana law, not just Federal law. The paragraph simply incorporates those statutes which allow a document, signature, or other matter to be presumptively or prima facie genuine or authentic. Some examples of statutes allowing this are: Section 7-104, R.C.M. 1947 [32-2-203, now repealed and content reorganized in Title 32, chapter 2, part 8], providing that evidence of the existence of a building and loan association may be proved prima facie by the certificate issued under state law; Section 62-203(2), R.C.M. 1947 [7-16-4210, now repealed], the minutes of a local board of park commissioners are prima facie evidence of the matters and things contained therein; Section 79-105, R.C.M. 1947 [17-4-103], a report of the state auditor as to accounts of money or personal property belonging to the state is prima facie evidence of the things therein stated; Section 87A-1-202, R.C.M. 1947 [30-1-202], documents required or authorized by contract listed in the section are prima facie evidence of their own authenticity and genuineness; Section 93-1001-12, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-603], books containing laws are presumed to be correct; Section 93-1001-32, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-605], entries in official books or records are prima facie evidence of their contents; Section 93-1001-17, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], entries in certain writings or other private writings of a decedent are prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein; and Section 93-1701-3, R.C.M. 1947 [26-1-1012], certified affidavits of publication are prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein. For other examples of these statutes, see Appendix, Table E [found at compiler's comments for this rule].

Table E: Table E, prepared by the Montana Supreme Court Commission on Rules of Evidence in 1977 as a supplement to Rule 902(10) is as follows:

TABLE E

LIST OF STATUTES ALLOWING DOCUMENTS, SIGNATURES, OR OTHER MATTER TO BE PRESUMPTIVELY OR PRIMA FACIE GENUINE OR AUTHENTIC

Rule 902 of the Montana Rules of Evidence allows certain documents and writings to be admissible without extrinsic evidence of their genuineness or authenticity because the nature of the document or writing is such that lack of genuineness or authenticity is very unlikely. Paragraph (10) of this self-authentication rule is intended to incorporate statutes declaring a document, signature or other matter presumptively or prima facie authentic or genuine; that is, statutes having the same effect as the other paragraphs in Rule 902.

There are several statutes declaring presumptions of authenticity or genuineness, and these are included in this Table. However, there are 260 references in 197 sections of the Revised Codes of Montana, 1947, to the words prima or prima facie. Many of these sections are not concerned with genuineness or authenticity; many allow documents containing certain matters to be prima facie evidence of the existence of those matters, and many allow certain documents and writings to be prima facie evidence of their contents. Because of difficulty in interpretation of these statutes, only the following types are included in this Table: those admitting documents, signatures or other matters as prima facie genuine or authentic; those admitting documents or writings as prima facie evidence of certain facts contained in those documents or writings where there is little contained in them other than those particular facts; and those admitting documents or writings as prima facie evidence of their contents.

This is not intended to be an exclusive list of those statutes qualifying under Rule 902(10), but only a research guide to Montana judges and lawyers. Therefore, the Table is not an authority for whether or not a particular statute admits evidence through self-authentication. All sections are from Revised Codes of Montana, 1947 [M.C.A. references follow in brackets].

Section 3-714(2) [80-3-512, now repealed] states that copies of records, inspection certificates, certified reports and all papers on file with the department of agriculture are prima facie evidence of matters contained therein in the enforcement of the Warehousemen's Act.

Section 3-1727(2) [80-10-303] states that certified copies of the analysis of composition of fertilizer are prima facie evidence of the composition of that fertilizer in the regulation of sale of commercial fertilizer.

Section 3-3307(2) [80-3-608, now repealed] states that copies of records, inspection certificates, certified reports and all papers on file with the department of agriculture are prima facie evidence of matters contained therein in the regulation of produce wholesalers.

Section 4-6-307 [6-6-207] states that in the enforcement of the Liquor Control Act, an analyst's report is prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein.

Section 5-1112 [32-1-532] states that an affidavit of service is prima facie evidence of service of the rejection of a claim or acceptance of a lower priority claim in proceedings liquidating banks.

Section 7-103 [32-2-202, now repealed and content reorganized in Title 32, chapter 2, part 8] states that a certified copy of the articles of incorporation of a building and loan association is prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein.

Section 7-104 [32-2-203, now repealed and content reorganized in Title 32, chapter 2, part 8] states that certificates issued to building and loan associations are prima facie evidence of the existence of that association and its capacity to do business.

Section 11-2006 [7-33-2315] states that certificates of membership issued by the secretary of a regularly organized fire department are prima facie evidence of the facts stated therein.

Section 11-3508 [7-3-1317] states that a record of surety bonds and securities for city or town bonds are prima facie evidence of the contents and tenor thereof.

Section 14-408(g) [35-17-202] states that articles of incorporation of marketing cooperatives are prima facie evidence of the facts contained therein.

Section 15-2024(7) [30-10-107] states that certified copies of documents and public records or entries registered by investment commissioners are prima facie evidence of their contents under the Securities Act of Montana.

Case Notes

Government Weather Report Deemed Self-Authenticating Public Record — Hearsay Exception — Personal Knowledge of Witness Not Required: The District Court did not err when it admitted a U.S. Department of Commerce weather report into evidence while the defendant was questioning a plaintiffs' witness despite the fact that the plaintiffs' witness was not an expert and despite the plaintiffs' objections. The weather report at issue satisfied Rule 902, M.R.Ev. (Title 26, ch. 10), requirements because it was certified by the custodian of public records. The report also satisfied the public records hearsay exception under Rule 803, M.R.Ev. Lastly, the plaintiffs' witness was not testifying as an expert about the amount of snowfall. As a self-authenticating document, the report gave that information and did not need further foundation or personal knowledge of the weather report. Nolan v. Billings Clinic, 2020 MT 167, 400 Mont. 326, 467 P.3d 545.

Motor Vehicle Records Admitted as Business Records — No Abuse of Discretion: Stamped language on letters sent by the Motor Vehicle Division (MVD) to the defendants notifying them of their license suspensions stated that the sender testified the letter was sent to the person at the person's last address on a specific date. The District Court admitted the letters as administratively created contemporaneous business records over the defendants' objections that the letters were testimonial hearsay created to prove a fact at trial. The defendants appealed, claiming the letters were the only evidence that each defendant had a culpable mental state. However, the Supreme Court affirmed, holding that 61-5-212 imposed absolute liability on defendants and therefore, although the District Court reached the correct result for the wrong reason, it did not err. Because of the plain language of Rule 902(4), M.R.Ev., the record-keeping requirements of the MVD, and the unreasonability of an MVD representative having to be present every time a driving record was necessary for trial, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in admitting the letters. Kalispell v. Omyer, 2016 MT 63, 383 Mont. 19, 368 P.3d 1165.

Medical Records Require Proper Foundation — No Manifest Abuse of Discretion: It was not a manifest abuse of discretion for the District Court to prohibit the defendant employer from using statements contained in medical records to impeach the plaintiff employee about injuries to his back given: (1) denial by the plaintiff of the accuracy of the medical records; (2) lack of foundation demonstrating authenticity; and (3) no change in the doctor's opinion regarding the injury upon being advised of weightlifting references in the medical records. Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115.

Admissibility of Archive and Historical Documents in Determining Navigability of Montana Rivers: In determining the historical navigability of the Missouri, Clark Fork, and Madison Rivers, the District Court accepted records from the state archives, state and federal studies of varying ages, and reports from old newspapers and books, including even the journals of Lewis and Clark. Plaintiff moved to strike the exhibits and attached affidavits on grounds of inadmissible hearsay. The motion was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The District Court correctly held that the state could lay a foundation at trial for the admission of the records either under exceptions to the hearsay rule or as ancient documents or data compilations. The District Court properly admitted the documents as historical evidence when applying the navigability for title test. PPL Mont., LLC v. St., 2010 MT 64, 355 Mont. 402, 229 P.3d 421, reversed and remanded on other grounds in PPL Montana, LLC v. Montana, 565 US 576, 132 S Ct 1215 (2012).

Failure to Satisfy Evidentiary and Foundational Requirements for Admission of Documents — Summary Judgment Reversed: After Phillip Smith was killed at a railroad crossing, his daughter filed a wrongful death and survival action against the railroad. The District Court accepted affidavits and records from railroad and state officials indicating that federal funds had been used to install double reflectorized crossbucks at the crossing and held that pursuant to Norfolk S. Ry. Co. v. Shanklin, 529 US 344 (2000), in which the U.S. Supreme Court held that state law tort claims are preempted when federal funds are used to install warning devices at railroad crossings, the preemption clause of the Federal Railroad Safety Act of 1970 (FRSA), 49 U.S.C. 20106 (1994), preempted the wrongful death claim in this case. Therefore, summary judgment was granted for the railroad, and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court reversed on grounds that the affiants did not have personal knowledge that federal funds were used to install safety measures at the crossing and could not testify as to the authenticity of some of the documents, and because the railroad did not establish a foundation for the documents under the public and business records exception to the hearsay rule, the unauthenticated documents could not be used to support a summary judgment motion. Thus, the railroad did not meet the evidentiary requirements for summary judgment, so the case was remanded for further proceedings. Smith v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 225, 344 M 278, 187 P3d 639 (2008). See also Disler v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 2000 MT 304, 302 M 391, 15 P3d 864 (2000), and Hiebert v. Cascade County, 2002 MT 233, 311 M 471, 56 P3d 848 (2002), followed with regard to introduction of hearsay evidence in Apple Park, L.L.C. v. Apple Park Condominiums, L.L.C., 2008 MT 284, 345 M 359, 192 P3d 232 (2008).

Foreign Medical Reports Not Considered Self-Authenticating Public Documents: In an employment discrimination case, Pannoni sought to introduce written medical reports in letter form that contained observational information and opinions regarding Pannoni's medical condition and ability to return to work. The letters were accompanied by written certification that the reports had been prepared as part of a Canadian mental health center's regularly conducted business. Pannoni contended that the records were self-authenticating documents under the authentication procedure for foreign public documents in this rule. The Supreme Court disagreed. Under Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401 (1988), hospital records and medical reports are ordinarily not documents that are self-authenticating and are not considered business records, and even though the reports were from Canada, they were not public documents of a foreign country as contemplated in this rule. Further, the medical expert who authored the reports was not called as a witness, did not give sworn testimony, and was not subject to cross-examination. Thus, the unsworn medical reports were not subject to any hearsay exception and constituted inadmissible hearsay. Pannoni v. Browning School District No. 9 Bd. of Trustees, 2004 MT 130, 321 M 311, 90 P3d 438 (2004), followed in St. v. Baze, 2011 MT 52, 359 Mont. 411, 251 P.3d 122.

Admissibility of Government Pamphlets on Alcohol Consumption — Hearsay Exception: In a DUI trial, Department of Justice pamphlets relating to alcohol consumption were admitted in evidence for the limited purpose of showing that they were Department publications. The judge admonished the jury that the pamphlets were not admitted for their accuracy or truth. Defendant argued that they should have been admitted for their content, truth, and accuracy under the public records exception to the hearsay rule. Defendant failed to lay a proper foundation for admission under that exception because he did not show that the pamphlets were derived from the Department's regularly conducted and recorded activities, were published as a result of a duty imposed on the Department by law, or were the result of an investigation made under authority of law. St. v. Thompson, 237 M 384, 773 P2d 722, 46 St. Rep. 887 (1989).

Admissibility of Certified Abstract of Driving History and Copy of Suspension Notification Letter: Once certified as set out in 61-11-102(6), the authenticity of motor vehicle license information is established for purposes of admissibility without extrinsic evidence. Therefore, a certified abstract of driving history was admissible as was a certified copy of a suspension notification letter, which fell within the class of self-authenticating documents under this rule, the public document exception to the hearsay rule under Rule 803, M.R.Ev., and the requirements of the best evidence rule under Rule 1005, M.R.Ev. Taken together, this evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for driving with a suspended license. Billings v. Lindell, 236 M 519, 771 P2d 134, 46 St. Rep. 557 (1989).

Authentication of Records by Stipulation — Hearsay Exception: The District Court admitted certain hospital and ambulance records as business records exceptions to the hearsay rule. Ordinarily such documents would not be self-authenticating; however, the defense stipulated to the authenticity of the records and agreed there was no need to call a medical librarian. Admissibility was affirmed because the defense was unable to identify any specific portion of the records as inaccurate. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

Rule 903. Subscribing witness' testimony unnecessary.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 903. The rule simply provides that the subscribing witness to a writing need not testify in order to authenticate the writing, unless specifically required by law in the jurisdiction governing the validity of the writing. This is consistent with existing Montana law. The Commission Comments to Rule 902(8) indicates that Section 93-1101-12(3), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that a subscribing witness may authenticate a writing, but Sections 93-1101-19, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and 93-1101-21, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provide that acknowledged writings, other than wills, are admissible without further proof. That Comment also indicates that Angell v. Lewistown State Bank, 72 Mont. 345, 353, 232 P 90 (1925), holding the subscribing witness' testimony necessary because of these sections and Section 10589, R.C.M. 1921, has been overruled by the repeal of Section 10589, R.C.M. 1921. The necessity of subscribing witness' testimony concerning wills and last testaments is governed by the Montana Uniform Probate Code, providing in Section 91A-3-303(3), R.C.M. 1947 [72-3-213], that attesting witnesses need not testify in informal probate procedures and providing in Section 91A-3-406, R.C.M. 1947 [72-3-309, now repealed], that attesting witnesses need testify only when the will is not self-proved in formal probate procedures. The language of the rule allows this statutory requirement to be fulfilled by reference to such laws.

Article X Contents of Writings, Recordings, and Photographs

Article Case Notes

Denial of Request to Replay Audio Recordings — No Abuse of Discretion: A Municipal Court did not abuse its discretion by refusing to allow the defendant to replay certain recordings after the prosecution had already played them and entered them into evidence. The defendant was free to refer to statements made in the recordings, but replaying them repeatedly would have served only to slow the proceedings. Billings v. Nelson, 2014 MT 98, 374 Mont. 444, 322 P.3d 1039.

Introduction of Photograph of Exemplar Exhibit Proper as Necessary Foundational Requirement: At trial, plaintiff sought to introduce a photograph of an exemplar vehicle kingpin through an expert, asserting that the purpose for introducing the photograph was to show what the subject kingpin looked like before the accident and to show a kingpin with a properly designed radius. The only foundation laid for admitting the photograph was the expert's testimony that the exemplar kingpin was fundamentally the same design as the subject kingpin, except in terms of radius; however, the expert could not identify the date and source of manufacture of the exemplar kingpin and, without this information, there was no way to know whether the kingpins were in fact substantially the same. The District Court did not err in refusing admission of the photograph and allowing the expert to refer to previously admitted exhibits to illustrate his opinion concerning adequate radiusing. Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng'r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999), distinguishing Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Videotape With Blank Segment and Other Booking — Admissible: During the course of booking for a DUI arrest, the video camera was turned off for a short time to allow an independent investigator to obtain information from the defendant. Because of the interruption, the videotape contained a blank segment followed by a brief segment of a prior unrelated DUI booking. The defendant contended that the videotape was inadmissible because the interruption and the segment on the other booking constituted improper editing of the video. The Supreme Court held that proper foundation was made for the recording and that it was not abuse of discretion for the trial court judge to determine that the appropriate portions of the videotape were admissible. Missoula v. Forest, 236 M 129, 769 P2d 699, 46 St. Rep. 237 (1989).

Admissibility of Videotape — Introduction by Witness Other Than Tape Maker: A videotape will be allowed as evidence “as long as it shows a true representation of the scene at the time in question or any difference is explained”. A witness need not be the maker of the videotape to introduce it. Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

Interpretation of Largely Inaudible Tape Recording by Police — No Prejudice: It was not prejudicial to allow introduction of mostly inaudible tape recordings made with the consent and participation of an informant nor to allow a police officer who was present when the recordings were made to act as an oral transcriber to interpret what was said and what occurred while the tapes were being made. St. v. Morse, 229 M 222, 746 P2d 108, 44 St. Rep. 1919 (1987).

Photographs of Re-Creation of Accident — Substantial Similarity Required: If pictures taken of the re-creation of an accident are “substantially similar” to those at the time of the accident and the re-creation has been properly “foundationed” [sic], there is no abuse of discretion by the trial judge in admitting the evidence where, as here, the party assisting with the re-creation explained to the jury the dissimilarities between the re-creation and the actual incident. Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986), distinguished in Baldauf v. Arrow Tank & Eng’r Co., Inc., 1999 MT 81, 294 M 107, 979 P2d 166, 56 St. Rep. 337 (1999).

Photograph Held Not Prejudicial: Defendant’s contention that the State’s exhibit, a photograph of the defendant, was improperly admitted by the trial court over defendant’s objection on the grounds that “photographs that are calculated to arouse the sympathies or prejudices of the jury are properly excluded, particularly if they are not substantially necessary or instructive to show material facts or conditions”, following St. v. Bischert, 131 M 152, 308 P2d 969 (1957), has no merit. The photograph does not arouse anyone’s passion or prejudice, nor is it inflammatory. St. v. Hansen, 194 M 197, 633 P2d 1202, 38 St. Rep. 1541 (1981), reversed on fifth amendment grounds in Hansen v. Risley, 40 St. Rep. 2100 (D.C. Mont. 1983) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Reference to Exhibits Not Introduced — Motion for Mistrial Properly Denied: Where on cross-examination in a prosecution for deliberate homicide, the state’s expert witness briefly exhibited snapshot-sized photos of the deceased before the jury but the photos were not introduced as evidence, the court did not err in denying the defendant’s motion for a mistrial. The question of whether to declare a mistrial is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and the court’s decision cannot be reversed except upon a showing of abuse. The court in this case was in the best position to determine whether any of the jurors were actually exposed to the pictures in such a manner as to require a mistrial. The court gave the appropriate cautionary instruction to the jury, and no prejudice was shown by the defendant. St. v. Close, 191 M 229, 623 P2d 940, 38 St. Rep. 177 (1981).

Rule 1001. Definitions.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 1001 except that paragraph (5) has been added to retain existing Montana law. These definitions are used extensively throughout the rules that follow in Article X.

(1) Writings and Recordings. Writings and recordings are defined broadly so as to include modern developments in storing and retrieving information. Advisory Committee’s Note to Federal Rule 1001(1), 56 F.R.D. 183, 341, (1972). The law in Montana has required the original of a writing but has never defined the term “writing”. Section 93-1101-9, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. Therefore this definition is new to and an expansion of existing Montana law.

(2) Photographs. Photographs are defined and included in this rule and Rule 1002, but it should be kept in mind that the rule requiring the production of the original applies to photographs in only a few special cases and not in the usual instance where the witness incorporates a photograph as part of his testimony by identifying it as a correct and accurate representation of what it depicts. Advisory Committee’s Note to Federal Rule 1002, supra at 56 F.R.D. at 342. Examples of when a photograph is to be included within this rule are: “copyright, defamation, and invasion of privacy by photograph or motion picture... Similarly as to situations in which the picture is offered as having independent probative value, e.g., automatic photograph of bank robber”. Id. This definition is also new to and an expansion of existing Montana law.

(3) Original. Original is defined to include not only the writing or recording itself, but also “any counterpart intended to have the same effect by a person executing or issuing it”. The Advisory Committee’s Note to Federal Rule 1001(3), supra 56 F.R.D. at 341, states: “In most instances, what is an original will be self-evident... However, in some instances particularized definition is required". It goes on to give an example of a carbon copy of a contract executed in duplicate to show when the counterpart is to be treated as an original. The definition also refers to photographs and computer printouts in the second and third sentences; the intent of these sentences is to conform to "practicality and common usage [sic]". Id.

Existing Montana law has never precisely defined "original". However, in Bond v. Hurd, 31 Mont. 314, 318, 78 P 579 (1904), the court stated the common-law rule of what is an original of a telegram, which is dependent upon whether the telegraph company is the agent of the sender or the receiver. Montana law has also recognized the "duplicate original rule", superseded by this definition, in Morris v. Langhausen, 155 Mont. 362, 365, 472 P2d 860 (1970), which admitted an executed carbon copy of a retail installment sales contract. Therefore, this definition is consistent with existing Montana law as well as expanding the definition into new areas of photographs and computer printouts.

(4) Duplicate. "Duplicate" is defined so that the copy is "produced by methods possessing an accuracy which virtually eliminates the possibility of error". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 341. This means that copies produced manually are not within the definition. Id. This definition is used in Rule 1003 to allow duplicates to be admitted unless a question of authenticity is raised or it would be unfair to admit a duplicate. It should also be noted that "what is an original for some purposes is a duplicate for others. Thus, a bank's microfilm record of checks cleared is the original as a record. However, a print offered as a copy of a check whose contents are in controversy is a duplicate". Id.

This definition is an expansion of existing Montana law. First, under Section 93-801-5, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], the Uniform Photographic Copies of Business and Official Records as Evidence Act, photocopies are admissible, but only when the copy is made in the regular course of business and is of business or official records. This definition does not restrict the admissibility of copies to any type of document and does not restrict the purpose for which the copy was made to the regular course of business. Second, insofar as the duplicate original rule, discussed in the Commission Comments to the preceding definition, allows copies to be admissible, it is also superseded by the definition as applied in Rule 1003.

(5) Copies. This definition is based on Section 93-1101-18, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], which provides: "When an entry is repeated in the regular course of business, one being copied from another or (sic) at or near the time of the transaction, all the entries are equally regarded as originals". It is included here so that it may be made admissible under Rule 1003. The Commission feels that this type of evidence is not admissible under any of the other definitions in Federal Rule 1001. The entry cannot be considered an original because the person making the entry has no such intent, but is carrying on a normal business function of collecting information to be stored in a single record. The entry cannot be considered a duplicate because as previously indicated, duplicates are defined to include only mechanical means of duplication and not manual means. Therefore, this definition is intended to continue existing Montana law contained in the statute.

Case Notes

Police Officer's Testimony Sufficient to Authenticate Photographs of Stabbing Victim to Warrant Admission Into Evidence: Notwithstanding the fundamental notion that a foundation is required for admission of photographs into evidence, there is no authority requiring that the photographer testify. Here, a police officer testified that the photographs in question were taken shortly after a stabbing victim arrived at the hospital and that the photographs were true and accurate depictions of the victim's wounds. The officer's testimony was sufficient to authenticate the photographs, and the trial court properly admitted the photographs into evidence. St. v. High Elk, 2006 MT 6, 330 M 259, 127 P3d 432 (2006), distinguishing St. v. Newman, 162 M 450, 513 P2d 258 (1973).

Use of Color Slides as Evidence: The probative value of the use of color slides to portray degree of injury in negligent homicide case outweighed any prejudicial effect they may have had, where the reasonableness of the failure to provide medical attention was the controlling issue and where pathologist testified of the need for color photographs in order to accurately explain his findings. St. v. Hoffman, 196 M 268, 639 P2d 507, 39 St. Rep. 79 (1982). See also Lindberg v. Leatham Bros., Inc., 215 M 11, 693 P2d 1234, 42 St. Rep. 137 (1985).

Rule 1002. Requirement of original.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 1002 except the exception clause found in those rules is deleted and an exceptions clause previously used in the Rules is substituted. It states the common-law rule that to prove the contents of a writing, the original of that writing is required, unless otherwise provided. The exceptions to this rule of major concern are those found in the rules that follow. Rules 1003 through 1007.

In applying this rule, the purposes of the rule requiring the production of the original should be kept in mind: first, the legal significance of particular words in a document requires the use of the original so that legal rights under those documents are not misinterpreted; second, use of the original prevents, to some degree, fraudulent use of copies; third, mechanical or human errors made in the process of copying are apt to be ignored when copies or other secondary evidence of the original is used; and finally, the use of the original allows a complete view of all that is contained in that document. McCormick, Handbook on the Law of Evidence, 561 (2d ed. 1972).

Further, application of this rule requires that the court determine whether the contents of the writing are being proved. Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 1002, supra 56 F.R.D. at 342, offers the following guidelines:

Thus an event may be proved by nondocumentary evidence, even though a written record of it was made. If, however, the event is sought to be proved by the written record, the rule applies. For example, payment may be proved without producing the written receipt which was given. Earnings may be proved without producing books of account in which they are entered... Nor does the rule apply to testimony that books or records have been examined and found not to contain any reference to a designated matter.

This rule is consistent with existing Montana law. Section 93-1101-9, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides: "The original writing must be produced and proved, except as provided in Sections 93-301-1 to 93-2501-3". Section 93-401-12, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides: "There can be no evidence of the contents of a writing, other than the writing itself, except in the following cases". Several cases have also stated this rule. Cohen v. Clark, 44 Mont. 151, 158, 119 P 775 (1911); State v. Cates, 97 Mont. 173, 198, 33 P2d 578 (1934); and Morris v. Langhausen, 155 Mont. 362, 365, 472 P2d 860 (1970).

However, there has been some confusion in many cases on the issue of whether the original document or other evidence was required to prove certain facts. Examples of the confusion are: Whiteside v. Hoskins, 20 Mont. 361, 364, 51 P 739 (1898), held that a party could testify that the judgment which was the basis of the present suit had not been satisfied without introducing court records to that effect. Yet, Spencer v. Spencer, 31 Mont. 631, 641, 79 P 320 (1904), held that it was error to allow a witness to testify that another suit had been dropped without first introducing court records which would be the best evidence. In State ex rel. Rankin v. Madison State Bank, 77 Mont. 498, 503, 251 P 548 (1926), the court held that oral evidence of the action of a state board was admissible even though a minute book was available and required to be kept by statute. Yet in State ex rel. Haley v. Dilworth, 80 Mont. 111, 116, 258 P 250 (1927), the court held that when a statute requires a minute book to be kept, oral testimony regarding those minutes is inadmissible. The Commission intends Rule 1002 to clarify these cases and that it be applied as in the former cases in each of the examples given; that is, the mere existence of a written record does not mean that it is the only source of evidence to prove the existence of facts or occurrence of events, but when the facts or events are sought to be proved by a writing, unless an exception applies, the original of that writing is required.

Finally, as noted in the Commission Comments to Rule 1001(2), defining photographs, the Commission intends Rule 1002 to apply to photographs in only a few special instances. The Commission does not intend to change the longstanding rule in Montana allowing photographs to be made part of the witness' testimony or illustrative of his testimony to assist the jury in their determinations. Stokes v. Long, 52 Mont. 470, 485, 159 P 28 (1916); Fulton v. Chouteau County Farmers' Bank Co., 98 Mont. 48, 60, 37 P2d 1025 (1934). Under this case law rule, the trial court has the discretion to admit photographs. Gobel v. Rinio, 122 Mont. 235, 238, 200 P2d 235 (1948); Teesdale v. Anchutz Drilling Co., 138 Mont. 427, 357 P2d 4 (1960); and Hackley v. Waldorf-Hoerner Paper Co., 149 Mont. 286, 297, 425 P2d 712 (1967). For other cases on the admissibility of photographs, see Commission Comments to Rule 901(b)(1).

Case Notes

Unexecuted Copy of Prenuptial Agreement Inadmissible as Representation of Executed Agreement. The husband alleged that he lost or at least could not find an original prenuptial agreement and then offered other evidence that a properly executed prenuptial agreement existed that would determine the rights of the parties. The District Court did not limit the introduction of the evidence pursuant to Rule 1004, M.R.Ev., even though that rule pertains to the contents of rather than the actual existence of a document. To prove the content of a writing under this rule, Montana's best evidence rule, the original writing is required; however, under Rule 1004,

M.R.Ev., secondary evidence is admissible over a best evidence objection if the requirements of the rule are met and a proper foundation is laid, so the husband's unsigned copy of the allegedly lost original document was admissible. However, the only evidence that the document was ever signed was the husband's testimony of his own recollection, which was rebutted by the wife's testimony that the signing never occurred. The secondary evidence could not establish that an enforceable prenuptial contract, which by definition requires the signatures of both parties, ever existed. Thus, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the husband failed to present evidence that an enforceable prenuptial contract was executed. In re Marriage of Gochanour, 2000 MT 156, 300 M 155, 4 P3d 643, 57 St. Rep. 619 (2000).

Testimony of Witness Reading From Inadmissible Writing Allowed: The Williamses argued that the lower court erred in allowing Watkins to read from a document during his testimony when the document had already been held to be inadmissible. The Supreme Court ruled that the best evidence rule is inapplicable when the witness testifies about personal knowledge of a matter, regardless of whether the same information may be contained in an inadmissible writing, and that the witness could use the writing to refresh his memory. Watkins v. Williams, 265 M 306, 877 P2d 19, 51 St. Rep. 489 (1994).

Inventory List — Admission Denied but Then Allowed — Rule Not Violated: Defendant contended that the District Court erred in allowing questioning from an inventory list of his belongings allegedly in a trailer at the time of a fire. Admission of the list into evidence was originally denied but subsequently allowed when the court overruled defendant's objection. The "best evidence rule" set out in this rule was not violated because the aim of the questions was to impeach defendant, rather than identify the drafter, and to show the contradiction between defendant's detailed claim of what was in the trailer and the physical evidence remaining after the fire. St. v. Conrad, 241 M 1, 785 P2d 185, 47 St. Rep. 32 (1990).

Statements Read From Transcript — Tape Destroyed — Error to Admit: A police officer conducted a tape-recorded interview with defendant. The tape was recycled after being transcribed. At trial, the police officer read two statements from the transcript over defendant's best evidence rule objection. The Supreme Court held that the transcript was improperly read from because a foundation was not laid in accordance with St. v. Warwick, 158 M 531, 494 P2d 627 (1972). However, since the two statements read from the transcript were consistent with defendant's own testimony, defendant was not prejudiced by the admission of the statements. St. v. Brodniak, 221 M 212, 718 P2d 322, 43 St. Rep. 755 (1986).

Videotape — "Best Evidence" of Transcript: Defendant was charged with felony assault (now assault with a weapon) and sexual intercourse without consent. The alleged victim was a 4-year-old who had been left in his care for several days. The child was determined to be competent and allowed to testify. A police officer who had interviewed and videotaped the child recounted portions of the videotaped interview. In an effort to refresh the officer's memory, defense counsel read from the transcript of the interview. Later, in an apparent effort to discredit the child's testimony, defense counsel again read from the transcript. Over objection by the prosecution, defense counsel entered the transcript into evidence. Subsequently, the prosecution offered the videotape as the best evidence of the transcript. The videotape was admitted and shown to the jury. Defense counsel contended this was error as he was not present to confront and cross-examine the child at the taping. The court held that 46-15-401 (now repealed) and 46-15-402 apply only when videotaped testimony will be used in lieu of testimony by the witness at trial. Here, the child testified at trial. Once the transcript was admitted, it was within the province of the trial court to admit what it considered a more accurate version of the same thing under the "best evidence" rule. St. v. Rogers, 213 M 302, 692 P2d 2, 41 St. Rep. 2131 (1984).

Electronic Recording — Consent of One Party in Conversation: The recording of a conversation between an undercover officer and defendant during a drug sale using a hidden electronic monitoring device that was authorized by court order as required by St. v. Brackman, 178 M 105, 582 P2d 1216 (1978), is not subject to suppression by virtue of 18 U.S.C. 2511(2)(c) and is permitted by 45-8-213, if one of the parties consents to the recording, as the undercover officer did here. The recording being legal, it is then subject only to ordinary rules of admissibility. St. v. Hanley, 178 M 105, 608 P2d 104, 37 St. Rep. 427 (1980), followed in St. v. Brown, 232 M 1, 755 P2d 1364, 45 St. Rep. 818 (1988).

Best Evidence Rule: The best evidence rule applies only when the terms of a writing are material. Here, the precise terms of a lease were not at issue, thus testimony was sufficient and did not offend the best evidence rule. Fish & Game Comm'n v. Cronin, 179 M 481, 587 P2d 395, 35 St. Rep. 1798 (1978).

Rule 1003. Admissibility of duplicates, copies of certain entries.Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 1003 except for the addition of phrases referring to copies of entries made in the regular course of business, defined in Rule 1001(5), and the third clause, "otherwise provided by statute". These changes were made to retain existing Montana law. (See below.) The effect of this rule is to admit duplicates, as defined in Rule 1001(4), as though they were originals unless the conditions of the three clauses in this rule occur. The definition of "duplicate" in Rule 1001(4) is such that duplicates admissible under this rule are those produced under "a method which insures accuracy and genuineness". Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 1003, 56 F.R.D. 183, 343 (1972). Also see Commission Comments to Rule 1001(4). The first two clauses are those contained in the Federal Rule. Clause (1) refers to the situation where the original's authenticity is in question, which, of course, would make the admissibility of a duplicate as questionable as the admissibility of the original, and so in this instance the court may call for the original. Clause (2) refers to situations where it would be unfair to admit the duplicate, for example "when only a part of the original is reproduced the remainder is needed for cross-examination or may disclose matters qualifying the part offered or otherwise useful to the opposing party". Advisory Committee's Note, supra 56 F.R.D. at 343. It is imprecisely worded to allow the court discretion to exclude duplicates.

The admissibility of duplicates under this rule represents an expansion of existing Montana law. As noted in the Commission Comments to Rule 1001(4), Montana law admits photocopies under the Uniform Photographic Copies of Business and Official Records as Evidence Act, Section 93-801-5, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], only where the photocopy is made in the regular course of business and is a copy of either a business or official record. Duplicates can also be seen as admissible under the duplicate original rule recognized in Morris v. Langhausen, 155 Mont. 314, 318, 78 P 579 (1904).

The changes in this rule from the Federal Rule are intended to retain existing Montana law contained in statutes. The first is concerned with Section 93-1101-18, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], discussed under the Commission Comments to Rule 1001(5), defining copies of entry in the regular course of business. Montana cases which have been concerned with that statute are: Silver v. Eakins, 55 Mont. 210, 218, 175 P 876 (1918), which held a bank ledger was admissible under the statute, copies of that ledger were not; and Smith v. Sullivan, 58 Mont. 77, 87, 190 P 288 (1920), which held that a ledger made from mechanic's time cards was admissible under the statute. It is not believed by the Commission that the imposition of the conditions in the first clauses in this rule is inconsistent with this statute. Second, the third clause was added to take into account existing Montana probate law which requires the original of a will under informal proceedings (Sections 91A-3-301(2)(a), R.C.M. 1947 [72-3-203], and 91A-3-303(1)(e), R.C.M. 1947 [72-3-212]). It should be noted that the Commission considers this Rule consistent with such sections as Section 87A-3-804, R.C.M. 1947 [30-3-804 repealed], an action on allowing a lost instrument if proof of loss is first made.

Case Notes

Blood Alcohol Tests: Where a technician who performed blood alcohol tests, ascertained readings on graphs made by gas chromatograph, and completed test result forms testified at trial and the result forms were introduced in evidence, it was not error to admit the forms without producing the graphs. The forms were admissible as copies in lieu of the graphs under this rule's provision that a copy made in the regular course of business is admissible to the same extent as the original. McAlpine v. Midland Elec. Co., 194 M 154, 634 P2d 1166, 38 St. Rep. 1577 (1981).

Rule 1004. Admissibility of other evidence of contents.Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 1004. It sets out conditions under which the rule requiring the production of the original need not be followed. The Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 1004, 56 F.R.D. 183, 344 (1972) explains:

Basically the rule requiring the production of the original as proof of contents has developed as a rule of preference: if failure to produce the original is satisfactorily explained, secondary evidence is admissible. The instant rule specifies the circumstances under which production of the original is excused.

It should be noted that the rule does not require any type of secondary evidence to be produced once the absence of the original is explained; that is, "the rule recognizes no 'degrees' of secondary evidence". Id. Therefore, once absence of the original is explained, oral evidence, copies, or memoranda concerning the contents of the writing are all admissible. This is consistent with existing Montana law. R.C.M. 1947, Sections 93-401-12 [superseded], 93-1101-9 [superseded], and 93-1101-10 [superseded], provide the exceptions contained in this rule and do not specify types of secondary evidence which may then be used.

(1) Originals Lost or Destroyed. This paragraph is consistent with existing Montana law. Proof of loss or destruction is provided for in Sections 93-401-12(1), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and 93-1101-9, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. Each of these statutes provide that proof of loss or destruction must first be made to excuse production of the original; case law has construed this to mean that a diligent search has been made for the original and it could not be found. Territory v. Stocker, 9 Mont. 6, 9, 22 P 496 (1889) and Brooke v. Jordan, 14 Mont. 375, 378, 36 P 450 (1894). The standard established is that proof of the loss should be clear and convincing. St. Martin State Bank v. Steffes, 88 Mont. 85, 88 290 P 259 (1930). The burden is upon the proponent of the secondary evidence to prove loss or destruction. Bond v. Hurd, 31 Mont. 314, 319, 78 P 579 (1904). Language in this paragraph not applying it if the proponent lost or destroyed the original in bad faith is apparently consistent with State v. Welch, 22 Mont. 92, 96, 55 P 927 (1899), which held that there was no error in admitting secondary evidence of letters destroyed by the proponent because a reasonable explanation was given for their destruction.

(2) Original Not Obtainable. The fact that the original is not obtainable is consistent with existing Montana law. An interpretation given Section 93-401-12(1), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], by Nelson v. Gough, 61 Mont. 301, 304, 202 P 196 (1921), held that when a document is beyond the jurisdiction of the court, it is considered to be lost within the meaning of the statute. This case was followed in Dyle v. Kingsbury, 63 Mont. 145, 150, 206 P 364 (1922). It can be noted that an earlier case allowed copies of documents when the original was not within the power or control of the proponent, without referring to the statute. Montana Mining Co., Ltd. v. St. Louis Mining and Milling Co., 20 Mont. 394, 406, 51 P 824 (1898).

(3) Original in Possession of Opponent. This paragraph is consistent with two statutory provisions. Sections 93-401-12(2), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], and 93-1101-10, R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. Each of these provisions calls for notice to the adverse party. The paragraph relieves the proponent of producing the original, which is required to some degree for the protection of the adversary, when the adversary is in control of the document and needs no protection.

(4) Collateral Matters. This paragraph is new to and an expansion of existing Montana law. No statute or case could be found which applied this rule. The Advisory Committee's Note to this paragraph, supra 56 F.R.D. at 345, explains its intent:

While difficult to define with precision, situations arise in which no good purpose is served by production of the original. Examples are the newspaper in an action for the price of publishing defendant's advertisement, (cite omitted)...and the streetcar transfer of plaintiff claiming status as a passenger...(cite omitted).

COMMISSION COMMENT TO JUNE 1990 AMENDMENT

Compiler's Comments

1990 Amendment: Substituted gender neutral language for gender specific language. Amendment effective June 7, 1990.

Case Notes

Unexecuted Copy of Prenuptial Agreement Inadmissible as Representation of Executed Agreement: The husband alleged that he lost or at least could not find an original prenuptial agreement and then offered other evidence that a properly executed prenuptial agreement existed that would determine the rights of the parties. The District Court did not limit the introduction of the evidence pursuant to this rule, even though the rule pertains to the contents of rather than the actual existence of a document. However, the only evidence that the document was ever signed was the husband's testimony of his own recollection, which was rebutted by the wife's testimony that the signing never occurred. Best Evidence of Contract Not in Evidence — Existence of Enforceable Contract Not Proved: A trial court did not err in denying recovery for money paid out on a performance bond when: (1) the bond surety failed to admit the original bond or the original rider into evidence and could offer no certainty as to where the originals were and no reason as to why they were not produced; and (2) all oral testimony offered to prove the contents of the contract was disputed. USF&G Co. v. Cromwell, 237 M 72, 771 P2d 970, 46 St. Rep. 631 (1989).

Rule 1005. Public records.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 1005. The Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 1005, 56 F.R.D. 183, 345 (1972), gives the reasons for this exception to the rule requiring production of the original: "Public records call for somewhat different treatment. Removing them from their usual place of keeping would be attended by serious inconvenience to the public and to the custodian". This rule's allowance of certified or compared copies rather than the original is a recognition of degrees of secondary evidence which occurs only with this rule. Note that the second sentence of the rule allows any other evidence of contents if such copies cannot be obtained.

The rule is generally consistent with existing Montana law. Section 93-401-12(3) and (4), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded], provides that the original need not be produced when the original is a record or other document in the custody of a public officer or when the original has been recorded and a certified copy is made admissible by other statutes. This statute also provides that with these subdivisions, "a copy of the original, or of the record, must be produced...". This is inconsistent with the second sentence of the rule which allows any secondary evidence to be admitted if such copies cannot be obtained. Finally, a statement in Gazette Printing Co. v. Carden, 163 Mont. 401, 406, 571 P2d 361 (1973), that "parol evidence of the contents of public records violates the best evidence rule and is inadmissible", is inconsistent with the second sentence and overruled by it.

Case Notes

Admissibility of Certified Abstract of Driving History and Copy of Suspension Notification Letter: Once certified as set out in 61-11-102(6), the authenticity of motor vehicle license information is established for purposes of admissibility without extrinsic evidence. Therefore, a certified abstract of driving history was admissible as was a certified copy of a suspension notification letter, which fell within the class of self-authenticating documents under Rule 902, M.R.Ev., the public document exception to the hearsay rule under Rule 803, M.R.Ev., and the requirements of the best evidence rule under this rule. Taken together, this evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction for driving with a suspended license. Billings v. Lindell, 236 M 519, 771 P2d 134, 46 St. Rep. 557 (1989).

Rule 1006. Summaries.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 1006. It recognizes, as a matter of practicality and convenience, that summaries of admissible documents which are too lengthy to examine during trial may be admitted. This is consistent with Section 93-401-12(5), R.C.M. 1947 [superseded]. This practice has been commended in McCollum v. O'Neill, 128 Mont. 584, 591, 281 P2d 493 (1954). Note that the rule also contains safeguards which allow the adverse party reasonable time to inspect the summary and its original or duplicates to insure that they are accurate and that in any event the judge may order production of the original or a duplicate in court.

Case Notes

Underlying Material Inadmissible — Summary Evidence Improperly Admitted: The Supreme Court found that the standing master's admission of billing statements, copies of checks, handwritten notes, and invoice listings provided by the prevailing party's attorneys was improper due to insufficient foundation. The Supreme Court found that a separate exhibit compiling and summarizing the inadmissible materials was also improperly admitted because the underlying material was inadmissible as presented. In re Marriage of Fossen, 2019 MT 119, 395 Mont. 495, 443 P.3d 418.

Lay Witness's Explanation of Voluminous Documents Admissible Under Rules 602 and 701 and as Summary Under Rule 1006: Cowles brought an action against Sheeline to quiet title to a Montana mining claim. The District Court awarded both Cowles and Sheeline 50% of the shares in the mining company, based in part on the testimony of Don Cowles, Jr. Sheeline argued that Cowles's testimony concerning the number of shares issued by the mining company should not have been permitted because Cowles was not an expert. The Supreme Court found that the record indicated that Cowles did not testify as an expert but only as to his interpretation of his typewritten copy of his father's handwritten notes from the company stock book and as to Cowles's summaries of exhibits already in evidence. These summaries were helpful in explaining many pages of documents to the District Court. The Supreme Court concluded that Cowles's testimony was admissible under Rules 602, 701, and 1006, M.R.Ev. Cowles v. Sheeline, 259 M 1, 855 P2d 93, 50 St. Rep. 653 (1993).

Damage Summary Properly Admitted: In a case to establish the existence of a partnership, an exhibit that summarized damages based on mortgage, insurance, and tax and utility payments made by the plaintiff, the outstanding taxes, and the outstanding balance on the mortgage loan was properly admitted under this rule. This rule does not require that underlying documents be so voluminous that an in-court examination would be impossible, only that the examination would be inconvenient. Barrett v. Larsen, 256 M 330, 846 P2d 1012, 50 St. Rep. 96 (1993).

Rule 1007. Testimony or written admission of party.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 1007. It is a limited version of the common-law rule which allows proof of contents of a document by any admission of the opponent. Advisory Committee's Note to Federal Rule 1007, 56 F.R.D. 183, 346 (1972). Since there is a substantial risk of inaccuracy and the exception is not consistent with the purposes of the rule requiring the production of the original, limitations are imposed so that the admission by which contents may be proved includes only those made in writing or while testifying. Id. There is no Montana law equivalent to this rule, and so it is new Montana law.

Best Evidence of Contract Not in Evidence — Existence of Enforceable Contract Not Proved: A trial court did not err in denying recovery for money paid out on a performance bond when: (1) the bond surety failed to admit the original bond or the original rider into evidence and could offer no certainty as to where the originals were and no reason as to why they were not produced; and (2) all oral testimony offered to prove the contents of the contract was disputed. USF&G Co. v. Cromwell, 237 M 72, 771 P2d 970, 46 St. Rep. 631 (1989).

Rule 1008. Functions of court and jury.

Commission Comments

This rule is identical to Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 1008 except that the word "ordinarily" and a second sentence contained in the Federal and Uniform Rules are deleted. That sentence provides that the jury is to make determinations of admissibility, based on the concept of conditional admissibility found in Federal and Uniform Rules (1974) Rule 104(b), for three areas concerned with the rule requiring the production of the original. The Commission deleted this language so that the rule would be consistent with existing Montana law, as expressed in Rule 104(a), that the judge makes all determinations of admissibility of evidence. The concept of conditional admissibility was rejected in Rule 104(b) because it was confusing and inconsistent with existing Montana law and has been rejected wherever it occurs in the Rules. Therefore, this rule is consistent with existing Montana law contained in Section 93-2501-2, R.C.M. 1947 [25-7-102 and 26-1-201].

TITLE 27

CIVIL LIABILITY, REMEDIES, AND LIMITATIONS

CHAPTER 1 AVAILABILITY OF REMEDIES — LIABILITY

Chapter Case Notes

No Unjust Enrichment When Contract Existed — Defendant Not at Fault — Constructive Trust Not Raised by Plaintiff or Considered by Court: The District Court did not err in determining that the defendants were not unjustly enriched. Neither party disputed the existence of a contract involving the property at issue. Because it was undisputed that a contract existed, the plaintiff's unjust enrichment arguments were not well taken by the Supreme Court. In short, because the District Court found no fault or misconduct on the part of the defendant, the Supreme Court did not impose an unjust enrichment recovery against him. The Supreme Court also acknowledged that a constructive trust may be imposed in the absence of any wrongdoing on the part of the defendant, but since the plaintiff did not argue in the District Court or on appeal for the imposition of a constructive trust, the Supreme Court declined to impose one. Welu v. Twin Hearts Smiling Horses, Inc., 2016 MT 347, 386 Mont. 98, 386 P.3d 937, distinguishing Robertus v. Candee, 205 Mont. 403, 670 P.2d 540 (1983).

Failure to Establish Misconduct or Fault on Part of Defendant — Unjust Enrichment Claim — Summary Judgment Proper: Lessees claimed that lessors were unjustly enriched when the lessors received the insurance proceeds from a fire that destroyed the building in which the lessees' business and its inventory were located. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the lessors because the lessees did not establish misconduct or fault on the part of the lessors and the lessees themselves were behind on making contractual payments on behalf of the lessors. Hinebauch v. McRae, 2011 MT 270, 362 Mont. 358, 264 P.3d 1098.

Foundation for Abuse of Process Claim — Summary Judgment Improper: When the record establishes that a plaintiff who brings an abuse of process claim based the claim on defendant's purpose in bringing the suit, as well as the conduct of using the suit as an instrument of coercion, the defendant is not entitled to summary judgment. The tort of abuse of process must be proven by a showing of: (1) an ulterior purpose; and (2) a willful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding. In this case, plaintiff's supported allegations showed that defendant had no valid legal claim, and knew it, but filed an action against plaintiff in federal court nonetheless. Plaintiff raised genuine issues of material fact that satisfied the elements of an abuse of process claim, and the District Court erred in granting summary judgment for defendant. The case was reversed and remanded for further proceedings. Seipel v. Olympic Coast Investments, 2008 MT 237, 344 M 415, 188 P3d 1027 (2008), following Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007).

Indemnification Claim Not Considered Abuse of Process: Judd had a contract with defendant railroad to perform weed control. The contract included liability for injury to a railroad employee. An employee was injured after stepping in a hole obscured by weeds in an area that Judd was to control. The railroad settled with the employee and then filed an indemnification claim against Judd. Judd asserted that the railroad committed an abuse of process by using the indemnification suit to shift its loss to Judd, despite the fact that Judd had no duty to keep railroad property safe. However, Judd offered no evidence that the railroad used the indemnity action for an ulterior purpose or to coerce Judd to perform a collateral act, which constitutes the elements of an abuse of process claim. Rather, the railroad demonstrated that the indemnification claim was brought for the legitimate purpose of attaining all available recourse under the contract with Judd, so Judd's abuse of process claim failed. Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008), following Brault v. Smith, 209 M 21, 679 P2d 236 (1984), Durden v. Hydro Flame Corp., 1999 MT 186, 295 M 318, 983 P2d 943 (1999), and Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007).

Voluntary Act Precluding False Imprisonment Claim — Lack of Underlying Tort Precluding Civil Conspiracy Claim: A woman with breast cancer was advised by Hughes, a radiation oncologist, to undergo therapeutic radiology for the disease. Prior to radiation, an oncologist makes specific marks on the affected area to identify where to direct radiation beams. However, in addition to the marks directing radiation beams, Hughes drew a “smiley face” on the woman’s breast by drawing two dime-sized “eyes” above the nipple of the breast and outlining the scar from the breast biopsy for the “mouth”. The woman complained to hospital administration, and an ad hoc investigative committee recommended that Hughes receive a letter of reprimand, have a term of probation, have a chaperone while working, and be evaluated by the Montana Professional Assistance Program (MPAP). Hughes agreed to a medical, psychiatric, or chemical dependency evaluation and voluntarily enrolled in two such programs in Texas and Kansas. After release, Hughes signed an aftercare agreement. Hughes then brought suit against the individual members of the ad hoc committee and MPAP, alleging false imprisonment, civil conspiracy, breach of contract, and civil right violations related to the disciplinary actions. Summary judgment was granted to defendants in federal District Court on the civil rights claims, and the remaining charges were remanded to state District Court, where they were also summarily dismissed. Hughes appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed dismissal of the false imprisonment claim because Hughes voluntarily signed the treatment agreements and submitted to evaluation. Two elements of false imprisonment are the restraint of an individual against the individual’s will and the unlawfulness of that restraint, but because no material fact existed as to the voluntariness of Hughes’s action, the false imprisonment claim failed as a matter of law. Further, to sustain a civil conspiracy claim, plaintiff must allege a tort committed by one of the conspirators, but because the false imprisonment claim failed, there was no underlying tort action to form a basis for civil conspiracy, so that claim failed as well. Hughes v. Pullman, 2001 MT 216, 306 M 420, 36 P3d 339 (2001).

Civil Conspiracy — Elements — Summary Judgment Properly Granted: David, his wife Susan, their minor child, and the parties’ defunct business sued Pierce Flooring and others for civil damages, including damages resulting from a civil conspiracy, stemming from criminal acts of vandalism taken against the plaintiffs’ competing business. The District Court granted the defendants’ motion for summary judgment against David and the other plaintiffs on the civil conspiracy claim. Citing Duffy v. Butte Teachers’ Union No. 332, 168 M 246, 541 P2d 1199 (1975), and Grenz v. Medical Management NW., Inc., 250 M 58, 817 P2d 1151 (1991), the Supreme Court stated that the elements of a cause of action for civil conspiracy are: (1) two people (and, as in this case, a person may be a corporation); (2) an object to be accomplished; (3) a meeting of the minds on the object or course of action; (4) one or more unlawful acts; and (5) damages as the proximate result. The Supreme Court noted that the District Court had held that there was “probably sufficient evidence of elements 1, 2, 4, and 5” but that the plaintiffs failed to prove a genuine issue of material fact as to element 3. After reviewing the record, the Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly concluded that there was no evidence of a “meeting of the minds on the object or course of action” between the defendants. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Unjust Enrichment — Misconduct by Defendant Required — Denial of Restitution to Defaulting Purchaser: Upon default by purchasers, seller resold the property. Purchasers sought restitution, contending it was unfair to allow seller to be unjustly enriched by selling the property twice. However, restitution is normally denied to a defaulting purchaser. (See Contract Damages in Montana Part II: Reliance and Restitution, Burnham, 45 Mont. L. Rev. 1 (1984).) Further, in order for the equitable doctrine of unjust enrichment to apply, plaintiff must show some element of misconduct or fault on the part of defendant. Schweigert v. Fowler, 240 M 424, 784 P2d 405, 47 St. Rep. 1 (1990). See also Owen v. Skramovsky, 2013 MT 348, 372 Mont. 531, 313 P.3d 205.

Abuse of Process — What Constitutes: The tort of abuse of process must be proven by a showing of: (1) an ulterior purpose; and (2) a willful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding. Brault v. Smith, 209 M 21, 679 P2d 236, 41 St. Rep. 527 (1984), followed in St. v. Kandarian, 268 M 408, 886 P2d 954, 51 St. Rep. 1381 (1994), Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008), and Boyne USA, Inc. v. Spanish Peaks Dev., LLC, 2013 MT 1, 368 Mont. 143, 292 P.3d 432.

Unjust Enrichment — Recovery for Repudiated Contract Not Barred by Statute of Frauds: Where the plaintiffs failed to make a final payment to the defendant under a lease of property upon which the plaintiffs had spent considerable time and effort to grow wheat and the defendant thereafter wrongfully terminated the lease and retained the proceeds from the sale of plaintiffs’ crop, the District Court erred in holding the plaintiffs’ claim of unjust enrichment barred by the Statute of Frauds. Where one party repudiates a contract or breaches it by nonperformance, the injured party may seek restitution of the unjust enrichment whether the Statute of Frauds applies or not. Here the defendant breached the lease, and the theory of unjust enrichment applies. Robertus v. Candee, 205 M 403, 670 P2d 540, 40 St. Rep. 1391 (1983).

Material Misrepresentation in Sale of Real Property — Damages Inadequate: Where seller misrepresents the condition of premises to be sold to the extent that over $27,000 in repairs would be needed to bring the premises up to the condition represented and where repairs would result in a prolonged period during which premises could not be used for business, the misrepresentation is material and damages, as opposed to rescission, would be inappropriate. Moschelle v. Hulse, 190 M 532, 622 P2d 155, 37 St. Rep. 1506 (1980).

General Provisions

Part Case Notes

Jury Found Against Plaintiff on Contract Claim — Defendant Entitled to Retain Entire Down Payment on Contract: At trial, the plaintiff proceeded on only its claim for breach of contract. The defendant counterclaimed for breach of contract. In the competing breach of contract claims, the jury found for the defendant and awarded damages to the defendant arising out of the plaintiff's breach of contract. The District Court subtracted the amount of damages awarded to the defendant from the total amount of the down payment and ordered the defendant to pay the remainder back to the plaintiff. The Supreme Court held that once the jury found against the plaintiff on the breach of contract claim, the plaintiff was not entitled to a return of the down payment. Pac. Hide and Fur Depot v. Emineth Custom Homes, Inc., 2016 MT 114, 383 Mont. 373, 373 P.3d 829.

State Remedy and State Court Enforcement of Contract Wages Required by Federal Davis-Bacon Act: The District Court had subject matter jurisdiction of state contract law claims against a contractor and subcontractors by workers hired to build housing on Malmstrom Air Force base under a contract between the contractor and the Air Force. The workers claimed that they were not paid the prevailing wages required by the federal Davis-Bacon Act. The defendants claimed that there was no private right of action and that the workers had not exhausted their federal administrative remedies. The evidence showed that the workers extensively used the administrative remedies, taking all proper steps to attempt to administratively resolve the dispute. The workers were not seeking to enforce the Davis-Bacon Act labor standards; they sought to enforce a contract that includes wages required by the Act, a subtle but important distinction. The Act does not preempt the workers' right to a state enforcement action, using state remedies, under the facts of this case. That right is in keeping with Montana's longstanding policy and constitutional guarantee in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., of citizens' access to Montana courts when they are aggrieved. As third-party beneficiaries of the contract, the workers have the right to sue in state court to enforce the contract under state law. Favel v. Am. Renovation & Constr. Co., 2002 MT 266, 312 M 285, 59 P3d 412 (2002).

Comparative Negligence — Requirement to Allocate Liability of Nonparties Unconstitutional: The portion of 27-1-703 requiring a jury to allocate injuries of a foster child to persons who had been released from liability by the claimant, to persons immune from liability, and to other nonparties without any procedural safeguards was stricken as an unconstitutional violation of substantive due process. (See 1995 amendment to 27-1-703.) Newville v. St., 267 M 237, 883 P2d 793, 51 St. Rep. 758 (1994). The 1995 amendments to 27-1-703 did not cure the due process problem created by the absence of a statutory mechanism by which the negligence of nonparties, including third-party defendants released from liability, can be fairly apportioned by a jury. Here, the District Court properly refused to permit the jury to apportion negligence to third-party defendants who were released from liability by plaintiff and who were impecunious and judgment-proof. Cusenbary v. Mortensen, 1999 MT 221, 296 M 25, 987 P2d 351, 56 St. Rep. 864 (1999), distinguishing Whiting v. St., 248 M 207, 810 P2d 1177, 48 St. Rep. 396 (1991). (See 1997 amendment.)

Rescue Doctrine Not Applicable to Door: Bossard injured his arm while lifting a sliding door on Johnson's property back onto its track. The Supreme Court ruled that Bossard could not base his damages claim on the rescue doctrine because the door off its track did not pose an immediate threat to persons or property. Bossard v. Johnson, 265 M 272, 876 P2d 627, 51 St. Rep. 494 (1994).

Tort of Malicious Defense Not Recognized in Montana: The plaintiff alleged that the defendant had never intended to engage in litigation yet allowed her attorney to indicate to the plaintiff's bank that litigation was pending. This action resulted in certain funds of the plaintiff being held by the bank, thereby damaging the plaintiff's business relations. The plaintiff argued that the defendant's opposition to the suit against her for tortious interference with a business relation constituted the tort of malicious defense. The Supreme Court held that the tort of malicious defense has never been recognized in Montana. The court stated that it was not deciding if the tort should be recognized but that under the facts, the defendant's actions were not malicious and the tort was not applicable. Smith v. Barrett, 242 M 37, 788 P2d 324, 47 St. Rep. 514 (1990).

Case Notes

Challenge to Driver's License Suspension Considered Special Proceeding — Successful Defendant Entitled to Costs: Neal's driver's license was suspended for failure to take a breath test. Neal challenged the suspension, claiming that he did not refuse to take a breath test, and the District Court agreed. Neal's license was reinstated and Neal was granted costs. The state objected to the award of costs, and the District Court amended the original order and denied costs, so Neal appealed. Neal contended that as the prevailing party, an award of costs was proper under 25-10-101(2) because the license was valued at more than $50 or under 25-10-101(4) because the petition to reinstate the license was a special proceeding. The state contended that the particular provisions of 25-10-711 prevailed over the general provisions of 25-10-101, so 25-10-101 did not apply. The Supreme Court disagreed, finding no inconsistency between the statutes. Section 25-10-711 applies to actions in which a party prevails against a government entity and can establish that the government's claim or defense was frivolous or pursued in bad faith, but no such finding is required for recovery of costs under 25-10-101. The court went on to find that Neal's claim that costs were proper based on the license value was unfounded, because no finding of valuation was ever determined. However, the court concluded that a challenge to a driver's license suspension or revocation was a special proceeding pursuant to this section, and that as the prevailing party in the action, Neal was entitled to costs pursuant to 25-10-101. Neal v. St., 2003 MT 53, 314 M 357, 66 P3d 280 (2003).

Order Granting Temporary Guardianship Held Final Order and Special Proceeding for Purposes of Appeal — Noncompliance With Former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (Now Superseded), Excused — Expiration of Temporary Guardianship Held Not to Render Issue Moot: After a District Court twice appointed the same temporary guardians for Kathleen Klos pursuant to 72-5-317, once in writing and once by making an oral order with no documentation except a minute entry entered by the Clerk of Court, Klos filed a motion to set aside the second order of guardianship. The guardians argued that an order appointing a temporary guardian is not subject to appeal and that Klos had not complied with former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), because she did not file a transcript of a hearing appointing the guardians. The Supreme Court held that in as much as former Rule 1(b)(3), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), does not differentiate between a permanent order and a temporary order, a temporary order qualified as an appealable order. The Supreme Court also held that the temporary order is a "special proceeding", as defined by subsection (2) of this section, for the purposes of former Rule 1(b)(1), M.R.App.P. (now superseded), and therefore appealable for that reason as well. Concerning the argument on noncompliance with former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), the Supreme Court noted that no transcript could be provided because none was ever made and held that Klos had substantially complied by notifying the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the lack of a transcript and by providing the District Court Clerk's minute entry. Citing Butte-Silver Bow Local Gov't v. Olsen, 228 M 77, 743 P2d 564 (1987), the Supreme Court also noted that just because the order had expired by operation of law did not mean that the issue of appealability was moot because the guardians had twice been appointed by a temporary order that expired by operation of law and could be appointed in the same manner again. Thus, if the order was not appealable, it would be "capable of repetition, yet evade review". In re Klos, 284 M 197, 943 P2d 1277, 54 St. Rep. 843 (1997), followed in Fischer v. Fischer, 2007 MT 101, 337 M 122, 157 P3d 682 (2007).

Release of Real Estate Commission Dependent Upon Outcome of Property Dispute — No Cause of Action Absent Actual Interest in Property: Goodman Realty placed its $10,000 real estate commission in escrow to indemnify Smiths in the event that a particular drainfield easement did not exist. Because release of the commission depended on the resolution of the easement dispute between Smiths and Monson, Goodman Realty argued that its pecuniary interest in the outcome of the dispute created a cause of action between Goodman Realty and Monson.

However, Goodman Realty alleged no interest in the property of either Smiths or Monson, its only interest being the release of the indemnification sum, which was wholly unrelated to the property interests at issue. Goodman Realty's complaint did not allege that any legal duty was breached by Monson. Dismissal of the complaint for failure to clearly state a cause of action was proper. Goodman Realty, Inc. v. Monson, 267 M 228, 883 P2d 121, 51 St. Rep. 1074 (1994).

Fees for Creation of a Trust: Petitions filed pursuant to 82-1-302 and 82-1-305 are "special proceedings" within the meaning of 27-1-102, and as such, a fee of $20 is proper to assess for each such proceeding filed. In re Mont. Pac. Oil & Gas Co., 189 M 11, 614 P2d 1045 (1980).

Remedy for Unlawful Environmental Degradation: Unlawful environmental degradation is within the judicial cognizance of the state, and the courts are open to every person for the remedy of lawfully cognizable injuries, including an environmental organization where an injury to its interests is alleged. Mont. Wilderness Ass'n v. Bd. of Health and Environmental Sciences, 171 M 477, 559 P2d 1157 (1976).

Consortium of Spouse: A wife can maintain an action for loss of consortium when such loss is the result of negligent injury to her husband. Duffy v. Lipsman-Fulkerson & Co., 200 F. Supp. 71 (D.C. Mont. 1961), explained in Dutton v. Hightower & Lubrecht Constr. Co., 214 F. Supp. 298 (D.C. Mont. 1963).

Elements of Cause of Action: A cause of action is ordinarily considered as involving the combination of two elements: first, a right on the part of the plaintiff; and second, the violation or infringement of such right by the defendant. Duffy v. Lipsman-Fulkerson & Co., 200 F. Supp. 71 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Probate Proceedings — Special Proceeding: The administration of an estate of a deceased person is neither an action at law nor a suit in equity, but it is a special proceeding. State ex rel. Reid v. District Court, 126 M 586, 256 P2d 546 (1953).

Will Contest: A will contest is an action, as defined by this section, so as to entitle contestee to demand security for costs by a nonresident contestant, under 25-10-601. State ex rel. Langan v. District Court, 111 M 178, 107 P2d 880, 131 ALR 1474 (1940).

Constitutionality of Statute — Standing to Challenge: One whose interests have not been or are not about to be prejudicially affected by the operation of a statute may not attack the constitutionality of the statute in a court of justice. Holt v. Custer County, 75 M 328, 243 P 811 (1926).

Disbarment Proceeding: A disbarment proceeding not being an action, it must be classified as a special proceeding, for the reason that every remedy sought or administered under statute is classified as by action or special proceeding. In re Wellcome, 23 M 259, 58 P 711 (1899).

27-1-103. Civil and criminal actions.

Case Notes

Punitive Damages Case Considered Civil Action — Requirement That Punitive Damages Award Be Unanimous Unconstitutional: Under Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., in all civil actions, two-thirds of the jury may render a verdict that has the same force and effect as if the entire jury had concurred in the decision. A civil action is prosecuted for the enforcement or protection of a right or the redress or prevention of a wrong. Here, Finstad was injured by asbestos in defendant's mine and sued for redress and to prevent defendant from committing similar wrongful conduct. Thus, Finstad's suit, including the claim for punitive damages, constituted a civil action. Punitive damages are merely a component of recovery of the underlying civil cause of action, imposed as enlarged damages for a civil wrong, not a substitute for criminal punishment. Because punitive damages are civil actions, the portion of 27-1-221(6) that requires that an award of punitive damages be unanimous as to liability and amount directly conflicts with Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., and is unconstitutional. Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000).

Attorney General's Opinions

Court Reporter Filing Fee — Clerk of District Court to Collect Fee in Appeal From Justice's Court or City Court — Appeal Is "Civil Action" Under Statutes: The Attorney General was asked whether a Clerk of District Court must collect the $20 filing fee, required by 25-1-202 and used to help pay the salary of the court reporter, in appeals filed in District Court from judgments of a Justice's or City Court. The Attorney General concluded that: (1) a private legal action in a Justice's or City Court is a civil action; (2) an appeal from a Justice's or City Court may include appeal of a civil action; (3) an appeal from either of those courts results in most cases in a new trial in District Court and that the need for a court reporter in that instance is obvious; and (4) the payment of the additional $20 filing fee required by 25-1-202 is mandatory. 48 A.G. Op. 1 (1999).

27-1-104. Bases for civil actions.Case Notes

Lack of Appeal of Federal Agency Decision Not to Affect Contract Rights: Popp had an oral agreement to plant and harvest land owned by Frank and Gountanis. Popp attempted to enroll the land in the federal payment in kind program (PIK) but was informed by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) that he must have a written lease to be eligible. He never appealed the ASCS decision. Frank later contended that the failure to appeal precluded Popp from collaterally attacking that determination in District Court. The Supreme Court held that Popp's filing of a lawsuit was not a collateral attack on the ASCS decision but rather that the amended complaint showed it was a breach of contract action. The court supported the finding that the PIK program could not be used to destroy Popp's contract rights. Popp v. Gountanis, 221 M 267, 718 P2d 340, 43 St. Rep. 801 (1986).

27-1-105. Obligation defined.Case Notes

Public Duty Doctrine Inapplicable: Plaintiff sued the city of Columbia Falls for negligence, premises liability, breach of professional duties, and wrongful death after her husband died following a skateboarding accident on a subdivision walking path, the design of which the city had monitored and approved. The District Court applied the public duty doctrine and granted the city summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The public duty doctrine does not apply when a governmental defendant has a specific duty to a plaintiff arising from generally applicable principles of law that would support a tort claim, i.e., if a private person would be liable to the plaintiff for the acts that were committed by the government, then the governmental entity would be similarly liable. Because the city was actively involved in the design of the walking path and exercised its statutory and contractual authority to approve it, the city could be held liable for violation of a statutory duty and the voluntary assumption of a duty to act with ordinary care; therefore, the District Court erred in applying the public duty doctrine. Kent v. Columbia Falls, 2015 MT 139, 379 Mont. 190, 350 P.3d 9.

Student Not Subject to Restraint on Liberty — No Custodial or Special Relationship: A high school student was caught on campus with a tin of chewing tobacco and was disciplined by being suspended from all extracurricular activities. The student became distraught upon realizing the suspension would bar him from the state wrestling tournament; he went home and committed suicide that afternoon. The student's mother sued the school board and the superintendent, alleging that her son's death was the direct and proximate result of the school board's negligence. The District Court granted summary judgment to the board. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because suicide is generally considered a deliberate intervening act, the board was entitled to summary judgment. Because the student had no history of mental health problems, the suicide was unforeseeable, and therefore the board owed no legal duty to the student. Additionally, the mother could not show a special relationship between the student and the school board because the board had no obligation to exercise custodial care over the student, who was not in the custody of the board and was in his own home when he committed suicide. Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

Public Duty Doctrine Inapplicable for City Playground Injury: The public duty doctrine did not apply in a negligence claim against a city for the failure to maintain a playground area given the applicability of clear and established rules of premises liability. Based on an analysis of foreseeability, it was reasonable and proper to hold the city to a duty to exercise reasonable care in maintaining its public parks. Gatlin-Johnson v. Miles City, 2012 MT 302, 367 Mont. 414, 291 P.3d 1129, followed in Kent v. Columbia Falls, 2015 MT 139, 379 Mont. 190, 350 P.3d 9.

Third-Party Tortious Interference Established — Calculated Course to Negate Contract: A District Court concluded that a third-party defendant tortiously interfered with a contract to exchange property between the petitioner and the respondents. In affirming the District Court, the Supreme Court concluded that the facts demonstrated that the third-party defendant engaged in a calculated course to negate the contract by disrupting the respondents' relationship with their attorney, enticing the petitioner with offers that exceeded the value the petitioner would have contractually received from the respondents, and seeking a judgment declaring the exchange void. Emmerson v. Walker, 2010 MT 167, 357 Mont. 166, 236 P.3d 598.

Governmental Entity Liable for Tortious Acts of Contractor Transporting Prisoners: Paul was a prisoner who was injured in an auto accident while being extradited to Park County by a private prisoner transportation service. The District Court summarily dismissed Paul's tort claim against the state and county for his injuries after the state and county argued that they owed Paull no actionable duty because the injuries were inflicted by the transportation company or its employees and that Paull's injuries were not foreseeable. The court concluded that the state owed Paull no duty because the state had no contractual or agency relationship with the company and that the county had no duty because a contractor-independent contractor relationship existed between the county and the company. Paull appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court first addressed the county's liability, considering whether the county had a contractor-independent contractor relationship with the company. Under Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348 (2000), an exception to the general rule that contractors are not liable for torts of their independent contractors applies if the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous. The District Court found that the activity in question was driving, which commonly is not an inherently dangerous activity, so the Beckman exception did not apply. The Supreme Court disagreed. Transportation of prisoners is more than just driving and is an inherently dangerous activity; therefore, under Beckman, a county or other governmental entity that contracts to have prisoners transported by an independent contractor may be held vicariously liable for injuries caused by the contractor. Any claim must still be established under the ordinary rules of negligence, requiring proof of the existence of a legal duty on the part of the contractor, breach of duty, causation, and damages. A contractor is not liable for every tort by an independent contractor engaged in inherently dangerous work, but only those torts that arise from risks caused by engaging in the dangerous activity. Here, the risk of driver misconduct was an inherent danger in the transportation of prisoners and part of the peculiar risk of harm arising from that activity. Likewise, the state had a duty to exercise ordinary care in returning Paull to Montana for probation revocation proceedings. Although the state was not strictly liable for any injury during prisoner transportation regardless of fault, the state may be held liable for tortious acts or omissions of its agents undertaking prisoner transportation if the state allows other entities to do the work. Because the acts or omissions of the transportation company for which the state or county might be liable were yet to be determined, summary judgment was inappropriate, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Paull v. Park County, 2009 MT 321, 352 M 465, 218 P3d 1198 (2009). However, see Stricker v. Blaine County, 2019 MT 280, 398 Mont. 43, 453 P.3d 897, holding that a county could not be held vicariously liable for a hospital's negligent treatment of an inmate in its custody.

No Duty of Care Owed by School District for Student's Unforeseeable Conduct: A student handed in a typing assignment that contained violent themes and unspecified threats. The student was counseled, but no subsequent actions were taken. About 17 months later, the student ran over a woman in an incident that resembled one of the themes in the typing assignment. The victim sued the school district for negligence, but summary judgment was granted for the school district on grounds that no duty was owed to the victim. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that, based on the facts known to the school district at the time of its allegedly negligent conduct, it was not foreseeable that 17 months later the student would intentionally run over a pedestrian off school grounds after school hours. The school district therefore had no duty to protect the victim from the student, so summary judgment for the school district was proper. Emanuel v. Great Falls School District, 2009 MT 185, 351 M 56, 209 P3d 244 (2009), distinguishing Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010 (2000).

Failure to Admit Person to Jail When Committed by Competent Authority Negligent Violation of Duty of Care: Russell violated the terms of his suspended sentence and was ordered to report to the county jail no later than 8 a.m. on December 28, 1998. When Russell appeared at the jail, a written order of commitment could not be found, so Russell was turned away. On December 30, Russell stabbed Prindel at a party, and Russell was sentenced to life in prison for attempted deliberate homicide. Prindel subsequently sued the county, alleging that the failure to incarcerate Russell on the 28th, despite a court order that Russell begin serving a sentence on that day, amounted to negligence that proximately caused Prindel's injury. The District Court granted summary judgment to the county, concluding that the county had no duty to prevent Russell from injuring Prindel and that the issue of causation need not be addressed. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The county's argument that it had no duty of care without a written order was without merit because the oral pronouncement of sentence constituted the competent authority to incarcerate Russell, and the jail's ignorance of the commitment order did not diminish the court order's status as a competent authority. The county had a special relationship of custody under 7-32-2205 to take Russell into custody for the protection of the public, and failure to do so was negligence as a matter of law. Russell posed a foreseeable risk, Prindel was a foreseeable plaintiff, and the county owed a duty to Prindel to exercise reasonable care to protect him against Russell. Reasonable minds could differ as to whether Russell's act of stabbing Prindel was so unforeseeable as to sever the chain of causation, so summary judgment for the county was error. Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006), following Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010 (2000).

No Showing That Defendants' Actions in School Bus Incident More Than Likely Caused Student's Physical and Mental Injuries — Factors in Judicial Determination of Duty of Care — Summary Dismissal of School District Liability Proper: A student returning home on a school bus from a performance with the school pep band asked the director to stop the bus so that the student could use the restroom, but the director refused. The student was subsequently disciplined by the school for various actions related to the incident and soon after became seriously ill. The student and his parents filed an action against the school district, the director, and the bus driver, alleging that various breaches of the duty of care triggered or accelerated the student's development of diabetes and caused his posttraumatic stress disorder. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The existence of a duty of care depends on the foreseeability of the risk and on a weighing of the policy considerations for and against the imposition of liability, including: (1) moral blame attributable to defendant's conduct; (2) prevention of future harm; (3) extent of the burden placed on defendant; (4) consequences to the public of imposing a duty; and (5) availability of insurance for the risk involved. Further, the law of torts holds a defendant liable only for injuries to others that were to the defendant at the time reasonably foreseeable. A defendant owes a duty with respect to risks and hazards whose likelihood made the conduct unreasonably dangerous and hence negligent in the first instance. The specific injury need not be foreseeable, rather the question is whether defendant could have foreseen that the conduct would result in injury to plaintiff. The District Court here concluded that defendants owed no duty of care because the student's injuries were not foreseeable, which was an erroneous focus on the particular injury rather than on the foreseeability that defendants' conduct could result in the injury. However, if a plaintiff fails to offer proof of any one of the elements of negligence—duty, breach, causation, and damages—then summary judgment in favor of defendant is proper. The question remained whether plaintiffs' experts adequately established causation, and the Supreme Court held that they did not. The experts testified that defendants' conduct could have caused or accelerated the student's injuries, but under Butler v. Domin, 2000 MT 312, 302 M 452, 15 P3d 1189 (2000), the testimony did not meet the threshold of establishing that defendants' actions more than likely caused the injuries. Absent a causal connection between defendants' actions and the student's injuries, summary judgment for defendants was proper. Hinkle v. Shepherd School District No. 37, 2004 MT 175, 322 M 80, 93 P3d 1239 (2004), distinguishing Kolar v. Bergo, 280 M 262, 929 P2d 867 (1996).

Three-Year Statute of Limitations Applicable to Breach of Bailment Obligation: Pursuant to a breach of a bailment agreement related to the transfer of 10 horses and tack, plaintiff filed a claim for the value of the property, asserting that under 27-2-202(2), 5 years were allowed to bring the claim as a breach of contract. The District Court concluded that the voluntary bailment agreement was not a contract, but rather an obligation, which was governed by the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-202(3), and because the claim was not brought within 3 years, summary judgment for defendants was appropriate. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Regardless of the fact that plaintiff characterized the claim as a breach of contract, there was no evidence of an expressed agreement for sale of the property, so defendants were obligated but not contractually required to account for the property. Plaintiff's election to sue on a contract theory did not operate to grant 2 additional years for plaintiff to assert her rights. The District Court's conclusion that plaintiff's action was not timely was correct. Demarest v. Broadhurst, 2004 MT 147, 321 M 470, 92 P3d 1168 (2004).

No Prejudicial Error in Failure to Give Negligent Homicide Mental State Instruction in Wrongful Death Action When Other Instructions Adequately Reflect Negligence: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for foreseeable negligence. To boost the theory of foreseeability, Samson offered a jury instruction that defined Bercier's conduct as reckless and postulated therefrom that the conduct was foreseeable because of Bercier's background, seeking to undermine the state's theory that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The District Court refused to offer the instruction, instead instructing the jury on elements of wrongful death, and Samson appealed. The state argued that the mental state of Bercier was not a controlling issue and contended that it was not necessary to instruct the jury on the mental state of negligent homicide because the instructions as a whole properly included the key concepts of a wrongful death action. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. The fundamental issue concerned the state's negligence, not Bercier's mental state. Nevertheless, Samson was still able to present the foreseeability theory under the instructions that were given, so failure to give Samson's offered instruction did not result in prejudice to Samson's case. It is within a District Court's discretion to decide how to instruct the jury, taking into account the theories of the contending parties, and absent an abuse of discretion, the District Court was affirmed. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996).

State Not Liable for Unforeseeable Accident — Intervening Criminal Act of Third Person — Expert Testimony on Foreseeability Proper: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for negligence. The jury returned a verdict for the state, and Samson appealed. Rather than retry the case and evaluate the facts to determine whether the state was negligent, the Supreme Court reviewed the verdict to determine if there was substantial evidence to support it and determined that there was. In order to sustain a negligence action, plaintiff must establish a legal duty on the part of defendant, a breach of that duty, causation, and damages. In cases involving a dispute over the intervening criminal act of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice—first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and second with regard to proximate causation. Samson contended that the District Court erred in allowing the state to present evidence in the form of expert testimony and to argue that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The state argued that the expert testimony was relevant and aided the jury. Given the need to determine the foreseeability of Bercier's actions, the expert testimony was properly allowed. Further, in cases alleging an intervening cause, juries must be instructed that the specific injury to plaintiff need not have been foreseen. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003), affirming Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and St. v. LaTray, 2000 MT 262, 302 M 11, 11 P3d 116 (2000).

No Tortious Interference With Business When Sublease Terminated Prior to Alleged Interference: Lessee Anderson filed a counterclaim against lessor Grenfell for tortiously interfering with Anderson's sublease of a portion of the leased property. However, the District Court correctly found that Anderson terminated the sublease prior to Grenfell's actions, so Grenfell could not be found to have interfered with a sublease that was no longer in effect. Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002).

Mortgage Against Party's Interest in Property Granted Pursuant to Dissolution — No Tortious Interference With Business, Prima Facie Tort, or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: When George and Joyce were divorced, the District Court granted George exclusive possession of the ranch until it could be sold and the proceeds divided between the parties. During the course of the dissolution proceedings, Joyce took out several loans for living expenses. After the dissolution, Joyce consolidated the $150,000 in loans, and the bank executed a mortgage on Joyce's interest in the ranch to secure the loan. When George found out about the mortgage and security interest, he became distraught because he believed that he would not be able to obtain loans on the property to enable him to conduct ranch obligations and meet his operations. George subsequently filed suit against Joyce, the bank, and the bank president, who was Joyce's son-in-law, alleging tortious interference with business relationships, prima facie tort, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, and George appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Applying Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277 (1995), the court concluded that the acts of Joyce and the bank were legal and that, standing alone, the acts did not give rise to any presumption or inference that the acts were done to harm George. The court also declined to recognize a separate cause of action for prima facie tort under the facts of this case. Applying Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the court further concluded that because the defendants' acts were legal, no claim for emotional distress could arise from those acts. Absent material facts evidencing malicious intent or damages, summary judgment was proper. Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001).

Improper Grant of Motion to Dismiss Legal Malpractice Suit for Failure to State Claim Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Hauschulz faced criminal charges in Billings, and while awaiting trial, he was extradited to Idaho on unrelated charges and incarcerated. The Michael Law Firm was hired to represent Hauschulz in the Billings proceedings, which Hauschulz could not attend. Instead of moving for dismissal of the charges unless Montana extradited Hauschulz, the law firm professed not to know where Hauschulz was and negotiated an unauthorized plea agreement on behalf of Hauschulz. Upon learning of the law firm's actions, Hauschulz filed a legal malpractice complaint alleging constitutional violations and requesting damages. The District Court dismissed the action on grounds that Hauschulz had failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, reasoning that no damages could be awarded because Hauschulz's problems all stemmed from the failure to appear at trial. Hauschulz appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond a doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim that would entitle the plaintiff to relief, and a dismissal will be affirmed by the Supreme Court only if plaintiff is not entitled to relief under any set of facts that would support the claim. As set out in Merzlake v. Purcell, 252 M 527, 830 P2d 1278 (1992), to recover damages in a legal malpractice claim, plaintiff must establish that: (1) the professional owed plaintiff a duty of care; (2) the professional breached the duty of care through failure to use reasonable care and skill; (3) plaintiff suffered an injury; and (4) the professional's conduct was the proximate cause of the injury. In this case, the Supreme Court found that each element was satisfied. Hauschulz might be able to prove a set of facts that would entitle him to relief and has stated a sufficient claim to survive a challenge under former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2001 MT 160, 306 M 102, 30 P3d 357 (2001). See also Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614 (1997).

Double Analysis of Foreseeability in Dispute Over Intervening Act of Third Party — Duty of Police to Protect Hospital Worker From Intoxicated Person in Voluntary Custody: Havre police received a report of two girls fighting downtown. They responded and found two intoxicated women fighting, one of whom appeared to require medical treatment. LaTray was working as a nurse at a hospital emergency room when police officers delivered the woman for treatment, accompanied by her sister. The injured woman was placed in protective custody, but neither woman was arrested. When attempting to administer medical care to the injured woman, LaTray was intentionally assaulted and injured by the sister, and LaTray filed an action against the city police officers for negligently failing to exercise proper control over the sister. The District Court found that because the intentional assault was not reasonably foreseeable as a matter of law, there was no duty owed LaTray by the city, and summary judgment was granted to the city. The Supreme Court held that intervening criminal acts of third persons are not automatically unforeseeable as a matter of law, but rather must be addressed in the foreseeability context on a case-by-case basis (see Starkenburgh v. St., 282 M 1, 934 P2d 1018 (1997)). Although foreseeability is ordinarily analyzed only under the duty element of negligence, in a dispute over intervening criminal acts of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice: first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and, second, with regard to proximate causation (see Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999)). The city relied on Phillips v. Billings, 233 M 249, 758 P2d 772 (1988), arguing that because LaTray did not claim the existence of a special relationship or otherwise show that the officers owed LaTray a greater duty of care than that owed to the general public, the city owed LaTray no duty of care. The Supreme Court noted that Phillips has been clarified in Nelson v. Driscoll, 1999 MT 193, 295 M 363, 983 P2d 972 (1999), which stated that a duty to protect third persons arises only when a police officer actually makes an arrest or otherwise takes possession or custody of an individual. Although the officers did not actually arrest the sister or otherwise have a basis for taking her into custody in this case, the officers voluntarily undertook possession or custody in transporting her to the hospital and consequently harbored the ability to control her actions and prevent an unreasonable risk of harm to third persons like LaTray, who falls within the scope of the risk that negligent supervision would foreseeably entail. Thus, the Supreme Court held that, as a matter of law, the city owed a duty of reasonable care to adequately supervise the sister so as to prevent harm to a third person who would foreseeably be placed within the scope of risk arising from negligent supervision. Whether the city breached that duty is an issue for the jury because the causal issue of intervening acts of third parties normally involves questions of fact. Viewed in the light most favorable to LaTray, there was sufficient evidence of the sister's irascible conduct to raise a jury question as to whether she posed a danger to those around her on the day in question, and reasonable jurors could differ as to whether she presented a foreseeable risk of injury to persons in her immediate vicinity. These contested issues of material fact precluded a grant of summary judgment as a matter of law, and the case was reversed and remanded for a new trial. LaTray v. Havre, 2000 MT 119, 299 M 449, 999 P2d 1010, 57 St. Rep. 497 (2000), followed, with regard to appropriateness of summary judgment on issues of negligence, in Prindel v. Ravalli County, 2006 MT 62, 331 M 338, 133 P3d 165 (2006). See also Morrow v. FBS Ins.

No Duty Constituting Negligence When Danger or Risk Unforeseeable — Summary Judgment Proper Absent Material Fact Regarding Legal Duty: The father could not reasonably foresee that, by giving his child permission to go to a friend's house to play, the child would go to the house of a different friend, participate along with other children in burning a photograph using gasoline, and be burned when another friend accidentally kicked the container of flaming gasoline onto his child. The duty element of negligence turns primarily on foreseeability, and if a reasonably prudent defendant can foresee neither any danger of direct injury nor any risk from an intervening cause, there is no negligence. Ordinarily, negligence actions involve questions of fact and are not susceptible to summary judgment, but in this case, reasonable minds could not differ regarding the absence of material fact regarding any duty owed by the father, so summary judgment was proper as a matter of law. Poole v. Poole, 2000 MT 117, 299 M 435, 1 P3d 936, 57 St. Rep. 489 (2000), following Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996). See also *Lopez v. Tort of Intentional Interference With Business Relations or Prospective Economic Advantage — Contract Between Parties Not Required: The elements of the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are identical with the tortious or intentional interference with contractual relations, consisting of acts that: (1) are intentional and willful; (2) are calculated to cause damage to plaintiff's business; (3) are done with the unlawful purpose of causing damage or loss without right or justifiable cause on the part of the actor; and (4) result in actual damages or loss. The key difference between the two tort theories is that unlike interference with contractual relations, intentional interference with either business relations or prospective economic advantage does not require that a contract exist between any of the involved parties. Rather, the focus of the legal inquiry is on the intentional acts of the malicious interloper in disrupting a business relationship, and "business" includes the reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship. Under the theory of intentional interference with either business relations or prospective economic advantage, a person who is involved in an economic relationship with another or who is pursuing reasonable and legitimate prospects of entering such a relationship is protected from a third person's wrongful conduct that is intended to disrupt the relationship. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000). The test for tortious interference was also applied in Stokes v. St., 2007 MT 169, 338 M 165, 162 P3d 865 (2007). See also Buckaloo v. Johnson, 537 P2d 865 (Calif. 1975), Bolz v. Myers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606 (1982), Ellis v. Valdez, 686 P2d 700 (Alaska 1984), and Sebena v. Am. Auto. Ass'n, 280 M 305, 930 P2d 51 (1996).

Special Relationship of Custody or Control by Prerelease Center — Responsibility for Public Safety Within Zone of Risk — Foreseeability: A prerelease center entered a contract with the Department of Corrections to supervise residents like Gardipee, who walked away from the center and subsequently injured Lopez. The District Court granted summary judgment for the center on grounds that the attack on Lopez was unforeseeable. Generally, there is no duty to protect others against harm by third persons, but in this case, the contract created a special relationship of custody or control, in turn creating a special responsibility upon the center to protect those members of the public who would be placed within the foreseeable zone of risk created by negligent supervision of a prerelease resident. As a matter of law, the center owed a duty of reasonable care to all persons present within the zone of danger created by the center's failure to exercise reasonable care in supervising Gardipee. Here, reasonable minds could differ as to whether it was reasonably foreseeable by the center that a failure to supervise Gardipee could pose an unreasonable risk of harm to Lopez in particular. There was a genuine issue of material fact as to whether the center knew or should have known that there was enmity between Gardipee and Lopez and a possibility of violence if Gardipee escaped, as well as whether Gardipee's attack was a superseding cause of the harm to Lopez. Both questions were suitable for resolution by a trier of fact, precluding summary judgment. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a trial on the merits. Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081, 56 St. Rep. 771 (1999).

Foreseeability to Be Considered Part of Analysis of Duty: The trial court refused to give Columbus Hospital's proposed jury instruction on proximate cause and also did not instruct the jury on foreseeability even though the hospital contended that the Supreme Court had included foreseeability as an element of proximate cause in Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990). The Supreme Court, after a lengthy discussion of duty, proximate cause, and foreseeability and after examining the statutory definitions of duty and proximate cause, held that foreseeability is to be considered as part of the analysis of duty rather than proximate cause. The Supreme Court further held that it was reversing that part of Kitchen Krafters that requires a two-tiered analysis of causation that includes consideration of foreseeability in cases other than those cases in which there has been an allegation that the chain of causation is severed by an independent, intervening cause. Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996), followed in *Lopez v. Failure of Attorney to Obtain Title Report: The plaintiffs had retained the defendant to draft a real estate purchase agreement for them. The attorney (defendant) suggested that the seller place a title report in escrow. The buyers (plaintiffs) failed to obtain the title report, and subsequently they lost the property when they were unable to refinance it because of a defect in the legal description. The Supreme Court affirmed that the attorney owed no duty to the plaintiffs beyond drafting the purchase agreement. Boles v. Simonton, 242 M 394, 791 P2d 755, 47 St. Rep. 793 (1990).

Oral Lease as Contract Establishing Obligations: An oral farm lease under which both parties recognized and fulfilled responsibilities relating to crop sharing, farming methods, and farm subsidy programs for 15 years was a sufficient contract through which each party acquired its respective obligations and breach of which formed a proper basis for award of damages and costs of suit. Albers v. Bar ZF Ranch, Inc., 229 M 396, 747 P2d 1347, 44 St. Rep. 2081 (1987).

Proper Quantum for Architect's Services: Under a contract with a landowner who wished to build housing units on the land, an architect prepared plans and specifications that were approved by landowner. Under the contract, the architect was to receive 5% of the construction cost. Following abandonment of the project, he was entitled to a fee based on quantum meruit. The proper recovery was the number of hours of service, 600, times the architect's hourly rate, $30, or $18,000. It was improper for the court to hold that the architect was entitled to only $10,000 based on the value of his services. Kenneth D. Collins Agency v. Hagerott, 211 M 303, 684 P2d 487, 41 St. Rep. 1375 (1984).

Breach of Contract — Interference With Business: Defendant breached a contract to sell business property to plaintiff and not to compete and subsequently interfered with the conduct of plaintiff's business. Defendant is liable not only for breach of the contract between himself and plaintiff but also for the tort of intentional interference with a contractual or business relationship between plaintiff and his potential customers. Bolz v. Myers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606, 39 St. Rep. 1747 (1982), followed in Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277, 52 St. Rep. 667 (1995).

Attorney General's Opinions

Encumbrance of Funds — Valid Obligation: The Coal Board may encumber funds at the close of a fiscal year only by incurring a "valid obligation" against them under 17-7-302. The Coal Board does not incur a valid obligation against its appropriation by inviting a full application for a grant after screening a preapplication since it is not legally bound to approve the application. 40 A.G. Op. 4 (1983).

27-1-106. Injury defined.

Case Notes

Some Injury Occurred During Policy Period — Asbestos Claimants Covered: The plaintiff insurance company provided the defendant, the state of Montana, with a comprehensive general liability policy from 1973 to 1976. In 2000, Libby Mine claimants started suing the state for its regulatory role of the Libby Mine based on the theory that the state had failed to warn them of the danger of asbestos exposure. The District Court held that claimants who were exposed only before the policy period could not qualify for coverage. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed this holding, ruling that a claimant could be covered if it could be determined that some injury did occur during the policy period. Accordingly, it remanded the matter to the District Court for further proceedings to implement the holding. Nat'l Indemnity Co. v. St., 2021 MT 300, 406 Mont. 288, 499 P.3d 516.

Application of Improper Paint to Water Treatment Center Pipes — Definition of Physical Injury in Context of Commercial General Liability Insurance Contract: Plaintiff entered a contract with the city of Libby for construction of a water treatment plant. Plaintiff then entered a subcontract with defendant to paint the filter tanks and pipes at the plant. Plaintiff was listed as an additional insured on defendant's commercial general liability insurance policy. Defendant used an improper paint, and the city sued plaintiff as the general contractor for repainting costs. The insurer refused to defend or indemnify plaintiff, claiming that policy exclusions precluded coverage for the city's claim. Plaintiff successfully argued in District Court that the exclusions applied only to defendant as the named insured. On appeal, the Supreme Court considered whether the policy language referring to physical injury to tangible property covered the application of improper paint, concluding that the policy applied. Physical injury refers to a physical and material alteration resulting in a detriment. The policy covered property damage, including loss of use, and application of the improper paint physically and materially altered the tanks and pipes, resulting in a detriment to the city. The District Court was affirmed. Swank Enterprises, Inc. v. All Purpose Serv., Ltd., 2007 MT 57, 336 M 197, 154 P3d 52 (2007), following Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203 (1984).

Interest Properly Imposed on Restitution Obligation: Brewer embezzled over $96,000 and was ordered to pay restitution to the employer, including 10% interest on the restitution obligation. Brewer contended that interest in this case was per se an abuse of discretion insofar as it exceeded the employer's pecuniary loss. The issue of whether interest may be properly applied to restitution under 46-18-241 was a case of first impression in Montana. Interest is not expressly provided for by the restitution statute, which provides for restitution to a victim who suffers a pecuniary loss, defined in 46-18-243 as special damages, but not general damages, that a person could recover in a civil action arising out of the facts constituting the criminal activity. Interest is a special damage available in a civil action under 27-1-210 and thus was properly applied to Brewer's restitution. However, interest is not allowed on damages such as pain and suffering, mental anguish or suffering, or punitive damages. St. v. Brewer, 1999 MT 269, 296 M 453, 989 P2d 407, 56 St. Rep. 1090 (1999).

Liability for Issuance of Conflicting Title Insurance Policies — Due Diligence Standard Applicable to Title Examination Resulting in Loss: Based on information in Realty Title Company's (Realty's) own records and abstract plant, a reasonably diligent inquiry would have disclosed that a survey had been completed and filed of record for purposes of defining the tract of land covered by the Turks' policy. When Realty later insured Weibert for the same tract, it violated the rule in Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982). Realty's own record and abstract plant put it on sufficient notice of a possible defect in Weibert's title, and Realty was therefore obligated to inquire further prior to issuing a title insurance policy insuring the same tract. Failing twice to do so, Realty breached the obligation under the agency contract to exercise due diligence in the title examination and was liable for the subsequent loss. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Title Insurers' Failure to Disclose Easements — Insured's Pecuniary Loss: Landowner suffered a substantial pecuniary loss when his title insurers failed to inform him of ditch rights and easements that landowner had to pay $46,000 to purchase in order to remove the defects to his title. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982). The Lipinski rule, requiring due diligence in title examination, was applied in Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Breach of Contract — Interference With Business: Defendant breached a contract to sell business property to plaintiff and not to compete and subsequently interfered with the conduct of plaintiff's business. Defendant is liable not only for breach of the contract between himself and plaintiff but also for the tort of intentional interference with a contractual or business relationship between plaintiff and his potential customers. Bolz v. Myers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606, 39 St. Rep. 1747 (1982), followed in Farrington v. Buttrely Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277, 52 St. Rep. 667 (1995).

Case Notes

Available Remedies When No Contractual Limitation: In the absence of a contractual provision expressly limiting the remedies available, a party may pursue any remedy that law or equity affords, as well as the remedies specified in the contract. Glacier Campground v. Wild Rivers, Inc., 182 M 389, 597 P2d 689 (1978).

Unlicensed Photographers: The taking of photographs, either by licensed or unlicensed photographers, not being a nuisance, an injunction could not be had to prevent the activities of unlicensed photographers. St. Bd. of Examiners v. Keller, 120 M 364, 185 P2d 503 (1947).

Part 2 Damages

Part Case Notes

No Duty to Defend Under Property Damage Clause — “Property Damage” Defined as Loss of Use of Tangible Property Not Physically Injured — Allegation of Economic Loss Does Not Constitute Loss of Use. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Minemyer, 2023 MT 138, 413 Mont. 60, 532 P.3d 837.

Tort of Malicious Prosecution Occurs on Commencement of Judicial Proceeding on Which Malicious Prosecution Claim Is Based. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Minemyer, 2023 MT 138, 413 Mont. 60, 532 P.3d 837.

Complaint Fails to Allege Fact That, If Proven, Would Result in Coverage — No Duty to Defend: The petitioning insurer filed a declaratory judgment action to determine whether it had a duty to defend. As the insurer had no knowledge of facts outside the complaint that could potentially trigger coverage, the complaint and policy constituted the universe with regard to the insurer's duty to defend. If there is no coverage under the terms of the policy based on the facts of the complaint, there is no duty to defend. Fire Ins. Exch. v. Weitzel, 2016 MT 113, 383 Mont. 364, 371 P.3d 457. See also Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Minemyer, 2023 MT 138, 413 Mont. 60, 532 P.3d 837.

Objection to Damage Calculation Not Preserved for Appeal — Sufficient Evidence That Prevailing Party Mitigated Damages: The uninsured employers' fund (UEF) breached a contract and the District Court awarded consequential damages to the prevailing party. On appeal, UEF claimed that the District Court did not properly calculate damages based on two grounds. First, UEF claimed the District Court awarded gross damages rather than net damages. Second, UEF claimed the District Court should have offset any damages that it awarded given that the party that was awarded damages did not mitigate its damages by selling inventory to other dealers. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that UEF did not preserve the net damages argument based on a failure to object at trial. Additionally, the testimonial evidence supported the District Court's determination that the prevailing party could not sell its inventory to other dealers. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Award for Damages for Breach of Letter of Agreement Improper Absent Valid Contractual Interest — Remand for New Trial: Plaintiff was awarded $2.5 million based on defendant's alleged breach of a letter of agreement to grant plaintiff an option to develop certain oil and gas interests after the jury found that the letter of agreement was not a contract. The Supreme Court reversed the award. Although there was sufficient evidence for the jury to conclude that plaintiff suffered $2.5 million in damages from the sale of the development rights, plaintiff was entitled to damages only if the letter created some right or interest in the development rights. However, because there was no extant contractual obligation running from defendant to plaintiff with respect to the development property, there was no legal basis for the damage award. The jury was confused about available remedies and rendered an inconsistent verdict that could not be reconciled with the evidence, argument, and legal theories presented at trial, which violated the constitutional rights of the litigants to a fair trial. Therefore, the case was reversed and remanded to the District Court for a new trial. D.R. Four Beat Alliance, LLC v. Sierra Prod. Co., 2009 MT 319, 352 M 435, 218 P3d 827 (2009).

No Error in Refusal to Give Damage Instructions When No Negligence Found: The trial court in a medical malpractice case did not err in refusing to give jury instructions regarding damages when the jury found no medical negligence. No reversible error can be predicated on damage instructions when a jury does not reach the issue of damages. Harris v. Hanson, 2009 MT 13, 349 M 29, 201 P3d 151 (2009).

Award of Restoration Damages in Excess of Market Value of Real Property: Defendant's refinery contaminated property and ground water in Sunburst, Montana, over a period of many years. Following trial, the District Court held defendant strictly liable as a matter of law for conducting an abnormally dangerous activity and found that defendant's trespass extended to all Sunburst plaintiffs who owned property above the contamination plume. Part of the damage award included costs reasonably necessary to restore plaintiffs' property to the condition that it would have been absent defendant's contamination. Citing Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966), defendant contended that restoration damages may not exceed the market value of the property. The Supreme Court distinguished Spackman because it dealt with readily replaceable items of personal property with an established market value. Instead, the court cited Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443 (1990), and adopted Restatement (Second) of Torts 929 for calculating damages for injuries to real property. The Restatement explains that restoration damages may be recoverable even though they might be greater than the entire value of the property and allows a trial court to craft an appropriate remedy to restore plaintiffs' property to the condition that it would have been had the wrong not occurred. Restoration awards may compensate a plaintiff more effectively than diminution in value when diminution in value fails to provide an adequate remedy. In this case, the jury awarded plaintiffs $15 million in restoration damages, and the Supreme Court affirmed the award as reasonable under the circumstances. The award was not viewed as a windfall because testimony indicated that the entire award would be used to repair the damaged property. Additionally, the fact that one collateral beneficiary was a plaintiff school district did not defeat an award of restoration damages because defendant could not remediate the ground water beneath the personal residences owned by other plaintiffs without also treating the ground water beneath the school. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007). See also Lampi v. Speed, 2011 MT 231, 362 Mont. 122, 261 P.3d 1000, in which the Supreme Court, applying and clarifying Sunburst and the restoration damages rule set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts 929, concluded that the District Court wrongly denied the plaintiff's motion to establish restoration damages as the appropriate measure of damages in the plaintiff's lawsuit to recover damages for lost trees and vegetation, and McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that a property owner may seek to recover restoration costs for a commercial family ranch, where the family lives and earns its living, in the same manner that a property owner may recover restoration damages for recreational or residential use.

Failure to Provide Trial Transcript Precluding Review of Compensatory Damage Award and Jury Instructions: Plaintiff asserted that the trial court erred by failing to grant plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on the jury's award of zero compensatory damages for pain and suffering and by refusing to allow the issue to go to the jury, contending that a new trial was necessary to protect the right to full legal redress. Plaintiff stated at least 14 times on appeal that evidence of pain and suffering was uncontroverted. However, plaintiff's counsel neglected to submit a trial transcript on appeal or to follow the alternative transcript submission procedures set out in former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), relying instead on District Court minutes and evidence of injuries as opposed to evidence of pain and suffering. Without a trial transcript, the Supreme Court was unable to address the merits of plaintiff's appeal, so the District Court was affirmed. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

Introduction by Defendant of Nonparty Conduct Allowed Only to Show That Conduct Was Superseding Intervening Cause of Plaintiff's Damages: Elisha was killed while riding on Jason's motorcycle after Jason failed to negotiate a turn. Elisha's parents sued the state for negligence in constructing and maintaining the road. Although he was a nonparty, the state sought to introduce evidence of Jason's alleged intoxication, excessive speed, and misaimed headlight. The state recognized that Montana law precludes a defendant from apportioning liability to a nonparty, but argued that evidence of Jason's conduct was admissible to negate causation pursuant to Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002), and to rebut breach of duty. The District Court disallowed the evidence. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. After revisiting Pula, the court concluded that a defendant may introduce nonparty conduct only to demonstrate that the conduct was a superseding intervening cause of plaintiff's damages, which means an unforeseeable event that occurs after the defendant's original act of negligence. The question then became whether Jason's conduct was foreseeable and whether the state, as the entity that designed and maintained the road, might reasonably have foreseen as probable that Jason might drive in a negligent manner. The court cited Buck v. St., 222 M 423, 723 P2d 210 (1986), for the holding that driver error is anticipated and that the fact that a driver was arguably negligent does not cut off the state's liability for negligence in the design and maintenance of a road. Faulconbridge v. St., 2006 MT 198, 333 M 186, 142 P3d 777 (2006), followed in Larchick v. Diocese of Gt. Falls-Billings, 2009 MT 175, 350 M 538, 208 P3d 836 (2009).

Violation of Federal Railroad Safety Regulations Negligence Per Se — Evidence of Contributory Negligence Disallowed: Railroad employee Woods accompanied track supervisor Holloway to inspect a section of track. Holloway exceeded the authorized limits of the track warrant and proceeded another 4 miles down the track where the inspection vehicle was struck by a train and Woods was killed. Following an investigation, the railroad concluded that Holloway's violation of the working limits caused Woods's death. Woods's widow moved for partial summary judgment that the railroad was negligent per se, but the motion was denied. The widow then requested a ruling that Woods was not contributorily negligent, but the motion was denied as untimely. The jury found that Woods was 50% negligent, and the award to the widow was reduced by half. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) governing the case is a remedial statute, the specific intent of which is to prevent railroad accidents and casualties. Federal railroad administration regulations are reviewed and construed as a comprehensive scheme of protection for railroad workers, and an interpretation of federal railroad administration regulations that leads to an unreasonable or absurd result will be rejected in favor of an interpretation that leads to a reasonable result. To conclude that federal railroad administration regulations define working limits but do not prohibit exceeding them would lead to an absurd result. Thus, the trial court erred in concluding that violation of the working limits of the track warrant was not negligence per se. FELA also provides that an employee will not be held liable for contributory negligence when a railroad's violation of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to an employee's injury or death, and the restriction against the use of contributory negligence as a defense applies to regulation violations as well, so it was also error for the trial court to allow the railroad to argue Woods's contributory negligence. The case was remanded for judgment reinstating the entire jury award. Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 2004 MT 332, 324 M 151, 104 P3d 1037 (2004), following Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273 (1998), and distinguished in Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

Award of Injunction and Damages in Same Case — No Error: A subdivision developer was found to have been negligent and in breach of contract with the purchaser of two subdivision lots for failing to record a restrictive covenant prohibiting commercial use and for the resulting diminution in property value when another subdivision tenant operated an auto body shop in the subdivision. The jury held the developer liable for damages, and a permanent injunction was issued against the auto body shop operator, who complained that the award of both damages and an injunction resulted in double recovery. The Supreme Court disagreed. Montana law does not prohibit awarding money damages and an injunction in the same case. Both were justified here, and the award of both was affirmed. Rice v. C.I. Lanning, 2004 MT 237, 322 M 487, 97 P3d 580 (2004), followed in St. James Healthcare v. Cole, 2008 MT 44, 341 M 368, 178 P3d 696 (2008).

No Duty to Defend Property Damage or Fraud Claim When No Property Damage or Fraud Asserted: Defendant contended that plaintiff insurer had a duty to defend and provide coverage under defendant's commercial general liability policy, which provided coverage for property damages. However, the claim did not seek compensation for property damages for physical injury to tangible property, but rather for sums fraudulently paid to defendant based on a breach of contract. Because allegations in the complaint did not set forth facts that brought the event within the policy provisions and specifically excluded coverage for a fraud claim, the insurer had no duty to defend the claim. Generali-U.S. Branch v. Alexander, 2004 MT 81, 320 M 450, 87 P3d 1000 (2004), following Graber v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 244 M 265, 797 P2d 214 (1990). See also Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Minemyer, 2023 MT 138, 413 Mont. 60, 532 P.3d 837, holding that claims for purely economic loss do not create a duty to defend against property damage when no direct physical injury occurred.

No Error in Giving Jury Instructions Regarding Intervening Cause When Jury Did Not Consider Issue: Pula sued the state for negligence related to an incident of rape of Pula by another inmate while Pula was incarcerated in Blaine County jail. The District Court's special verdict form required jurors to answer a series of questions on breach of duty, causation, and damages, and then, depending on the answers, to move on to succeeding questions, one of which was the issue of whether there was an intervening cause. Pula asserted error in that the instructions on independent intervening causation were incorrect statements of the law. However, the first question for the jury was whether the state was negligent, which was answered affirmatively, so the jury moved on to the second question, which was whether the negligence resulted in Pula's injuries. The answer was negative, so the jury was instructed not to consider the third question, which was whether there was an intervening cause. Because the jury never considered the issue of intervening cause in reaching its verdict, the instructions on intervening cause had no effect on the outcome of the trial. The Supreme Court declined to assign reversible error to instructions addressing an issue that was never reached. Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002). See also Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 333, 613 P2d 1007 (1980).

Improper Grant of Motion to Dismiss Legal Malpractice Suit for Failure to State Claim Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Hauschulz faced criminal charges in Billings, and while awaiting trial, he was extradited to Idaho on unrelated charges and incarcerated. The Michael Law Firm was hired to represent Hauschulz in the Billings proceedings, which Hauschulz could not attend. Instead of moving for dismissal of the charges unless Montana extradited Hauschulz, the law firm professed not to know where Hauschulz was and negotiated an unauthorized plea agreement on behalf of Hauschulz. Upon learning of the law firm's actions, Hauschulz filed a legal malpractice complaint alleging constitutional violations and requesting damages. The District Court dismissed the action on grounds that Hauschulz had failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, reasoning that no damages could be awarded because Hauschulz's problems all stemmed from the failure to appear at trial. Hauschulz appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond a doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim that would entitle the plaintiff to relief, and a dismissal will be affirmed by the Supreme Court only if plaintiff is not entitled to relief under any set of facts that would support the claim. As set out in Merzlak v. Purcell, 252 M 527, 830 P2d 1278 (1992), to recover damages in a legal malpractice claim, plaintiff must establish that: (1) the professional owed plaintiff a duty of care; (2) the professional breached the duty of care through failure to use reasonable care and skill; (3) plaintiff suffered an injury; and (4) the professional's conduct was the proximate cause of the injury. In this case, the Supreme Court found that each element was satisfied. Hauschulz might be able to prove a set of facts that would entitle him to relief and has stated a sufficient claim to survive a challenge under former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2001 MT 160, 306 M 102, 30 P3d 357 (2001). See also Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614 (1997).

FELA — Stipulation That Jury Awards Not Be Added Together — Greater Award Subsuming Smaller Awards: Under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60, an injured railroad worker is entitled to recover damages if the negligence of the railroad played any part, no matter how slight, in causing the injury or death for which damages are sought. In the present case, the jury found independent railroad negligence and causation in each of three work-related incidents that played a part in the condition of Bevacqua's knee. Under FELA, Bevacqua was entitled to judgment of $200,000 for a 1973 injury, $320,000 for a 1980 injury, and $40,000 for a 1990 injury. However, the parties stipulated that the jury awards for each incident would not be added together, precluding any double recovery. The Supreme Court held that Bevacqua was entitled to $320,000, the greatest of the jury awards, and that under the terms of the stipulation, the smaller awards were subsumed in the greater award. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), following Rogers v. Mo. Pac. RR Co., 352 US 500, 1 L Ed 2d 493, 77 S Ct 443 (1957).

Injury to Tangible Property Required Before Economic Loss Covered — Plagiarism: After arriving at a settlement agreement based on a charge of plagiarism, an insured sought recovery from his insurance company under a business policy that provided that the company would "pay on behalf of the insured all sums which the insured shall become legally obligated to pay as damages because of bodily injury, property damage or personal injury caused by an occurrence to which the insurance applies". When the insurer refused to pay, the District Court properly granted summary judgment to the company because the charges of plagiarism did not allege direct physical injury to tangible property, but alleged only economic loss. The longstanding rule in Montana is that in order for economic losses to be covered by insurance, a direct physical injury to tangible property must occur. Graber v. St. Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 244 M 265, 797 P2d 214, 47 St. Rep. 1595 (1990).

Damaged Party to Mitigate Damages — Reasonable Expectations: A damaged party is only expected to do what is reasonable under the circumstances to mitigate his damages and need not embark on a course of action that may cause further detriment to him. Romain v. Earl Schwartz Co., 238 M 500, 779 P2d 54, 46 St. Rep. 1450 (1989).

Duty of Plaintiff When Multiple Causes of Damage Appear: The Supreme Court cited Valley Inland Pac. Constructors, Inc. v. Clackamas Water District, 603 P2d 1381 (Oreg. 1979), in holding that when more than one possible cause of damage appears, the plaintiff must eliminate causes other than those for which the defendant is responsible. Failure to separate causes and damage barred plaintiff from arguing proximate cause. Young v. Flathead County, 232 M 274, 757 P2d 772, 45 St. Rep. 1047 (1988), followed in USF&G v. Camp, 253 M 64, 831 P2d 586, 49 St. Rep. 372 (1992).

Comparison of Conduct in Ascertaining Damages: Willful or wanton conduct may be compared with like conduct for the purpose of ascertaining damages. Refusing an offered instruction on comparing like conduct was error. Gurnsey v. Conklin Co., Inc., 230 M 42, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988), citing Simonson v. White, 220 M 14, 713 P2d 983, 43 St. Rep. 133 (1986).

Award of Grossly Excessive and Disproportionate Damages — Based on Passion or Prejudice: A jury award of $5 million in punitive damages, which was found to be 20,000% above the award for economic damage caused insured and 5,000% more than the maximum of the insurance policy, was held to be so grossly excessive and disproportionate to the injury as to shock one's conscience. Noting that appellate courts in most jurisdictions, including Montana, ordinarily defer to the discretion of the factfinder when reviewing punitive damage awards, the court found that as a matter of law this award must have been determined by passion or prejudice. On remittitur, the judgment was modified to an award of $1 million total. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986). In a strong dissent, Mr. Justice Morrison noted no reversible error on any liability question and pointed out that up to this time "there is little, if any, precedent supporting the Montana Supreme Court substituting its judgment for that of the jury. Unfortunately that strong support for the jury system has now been dynamited. The majority announces loud and clear that from this day forward, four justices, robed in judicial omniscience, will replace our jury." Mr. Justice Sheehy, also dissenting, said that the "deleterious effect of the opinion in this case is its announcement that the right of a jury to set damages is hereafter subject to the consent of the majority of this Court".

Overgrazing Damages Remanded — No Offset — Open Range Law: The District Court ruled that Helehan was liable for $3,000 in overgrazing damages caused to Ueland's property by horses allowed on Helehan's land and that Ueland was not entitled to reimbursement for a $3,000 fence. The court offset these amounts. The Supreme Court remanded, finding that the costs did not offset since damages flowed from Helehan to Ueland but not from Ueland to Helehan. However, the error was harmless since under Montana's open range law Helehan could not be legally obligated to restrain the horses and could not be held liable for damages occurring prior to the time the fence was built. Helehan v. Ueland, 223 M 228, 725 P2d 1192, 43 St. Rep. 1679 (1986).

Determination of Damages — "Good Sense": A District Court faced with widely varying estimates of value for services performed on an oral contract "split the difference" as a setoff to a recovery. The Supreme Court, recalling its decision in Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966), found that formulas may serve as useful guides in determining damages, but that the final answer rests in good sense rather than mechanical application of formulas. The "compromise" developed by the District Court was found to be well in line with contract principles. Hostetter v. Donlan, 221 M 380, 719 P2d 1243, 43 St. Rep. 909 (1986).

Loss of Future Profits — Breach of Contract: Although determination of loss of future profits is often speculative, when injury caused by a breach of contract is certain, damages for lost profits may be awarded even though the amount of damages is uncertain. Hostetter v. Donlan, 221 M 380, 719 P2d 1243, 43 St. Rep. 909 (1986), followed in Van Riper v. Ford New Holland, Inc., 261 M 206, 862 P2d 47, 50 St. Rep. 1289 (1993).

Duty to Mitigate Damages — Procedure at Trial: A nondefaulting party in a contractual arrangement must act reasonably under the circumstances so as not to unnecessarily enlarge damages caused by a default. Whether the duty to mitigate damages was violated is for the trier of fact when the evidence conflicts, and the Supreme Court's function is to review the record to determine if there is substantial credible evidence to support the trial court's finding. Since the trial court's order and supporting memo did not include findings on the duty to mitigate or the reasonableness of the nondefaulting party's actions in consuming or destroying wine he did not sell after wine broker terminated wine distributorship contract, the damages award to nondefaulting party for unsold wine it consumed or destroyed was vacated and the issue remanded for further consideration. Bronken's Good Time Co. v. J. W. Brown & Associates, 203 M 427, 661 P2d 861, 40 St. Rep. 549 (1983), followed in Fordyce v. Musick, 245 M 315, 800 P2d 1045, 47 St. Rep. 2137 (1990).

Mitigation of Damages — Instruction Not Warranted: State Farm brought suit against Shahrokhfar in connection with an auto accident. Shahrokhfar notified State Farm that he was the wrong person and failed to defend the action. State Farm pursued the suit to a default judgment that resulted in Shahrokhfar losing his driver's license. Shahrokhfar then sued State Farm. The jury was instructed on the issue of plaintiff's comparative negligence for failure to retain counsel and defend the suit brought by State Farm. The court properly refused to instruct on mitigation of damages; such an instruction would be repetitious and potentially confusing. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

No Reversible Error on Damage Instructions When Jury Does Not Reach Issue: When the jury does not reach the issue of damages, on appeal no reversible error can be predicated on damage instructions. Stenberg v. Neel, 188 M 133, 613 P2d 1007 (1980). See also Pula v. St., 2002 MT 9, 308 M 122, 40 P3d 364 (2002).

Emotional Distress Damages Properly Awarded by Jury for Property-Related Distress — Plaintiffs Showed Personal-Identity Connection to Family Farms — No Physical Injury Required for Claim Rooted in Tort — Sufficient Evidence Supports Jury Award — No Abuse of Discretion. Romo v. Shirley, 2022 MT 249, 411 Mont. 111, 522 P.3d 401, following Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 Mont. 213, 994 P.2d 1124, and Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169, and distinguished in Childress v. Costco Wholesale Corp., 2021 MT 192, 405 Mont. 113, 493 P.3d 314.

Availability of Parasitic Damages for Personal Property Damage or Loss — Certified Question Answered in Negative: After routine tire work on a family's car, the defendant gave the car to a thief posing as a member of the family. He stole personal property from the car. The family sued in federal court on claims of bailment and negligence with claims for emotional distress damages. The defendant moved to exclude the damages on the ground that state law does not permit the damages as parasitic to claims for negligent damage to personal property. The Ninth Circuit court certified the question whether parasitic emotional distress damages are available for an underlying neglected claim for personal property damage or loss. The Supreme Court agreed with the family that Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 Mont. 464, 215 P.3d 649, does not limit parasitic damages to loss of real property, but noted that the family did not establish the basis for parasitic emotional distress damages the Supreme Court approved in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 Mont. 213, 994 P.2d 1124. The Supreme Court noted that the property lost appeared to be fungible personal property and answered the question posed by the Ninth Circuit Court in the negative. Childress v. Costco Wholesale Corp., 2021 MT 192, 405 Mont. 113, 493 P.3d 314.

Deterioration Leading to Fire Not "Occurrence" Under Policy: The defendant installed a faulty water heater that caused a fire in a restaurant, and the restaurant sought indemnification from the defendant. At the time of the installation, the defendant was covered by a commercial general liability policy; however, the policy had expired by the time the fire occurred, 3 years later. The defendant's insurance carrier, the plaintiff, denied coverage and filed a petition for declaratory relief. The plaintiff argued that the damage to property had occurred after the policy had lapsed. The defendant argued that the deterioration of the heater that ultimately caused the fire was "property damage" under the policy and occurred at the time the policy was in effect. The District Court granted summary judgment to the plaintiff, holding that deterioration of the water heater was not "property damage" under the policy. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that because no property damage had occurred during the policy, no "occurrence" triggering coverage had occurred. Truck Ins. Exchange v. O'Mailia, 2015 MT 42, 378 Mont. 231, 343 P.3d 1183.

Applicable Standard for Evaluating Damages for Parasitic Emotional Distress Claims—Sacco Standard Applicable Only to Independent Claims of Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: The "serious or severe" standard for emotional distress announced in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P.2d 411 (1995), applies only to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. For claims of emotional distress as an element of damage for an underlying tort claim, known as parasitic emotional distress damages, the Supreme Court adopted the standard set forth in Montana Pattern Jury Instruction 25.02, 15.01-03, as cited in Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P.3d 186 (2008), that when emotional distress damages are allowed in the absence of independent tort claims, an instruction should be given that the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental and emotional suffering and distress. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P.3d 649 (2009), followed in Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P.3d 1 (2009), and McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, and overruling Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P.2d 209 (1984), Noonan v. First Bank Butte, 227 M 329, 740 P.2d 631 (1987), First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P.2d 84 (1989), and similar cases that suggest that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

Application of Improper Paint to Water Treatment Center Pipes — Definition of Physical Injury in Context of Commercial General Liability Insurance Contract: Plaintiff entered a contract with the city of Libby for construction of a water treatment plant. Plaintiff then entered a subcontract with defendant to paint the filter tanks and pipes at the plant. Plaintiff was listed as an additional insured on defendant's commercial general liability insurance policy. Defendant used an improper paint, and the city sued plaintiff as the general contractor for repainting costs. The insurer refused to defend or indemnify plaintiff, claiming that policy exclusions precluded coverage for the city's claim. Plaintiff successfully argued in District Court that the exclusions applied only to defendant as the named insured. On appeal, the Supreme Court considered whether the policy language referring to physical injury to tangible property covered the application of improper paint, concluding that the policy applied. Physical injury refers to a physical and material alteration resulting in a detriment. The policy covered property damage, including loss of use, and application of the improper paint physically and materially altered the tanks and pipes, resulting in a detriment to the city. The District Court was affirmed. Swank Enterprises, Inc. v. All Purpose Serv., Ltd., 2007 MT 57, 336 M 197, 154 P3d 52 (2007), following Lindsay Drilling v. USF&G, 208 M 91, 676 P2d 203 (1984).

Emotional Distress Over Loss of Adult Child Not So Severe as to Be Compensable: Plaintiff argued that she suffered extreme emotional distress as the result of her son's death, allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. Applying the test for emotional distress in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the District Court held that plaintiff's emotional distress was insufficiently severe to support her claim, so defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that plaintiff's testimony that "life goes on" and that it was a loss that she "must learn to deal with" showed a philosophical strength that would likely be absent in a case of severe emotional distress. Plaintiff's emotional distress was not so severe as to rise to the level of a compensable claim, so the District Court was affirmed. Renville v. Fredrickson, 2004 MT 324, 324 M 86, 101 P3d 773 (2004).

Marital Status Discrimination — Award for Emotional Damages Affirmed: For the most part, federal case law involving antidiscrimination statutes draws a distinction between emotional distress claims in tort versus those in discrimination complaints (see Bolden v. SE. Pa. Transp. Authority, 21 F3d 29 (3rd Cir. 1994), Walz v. Town of Smithtown, 46 F3d 162 (2nd Cir. 1995), and Chatman v. Slagle, 107 F3d 380 (6th Cir. 1997)). The standard of proof of independent actions for emotional distress in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), that emotional distress damages may be awarded only if there is a substantial invasion of a legally protected interest that causes a significant impact upon the claimant, does not apply in a discrimination context pursuant to Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Rather, compensatory damages for human rights claims may be awarded for humiliation and emotional distress established by testimony or inferred from the circumstances, and the severity of the harm should govern the amount, not the availability, of recovery. Here, the record revealed that the claimant had difficulty finding employment after being illegally denied employment based on marital status, lost sleep because of economic hardship, had to move in with relatives, was hounded by collection agencies, had to borrow money, and had to sell an automobile for sustenance. The Commission for Human Rights' award of $2,500 for emotional damages was adequately supported by the record and was affirmed. Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Independent Claim for Infliction of Emotional Distress Sufficient to Satisfy Good Cause Requirement for Ordering Medical Evaluation: Winslow contended that the District Court improperly ordered him to submit to a psychiatric evaluation pursuant to former Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), after finding that the good cause requirement under the Rule was satisfied by the fact that Winslow had asserted an independent claim for intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress. The Supreme Court affirmed. The independent claim placed Winslow's mental condition in controversy, and under Schlagenhauf v. Holder, 379 US 104 (1964), the pleadings themselves can establish good cause for ordering a mental examination. Further, under Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), an independent cause of action for intentional infliction of serious or severe emotional distress will arise when the distress was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of the negligent act or omission. The pleading of Winslow's independent Sacco claim was sufficient to satisfy the good cause requirement of Rule 35. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001), distinguishing In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889 (1995).

Damages Proper for Emotional Distress Based on Sale of Real Estate — Punitive Damages Appropriate: The Maloneys were promised an option to purchase property adjacent to their own, hoping to build their retirement home near Glacier Park. The real estate agent who listed the property was aware of the Maloneys' option but sold to another instead. That person then developed the property, building a 3,000-square-foot home on the very site that the Maloneys had desired and within sight of the Maloneys' residence, and then listed the newly developed property for almost six times what the Maloneys could have paid had the option been properly offered.

A special master concluded, and the District Court agreed, that the Maloneys had suffered and were entitled to compensation for the shock, worry, anger, disappointment, and frustration that they had suffered and would continue to suffer in light of the inherent duration of the Maloneys' adjacent ownership. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under French v. Ralph E. Moore, Inc., 203 M 327, 661 P2d 844, 40 St. Rep. 481 (1983), emotional distress damages may result from negligent or intentional damage to property arising from interference with the use and enjoyment of land and that under Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982), compensatory damages could include compensation for humiliation, embarrassment, distress, and ridicule associated with interference with plaintiffs' use of their private property. The private property interest at issue here sufficiently involved the use and enjoyment of land to fall within these holdings. Further, the award of punitive damages was also affirmed in this instance despite defendant's claims of the special master's improper estimation of net worth, a syntax error, and the special master's improper recognition of punitive damages assessed against defendant in a prior case. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), followed in May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000), and in Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P3d 1169, affirming that a nuisance claim demonstrating an interference with the enjoyment of property may support an award of parasitic emotional distress damages. See also Recovery for Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress Attendant to Economic Loss: A Reassessment, Sandor & Berry, 37 Ariz. L. Rev. 1247 (1995).

New Standard for Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress — Proof of Serious or Severe Emotional Stress Required: A photographer for a Belgrade newspaper sued the newspaper and a city police officer, alleging that both falsely and maliciously conspired to criminally prosecute the photographer for stealing photographs from the newspaper. After the District Court granted the newspaper and officer a summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court, after reviewing cases using the traditional approach, reversed and remanded the case for determination under a new standard for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. Applying the new standard, the Supreme Court held that an independent cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will arise in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to a claimant, as defined in Comment j of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. The difference between negligent infliction and intentional infliction lies not in the elements of the tort but in the nature and culpability of the defendant's conduct. Punitive damages may be requested in a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. It is for the court to determine whether the evidence of serious or severe emotional distress can be found; it is for the jury to determine whether, on the evidence, it has in fact existed. Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), followed in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000), Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001), Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001), McConkey v. Flathead Elec. Co-op, 2005 MT 334, 330 M 48, 125 P3d 1121 (2005), and Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008), distinguished, with regard to the inapplicability of the standard to civil rights cases brought under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, in Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001), and clarified in Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004), to the extent that when there is a physical manifestation of bodily harm resulting from emotional distress, such as posttraumatic stress disorder, this bodily harm is sufficient evidence that the emotional distress is genuine and severe. See also May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000), and Turner v. Burlington N. Santa Fe RR Co., 338 F3d 1058 (9th Cir. 2003).

Presumption of Damages When Elements of Conversion Proved: A detriment is a loss suffered in person or property, and a person who suffers a detriment from another's wrongful acts is entitled to damages. Under 27-1-320, the detriment caused by wrongful conversion of personal property is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of conversion, plus interest from that time, and fair compensation for the time and money expended to pursue recovery of the property. Therefore, in conversion claims, damages are presumed once the other elements of conversion are established. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Title Insurers' Failure to Disclose Easements — Insured's Pecuniary Loss: Landowner suffered a substantial pecuniary loss when his title insurers failed to inform him of ditch rights and easements that landowner had to pay $46,000 to purchase in order to remove the defects to his title. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982). The Lipinski rule, requiring due diligence in title examination, was applied in Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

GENERAL

Award of No Damages Supported — Jury Verdict Supported by Adequate Evidence: A jury's award of no damages was supported by sufficient evidence. After the plaintiff's claims for medical benefits under a workers' compensation settlement were denied, the claims were eventually accepted, the plaintiff underwent surgery, and payment was approved for the plaintiff's doctor visits and surgery. The plaintiff filed a suit claiming that the initial denial of her medical benefits resulted in months of pain and suffering while she waited for the claims processor to approve her surgery. The jury was presented with adequate evidence to support a finding that the plaintiff's pain and suffering resulted from her own reluctance to undergo surgery. Moreover, the plaintiff admitted that she had not missed any treatment due to the initial denial. The jury heard evidence that contradicted the plaintiff's claim that the defendant's breach was the cause of her damages. Because the record was not devoid of evidence supporting the jury's verdict, the Supreme Court did not displace it. Suzor v. Int'l Paper Co., 2016 MT 344, 386 Mont. 54, 386 P.3d 584, distinguishing Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 Mont. 440, 945 P.2d 48 (1997), Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 Mont. 99, 7 P.3d 400, and Reis v. Lockett, 2015 MT 337, 381 Mont. 490, 362 P.3d 632.

Loss of Opportunity for Settlement Based on Attorney Missing Filing Deadline — Potential Value in Medical Malpractice Claim That Can Survive Summary Judgment: An attorney missed a statute of limitations deadline in a medical malpractice case by failing to file an application with the Montana Medical Legal Panel before filing a complaint in District Court, as required under 27-6-301 and 27-6-701. After the medical malpractice claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice case against the attorney, but the District Court dismissed the legal malpractice case during summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiffs did not carry the burden of showing that the underlying medical malpractice claim would have been successful. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the plaintiffs could have survived summary judgment on the underlying medical malpractice claim and that the loss of the opportunity to present the claim was an injury that prevented the plaintiffs from receiving a favorable outcome by way of settlement or trial. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160, following Spencer v. Beck, 2010 MT 256, 358 Mont. 295, 245 P.3d 21. On remand in Labair v. Carey, 2016 MT 272, 385 Mont. 233, 383 P.3d 226, the Supreme Court determined that the plaintiffs more probably than not would have recovered a settlement. Thus, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this first element of settlement damages.

Adoption of Tort of Negligent Credentialing of Physician by Hospital — Expert Testimony Required to Establish Breach of Standard of Care: The Supreme Court ruled that negligent credentialing is a valid cause of action in Montana and that the action must establish the applicable standard of care, that there was a departure from the standard, and that the departure proximately caused the plaintiff's injury. The Supreme Court upheld the District Court's dismissal of the plaintiff's claim on the basis that the plaintiff had not presented expert testimony that the hospital had deviated from the applicable standard of care. Brookins v. Mote, 2012 MT 283, 367 Mont. 193, 292 P.3d 347. See also Hastie v. Alpine Orthopedics & Sports Medicine, 2015 MT 346, 382 Mont. 21, 363 P.3d 435, and Selensky-Foust v. Mercer, 2022 MT 97, 408 Mont. 488, 510 P.3d 78.

Cross-Jurisdictional Tolling Rule Adopted — No Error in Denial of Motion for Summary Judgment: A jury awarded Stevens $3.2 million in compensatory damages for injuries caused by the drug Zometa, which is manufactured by Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corporation. Novartis argued the District Court erred in denying Novartis' motion for summary judgment. Novartis argued Stevens' claim was time-barred because even though Stevens knew Novartis manufactured Zometa, she did not name Novartis as a defendant until 3 years and 10 months after the statute of limitations began to run. Stevens argued that Novartis was properly served because fictitious defendants were named or, in the alternative, because the statute of limitations was tolled by a class action suit filed in federal court in Tennessee, even though class certification was ultimately denied. The Supreme Court affirmed. The basis of the claim in Montana and of the class action suit in Tennessee was Novartis' alleged failure to warn of the effects of the Zometa. Novartis received sufficient notice of the nature of the claim in Montana, and although the claims were not identical, the filing of the class action suit in Tennessee tolled the statute of limitations for the filing of the amended complaint in Montana. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Finding of Liability Establishing Causation of Injury — No Need for Jury to Consider Evidence of Cause: Plaintiff sued the city of Bozeman for lost profits and alleged constructive fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage related to a real estate purchase and development issue. During the course of litigation, the District Court, as a sanction for discovery abuse, ordered that the city was liable for interfering with the property purchase and development, resulting in injury to plaintiff. The city appealed on grounds that the sanction establishing the city's liability included the element of causation. The Supreme Court affirmed. Once liability was settled through the sanction order, causation of the injury was also established, and the jury did not need to consider evidence of the cause of the injury. The only question left for the jury was the amount of damages, and the District Court did not err when it instructed the jury that some damages must be awarded. Once the city's liability was established, an expert's estimate of the loss, based on a reasonable computation and the best evidence available under the circumstances, was sufficient to support the amount of damages fixed by the jury. Delaney & Co. v. Bozeman, 2009 MT 441, 354 M 181, 222 P3d 618 (2009), following Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443 (1990).

Failure to Provide Trial Transcript Precluding Review of Compensatory Damage Award and Jury Instructions: Plaintiff asserted that the trial court erred by failing to grant plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on the jury's award of zero compensatory damages for pain and suffering and by refusing to allow the issue to go to the jury, contending that a new trial was necessary to protect the right to full legal redress. Plaintiff stated at least 14 times on appeal that evidence of pain and suffering was uncontroverted. However, plaintiff's counsel neglected to submit a trial transcript on appeal or to follow the alternative transcript submission procedures set out in former Rule 9, M.R.App.P. (now superseded), relying instead on District Court minutes and evidence of injuries as opposed to evidence of pain and suffering. Without a trial transcript, the Supreme Court was unable to address the merits of plaintiff's appeal, so the District Court was affirmed. Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

Award of Injunction and Damages in Same Case — No Error: A subdivision developer was found to have been negligent and in breach of contract with the purchaser of two subdivision lots for failing to record a restrictive covenant prohibiting commercial use and for the resulting diminution in property value when another subdivision tenant operated an auto body shop in the subdivision. The jury held the developer liable for damages, and a permanent injunction was issued against the auto body shop operator, who complained that the award of both damages and an injunction resulted in double recovery. The Supreme Court disagreed. Montana law does not prohibit awarding money damages and an injunction in the same case. Both were justified here, and the award of both was affirmed. Rice v. C.I. Lanning, 2004 MT 237, 322 M 487, 97 P3d 580 (2004), followed in St. James Healthcare v. Cole, 2008 MT 44, 341 M 368, 178 P3d 696 (2008).

Negligence During House Moving — Breach of House Moving Agreement — Remand for Determination of Causation and Damages: Kelly entered an agreement with Hall to move four of Kelly's housing units. Hall agreed to obtain cargo insurance on each unit but did not do so. During the move, two units were damaged, and Kelly filed a claim against Hall's insurer for remuneration. The claim was denied, and the insurer sought a declaratory judgment against both Hall and Kelly. Kelly filed negligence and breach of contract claims against Hall, and Hall counterclaimed for breach of contract against Kelly. The District Court concluded that Kelly failed to establish negligence, that both parties breached the contract, and that neither party could recover against the other. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the finding that Hall breached the contract by failing to obtain cargo insurance and that, based on the presumption against conditions precedent and inconclusive evidence, Kelly also breached the contract and thus could not recover breach of contract damages. However, there was no evidence to rebut Kelly's negligence claim, nor did the District Court address the damages that Hall conceded occurred during the move. Because it was error to find that Kelly failed to establish negligence, the case was remanded for trial on causation and damages. Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2003 MT 188, 316 M 460, 73 P3d 819 (2003).

Jury Finding That Accident Did Not Result in Injury Supported by Substantial Evidence: Ele alleged that he was injured in a low-impact motor vehicle accident for which Ehnes admitted liability. The jury, however, found that Ele was not injured as a result of the accident, and Ele appealed, requesting that the zero damage award be set aside, in part based on a medical bill from the emergency room where Ele went after the accident and on the fact that Ehnes failed to refute the attending physician's testimony that Ele was injured and sustained damages. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the jury decision. The emergency room bill was not direct evidence that the visit was caused by the accident, but merely showed that Ele went to the emergency room. Also, notwithstanding that the physician found evidence of injury, the doctor's testimony showed that he was not aware of Ele's preexisting medical condition. Further, testimony at trial from several of Ele's coworkers showed that Ele had engaged in numerous activities following the accident that Ele later testified he was unable to do because of pain. It is the trier of fact that weighs the credibility of witnesses, and there was sufficient credible evidence for the jury to conclude that Ele had prior back problems and could do more than he claimed, that the doctor's opinion relied on an inaccurate medical history supplied by Ele, and that the accident was so minor that Ele suffered no injury necessitating an emergency room visit. Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003), following Magart v. Schank, 2000 MT 279, 302 M 151, 13 P3d 390 (2000), distinguishing Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), and Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400 (2000), and distinguished in Reis v. Luckett, 2015 MT 337, 381 Mont. 490, 362 P.3d 632.

Dismissal of Insurer Improper in Light of Dispute Over Amount of Damages Owing in Excess of Liability Limits: Following a vehicle accident, a couple sought recovery for injuries and loss of consortium and also alleged that the damages exceeded the limits of defendants' coverage, entitling them to recover from their own policy. The District Court bifurcated the claims and then sua sponte dismissed the insurer from the action without prejudice. The couple sought to reverse the dismissal order, and the Supreme Court obliged. The District Court held that because a jury had not determined the couple's damages and because the insurer had agreed to pay the amount of the verdict up to the policy limits, there was no dispute between the couple and the insurer. However, the Supreme Court noted that the couple and the insurer disagreed on the amount of damages in excess of the amount that was payable under the liability limits of the policy. This was a dispute that the couple was entitled to litigate, so dismissal of the insurer was improper, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. State ex rel. Gadbar v. District Court, 2003 MT 127, 316 M 25, 75 P3d 1238 (2003), following Dill v. District Court, 1999 MT 85, 294 M 134, 979 P2d 188 (1999). See also *Dias v. Action for Damages Allowed Against Local Peace Officers Violating Person's Self-Executing State Constitutional Rights to Privacy, Due Process, and Freedom From Unreasonable Searches and Seizures: Plaintiffs filed a civil action against the Sheriff and two deputies for damages for violation of plaintiffs' Montana constitutional rights to privacy, due process, and freedom from unreasonable searches and seizures. The court held that those three rights are self-executing. The court also held that plaintiffs were entitled to damages. The court based the right to recover damages on: (1) federal cases allowing damage suits for violation of rights under the U.S. Constitution; (2) Restatement (Second) of Torts 874A (1979), which follows the principle in those federal cases by stating that when a constitutional provision protects a class of persons and does not provide a remedy for a violation of the provision, the court may, if appropriate, allow an action under an existing tort or a new cause of action similar to an existing tort; (3) 1-1-109 providing that the common law of England is the rule of decision in Montana courts to the extent that it is not repugnant to or inconsistent with the U.S. or Montana Constitution or Montana statutes, and cases from other states using the English common law as a basis for granting a remedy for a state official's violation of a person's state constitutional rights; (4) this section allowing recovery of damages by a person who suffers detriment from the unlawful act or omission of another; and (5) the Montana Constitution, Art. II, sec. 16, right to a remedy for every injury. The court stated that there is a great distinction between wrongs, such as assault, conversion, and trespass, by a private individual against another private individual and wrongs against a private individual by a person acting under authority of the state in violation of a person's constitutional rights and stated that common-law causes of action remedying the former are not adequate to remedy the latter. Dorwart v. Caraway, 2002 MT 240, 312 M 1, 58 P3d 128 (2002).

Reasonable General Damages for Personal Injury Appropriate When Liability Established: Albinger and Harris were engaged to be married, but the engagement was troubled and resulted in Harris being injured during a domestic dispute. During a suit over ownership of the engagement ring, Harris counterclaimed for personal injuries stemming from the domestic dispute, seeking $35,000 to cover medical and psychiatric treatment, lost wages, emotional distress, pain, and suffering. Albinger admitted liability for the incident and paid Harris's resulting medical bills shortly after the incident. Harris was not employed at the time, so there was no loss of earnings, and there was no evidence of past or anticipated psychiatric counseling needs and expenses, so the District Court awarded Harris $2,500 in general damages for emotional distress, pain, and suffering. Albinger appealed the award, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Once liability is established, it is the duty of the factfinder to award damages for pain and suffering when the evidence clearly establishes that plaintiff suffered painful injury and defendant presents no evidence to the contrary. In personal injury actions, there is no measuring stick by which to determine the amount of damages, other than the intelligence of a fair and impartial trier of fact governed by a sense of justice. Each case depends on its own facts, and the Supreme Court will not disturb a damage award on appeal unless the award is so grossly out of proportion to the injury as to shock the conscience, or is found to be the product of passion or prejudice. Here, the $2,500 award was not excessive and did not shock the conscience. The District Court legitimately acted upon its legal duty to award general damages. Albinger v. Harris, 2002 MT 118, 310 M 27, 48 P3d 711 (2002).

Improper Grant of Motion to Dismiss Legal Malpractice Suit for Failure to State Claim Upon Which Relief Could Be Granted: Hauschulz faced criminal charges in Billings, and while awaiting trial, he was extradited to Idaho on unrelated charges and incarcerated. The Michael Law Firm was hired to represent Hauschulz in the Billings proceedings, which Hauschulz could not attend. Instead of moving for dismissal of the charges unless Montana extradited Hauschulz, the law firm professed not to know where Hauschulz was and negotiated an unauthorized plea agreement on behalf of Hauschulz. Upon learning of the law firm's actions, Hauschulz filed a legal malpractice complaint alleging constitutional violations and requesting damages. The District Court dismissed the action on grounds that Hauschulz had failed to state a claim upon which relief could be granted, reasoning that no damages could be awarded because Hauschulz's problems all stemmed from the failure to appear at trial. Hauschulz appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. A complaint should not be dismissed for failure to state a claim unless it appears beyond a doubt that plaintiff can prove no set of facts in support of the claim that would entitle the plaintiff to relief, and a dismissal will be affirmed by the Supreme Court only if plaintiff is not entitled to relief under any set of facts that would support the claim. As set out in Merzlak v. Purcell, 252 M 527, 830 P2d 1278 (1992), to recover damages in a legal malpractice claim, plaintiff must establish that: (1) the professional owed plaintiff a duty of care; (2) the professional breached the duty of care through failure to use reasonable care and skill; (3) plaintiff suffered an injury; and (4) the professional's conduct was the proximate cause of the injury. In this case, the Supreme Court found that each element was satisfied. Hauschulz might be able to prove a set of facts that would entitle him to relief and has stated a sufficient claim to survive a challenge under former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). Hauschulz v. Michael Law Firm, 2001 MT 160, 306 M 102, 30 P3d 357 (2001). See also Trankel v. St., 282 M 348, 938 P2d 614 (1997).

Equitable Estoppel Defense Defeated — Failure of Counterclaim to State Claim for Which Relief May Be Granted: The city of Whitefish sought and obtained a permanent injunction against Troy Town Pump, Inc. (Town Pump), requiring removal of a sign that violated the city's ordinance. Town Pump's defense was that the city's approval of the original building plan equitably estopped the city's claim. Alternatively, Town Pump counterclaimed for the costs of remodeling the building. In order for the city to obtain a permanent injunction, it first had to overcome Town Pump's counterclaim that it was equitably estopped from doing so. The city successfully defeated the counterclaim. Absent a legal theory upon which to base damages, the city could not be held liable, so the District Court did not err in dismissing Town Pump's counterclaim for damages on grounds that it failed to state a claim for which relief could be granted. Whitefish v. Troy Town Pump, Inc., 2001 MT 58, 304 M 346, 21 P3d 1026 (2001).

Interpleader Purporting to Release Potentially Liable Individuals Remanded for Clarification That Only Insurer Released Upon Payment of Policy Limits: The District Court granted an

insurer's request in a prayer for interpleader for an order "enjoining and restraining each and all of the defendants from instituting or prosecuting further any proceeding on account of the incident or the insurance policy". Defendants claimed that the order infringed on their right to seek further relief from other potentially liable persons individually after the maximum policy limits were distributed. The Supreme Court noted that the measure of damages for negligence, notwithstanding available insurance proceeds, is the amount that will compensate the injured for all detriment proximately caused, but in this instance, it was not clear whether the insurer specifically requested additional relief for other parties or intended such a comprehensive exclusion of remedies. Pursuant to the principles of subject matter jurisdiction, the District Court should have released only the insurer from further claims, not the other potentially liable individuals involved. The case was remanded for a clarification of the order. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

Question of Fault and Question of Entitlement to Collect Damages Separate: Dill suffered damages after being hit as a pedestrian by a vehicle operated by Jardine. State Farm Mutual Automobile Insurance Company (State Farm) provided both liability insurance for Jardine and underinsured motorist coverage for Dill. Meeting all the conditions precedent in the policy, Dill recovered the maximum policy amount from Jardine pursuant to Jardine's policy, then, consistent with the general release executed on Dill's behalf in settling with Jardine, Dill demanded underinsured motorist benefits under Dill's policy, which State Farm refused to pay. The District Court held that Dill's claim against State Farm would not be ripe for adjudication until after Jardine's fault was established and damages assessed in a negligence action. However, the question of whether anyone was at fault and the question of whether an insured is legally entitled to collect damages from an underinsured driver are not the same. A person can be legally entitled to collect damages without first proving fault in court, as Dill did here; conversely, an insured might prove fault on the part of the defendant and yet not be entitled to collect damages. Once an insured demonstrates a legal entitlement to damages, principles of contract law define the coverage afforded by an underinsured motorist policy; tort law is relevant only as far as fault is concerned. Under a writ of supervisory control, the Supreme Court looked to the clear language of the policy and found no issues of fault for a factfinder to resolve. The only questions remaining were whether Dill was legally entitled to collect damages and, if so, in what amount. Regardless of whether anyone was at fault, having already received money from State Farm, Dill was obviously legally entitled to receive damages. Thus, the case was reversed for a trial to determine the amount of damages, if any, that Dill was entitled to under the underinsured motorist policy. Dill v. District Court, 1999 MT 85, 294 M 134, 979 P2d 188, 56 St. Rep. 350 (1999).

Award of Liquidated Damages Under Fair Labor Standards Act — Findings Regarding Damage Amount Proper: Absent a showing by the state that its act or omission giving rise to a violation of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (FLSA) was in good faith and that the state had reasonable grounds for believing that the act or omission was not a violation of the FLSA, the award of liquidated damages under 29 U.S.C. 216(b) and 29 U.S.C. 260 by the District Court was not error or an abuse of discretion. Further, evidence by plaintiffs that they had worked hours for which they were not properly compensated, based on reasonable inferences, entitled them to damages based on a reasonable approximation. Tefft v. St., 271 M 82, 894 P2d 317, 52 St. Rep. 357 (1995).

Presumption of Damages When Elements of Conversion Proved: A detriment is a loss suffered in person or property, and a person who suffers a detriment from another's wrongful acts is entitled to damages. Under 27-1-320, the detriment caused by wrongful conversion of personal property is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of conversion, plus interest from that time, and fair compensation for the time and money expended to pursue recovery of the property. Therefore, in conversion claims, damages are presumed once the other elements of conversion are established. Eatinger v. Johnson, 269 M 99, 887 P2d 231, 51 St. Rep. 1484 (1994).

Failure of Bicyclist to Wear Helmet — Evidence Inadmissible on Question of Negligence or Damages: Applying the rationale set out in Kopischke v. First Cont. Corp., 187 M 471, 610 P2d 668 (1980), the Supreme Court held that because Montana law does not require a bicyclist to wear a helmet, the bicyclist's failure to wear a helmet ordinarily does not constitute negligence on the part of the state. Therefore, the jury was properly instructed that the bicyclist's failure to wear a helmet was not a legal cause of the accident and did not constitute negligence on the part of the state. The evidence was not admissible on the question of damages under the Kopischke rationale. Walden v. St., 250 M 132, 818 P2d 1190, 48 St. Rep. 893 (1991).

No Damages for Loss of Established Way of Life: Although evidence was conflicting, the jury properly denied an award of damages for loss of established way of life to plaintiffs whose restaurant was destroyed in a natural gas explosion upon a showing that: (1) the restaurant never did more than break even since it was purchased; (2) plaintiffs paid their living expenses from proceeds received from the sale of another cafe; (3) the restaurant lost $53,667 in the period immediately preceding the explosion; (4) plaintiffs never received a salary the entire time the restaurant was operating; and (5) plaintiff was required to leave the restaurant business because of a preexisting heart condition and high blood pressure. Day v. Mont. Power Co., 242 M 145, 789 P2d 1224, 47 St. Rep. 626 (1990), cited in Marazzato v. Burlington N. RR Co., 249 M 487, 817 P2d 672, 48 St. Rep. 804 (1991).

Attorney Fees Denied to Governmental Agencies: Several state agencies were successful in securing the dissolution of an injunctive order and sought attorney fees from the other party, a private company. The agencies sought attorney fees on the basis that the attorneys involved could have been working on other projects and therefore reasonable fees were due the agencies as an element of damages. The Supreme Court ruled that since the agencies' attorneys were salaried employees, attorney fees were not incurred because no additional financial burden was placed on the taxpayers. N. Border Pipeline Co. v. St., 237 M 133, 772 P2d 839, 46 St. Rep. 681 (1989).

Damages Admitted — Award Upheld: Defendant admitted causing damages but did not offer any amount contrary to the actual figures presented by plaintiff. The Supreme Court affirmed the award of damages upon finding a reasonable certainty that damages were sustained by the wrongful act or breach of defendant and by rational support of the evidence, despite the lack of calculation of a precise amount of damages. Vinion v. The Wood Yard, Inc., 232 M 110, 755 P2d 31, 45 St. Rep. 919 (1988).

Demand for Compensatory Damages Dropped by Plaintiffs — Award as Abuse of Discretion: It was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to award compensatory damages when plaintiffs conceded in a posttrial motion that they were unable to provide sufficient evidence to justify such an award and dropped their demand for the award. Reintsma v. Lawson, 223 M 520, 727 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 1962 (1986).

Attorney Fees as Element of Compensatory Damages — Limited to Contingent Fee Agreement: Jury awarded appellant attorney fees as an element of compensatory damages and deferred to the District Court to assess appropriate attorney fees and costs. The court arrived at a sum based on a lodestar determination based on reasonable hours expended times a reasonable hourly fee. Appellant contended on appeal that this was an incorrect method of calculation. The Supreme Court held that: (1) the provisions of the contingent fee agreement were controlling in computing the amount of attorney fees; (2) the contract fixed the damages appellant sustained; and (3) to allow appellant to recover attorney fees based on an hourly fee would change the issue from what amount would compensate him for actual damages he sustained in the form of attorney fees to what amount would reasonably compensate his attorney for services rendered. Morris v. Nationwide Ins. Co., 222 M 399, 722 P2d 628, 43 St. Rep. 1363 (1986).

Wrongful Denial of School Transportation Money: Denial of transportation money to an eligible transportee of a school district is an "unlawful act" within the meaning of 27-1-202 for purposes of receiving compensatory damages. School District v. Simonsen, 210 M 100, 683 P2d 471, 41 St. Rep. 944 (1984).

Employee Suit Against Employer's Parent Corporation — Mere Holding Company Not Liable: Under the workers' compensation law provision that an employee may sue a third party in tort for causing injury to an employee, the employee may sue the parent corporation of a subsidiary corporation for which the employee works but must establish that the parent corporation had an independent duty toward the employee. In the present case, the facts failed to establish that any duty was breached by the parent corporation. The parent corporation was simply a holding company that carried on no business other than operating through its subsidiaries. Any negligence of the subsidiary employer in regard to employee's products liability theory could not be passed on to the parent corporation. Mitchell v. Shell Oil Co., 579 F. Supp. 1326, 41 St. Rep. 278 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

No Interspousal Immunity for Property Damages: There is no interspousal tort immunity for property damage claims by one spouse against the other. Norick v. Dove Constr., 204 M 57, 662 P2d 1318, 40 St. Rep. 660 (1983).

Limitations on Certain Types of Government Tort Damages — Constitutionality: Article II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., guarantees that all persons shall have a speedy remedy for every injury to person, property, or character. The constitution's language "every injury" embraces all recognized compensable components of injury, including the right to be compensated for physical pain, mental anguish, and the loss of enjoyment of living. The right to bring a civil action for personal injury is a fundamental right. Subsection (1) of 2-9-104 (repealed, 1983) provided that neither the state, a county, municipality, taxing district nor any other political subdivision of the state was liable in tort for: (1) noneconomic damages; or (2) economic damages in excess of $300,000 a claimant and $1 million an occurrence. The state argued a compelling state interest in insuring that there would be sufficient funds to supply needed services to those governed by state and local government and that government has to engage in a wide range of activities, some extremely dangerous and not confronted by private industry. This bare assertion fell far short of justifying the subsection (1)(a) class discrimination that infringed upon fundamental rights. Denying noneconomic damages while allowing economic damages was unconstitutional under the strict scrutiny equal protection test. Furthermore, to strike (1)(a) and leave (1)(b) intact would create new discrimination problems in that those with economic loss could get only limited damages, while those with noneconomic loss would have no limit imposed; and since the state failed to demonstrate a compelling state interest justifying any limitation, subsection (1) was unconstitutional in its entirety. Though some liability limit may comport with equal protection, the limitation could not discriminate between those suffering pain and loss of life quality and those suffering primarily economic loss. White v. St., 203 M 363, 661 P2d 1272, 40 St. Rep. 507 (1983).

Damage to Prescriptive Easement — Injunction Denied: The District Judge properly denied the plaintiffs' request for an injunction and their claim for damages for rutting and disrepair of the roadway where the testimony showed that plaintiffs kept the roadway up despite use of it by defendants and defendants' use of the roadway was consistent with defendants' interest in the land. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Negligence in Maintenance of an Irrigation Ditch: Although plaintiffs' contention that an owner of an irrigation ditch is not an absolute insurer is correct, where the testimony shows: (1) that there were erosion and cutting away of the cross-claimants' soil on both sides of the ditch; (2) that there had been "bad washing"; and (3) that it would take $5,500 to make the irrigation system suitable to prevent further washing on cross-claimants' land and to repair past damage, there was substantial evidence to support the findings of negligence and damages of $5,500. Marta v. Smith, 191 M 179, 622 P2d 1011, 38 St. Rep. 28 (1981).

Automobile Accident: In an action for damages to an automobile, it was not a condition precedent to recovery that the plaintiff should have first incurred an indebtedness or that he should actually have paid the sum claimed for the repairs. Hoenstine v. Rose, 131 M 557, 312 P2d 514 (1957).

Malicious Prosecution: In action for malicious prosecution where jury finds for plaintiff, he is entitled to damages. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420, 17 ALR 2d 518 (1949).

Application of Section: Any person who suffers detriment by reason of another's failure to perform an act imposed by law may recover damages. Conway v. Monidah Trust, 47 M 269, 132 P 26 (1913).

EMOTIONAL DISTRESS

Nuisance Claim Demonstrating Interference With Enjoyment of Property — Award of Parasitic Emotional Distress Damages Supported. Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169.

Slander and Emotional Distress Claims — Dismissal Based on Preemption of Civil Service Reform Act Premature: The plaintiff sued a woman with whom he had consensual sex and two union members for slander and emotional distress when the two union members recommended the woman accuse the plaintiff of sexual assault in order to keep her job. The defendants argued that the plaintiffs' claims were preempted by the federal Civil Service Reform Act of 1978. The District Court agreed and granted the defendants' motion to dismiss. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the claims were not necessarily barred but that further development of the record was warranted. The court therefore reversed and remanded the case to develop the record to properly consider whether the claims were preempted by the federal act. Dickson v. Marino, 2020 MT 196, 400 Mont. 526, 469 P.3d 159.

Applicable Standard for Evaluating Damages for Parasitic Emotional Distress Claims—Sacco Standard Applicable Only to Independent Claims of Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: The "serious or severe" standard for emotional distress announced in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), applies only to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. For claims of emotional distress as an element of damage for an underlying tort claim, known as parasitic emotional distress damages, the Supreme Court adopted the standard set forth in Montana Pattern Jury Instruction 25.02, 15.01-03, as cited in Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), that when emotional distress damages are allowed in the absence of independent tort claims, an instruction should be given that the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental and emotional suffering and distress. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), followed in Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009), and McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, and overruling Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209 (1984), Noonan v. First Bank Butte, 227 M 329, 740 P2d 631 (1987), First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84 (1989), and similar cases that suggest that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

Neighbors' Long-Term Campaign of Vulgar, Abusive Language and Conduct Sufficient Evidence of Severe Emotional Distress — Compensatory and Punitive Damages Proper and Reasonable: In a subdivision covenant violation case, defendants counterclaimed for severe emotional distress based on plaintiffs' incessant verbal assaults against defendants in violation of a covenant that prohibited noxious or offensive activities that were annoying or constituted a nuisance to other owners. The District Court awarded each defendant $25,000 for emotional distress and imposed a $10,000 punitive award against plaintiffs as well. Plaintiffs appealed, asserting that there was no evidence of severe emotional distress, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Emotional distress can manifest in both physical and nonphysical harm, and when the distress is accompanied by shock, illness, or other bodily harm, those physical manifestations afford evidence that the distress is genuine and severe. In this case, plaintiffs' behavior was indecent, atrocious, and utterly intolerable and was exclusively intended to anger, humiliate, and embarrass defendants. Under these outrageous circumstances, the physical manifestations of defendants' emotional distress were sufficient to support the conclusion that defendants suffered compensable, serious emotional distress that was a reasonably foreseeable consequence of plaintiffs' tortious conduct. Given the intensity and duration of the verbal attacks over a 4-year period and defendants' physical and emotional reactions to the attacks, defendants adequately established a compensable claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, and the District Court's award of $50,000 in compensatory damages was not grossly disproportionate to the injury or an abuse of discretion. Additionally, because plaintiffs acted with malice, the punitive damage award was not clearly erroneous. Czajkowski v. Meyers, 2007 MT 292, 339 M 503, 172 P3d 94 (2007).

Emotional Distress Over Loss of Adult Child Not So Severe as to Be Compensable: Plaintiff argued that she suffered extreme emotional distress as the result of her son's death, allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. Applying the test for emotional distress in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the District Court held that plaintiffs' emotional distress was insufficiently severe to support her claim, so defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that plaintiffs' testimony that "life goes on" and that it was a loss that she "must learn to deal with" showed a philosophical strength that would likely be absent in a case of severe emotional distress. Plaintiff's emotional distress was not so severe as to rise to the level of a compensable claim, so the District Court was affirmed. Renville v. Fredrickson, 2004 MT 324, 324 M 86, 101 P3d 773 (2004).

No Contemporaneous Impact Requirement for Determining Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress — Sacco Rule Applicable: Wages' son was injured by a vehicle driven by defendant's insured. Although Wages did not witness the accident, he sued defendant insurer for severe emotional distress as a result of the insured's negligent operation of the vehicle. Both parties moved for summary judgment. The District Court cited Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661 (1997), for the proposition that an individual who witnesses a family member sustain injury or death states a claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress, but an individual who is not at the scene to witness the accident may state a claim for loss of consortium. The court granted summary judgment to defendant. Wages appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court distinguished Treichel and held that the District Court should instead have applied the rule from Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), that an independent cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will arise in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to a claimant was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. Duty and foreseeability are inextricably linked, and both must be determined by the trial court. The case was remanded for further proceedings in light of Sacco. Wages v. First Nat'l Ins. Co. of America, 2003 MT 309, 318 M 232, 79 P3d 1095 (2003).

Marital Status Discrimination — Award for Emotional Damages Affirmed: For the most part, federal case law involving antidiscrimination statutes draws a distinction between emotional distress claims in tort versus those in discrimination complaints (see Bolden v. SE. Pa. Transp. Authority, 21 F3d 29 (3rd Cir. 1994), Walz v. Town of Smithtown, 46 F3d 162 (2nd Cir. 1995), and Chatman v. Slagle, 107 F3d 380 (6th Cir. 1997)). The standard of proof of independent actions for emotional distress in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), that emotional distress damages may be awarded only if there is a substantial invasion of a legally protected interest that causes a significant impact upon the claimant, does not apply in a discrimination context pursuant to Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act. Rather, compensatory damages for human rights claims may be awarded for humiliation and emotional distress established by testimony or inferred from the circumstances, and the severity of the harm should govern the amount, not the availability, of recovery. Here, the record revealed that the claimant had difficulty finding employment after being illegally denied employment based on marital status, lost sleep because of economic hardship, had to move in with relatives, was hounded by collection agencies, had to borrow money, and had to sell an automobile for sustenance. The Commission for Human Rights' award of $2,500 for emotional damages was adequately supported by the record and was affirmed. Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001).

Mortgage Against Party's Interest in Property Granted Pursuant to Dissolution — No Tortious Interference With Business, Prima Facie Tort, or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: When George and Joyce were divorced, the District Court granted George exclusive possession of the ranch until it could be sold and the proceeds divided between the parties. During the course of the dissolution proceedings, Joyce took out several loans for living expenses. After the dissolution, Joyce consolidated the $150,000 in loans, and the bank executed a mortgage on Joyce's interest in the ranch to secure the loan. When George found out about the mortgage and security interest, he became distraught because he believed that he would not be able to obtain loans on the property to enable him to conduct ranch obligations and meet his operations. George subsequently filed suit against Joyce, the bank, and the bank president, who was Joyce's son-in-law, alleging tortious interference with business relationships, prima facie tort, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, and George appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed. Applying Farrington v. Buttrey Food & Drug Stores Co., 272 M 140, 900 P2d 277 (1995), the court concluded that the acts of Joyce and the bank were legal and that, standing alone, the acts did not give rise to any presumption or inference that the acts were done to harm George. The court also declined to recognize a separate cause of action for prima facie tort under the facts of this case. Applying Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the court further concluded that because the defendants' acts were legal, no claim for emotional distress could arise from those acts. Absent material facts evidencing malicious intent or damages, summary judgment was proper. Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001).

Independent Claim for Infliction of Emotional Distress Sufficient to Satisfy Good Cause Requirement for Ordering Medical Evaluation: Winslow contended that the District Court improperly ordered him to submit to a psychiatric evaluation pursuant to former Rule 35, M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), after finding that the good cause requirement under the former Rule was satisfied by the fact that Winslow had asserted an independent claim for intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress. The Supreme Court affirmed. The independent claim placed Winslow's mental condition in controversy, and under Schlagenhauf v. Holder, 379 US 104 (1964), the pleadings themselves can establish good cause for ordering a mental examination. Further, under Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), an independent cause of action for intentional infliction of serious or severe emotional distress will arise when the distress was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of the negligent act or omission. The pleading of Winslow's independent Sacco claim was sufficient to satisfy the good cause requirement of Rule 35. Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001), distinguishing In re Marriage of Binsfield, 269 M 336, 888 P2d 889 (1995).

Jury Award of Compensatory Damages Proportionate to Posttraumatic Stress Injuries — Affirmed: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. The jury held Payless liable and awarded Onstad $500,000 in compensatory damages. On appeal, Payless contended that the award was excessive and unsupported by the evidence. However, Onstad was entitled to reasonable compensation for any pain and suffering that she experienced and would reasonably probably experience in the future, and the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental pain and suffering. Only when the amount awarded is so grossly out of proportion as to shock the conscience will an appellate court intervene. In this case, Onstad was terrified during the attack and subsequently became withdrawn; her sense of safety, security, and self was violated; she felt extremely powerless; and her whole sense of self-esteem and self-confidence was affected. The amount of compensatory damages awarded was not so grossly disproportionate to Onstad's posttraumatic stress injury as to shock the conscience, and the Supreme Court declined to alter the award. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

Damages Proper for Emotional Distress Based on Sale of Real Estate — Punitive Damages Appropriate: The Maloneys were promised an option to purchase property adjacent to their own, hoping to build their retirement home near Glacier Park. The real estate agent who listed the property was aware of the Maloneys' option but sold to another instead. That person then developed the property, building a 3,000-square-foot home on the very site that the Maloneys had desired and within sight of the Maloneys' residence, and then listed the newly developed property for almost six times what the Maloneys could have paid had the option been properly offered. A special master concluded, and the District Court agreed, that the Maloneys had suffered and were entitled to compensation for the shock, worry, anger, disappointment, and frustration that they had suffered and would continue to suffer in light of the inherent duration of the Maloneys' adjacent ownership. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under French v. Ralph E. Moore, Inc., 203 M 327, 661 P2d 844, 40 St. Rep. 481 (1983), emotional distress damages may result from negligent or intentional damage to property arising from interference with the use and enjoyment of land and that under Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982), compensatory damages could include compensation for humiliation, embarrassment, distress, and ridicule associated with interference with plaintiffs' use of their private property. The private property interest at issue here sufficiently involved the use and enjoyment of land to fall within these holdings. Further, the award of punitive damages was also affirmed in this instance despite defendant's claims of the special master's improper estimation of net worth, a syntax error, and the special master's improper recognition of punitive damages assessed against defendant in a prior case. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), followed in May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000), and in Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169, affirming that a nuisance claim demonstrating an interference with the enjoyment of property may support an award of parasitic emotional distress damages. See also Recovery for Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress Attendant to Economic Loss: A Reassessment, Sandor & Berry, 37 Ariz. L. Rev. 1247 (1995).

Business Retaliation — Lack of Evidence as to Emotional Distress of Minor Child: David, his wife Susan, their minor child, and the parties' defunct business sued Pierce Flooring and others for damages stemming from criminal acts taken against the plaintiffs' competing business. The District Court granted the defendants' motion for a directed verdict against the plaintiffs' minor child on the issue of emotional distress. The Supreme Court, after reviewing the record, held that the motion was correctly granted because there was no evidence that the child suffered any emotional distress from the actions taken against her parents. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Extended to Negligent Handling of Dead Bodies — Standing to Sue: The family of the deceased, when viewing the body, observed a stain on the clothing that was determined to be caused by leaking embalming fluid. The Supreme Court, in reversing the District Court, held that one who negligently handles a dead body is liable to the family for emotional distress and that the test for emotional distress is that established in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995). The Supreme Court also held that the children and the grandchildren of the deceased had standing to sue based on a factual showing of their closeness to the deceased and that having seen the stain was not a prerequisite to their right to sue. Contreras v. Michelotti-Sawyers & Nordquist Mortuary, Inc., 271 M 300, 896 P2d 1118, 52 St. Rep. 454 (1995).

New Standard for Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress — Proof of Serious or Severe Emotional Stress Required: A photographer for a Belgrade newspaper sued the newspaper and a city police officer, alleging that both falsely and maliciously conspired to criminally prosecute the photographer for stealing photographs from the newspaper. After the District Court granted the newspaper and officer a summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court, after reviewing cases using the traditional approach, reversed and remanded the case for determination under a new standard for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress.

Applying the new standard, the Supreme Court held that an independent cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will arise in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to a claimant, as defined in Comment j of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. The difference between negligent infliction and intentional infliction lies not in the elements of the tort but in the nature and culpability of the defendant's conduct. Punitive damages may be requested in a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. It is for the court to determine whether the evidence of serious or severe emotional distress can be found; it is for the jury to determine whether, on the evidence, it has in fact existed. Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995). But see Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), where the Sacco "serious or severe" standard was limited to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. Sacco was followed in Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661, 54 St. Rep. 1 (1997), Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000), Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001), Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001), Wages v. First Nat'l Ins. Co. of America, 2003 MT 309, 318 M 232, 79 P3d 1095 (2003), and McConkey v. Flathead Elec. Co-op, 2005 MT 334, 330 M 48, 125 P3d 1121 (2005). Sacco was distinguished, with regard to the inapplicability of the standard to civil rights cases brought under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, in Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001), and clarified in Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004), to the extent that when there is a physical manifestation of bodily harm resulting from emotional distress, such as posttraumatic stress disorder, this bodily harm is sufficient evidence that the emotional distress is genuine and severe. See also May v. ERA Landmark Real Estate of Bozeman, 2000 MT 299, 302 M 326, 15 P3d 1179, 57 St. Rep. 1256 (2000), and Turner v. Burlington N. Santa Fe RR Co., 338 F3d 1058 (9th Cir. 2003).

No Direct Relationship Between Outrageous Event and Third Party — No Extension of Liability for Emotional Distress: Maguire's mentally disabled daughter was raped and impregnated while a resident at the Montana Developmental Center (MDC). The District Court allowed Maguire to maintain an action in tort for emotional distress related to the stress caused by Maguire's being required to make her daughter's pregnancy decisions. Applying the guidelines in Versland v. Caron Transport, 206 M 313, 671 P2d 583 (1983), for determining whether there was a negligent infliction of emotional distress, the Supreme Court held that because no direct relationship existed between any outrageous act and Maguire, to find an independent cause of action went beyond the rationale of Versland and the requirement of the victim's physical presence at the accident or event. Faced with the question of whether the causation and the foreseeability requirements were met when the presence requirement was not, the court found that MDC did not assume a duty of care toward Maguire. Refusing to increase the spiral of liability beyond that determined by other jurisdictions, the court declined to extend liability to allow Maguire to recover for either negligent or intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. Maguire v. St., 254 M 178, 835 P2d 755, 49 St. Rep. 688 (1992), followed in Estate of Strever v. Cline, 278 M 165, 924 P2d 666, 53 St. Rep. 576 (1996).

Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress — Test: In determining whether a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress was valid, the Supreme Court adopted the guideline in Comment d, Restatement (Second) of Torts 46, noting that "Liability has been found only where the conduct has been so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency, and to be regarded as atrocious and utterly intolerable in a civilized community". The court further applied the standard in Comment g, Restatement of Torts 46, that "The actor is never liable when he has done no more than to insist upon his legal rights in a permissible way, even though he is well aware that such insistence is certain to cause emotional distress". Lachenmaier v. First Bank Sys., Inc., 246 M 26, 803 P2d 614, 47 St. Rep. 2244 (1990).

Emotional Distress Damages Inapplicable to Case of Negligent Damages Resulting in No Physical Injury: The Supreme Court has adopted only Comment j to Restatement (Second) of Torts 46 (1965), defining severe emotional distress, but has not recognized the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress as a cause of action. Therefore, the court declined to extend recovery for emotional distress to cases in which the defendant negligently damages or destroys real property but plaintiff suffers no physical injury. Day v. Mont. Power Co., 242 M 145, 789 P2d 1224, 47 St. Rep. 626 (1990), followed in McNeil v. Currie, 253 M 9, 830 P2d 1241, 49 St. Rep. 312

(1992). However, see Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995).

Damages for Emotional Distress Denied to Third Party Not a Victim of Tort: Although Montana case law has established that a cause of action for emotional distress to a third party can arise when a close relative witnesses a death or physical injury to the victim of a tort, the District Court properly dismissed wife's claim for loss of consortium and consequential intentional infliction of emotional distress when she did not allege to be a victim of a tort but rather that distress resulted from her husband being a victim of a tort. Anderson v. TW Corp., 228 M 1, 741 P2d 397, 44 St. Rep. 1293 (1987).

"Johnson" Instruction Not Given — Award Upheld When No Objection Made: Jury instructions regarding award for emotional distress failed to state the requirement in Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984), that there must be a substantial invasion of a legally protected interest causing a substantial impact upon plaintiff. However, an award was upheld when defendant failed to object to the incomplete instructions at trial court level, complaining instead that the standard of proof in Johnson was not met. Tynes v. Bankers Life Co., 224 M 350, 730 P2d 1115, 43 St. Rep. 2243 (1986).

No Invasion of Legally Protected Interest — Damage Award Reversed: The Supreme Court, applying the test outlined in Johnson v. Super Save Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984), reversed the award of damages as they related to emotional distress because the evidence failed to disclose any invasion of a legally protected interest in bringing about the severe emotional distress. Proto v. Elliot, 222 M 393, 722 P2d 625, 43 St. Rep. 1358 (1986).

Submissible Jury Issue — Proximate Cause: The Supreme Court found a submissible jury issue on mental and emotional distress when the jury was properly instructed on proximate cause and damages were related to a franchisor's unreasonable failure to evaluate relocation of a franchise, causing franchisees' sense of loss and devastation, loss of self-esteem, and feeling of shame at being recognized in the community as a failure. Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, Inc., 221 M 447, 720 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 964 (1986).

Award of Damages for Mental Anguish — Findings Required — Improper Jury Instruction: One instruction given to the jury stated that if they found for plaintiffs, the jury "must award them damages for all emotional distress and mental anguish suffered as a result of the defendants' conduct". In effect, this instruction directed a verdict on damages for emotional distress even if plaintiffs recovered only on their contract claim. In Johnson v. Supersave Markets, Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984), the Supreme Court set out the criteria for determining whether distress is compensable absent a showing of physical or mental injury, which included whether the tortious conduct "caused a significant impact upon the person of the plaintiff". In the present case, McGregor testified that his financial problems bothered him a lot, but the record disclosed no serious emotional distress or anxiety as required by the holding in Johnson. The court held that the jury instruction improperly required an award of damages for emotional distress and mental anguish without finding a significant impact on the plaintiffs. The judgment awarding damages for mental anguish was reversed. McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536, 43 St. Rep. 206 (1986), followed in Noonan v. First Bank Butte, 227 M 329, 740 P2d 631, 44 St. Rep. 1124 (1987). Noonan was overruled in Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), to the extent that Noonan suggests that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

Negligence Resulting in Imprisonment — Damages for Emotional Distress: Plaintiff brought an action for damages resulting from appellant's negligence in causing an arrest and imprisonment. Plaintiff's wife issued a check on his account to Super Save without plaintiff's knowledge. The check was dishonored for insufficient funds. Super Save referred the matter to a collection agency. Although plaintiff later paid Super Save, the collection agency and County Attorney's office were never so apprised by Super Save. Almost a year after writing the check, plaintiff was arrested, handcuffed, frisked, booked, and fingerprinted. The District Court, in a jury trial, awarded $17,000 in damages. The Supreme Court held that Super Save owes its patrons the duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid arrest and criminal charges for nonpayment of a bad check for which restitution has been made. It breached that duty by cashing the check without requiring the proper identification and by failing to terminate the collection process. Damages for emotional distress were upheld in spite of the fact that there was no injury. Johnson v. Super Save Markets, Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984).

Test of Whether Emotional Distress Merits Compensation: The Supreme Court adopted the species of case approach that requires a factual analysis of each case to determine whether the alleged "emotional distress" merits compensation. In determining whether the distress is compensable absent a showing of physical or mental injury, the court looks to whether tortious conduct results in a substantial invasion of a legally protected interest and causes a significant impact upon the person of plaintiff. In the instant case, plaintiff's right to liberty was violated when he was arrested, handcuffed, frisked, booked, and charged for issuing a bad check for which he had made restitution months before. Johnson v. Super Save Markets, Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984), followed in Gurnsey v. Conklin Co, Inc., 230 M 42, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988), and in Niles v. Big Sky Eyewear, 236 M 455, 771 P2d 114, 46 St. Rep. 504 (1989). See also Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989), and Day v. Mont. Power Co., 242 M 145, 789 P2d 1224, 47 St. Rep. 626 (1990). However, see Maguire v. St., 254 M 178, 835 P2d 755, 49 St. Rep. 688 (1992), in which case recovery for emotional distress was denied when the victim was a third party who was not present during the accident or event.

Infliction of Emotional Distress — No Strict Liability: When the issue was certified to it by the U.S. District Court, the Montana Supreme Court ruled that there is no strict liability for the infliction of emotional distress. Versland v. Caron Transp., 206 M 313, 671 P2d 583, 40 St. Rep. 1681 (1983), distinguished in Treichel v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 280 M 443, 930 P2d 661, 54 St. Rep. 1 (1997).

Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress — Elements: Plaintiff filed an action against defendant in U.S. District Court for damages arising out of an automobile accident in which plaintiff's husband was killed. The federal court certified the action to the Montana Supreme Court for a determination of issues of state law. The Montana Supreme Court ruled that an injured plaintiff may recover damages for the negligent infliction of emotional distress when: (1) the shock results from a direct emotional impact upon the plaintiff from the sensory and contemporaneous perception of the accident; (2) the plaintiff and the victim are closely related; and (3) death or serious injury results from defendant's negligence. Versland v. Caron Transp., 206 M 313, 671 P2d 583, 40 St. Rep. 1681 (1983), followed in Frigon v. Morrison-Maierle, Inc., 233 M 113, 760 P2d 57, 45 St. Rep. 1344 (1988), Maguire v. St., 254 M 178, 835 P2d 755, 49 St. Rep. 688 (1992), and in Lence v. Hagadone Inv., 258 M 433, 853 P2d 1230, 50 St. Rep. 601 (1993). However, see Contreras v. Michelotti-Sawyers & Nordquist Mortuary, Inc., 271 M 300, 896 P2d 1118, 52 St. Rep. 454 (1995).

PRODUCTS LIABILITY

Evidence of Product Test Results Not Relevant to Compensatory Damages but Relevant to Punitive Damages: Plaintiffs sued the manufacturer of a child car seat for strict product liability after their 4-month-old child suffered fatal brain injuries in a vehicle rollover. Plaintiffs contended that the seat contained a design defect that caused the child's death. At trial, the District Court disallowed evidence of tests conducted pursuant to federal standards as the tests applied to the question of both compensatory and punitive damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that because the case presented a strict product liability issue emphasizing maximum protection for the consumer and placing risk of loss on the manufacturer, evidence of the tests was not relevant to the question of compensatory damages, in that strict liability law rejects concepts such as reasonableness and foreseeability that are fundamental to negligence law. However, test compliance evidence was relevant to the issue of punitive damages. Defendant may or may not have been able to convince the jury that its compliance with the tests showed that defendant had not evinced deliberate indifference to the welfare of users of the car seat, but the District Court erred in preempting the debate by not allowing defendant to explain itself. The Supreme Court remanded for purposes of reconsidering the appropriateness of punitive damages after defendant was allowed to present evidence of the car seat's test compliance. Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009). See also Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007), and Two Leggins v. Gatrell, 2023 MT 160, 413 Mont. 172, 534 P.3d 668, holding that evidence of racial motivation is admissible when considered for the exclusive purpose of determining a punitive damages award.

Indemnification Action — Defense of Contributory Negligence Unavailable: Contributory negligence is not available in Montana as a defense in an action for indemnification. Jones v. Aero-Chem Corp., 680 F. Supp. 338, 45 St. Rep. 360 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

Dual Capacity Doctrine — Products Liability Suit by Employee Against Employer: A workman injured on an oil rig sued his employer, the owner of the rig, for products liability, claiming the rig was defective. The dual capacity doctrine is invoked in workers' compensation cases when the employer may be said to owe some duty to an injured employee distinct from his duties as an employer, commonly, when an employee is injured by a piece of equipment manufactured by the employer. Whether this doctrine exists in Montana is not clear; but the question need not be answered because, even assuming that the doctrine applies in Montana, the facts do not support products liability as to the employer. The employer did not manufacture oil rigs to sell to the public and did not place in the stream of commerce the rig involved or any other rig. Montana law requires one held liable for products liability to have been a seller of the defective product. Mitchell v. Shell Oil Co., 579 F. Supp. 1326, 41 St. Rep. 278 (D.C. Mont. 1984).

Products Liability — When Only Damage Done Is to Defective Product Itself: Six years after she had purchased a mobile home, appellant filed an action against the seller for damages for breach of warranty and for property damages based on strict liability in tort, alleging that the mobile home had been defective and unfit for use from the time of sale. The trial judge dismissed the strict liability claim, and the jury found for the defendants on all other counts. The Supreme Court reversed the dismissal and remanded to the trial court, holding that a claim of strict liability in tort can be maintained when the only injury suffered is to the defective product itself. Thompson v. Nebr. Mobile Homes Corp., 198 M 461, 647 P2d 334, 39 St. Rep. 1094 (1982).

Products Liability — Indemnity — Third-Party Actions: Plaintiff was injured when a pickup truck in which he was riding rolled over. Plaintiff sued General Motors and also the manufacturer of the pants he was wearing. Plaintiff alleged the pants were defective and increased the severity of his injuries by melting onto his skin. The pants manufacturer filed a third-party complaint against Burlington Industries, who had manufactured the pants material and supplied it to Corbin, Ltd., the maker of the pants. Burlington moved for dismissal of the third-party complaint, saying that indemnity for tort liability cannot be sought in a third-party action when the primary complaint sounds in strict products liability, indemnity being antithetical to and inapplicable in strict liability actions. Corbin argued that such indemnity is permissible through a process of weighing the comparative fault of two potentially liable parties, despite the fact the action was in strict liability, not in negligence. The U.S. District Court agreed with the Burlington arguments, observing that Corbin offered little supporting authority while Burlington cited ample authority. The court also noted that Montana has adopted section 402A of the Restatement of Torts, including the conclusion that the doctrine of strict liability was evolved to place liability on the party primarily responsible for the injury occurring, that is, the manufacturer of the defective product, a position based on public policy arguments. The question in Montana is the condition of the product in the hands of the injured party, not the ultimate fault of any given defendant arising from such defendant's conduct. Kelly v. Gen. Motors Corp., 487 F. Supp. 1041 (D.C. Mont. 1980), distinguished in Jones v. Aero-Chem Corp., 680 F. Supp. 338, 45 St. Rep. 360 (D.C. Mont. 1987).

CONTRACTUAL INTERFERENCE

Sufficient Allegations for Pursuit of State Claim for Violation of Federal Wage Standards Absent Remedy Under Federal Davis-Bacon Act: Plaintiff construction workers on a public works project brought a state action against a school district for alleged violation of wage standards established by the federal Davis-Bacon Act. The District Court held that before the workers could maintain a private cause of action in state court, the four-part test in St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 230 M 456, 750 P2d 1085 (1988), must be met. The first prong requires a showing that the Davis-Bacon Act created a federal right in favor of plaintiffs. The District Court held that it did but then found that because there was no indication in the Act that Congress intended to create a remedy against the owner of the project and that implying such a remedy was inconsistent with the Act, a state action could not be maintained. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed. Absent both a federal wage provision and a federal contracting party, the workers could invoke no federal regulatory remedy under 40 U.S.C. 3142(a), so a state court action was logical for pursuit of a remedy. Because the workers were not seeking a remedy under the Act, analysis under St. Medical Oxygen was unnecessary and inappropriate. The allegations in the workers' state claim were sufficient to survive the school district's claim for dismissal and to vest the District Court with subject matter jurisdiction, so the case was remanded to allow the workers to proceed with their negligence and breach of contract action against the school district. Herrmann v. Wolf Point School District, 2004 MT 10, 319 M 231, 84 P3d 20 (2004). See also Favel v. Am. Renovation & Constr. Co., 2002 MT 266, 312 M 285, 59 P3d 412 (2002).

No Private Cause of Action Under Social Security Act:

Further, there is no conflict between state law allowing legal action for tortious interference with a business relationship and the purpose of the federal Social Security Act, particularly 42 U.S.C. 1395a. That section simply allows a recipient of Social Security benefits to choose the provider from whom to obtain benefits. It does not operate to bar a cause of action under state law between competing interests as to that class of customers. There was no reliable indicium of congressional intent to supplant state law in this case. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 256 M 38, 844 P2d 100, 49 St. Rep. 1126 (1992), following Cipollone v. Liggett Group, Inc., 505 US 504, 120 L Ed 2d 407, 112 S Ct 2608 (1992).

An alleged breach of an employment contract pursuant to sec. 1877(b) of the federal Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C. 1395(nn), does not give rise to a private civil cause of action under this section. St. Medical Oxygen & Supply, Inc. v. Am. Medical Oxygen Co., 230 M 456, 750 P2d 1085, 45 St. Rep. 349 (1988).

Tort of Contract Interference: In a case in which a former state employee sued the state for violations of his civil rights, the Federal District Court indicated that Montana law recognizes that it is a legal wrong for a person to break up or interfere with any contract relationship between other persons. This tort of contract interference, however, lies only against a third person and not against a party to the contract. The court did not find a tort remedy lying in one party to the contract against another. Holladay v. St., 506 F. Supp. 1317, 38 St. Rep. 285 (D.C. Mont. 1981), followed in King v. St., 259 M 393, 856 P2d 954, 50 St. Rep. 848 (1993).

Breach of Contract: Where a stranger to a contract without justification induces a party thereto to break it, he is responsible in damages to the other party to it. Burden v. Elling St. Bank, 76 M 24, 245 P 958, 46 ALR 906 (1926); Simonsen v. Barth, 64 M 95, 208 P 938 (1922).

MEASURE OF DAMAGES

Requirement to Pay Additional Tax Liability in Prepayment Clause Ambiguous — Ambiguity to Be Construed Most Strongly Against Drafter: In a real estate contract, the prepayment clause included a requirement that the buyer had to pay for additional taxes incurred by the sellers as a result of the prepayment. The District Court determined that the language in the prepayment clause was ambiguous as to whether the buyer owed the tax liability in the year the prepayment occurred or over the entire term of the contract, and the court looked to extrinsic evidence to determine that the parties' intent was to include the tax liability for the year the prepayment was made. On appeal, the Supreme Court overruled the District Court, noting that the ambiguous language had been drafted entirely by the sellers, therefore requiring the ambiguous language to be construed most strongly against them as the drafter. The case was remanded to the District Court to recalculate the sellers' damages based on total additional tax liability as calculated over the term of the contract. First Nat'l Properties, LLC v. Hillstead Trust, 2020 MT 211, 401 Mont. 59, 472 P.3d 134.

Award of No Damages Supported — Jury Verdict Supported by Adequate Evidence: A jury's award of no damages was supported by sufficient evidence. After the plaintiff's claims for medical benefits under a workers' compensation settlement were denied, the claims were eventually accepted, the plaintiff underwent surgery, and payment was approved for the plaintiff's doctor visits and surgery. The plaintiff filed a suit claiming that the initial denial of her medical benefits resulted in months of pain and suffering while she waited for the claims processor to approve her surgery. The jury was presented with adequate evidence to support a finding that the plaintiff's pain and suffering resulted from her own reluctance to undergo surgery. Moreover, the plaintiff admitted that she had not missed any treatment due to the initial denial. The jury heard evidence that contradicted the plaintiff's claim that the defendant's breach was the cause of her damages. Because the record was not devoid of evidence supporting the jury's verdict, the Supreme Court did not displace it. Suzor v. Int'l Paper Co., 2016 MT 344, 386 Mont. 54, 386 P.3d 584, distinguishing Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 Mont. 440, 945 P.2d 48 (1997), Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 Mont. 99, 7 P.3d 400, and Reis v. Luckett, 2015 MT 337, 381 Mont. 490, 362 P.3d 632.

Business Entitled to Consequential Damages for Wrongful Collection Action — Measure of Damages Based on Hardship in Obtaining Financing: The uninsured employers' fund (UEF) breached a contract by turning over to collections an employer that did not have workers' compensation insurance, despite the fact that late payments were being accepted from the employer by UEF. Accordingly, the District Court awarded consequential damages to the employer based on a loss of financing, a higher origination fee, unsold inventory, a restocking fee, and lost profits. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, reasoning that UEF should have foreseen that referring a claim to collections could create difficulties in obtaining financing and cause substantial barriers. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Objection to Damage Calculation Not Preserved for Appeal — Sufficient Evidence That Prevailing Party Mitigated Damages: The uninsured employers' fund (UEF) breached a contract and the District Court awarded consequential damages to the prevailing party. On appeal, UEF claimed that the District Court did not properly calculate damages based on two grounds. First, UEF claimed the District Court awarded gross damages rather than net damages. Second, UEF claimed the District Court should have offset any damages that it awarded given that the party that was awarded damages did not mitigate its damages by selling inventory to other dealers. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that UEF did not preserve the net damages argument based on a failure to object at trial. Additionally, the testimonial evidence supported the District Court's determination that the prevailing party could not sell its inventory to other dealers. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Substantial Credible Evidence Supported Calculation of Damages — Further Damages Not Reasonably Certain to Occur: The uninsured employers' fund breached a contract and the District Court awarded consequential damages to the prevailing party. On appeal, the prevailing party claimed that the District Court failed to award further damages, including future lost profits of $1.3 million over 10 years. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's conclusion and that further damages were not reasonably certain to occur. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Award for Reasonable Compensatory Damages in Breach of Contract Claim: In Watson I (Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 Mont. 120, 218 P.3d 1227), the Supreme Court remanded the issue of reasonable and nonspeculative damages to the District Court. On remand, the District Court found that compensatory damages of $42,000 for services from January to July 2002 were supported by substantial credible evidence. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction over the damages awarded, that the District Court followed the Supreme Court's instructions regarding damages, and that the defendant was not denied due process of law since she had reasonable notice of the damages sought by the plaintiff. Watson v. West, 2011 MT 57, 360 Mont. 9, 250 P.3d 845.

Remand for Determination of Clearly Ascertainable Damages in Breach of Contract Action: Watson was awarded $730,000 in compensatory damages in a default judgment against West for breach of an employment contract. The District Court based the amount on Watson's claims for 5 years of missed employment and the value of Watson's promised stock shares in West's corporation. However, the Supreme Court noted that questions remained whether the corporation was ever capitalized or brought into operation, that the parties' employment agreement was effectively canceled a mere 5 months after it was negotiated, and that the corporation itself was not named as a defendant, so it was questionable whether the award of 5 years of salary and the claimed full value of stock shares was reasonable. The fact that the judgment was entered by default did not abrogate the requirement that the damages be reasonable and clearly ascertainable, so the award was vacated and the case was remanded for further proceedings regarding the extent of Watson's reasonable and nonspeculative damages. Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 M 120, 218 P3d 1227 (2009).

Standard of Review of Determination of Damages — Speculative Damages Not Recoverable: A District Court's determination of damages is a factual finding that must be upheld if it is supported by substantial evidence, and the Supreme Court will not overturn a damages determination unless it is clearly erroneous. However, speculative damages that are not clearly ascertainable are not recoverable. Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 M 120, 218 P3d 1227 (2009). See also Hallenberg v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 2006 MT 191, 333 M 143, 141 P3d 1216 (2006), and Shephard v. Widhalm, 2012 MT 276, 367 Mont. 166, 290 P.3d 712.

Compensatory damages of $42,000 awarded on remand were supported by substantial credible evidence of contracts the defendant had with other consultants. The amounts paid to previous consultants were evidence of fair market salary for the plaintiff's services. Watson v. West, 2011 MT 57, 360 Mont. 9, 250 P.3d 845.

No Supreme Court Speculation on Apportionment of Damages — Award Supported by Substantial Credible Evidence Affirmed: The jury awarded numerous plaintiffs $17.5 million in compensatory tort damages for defendants' tortious conduct in handling plaintiffs' retirement benefits. On appeal, defendants asserted that the jury should have apportioned damages based on individual claims against each defendant. The Supreme Court noted that the jury was given a separate verdict form for each plaintiff and asked to determine whether defendants committed a tort against each plaintiff and if so, whether any defendant was liable for damages to that particular plaintiff. Defendants did not object to the verdict form or seek to have damages apportioned by the jury based on each cause of action or claim. Given that plaintiffs presented claims for breach of contract, bad faith breach of contract, tortious interference with contract, abuse of process, and malicious prosecution, the Supreme Court declined to speculate how or if the jury apportioned damages among the various claims. Rather, the court concluded that the award of compensatory damages was supported by substantial credible evidence and affirmed. Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009), following Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007).

Award for Damages for Breach of Letter of Agreement Improper Absent Valid Contractual Interest — Remand for New Trial: Plaintiff was awarded $2.5 million based on defendant's alleged breach of a letter of agreement to grant plaintiff an option to develop certain oil and gas interests after the jury found that the letter of agreement was not a contract. The Supreme Court reversed the award. Although there was sufficient evidence for the jury to conclude that plaintiff suffered $2.5 million in damages from the sale of the development rights, plaintiff was entitled to damages only if the letter created some right or interest in the development rights. However, because there was no extant contractual obligation running from defendant to plaintiff with respect to the development property, there was no legal basis for the damage award. The jury was confused about available remedies and rendered an inconsistent verdict that could not be reconciled with the evidence, argument, and legal theories presented at trial, which violated the constitutional rights of the litigants to a fair trial. Therefore, the case was reversed and remanded to the District Court for a new trial. D.R. Four Beat Alliance, LLC v. Sierra Prod. Co., 2009 MT 319, 352 M 435, 218 P3d 827 (2009).

Award of Restoration Damages in Excess of Market Value of Real Property: Defendant's refinery contaminated property and ground water in Sunburst, Montana, over a period of many years. Following trial, the District Court held defendant strictly liable as a matter of law for conducting an abnormally dangerous activity and found that defendant's trespass extended to all Sunburst plaintiffs who owned property above the contamination plume. Part of the damage award included costs reasonably necessary to restore plaintiffs' property to the condition that it would have been absent defendant's contamination. Citing Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966), defendant contended that restoration damages may not exceed the market value of the property. The Supreme Court distinguished Spackman because it dealt with readily replaceable items of personal property with an established market value. Instead, the court cited Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443 (1990), and adopted Restatement (Second) of Torts 929 for calculating damages for injuries to real property. The Restatement explains that restoration damages may be recoverable even though they might be greater than the entire value of the property and allows a trial court to craft an appropriate remedy to restore plaintiffs' property to the condition that it would have been had the wrong not occurred. Restoration awards may compensate a plaintiff more effectively than diminution in value when diminution in value fails to provide an adequate remedy. In this case, the jury awarded plaintiffs $15 million in restoration damages, and the Supreme Court affirmed the award as reasonable under the circumstances. The award was not viewed as a windfall because testimony indicated that the entire award would be used to repair the damaged property. Additionally, the fact that one collateral beneficiary was a plaintiff school district did not defeat an award of restoration damages because defendant could not remediate the ground water beneath the personal residences owned by other plaintiffs without also treating the ground water beneath the school. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007). See also Lampi v. Speed, 2011 MT 231, 362 Mont. 122, 261 P.3d 1000, in which the Supreme Court, applying and clarifying Sunburst and the restoration damages rule set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts 929, concluded that the District Court wrongly denied the plaintiff's motion to establish restoration damages as the appropriate measure of damages in the plaintiff's lawsuit to recover damages for lost trees and vegetation, and McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that a property owner may seek to recover restoration costs for a commercial family ranch, where the family lives and earns its living, in the same manner that a property owner may recover restoration damages for recreational or residential use.

Calculation of Restoration Damages — Burk Guidelines Applied: Defendant's refinery contaminated property and ground water in Sunburst, Montana, over a period of many years. Following trial, the District Court held defendant strictly liable as a matter of law for conducting an abnormally dangerous activity and found that defendant's trespass extended to all Sunburst plaintiffs who owned property above the contamination plume. Part of the damage award included costs reasonably necessary to restore plaintiffs' property to the condition that it would have been absent defendant's contamination. On appeal of the restoration costs, the Supreme Court applied the guidelines for cases involving damage to real property as set out in Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443 (1990). Although the difference between the value of the property before and after the injury, or the diminution in value, generally constitutes the appropriate measure of damages, no single measure of damages can serve in every case to adequately compensate an injured party. Restoration costs may be awarded if an injury is temporary, and a temporary injury may be abated or discontinued at any time either by an act of the wrongdoer or by the injured party. The ability to repair an injury must be more than a theoretical possibility in order for an injury to be temporary. A presumption exists that when restoration costs exceed the market value of the property, the injuries are considered permanent and the diminution in value rule applies, but the presumption of permanence can be overcome by statutory and common laws, such as environmental laws, that compel repair or replacement. However, the court held that a strict cap on restoration damages would equip the tortfeasor with the equivalent of a private right of inverse condemnation akin to a private right of eminent domain and would also fail to provide an adequate remedy for an injury to the environment or a special purpose property, such as an area with great ecological value but little or no commercial value. Evidence that restoration damages will be used to repair the damaged property may overcome the general rule in favor of diminution in value as the appropriate measure of damages. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007). See also Lampi v. Speed, 2011 MT 231, 362 Mont. 122, 261 P.3d 1000, in which the Supreme Court, applying and clarifying Sunburst and the restoration damages rule set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts 929, concluded that the District Court wrongly denied the plaintiff's motion to establish restoration damages as the appropriate measure of damages in the plaintiff's lawsuit to recover damages for lost trees and vegetation, and McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that a property owner may seek to recover restoration costs for a commercial family ranch, where the family lives and earns its living, in the same manner that a property owner may recover restoration damages for recreational or residential use.

Common-Law Action Not Usurped by Statutory Scheme for Environmental Remediation and Cleanup: Plaintiffs brought a common-law action against defendant for restoration damages related to environmental damage caused by defendant's refinery. Defendant asserted that the action would interfere with the statutory plan in the Comprehensive Environmental Cleanup and Responsibility Act (CECRA), Title 75, ch. 10, part 7, and contended that the common-law action was preempted by the statutory provisions. The Supreme Court disagreed. As set out in Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237 (1999), statutory preemption of common-law claims is limited to situations in which there are a direct conflict between statutes and a common-law claim. However, nothing in CECRA preempts a common-law claim that seeks to recover restoration damages beyond the statutes' health-based standards, and the court declined to add to CECRA a prohibition against common-law claims when the Legislature declined to do so. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007).

No Consideration of Compensatory Damages From Other Cases When Determining Propriety of Award in Particular Case — Factual Foundation of Award Sole Consideration: A jury awarded plaintiff $1.1 million in compensatory damages. Defendants appealed the award on grounds that it was excessive and solely an emotional distress award that was not based on the evidence, urging that the award should be evaluated in light of smaller awards in other cases. Citing Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38 (2000), the Supreme Court rejected the idea that the size of other awards should be considered when the two victims of the same tortious conduct can be impacted in dramatically different ways, and the court declined to consider compensatory damage awards rendered in other cases in determining the propriety of the award in this case. The proper measure of damages must be determined based on the facts of each case, and juries have wide latitude in setting the amount of damages. Additionally, the court did not find that this award was solely an emotional distress award. Plaintiff presented substantial evidence that his professional and personal reputation was harmed and that he incurred substantial expenses in defending himself, as well as suffering emotional distress and resultant physical complications. The award was consistent with the evidence of record, and the Supreme Court declined to interfere with the constitutionally mandated process of jury decisionmaking or to disturb the award. Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007).

Misrepresentation of Substituted Seed — Remand for Determination of Damages Beyond Subsequent Crop Loss and for Consideration of Actual Fraud: Plaintiff delivered a load of wheat seed to defendant's facility for cleaning and treating. Defendant inadvertently dumped the load into a waste bin, replaced the seed with a similar but different variety, and charged plaintiff for cleaning and treatment without informing plaintiff of the error. When the crop came up, plaintiff noticed that the seed was a different variety, sued defendant for negligent misrepresentation, and sought compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court held that defendant did not commit actual fraud, but misconstrued the differing definitions of actual fraud in Title 27 and Title 28 in determining that no punitive damages were allowed. The Supreme Court remanded for reconsideration of the punitive damage claim based on actual fraud as defined in 27-1-221. Additionally, the District Court failed to address plaintiff's claim for damages beyond the actual crop loss suffered because of the substituted seed, and that issue was also remanded for further consideration. However, the District Court did not err in refusing to award damages for plaintiff's lost crop insurance payments, in its findings regarding the per acre loss and value per bushel of lost production, by qualifying plaintiff's expert witness, or by awarding prejudgment interest. Hallenberg v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 2006 MT 191, 333 M 143, 141 P3d 1216 (2006).

Damages Payable for Corporate Partner's Breach of Fiduciary Duty: In dissolving a corporation, the District Court found that one partner had breached a fiduciary duty to the corporation, causing damages. However, the District Court did not make a specific dollar finding for the amount of damages or award the corporation any compensation. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a determination of damages to be paid to the corporation by the partner who breached the fiduciary duty. Attorney fees were properly denied because the corporate agreement contained no provision for award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in a civil action. Sartori v. S&S Trucking, Inc., 2006 MT 164, 332 M 503, 139 P3d 806 (2006), following Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 2001 MT 28, 304 M 163, 19 P3d 223 (2001).

Court Reinstatement of Emotional Damage Award Following Arbitrary Reduction by Commission for Human Rights Affirmed: After finding that plaintiff was subjected to employment discrimination, the hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff was entitled to $75,000 in compensatory damages for emotional distress. The Commission for Human Rights reduced the award to $40,000, but the Commission did not cite any evidence to support the reduction, aside from the vague feeling of some Commissioners that the initial award was too high. The District Court reinstated the $75,000 award, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. The hearings examiner had authority to award compensatory damages, and the hearings examiner's findings were supported by testimony from plaintiff, plaintiff's experts, and others. The Commission's reduction was arbitrary, and the District Court did not err in reinstating the original compensatory award. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

No Error in Failure to Reduce Wage Loss Recovery in Human Rights Case for Failure to Mitigate: After finding that plaintiff was subjected to employment discrimination, the hearings examiner concluded that plaintiff was entitled to recover lost wages. Defendants contended that the wage loss should be reduced because plaintiff failed to take reasonable steps to mitigate the damages. The Supreme Court agreed that in a claim for lost wages before the Commission for Human Rights, a claimant must take reasonable steps toward mitigating damages. Citing Hulett v. Bozeman School District, 228 M 71, 740 P2d 1132 (1987), the court noted that plaintiff was not obligated to seek out all possible employment opportunities, but needed only to be reasonable in pursuing offers of employment. In this case, it was undisputed that plaintiff was emotionally debilitated, and although there was evidence of other reasons why plaintiff did not immediately seek new employment, plaintiff's medical testimony and testimony concerning plaintiff's loss of confidence, anxiety, and reluctance to meet new people supported the hearings examiner's findings, and the Supreme Court declined to disturb those findings. Benjamin v. Anderson, 2005 MT 123, 327 M 173, 112 P3d 1039 (2005).

Failure to Provide Documentation of Damages Precluding Damage Award: A settlement agreement provided that the wife would be sole owner of a house and be responsible for indebtedness on the property. The husband contended that he should have been credited for additional interest that he was charged on loans unrelated to the marriage because the wife defaulted on the mortgage after the final decree was entered and hurt the husband's credit rating. However, even though the wife breached the settlement agreement, the husband did not submit documentation to prove damages related to the loss of credit, and absent proof, the damage request was properly denied. In re Marriage of Mease, 2004 MT 59, 320 M 229, 92 P3d 1148 (2004).

Jury Award Based on Contested Expenses — Sufficient Evidence to Support Verdict: Plaintiffs asserted that a new trial was warranted because the jury in a personal injury case returned a verdict of $9,873, which amounted to significantly less than plaintiffs' evidence of past and future medical expenses, loss of past and future wages, and pain and suffering. However, the District Court denied a new trial, and the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that if a jury award is insufficient to cover uncontested expenses, then it is not supported by substantial evidence, but that was not the case here. Evidence presented by both parties revealed a significant dispute in the nature, cause, and severity of the injury, the need for future treatment, the existence and amount of past and future wage loss, and pain and suffering. Based on the record of disputed expenses, there was substantial evidence to support the jury award, and the Supreme Court declined to retry the case or disturb the judgment, especially when the District Court had already upheld the sufficiency of the evidence on motion for a new trial. Jenks v. Bertelsen, 2004 MT 50, 320 M 139, 86 P3d 24 (2004).

Award of Compensatory Damages Not Disproportionate to Injury From Sexual Assault Affirmed: Following a sexual assault by a coworker, the District Court awarded Beaver $9,095 in compensatory damages, including $3,095 for expenses incurred in therapy, $1,000 for future therapy, and $5,000 for emotional distress. Beaver contended that the amount was incomplete and inadequate, citing cases in which plaintiffs received higher awards in compensation for sexual crimes. The Supreme Court distinguished those cases and affirmed. The amount awarded for compensatory damages rests in the sound discretion of the trier of fact, and only when the judgment is the product of passion or prejudice or the amount awarded is so grossly out of proportion to the injury as to shock the conscience will an appellate court intervene. Although the award in this case was relatively small by comparison, there was no showing of passion or prejudice or that the amount awarded was disproportionate to the injury, so the award was not disturbed. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Failure to Prove Amount of Damages for Replacement Tail Insurance Coverage: A doctor was suspended from employment with a health care facility and was informed that the facility had removed her from the medical malpractice insurance that covered the clinic doctors. There was no immediate indication whether the doctor continued to be covered under the facility's policy for tail coverage, which is the portion of the policy that would cover any potential claims made against the doctor in the future related to the doctor's practice while employed at the facility, although the facility later contended that the doctor was in fact covered by the facility's tail insurance. Nevertheless, in order to cover her tail insurance, the doctor subsequently purchased her own malpractice insurance that included tail insurance for the time that she was employed at the clinic and later contended that the facility should be liable in damages for the cost of the replacement insurance. However, no evidence was presented to indicate a specific amount in the doctor's replacement insurance that related to the cost of tail insurance. Unable to prove that she incurred damages when she believed that she was without tail coverage, no damages were awarded. Marias Healthcare Serv., Inc. v. Turenne, 2001 MT 127, 305 M 419, 28 P3d 491 (2001).

State Agricultural Lease — Negligent Misrepresentation That State Land Available for Lease — Lost Profits Not Recoverable: The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) informed Bokma Farms, Inc. (Bokma), by telephone and certified letter that certain agricultural property was available for lease after Maclean failed to make a lease payment to the DNRC. Bokma made expenditures in reliance upon the DNRC's statement that the property was available for lease. The DNRC later determined that Maclean did make the lease payment and therefore renewed the lease with Maclean. Bokma sued the DNRC, alleging breach of contract and negligent misrepresentation, and asked for damages for lost profits. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly dismissed the breach of contract claim because no lease had been signed. The Supreme Court also held, citing the Restatement (Second) of Torts 552B (1976), that although damages for lost profits may be awarded as consequential damages for negligent misrepresentation, lost profits could not be awarded in this case because the loss of profits was not caused by the misrepresentation but by the fact that Bokma did not have an enforceable lease with the DNRC. Bokma Farms, Inc. v. St., 2000 MT 298, 302 M 321, 14 P3d 1199, 57 St. Rep. 1253 (2000).

Commission for Human Rights Discretion to Award Compensatory Damages in Mixed Motives Cases: Laudert suffered liver failure while employed by the Richland County Sheriff's Department (RCSd) and had to resign. Following Laudert's full recovery, his former position came open again and he applied but was not rehired. He filed a discrimination charge on grounds of age and disability. The hearings examiner found that questions asked by the RCSd interview panel constituted direct evidence that RCSD had unlawfully considered Laudert's disability, but did not award damages because Laudert would not have been hired even in the absence of any unlawful consideration of his disability. RCSD maintained that Laudert was not hired because of his employment history. The hearings examiner properly determined that this was a "mixed motive" case. Whether Laudert was entitled to compensatory damages depended on whether RCSD proved by a preponderance of the evidence that it would have made the same decision in the absence of Laudert's disability, and Laudert's employment history provided substantial evidence proving that Laudert would not have been hired in any event. The Supreme Court found that the hearings examiner properly exercised the statutory discretion to preclude damages, and the court affirmed the authority of the Commission for Human Rights to limit compensatory damages in mixed motive cases pursuant to ARM 24.9.611 and Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 US 228 (1989). Laudert v. Richland County Sheriff's Dept., 2000 MT 218, 301 M 114, 7 P3d 386, 57 St. Rep. 872 (2000).

Insufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Limiting Damages to Past Medical Expenses but Not Pain and Suffering: Renville was injured as a passenger in an automobile accident in 1995, and liability was not contested. Evidence was uncontroverted that Renville had subsequently experienced pain and suffering as a result of the accident. The jury was instructed to award damages for past and future medical expenses, loss of earnings and earning capacity, pain and suffering, and loss of the ability to pursue an occupation and an established course of life. However, the jury limited its verdict to only past medical expenses, so Renville sought a new trial on grounds of insufficient evidence to support the award and irregularities in the proceedings. On review, the Supreme Court noted that a jury may not disregard uncontradicted, credible, nonopinion evidence. The court applied Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), in holding that if a jury fails to award damages when the only evidence of record supports an award, that verdict is not supported by substantial evidence and may be set aside. Renville was entitled to some award for damages for proved pain and suffering, and the Supreme Court remanded for new trial limited to the issue of damages. Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400, 57 St. Rep. 864 (2000). On remand, the District Court concluded that factual issues still existed as to the amount of Renville's past medical expenses and that the issues must be determined by a jury on retrial. The court found that the effect of the decision in Renville I, id., was to remand the entire issue of damages for a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. The decision in Renville I clearly stated that the award was limited to Renville's past medical expenses, which had been proved and awarded. Therefore, the law of the case precluded the District Court from revisiting the issue of Renville's past medical expenses on remand. It was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny Renville's motion for summary judgment and request for declaratory judgment on the issue of past medical expenses. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003). See also St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001), and Carestia v. Robey, 2013 MT 335, 372 Mont. 438, 313 P.3d 169.

Trial Court Discretion to Determine Appropriateness of Interest Award — No Award of Prejudgment Interest Until Underlying Monetary Obligation Established: H-D Irrigating, Inc. (H-D), bought land and irrigation equipment from Hobbie Diamond Cattle Company (Hobbie) and Kimble Properties, Inc. (Kimble Properties), respectively, then sued both companies for constructive fraud when the land eroded and caused damage to the irrigation system. The District Court concluded that defendants were entitled to a net payment on the promissory note for the sale, less damages for defendant's misrepresentations, plus interest from the date of judgment. Defendants contended that the court subtracted an offset before calculating interest, calculated interest from a date 5 years later than should have been applied, and failed to award interest on the promissory note from the date on which the first payment was due. Plaintiffs contended that accrual of all interest should be suspended pending resolution of the dispute and that they should be entitled to prejudgment interest for their damages. Distinguishing Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966 (1988), which involved a breach of contract rather than constructive fraud, the Supreme Court noted that H-D was obligated to make timely payments on the promissory note, but not entitled to damages until the District Court adjudicated the fraud issue, and that H-D was not entitled to offset its promissory note obligation until the time of judgment because defendants did not have an underlying monetary obligation to H-D until liability was ascribed for constructive fraud. The District Court should have offset H-D's obligation by the damages resulting from the constructive fraud at the time of judgment. It was within the discretion of the judge as factfinder to determine whether interest was appropriate, and the court did not err in refusing to award prejudgment interest to H-D. Judgment was reversed for a recalculation of damages. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Damages for Tort of Spoliation of Evidence: The speculative nature of damages is inherent in the uncertainties of proof relevant to the tort of spoliation of evidence, but the speculative nature of such damages should not bar recovery. Thus, the interest of plaintiff to recover the entire amount of damages that would have been received if the underlying action had been pursued successfully must be balanced with defendant's interest in not providing plaintiff with a windfall. Taking these interests into consideration, it is necessary that damages be discounted to account for the uncertainties. Therefore, damages arrived at through reasonable estimation based on relevant data should be multiplied by the significant possibility that plaintiff would have won the underlying suit had the spoliated evidence been available. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Holmes v. Amerex Rent-A-Car, 710 A2d 846 (D.C. 1998).

Agreed Coverage Minus Agreed Premiums as Damages for Insurance Fraud: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that a $150,000 whole life policy converted from term life would only require 3 years of premium payments by the insured and after that would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends and other earnings. When the insured discovered the facts, he failed to make the third payment, the policy was canceled, and at the time of the verdict in his favor he was uninsurable. The insured's damages were properly calculated at the agreed coverage minus the 3 years of premiums that he agreed to pay. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Amount by Which Fraudulent Loans Against Policy to Pay Premiums Decreased Its Coverage as Proper Damages: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that after the insured paid premiums for 4 or 5 years, the policy would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends and other earnings. Without the insured's knowledge, after the 4 or 5 years passed, the agent fraudulently had the premiums paid by loans against the policy. The insured's damages were properly calculated to be the amount by which the loans against the policy decreased the coverage amount. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Cost of Paying for Same Coverage as Damages for Insurance Canceled After Insured Discovered Insurance Agent Fraud and Failed to Pay Further Premiums: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that after the insured paid premiums for 3 years, the policy would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends and other earnings. Without the insured's knowledge, after the 3 years passed, the agent fraudulently had the premiums paid by loans against the policy. When the insured discovered the fraud and refused to make further payments, the policy was canceled. The insured's damages were properly calculated to be the amount that it would cost her to purchase the same amount of coverage and pay the premiums until the policy was self-sustaining. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Cost of Similar Policy as Damages for Fraudulently Inducing Purchase of Policy Canceled When Fraud Was Discovered and Insured Failed to Make Further Payments: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that after the insured paid premiums for 4 or 5 years, the policy would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends. Without the insured's knowledge, after the time period passed, the agent fraudulently had the premiums paid by loans against the policy. The policy was canceled when the insured discovered the fraud and refused to make further premium payments. The insured's damages were properly calculated as the cost of paying for a similar policy. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Fraudulent Statement That Policy Would Be Self-Sustaining After Three Years — Damages as Cost of Future Premiums and of Repaying Loans Fraudulently Made Against Policy to Pay Past Premiums: An insurance agent fraudulently misrepresented that after the insured paid premiums for 3 years, the policy would be self-sustained by the payment of premiums out of dividends and other earnings. Without the insured's knowledge, after the 3 years passed, the agent fraudulently had the premiums paid by loans against the policy. The insured's damages were properly calculated as the cost of paying back the loans and of making future premium payments. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Plaintiff Entitled to Damages for Pain and Suffering: When a jury found defendant liable for assault and battery and awarded damages for plaintiff's medical expenses, it was the jury's duty to award damages for pain and suffering for plaintiff's serious injuries. There was not substantial evidence to support the jury's failure to award damages for pain and suffering and hearing loss. Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854, 52 St. Rep. 268 (1995).

Improper Award of Contractual Interest in Case of Negligent Misrepresentation of Real Property Appraisal: A professional appraiser prepared appraisal reports on two properties, which a lender reviewed and relied on in its decision to make loans at 61% to 62% of appraised market value and secured by the appraised properties. When the borrower defaulted, the lender foreclosed. After the Sheriff's sale, a deficiency judgment of $848,067, including $241,333.02 in contractual interest on the note, was entered against the borrower. The lender later sued the appraiser for damages arising from negligent misrepresentation of the appraisals, seeking an additional $620,572 in lost earnings on the deficiency. Under section 552B, Restatement (Second) of Torts, damages recoverable for a negligent misrepresentation are those necessary to compensate the plaintiff for the pecuniary loss of which the misrepresentation is a legal cause, including: (1) the difference between the value of what has been received in the transaction and its purchase price or other value given for it; and (2) pecuniary loss suffered otherwise as a consequence of the plaintiff's reliance on the misrepresentation. Under this rationale, the District Court erred in awarding the contractual interest but properly denied the award for lost earnings. United First Fed. S&L Ass'n v. White-Stevens, Ltd., 253 M 242, 833 P2d 170, 49 St. Rep. 490 (1992).

Limitation of Future Lost Profits to Period Set in Implied Contract: The District Court properly limited recovery of compensatory damages for future lost profits, in both a breach of contract action and a breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing action, to the extension period of the implied contract. Zeke's Distrib. Co. v. Brown-Forman Corp., 239 M 272, 779 P2d 908, 46 St. Rep. 1678 (1989), distinguishing St. Bank of Townsend v. Maryann's, Inc., 204 M 21, 664 P2d 295 (1983).

Reduction of Compensatory Damages to Precise Amount in Record: A company had over $1 million annual gross income at the time its bank exercised a setoff, leaving the company with no operating cash or line of credit. The record showed company assets valued at $312,000, but as a result of the bank's action, the company lost all its employees, was sued many times, had its corporate goodwill destroyed, and had to enter into joint venture agreements with general contractors in order to stay in business. There was no clear indication in the record as to the company's profits following the setoff. The jury awarded the company $500,000 compensatory damages. However, rather than resort to speculation to establish the amount of lost profit reasonable to be ascribed as damages, the Supreme Court reduced the jury award to $312,000, the only positive figure in the record and the figure most favorable to the company. Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989).

Damage Award for Loss of Income: A jury award of $5,000 for loss of income was supported by evidence plaintiff lost $4,309.21 because he was unable to invest income from oil royalties and bonds that were wrongfully attached and because he had to borrow money to live on at 7.5% to 8.5% interest during the period of attachment. Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

Compensatory Award Reasonably Computed and Supported by Credible Evidence: A bank attacked a compensatory award on the grounds that the amount included for excessive interest paid by plaintiffs was wrong on its face and that the amounts awarded for crop loss and other expenses were speculative. The Supreme Court found that although the compensatory award was in the nature of general damages and not broken down as to items used by the jury to compute the award, it was clear from the record that the award was based on amounts claimed by plaintiffs as items of damage. Further, although crop loss amounts were gross rather than net amounts, evidence of the losses appeared to be reasonably computed. Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Verdict of Zero Damages — No Abuse of Discretion: In a wrongful termination suit against newspaper, reporter Dawson appealed a District Court award of zero damages after the jury found in his favor on the issues of liability and proximate cause. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although the newspaper had breached its duty of good faith and fair dealing and was the proximate cause of Dawson's damages, the reporter had three other sources of income and had failed to mitigate his damages by accepting comparable journalism work. Thus, the jury was justified in awarding zero damages. Dawson v. The Billings Gazette, 223 M 415, 726 P2d 826, 43 St. Rep. 1838 (1986).

Damages for Injury to Vegetation — Market Value: The Supreme Court held that, on cross-motions in limine, the District Court correctly ruled that the proper measure of damages for the injury by fire to growing vegetation was the difference between the market value of the real property before and after the fire. On appeal, plaintiff raised the issue of whether the District Court's ruling, with the resulting limitation of evidence at trial, was correct as a matter of law. Appraisers for both parties testified that the market value of the land was not diminished as a result of the fire; therefore, no damages were awarded. The District Court judgment was affirmed. Kebschull v. Nott, 220 M 64, 714 P2d 993, 43 St. Rep. 176 (1986). However, see Lampi v. Speed, 2011 MT 231, 362 Mont. 122, 261 P.3d 1000, which concluded that Kebschull does not limit a court's ability to award restoration damages to replace destroyed vegetation in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 Mont. 259, 165 P.3d 1079, and adoption of the restoration damages rule set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts 929.

Builder Entitled to Lost Profits: A builder who was not in breach and who did not cause the breach of a construction contract was entitled to the full amount of his lost profits. A nonbreaching party should be placed in as good a position as if the contract had been performed. Martin Dev. Co. v. Keeney Constr. Co., 216 M 212, 703 P2d 143, 42 St. Rep. 752 (1985). On a later appeal, the parties were bound by the facts and law established in this prior case. Relitigation of issues was barred by collateral estoppel, and claims of legal malpractice were barred by the statute of limitations. Peschel v. Jones, 232 M 516, 760 P2d 51, 45 St. Rep. 1244 (1988).

Corporate Profits as Basis for Lost Earnings: Given the nature of the business of plaintiff injured in auto accident (he was the majority shareholder) and the fact that it was a Subchapter S corporation, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow testimony of an expert on lost earnings based on the profits of the corporation. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Lost Future Earnings — Testimony on Worklife Expectancy From Date of Trial Admissible: In determining plaintiffs' lost future earnings, an expert's testimony on plaintiffs' worklife expectancy from the date of the trial instead of from the date of the accident that was the basis of the suit was properly allowed, even though the damages accrued from the date of the accident. Plaintiff also presented evidence of his worklife expectancy from the date of the accident. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Costs of Lawsuit Allowed to Enforce Water Rights: In a water rights dispute, upstream junior appropriators damaged downstream senior appropriators' headgate. A lawsuit over their respective water rights ensued, and the senior appropriators were successful both at trial and on appeal. At trial, the jury awarded the senior appropriators their court costs and attorney fees as damages. The Supreme Court refused to overturn the award, ruling that the costs of the lawsuit were consequential to the interference with the headgate and not so remote as to preclude recovery. Cate v. Hargrave, 209 M 265, 680 P2d 952, 41 St. Rep. 697 (1984), distinguished in Tanner v. Dream Island, Inc., 275 M 414, 913 P2d 641, 53 St. Rep. 208 (1996).

Measure of Damages:

When overhead or operating expenses are saved as a result of a breach of contract, the proper measure of damages is net, not gross profit. Overhead attributable to a particular contract may be found to be an avoided cost of performance following a contractual breach. However, when overhead costs are ongoing, negligible, or otherwise unaffected by a particular performance, they need not be considered when a contractual breach prevents performance. E.C.A. Envtl. Management Serv., Inc. v. Toenyes, 208 M 336, 679 P2d 213, 41 St. Rep. 388 (1984).

It is not the theory of our Code, as evidenced by this section, 27-1-201, 27-1-317, and 27-1-320, that substantial damage suffered by one through the fault of another shall be unredressed but that in all such cases the damaged party shall have full compensation. Chesnut v. Sales, 49 M 318, 141 P 986 (1914).

The measure of damages for wrongfully procuring the appointment of a receiver for a going and solvent corporation is the amount which will afford compensation for the detriment proximately caused by defendants' wrongful act, which, in case of the wrongful conversion of personal property, is presumed to be the value of the property at the time of conversion, with interest from that time, or the highest market value of the property at any time between conversion and the verdict, without interest, and a fair compensation for the time and money properly expended in pursuit of the property. Thornton-Thomas Mercantile Co. v. Bretherton, 32 M 80, 80 P 10 (1905).

Plaintiffs Injured by Defendants' Intentionally Tortious Conduct Entitled to Damages for Pain and Suffering: In a dispute over who was entitled to lease a parcel of agricultural land, defendants intentionally interfered with plaintiffs' livestock and intentionally injured plaintiffs themselves. Plaintiffs sued defendants, and the jury found that the defendants had committed wrongful acts toward the plaintiffs which were the cause of the injuries sustained by the plaintiffs. The jury awarded plaintiffs their medical expenses and $10,000 each in punitive damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that because liability had been established, the jury should have awarded compensatory damages for pain and suffering for the serious injuries suffered. The case was remanded for trial on the damages issue. Gehnert v. Cullinan, 211 M 435, 685 P2d 352, 41 St.

Rep. 372 (1984), opinion withdrawn for en banc rehearing and same opinion reissued at 211 M 435, 685 P2d 352, 41 St. Rep. 1474 (1984), distinguished in Walls v. Rue, 233 M 236, 759 P2d 169, 45 St. Rep. 1451 (1988), and followed in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Compensatory Damages Reduced by Contributory Negligence Even Though Not Proximate Cause: Compensatory damages award was reduced on appeal by the 16% that plaintiff was found to be contributorily negligent, even though his negligence was found not to be a proximate cause of his injury. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981).

Adverse Possession — Sufficiency of Damages: The appellants in an adverse possession case alleged there was insufficient evidence of the amount of damages to sustain the verdict against them. The Supreme Court considered delay rental receipts and lost profits. A judgment for damages must be supported by substantial evidence that it is not the product of mere guess or speculation. Substantial damages exist whenever the owner of property is deprived of the use of that property. Recovery of damages would not be denied provided the evidence was sufficient to afford a reasonable basis for determining the specific amount awarded. The court held that there was no uncertainty about the existence of substantial damages here. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 192 M 208, 627 P2d 1199, 38 St. Rep. 574 (1981).

Exemplary Damages for Unlawful Act — No Underlying Tort Liability: Exemplary damages may be awarded to a plaintiff under 27-1-221 even though plaintiff did not suffer any emotional distress and even though there was no underlying tort negligence found by the jury. Under 27-1-202, plaintiff is entitled to compensation since defendant knowingly attempted to obliterate evidence of the cause of a car accident, and it is equally apparent under 27-1-221 that a jury may award exemplary damages where the defendant has been guilty of either actual or implied malice. The statutory framework of 27-1-221 sets forth no specific requirement of an underlying tort or mental distress, nor will the Supreme Court imply such requirements through judicial construction. A plaintiff need only show actual damages pursuant to 27-1-202. Lauman v. Lee, 192 M 84, 626 P2d 830, 38 St. Rep. 499 (1981).

Failure of Jury to Fix Monetary Value on Actual Damages Not to Preclude Exemplary Damages: The failure of a jury to fix a monetary value as plaintiff's damages does not of necessity indicate an absence of actual damages so as to preclude an award of exemplary damages. Although the precise extent of damages attributable to the destruction of physical evidence by defendant may be elusive, an identifiable basis for actual damages exists which arises from the deprivation to plaintiff of tests and results necessary to prove his case. Lauman v. Lee, 192 M 84, 626 P2d 830, 38 St. Rep. 499 (1981).

Determination of Damages: When a hospital interferes with its employee's statutory right under 50-5-503 to refuse to participate in a sterilization operation, its violation of 50-5-504 may entitle the employee to damages to be determined by a compensation theory, including reasonably certain future damages, and possibly exemplary damages. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 189 M 259, 615 P2d 883, 37 St. Rep. 1420 (1980).

Review of Damage Award: The amount to be awarded as damages is properly left to the jury, and the court on appeal will not substitute its judgment for that of the jury, particularly where, as here, the trial court has approved the verdict by denying a new trial. It is only where the amount awarded is so grossly out of proportion to the injury as to shock the conscience that the appellate court will intervene. Frisnegger v. Gibson, 183 M 57, 598 P2d 574 (1979), following Salvail v. Great N. Ry., 156 M 12, 473 P2d 549 (1970), and followed in Hansen v. Hansen, 254 M 152, 835 P2d 748, 49 St. Rep. 677 (1992). See also Cechovic v. Hardin & Associates, Inc., 273 M 104, 902 P2d 520, 52 St. Rep. 854 (1995).

Damages for Blocked Ditch: When plaintiffs built an apartment house on property through which ran an irrigation ditch to which defendants had a water right, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and awarded attorney fees and damages to defendant for costs incurred in renting a sprinkler to compensate for the blocked ditch. Boz-Lew Builders v. Smith, 174 M 448, 571 P2d 389 (1977).

Disability Insurance Policy: Insured was entitled to sue insurance company for actual damages for default on policy requiring it to pay car installments upon insured's disability as well as for exemplary damages since default was oppressive, malicious, or fraudulent and in violation of statute requiring prompt payment of claim. State ex rel. Larson v. District Court, 149 M 131, 423 P2d 598 (1967), distinguished in State ex rel. Cashen v. District Court, 157 M 40, 482 P2d 567 (1971).

Value of Vehicle: Where plaintiff showed the value of damaged vehicle plus the cost of repairs and defendant failed to overcome the preponderance of evidence by showing truck's value by comparable and available units, the measure of damages was determined by plaintiff's evidence and not by the bluebook list value. Favero v. Culhane, 142 M 69, 381 P2d 487 (1963).

Value of the Use: The value of the use is the value to the owner of the property, not the value to the wrongdoer. The value of the use is ordinarily held to be the reasonable rental value of the premises withheld. In action to recover the value of the use and occupancy of a tract of land which had been used as a filling station, it was proper to sustain objection to testimony as to the value of the use of land with respect to each gallon of gasoline and each pound of grease sold, since it is not the withholder's gain but the rental value that measures the compensation. Pritchard Petroleum Co. v. Farmers Co-op Oil & Supply Co., 121 M 1, 190 P2d 55 (1948).

Amount and Extent of Damage — Must Prove: One injured through the unlawful act of another may recover compensation for damages that directly flow from the act of the person causing them. To justify recovery, there must be proof of the extent and amount of the damages claimed. Recovery is limited to the amount pleaded. A car owner, deprived of it unlawfully, is entitled to the value of its use less depreciation if he desires to use it; if he wants to sell it, depreciation by age is the proper measure of damages. Rigney v. Swingley, 112 M 104, 113 P2d 344 (1941).

Lump-Sum Damages, Apportionment Unauthorized: In the absence of statute authorizing a jury to apportion compensatory damages against joint tortfeasors, damages must be assessed in one sum against those found liable. When the jury in its verdict finds a lump sum and then attempts to divide it among certain of the defendants, the division should be stricken out as surplusage and judgment entered for the lump sum or the verdict should be sent back to the jury with instruction to correct it. The jury may apportion exemplary damages between joint tortfeasors if actual damages have been assessed. Bowman v. Lewis, 110 M 435, 102 P2d 1 (1940), overruled on another point in Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Loss of Consortium Claim by Adult Child of Injured Parent — Claim Recognized by Montana Law — Evidentiary Standard: A Montana federal district court certified to the Montana Supreme Court the question of whether Montana law recognized a loss of consortium claim filed by an adult child of an injured parent. Here, the father was seriously injured in a car accident when his daughter was 18. In a matter of first impression, the court concluded that Montana law does recognize such a claim and that the claim is a natural extension of Montana's common law and is consistent with the state constitution's guarantee of full legal redress. The court also ruled that the evidentiary standard for such a claim is the same as that for a claim brought by a minor child as adopted in Keele v. St. Vincent Hosp. & Health Care Center, 258 Mont. 158, 852 P.2d 574 (1993). North Pacific Ins. Co. v. Stucky, 2014 MT 299, 377 Mont. 25, 338 P.3d 56.

Business Entitled to Consequential Damages for Wrongful Collection Action — Measure of Damages Based on Hardship in Obtaining Financing: The uninsured employers' fund (UEF) breached a contract by turning over to collections an employer that did not have workers' compensation insurance, despite the fact that late payments were being accepted from the employer by UEF. Accordingly, the District Court awarded consequential damages to the employer based on a loss of financing, a higher origination fee, unsold inventory, a restocking fee, and lost profits. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, reasoning that UEF should have foreseen that referring a claim to collections could create difficulties in obtaining financing and cause substantial barriers. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Substantial Credible Evidence Supported Calculation of Damages — Further Damages Not Reasonably Certain to Occur: The uninsured employers' fund breached a contract and the District Court awarded consequential damages to the prevailing party. On appeal, the prevailing party claimed that the District Court failed to award further damages, including future lost profits of $1.3 million over 10 years. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's conclusion and that further damages were not reasonably certain to occur. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Loss of Consortium Claim Independent as to Damages, but Derivative as to Liability: Mickelson was injured when the fire truck that he was driving was struck by a Montana Rail Link (MRL) train. His spouse and children sought damages for loss of consortium. The District Court held that the loss of consortium claims should be reduced by the percentage of negligence attributed to Mickelson. When a plaintiff's contributory negligence is determined to be not greater than the tortfeasor's negligence, then damages for loss of consortium, being independent and not contingent upon the rights or liabilities of a parent or spouse, may not be reduced by the other spouse's negligence. However, because the language in 27-1-702 provides that any damages allowed must be diminished in the proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to the person recovering, a loss of consortium claim is considered independent as to damages and derivative as to liability. In other words, a defendant must be more liable for a plaintiff's injuries than the plaintiff before there can be any recovery, whether it is on the plaintiff's personal injury claim or on a loss of consortium claim stemming from those injuries. For example, if plaintiff is determined to be 50% or less contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child could recover 100% of a loss of consortium claim; however, if plaintiff is determined to be 51% or more contributorily negligent for plaintiff's injuries, then a spouse or child would recover nothing on a loss of consortium claim. Therefore, the Supreme Court directed that, on retrial, any contributory negligence attributable to Mickelson could not be imputed to the spouse and children to reduce a loss of consortium award, but if Mickelson was found more liable than MRL, there could be no recovery for loss of consortium. Mickelson v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 111, 299 M 348, 999 P2d 985, 57 St. Rep. 446 (2000), following Herold v. Burlington N., Inc., 761 F2d 1241 (8th Cir. 1985).

Elements Necessary for Minor Child to Establish Claim for Loss of Parental Consortium: In Montana, the elements necessary for a minor child to establish a claim for loss of parental consortium are: (1) a third party tortiously causes the parent to suffer a serious, permanent, and disabling mental or physical injury compensable under Montana law; and (2) the parent's ultimate condition of mental or physical impairment must be so overwhelming and severe that it causes the parent-child relationship to be destroyed or nearly destroyed. If the tortfeasor is not subject to liability to the parent under tort principles, the child cannot sustain a cause of action for loss of parental consortium. If the parent could not recover from the tortfeasor for purely mental or emotional injury absent a physical component, the child cannot bring an action for consortium loss resulting from that injury. The destruction or near destruction of the parent-child relationship is a necessary element in establishing the cause of action, not merely a factor in computing damages. Keele v. St. Vincent Hosp. & Health Care Center, 258 M 158, 852 P2d 574, 50 St. Rep. 475 (1993), following Villareal v. St. Dept. of Transportation, 774 P2d 213 (Ariz. 1989). In North Pacific Ins. Co. v. Stucky, 2014 MT 299, 377 Mont. 25, 338 P.3d 56, the Supreme Court held that the elements necessary for an adult child to establish a claim for loss of parental consortium are the same as those for a minor child as adopted in Keele.

Right of Child to Cause of Action for Loss of Parental Consortium — Injury by Third Party: Minor children are entitled to the support, aid, protection, affection, society, discipline, guidance, and training of their parents. Therefore, a minor child who has been deprived of these rights by the tortious injury to a parent by a third party has a separate cause of action for loss of parental consortium. However, any one element of damages for the injury may be recovered only once. Pence v. Fox, 248 M 521, 813 P2d 429, 48 St. Rep. 550 (1991).

Damages for Lost Crops Held as Double Recovery: The plaintiff's land was damaged when a dam gave way and his property was flooded. The jury awarded him damages for the decreased value of his property and lost future crop production. The Supreme Court held that when a landholder recovers damages based on the decreased value of his real property, damages for lost crops constitute double damages and are not recoverable. Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443, 47 St. Rep. 520 (1990).

Damages for Permanent Injury to Real Property: The plaintiff's ranch was damaged when a dam gave way and his property was flooded. The Supreme Court held that the question of whether the property was permanently damaged was for the jury to determine but that the measure of damages for permanent injury to real property was the difference between the appraised value of the property before and after the injury. Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443, 47 St. Rep. 520 (1990).

Future Earnings: Where expert testified as to plaintiff's loss of future earnings reduced by her present wages, evidence was properly presented to the jury to uphold the jury's finding of compensatory damages. Kerr v. Gibson's Prod. Co. of Bozeman, Inc., 226 M 69, 733 P2d 1292, 44 St. Rep. 462 (1987), followed in Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1329 (1994).

Corporate Profits as Basis for Lost Earnings When Plaintiff the Majority Shareholder: Given the nature of the business of plaintiff injured in auto accident (he was the majority shareholder) and the fact that it was a Subchapter S corporation, it was not an abuse of discretion to allow testimony of an expert on lost earnings based on the profits of the corporation. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Lost Future Earnings — Testimony on Worklife Expectancy From Date of Trial Admissible: In determining plaintiff's lost future earnings, an expert's testimony on plaintiff's worklife expectancy from the date of the trial instead of from the date of the accident that was the basis of the suit was properly allowed, even though the damages accrued from the date of the accident. Plaintiff also presented evidence of his worklife expectancy from the date of the accident. Ewing v. Esterholt, 210 M 367, 684 P2d 1053, 41 St. Rep. 1095 (1984).

Inferring Injury Caused by Auto Accident: Jury trying personal injury action could properly choose to infer from the evidence presented that an auto accident allegedly caused by negligence of defendant was the direct cause of plaintiff's injuries, and Supreme Court would not supplant jury's findings with one of its own. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

Future Detriment — Reasonable Certainty: Future damages need only be reasonably certain and not absolutely certain, as the statute seems to imply. In determining an award for future damages, a jury or an expert testifying on the subject must to some degree engage in conjecture and speculation. Graham v. Clarks Fork Nat'l Bank, 193 M 282, 631 P2d 718, 38 St. Rep. 1140 (1981).

Compensation for Loss of Capacity to Pursue an Established Career — Present Cash Value of Future Damages: A plaintiff who has been permanently injured as a result of the negligence of the defendant may recover such sum as will compensate him reasonably for the destruction of his capacity to pursue an established course of life as an element of damages distinct from plaintiff's loss of earning capacity. Damages for loss of future earning capacity and future medical supplies, hospital expenses, and medical expenses must be reduced to the present cash value of such future damages. Johnson v. U.S., 510 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 599 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Failure to Award Future Damages — Discretion of the District Court: When a hospital interferes with its employee's statutory right under 50-5-503 to refuse to participate in a sterilization operation, its violation of 50-5-504 may entitle the employee to damages to be determined by a compensation theory, including reasonably certain future damages, and possibly exemplary damages. The District Court did not award future damages. The Montana Supreme Court concluded that the District Court did not feel that the future damages claimed by the plaintiff were reasonably certain to occur and held that it was properly within the District Court's discretion to make that determination and to refuse to grant future damages. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 189 M 259, 615 P2d 883, 37 St. Rep. 1420 (1980).

Detriment "Certain to Result" Construed — Reasonable Certainty: In construing the language of this section relating to detriment "certain to result in the future", the Supreme Court held that future damages need only be reasonably certain under the evidence and not absolutely certain as the statute seems to imply. In determining an award for future damages, a jury or an expert testifying on the subject must to some degree engage in conjecture and speculation. When the conjecture and speculation are based upon reasonably certain human experience as to future events, the jury or trier of fact is entitled to rely on that degree of reasonable certainty in fixing and awarding future damages. Frisnegger v. Gibson, 183 M 57, 598 P2d 574 (1979), followed in Stark v. The Circle K Corp., 230 M 468, 751 P2d 162, 45 St. Rep. 371 (1988).

Application of Section — Assault and Battery: Under this section proof of damages may extend to all facts that occur and grow out of the injury after the commencement of the action and up to the date of trial. In action for assault and battery, if injury to eye and ear developed after the commencement of the action, evidence as to such injuries was admissible. Kornec v. Mike Horse Min. & Mill. Co., 120 M 1, 180 P2d 252 (1947).

Objection to Damage Calculation Not Preserved for Appeal — Sufficient Evidence That Prevailing Party Mitigated Damages: The uninsured employers' fund (UEF) breached a contract and the District Court awarded consequential damages to the prevailing party. On appeal, UEF claimed that the District Court did not properly calculate damages based on two grounds. First, UEF claimed the District Court awarded gross damages rather than net damages. Second, UEF claimed the District Court should have offset any damages that it awarded given that the party that was awarded damages did not mitigate its damages by selling inventory to other dealers. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that UEF did not preserve the net damages argument based on a failure to object at trial. Additionally, the testimonial evidence supported the District Court's determination that the prevailing party could not sell its inventory to other dealers. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Damages for Injury to Vegetation — Market Value: The Supreme Court held that, on cross-motions in limine, the District Court correctly ruled that the proper measure of damages for the injury by fire to growing vegetation was the difference between the market value of the real property before and after the fire. On appeal, plaintiff raised the issue of whether the District Court's ruling, with the resulting limitation of evidence at trial, was correct as a matter of law. Appraisers for both parties testified that the market value of the land was not diminished as a result of the fire; therefore, no damages were awarded. The District Court judgment was affirmed. Kebschull v. Nott, 220 M 64, 714 P2d 993, 43 St. Rep. 176 (1986). However, see Lampi v. Speed, 2011 MT 231, 362 Mont. 122, 261 P.3d 1000, which concluded that Kebschull does not limit a court's ability to award restoration damages to replace destroyed vegetation in light of the Supreme Court's decision in Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 Mont. 259, 165 P.3d 1079, and adoption of the restoration damages rule set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts 929.

Measure of Damages When Operating Costs Saved Due to Breach: When overhead or operating expenses are saved as a result of a breach of contract, the proper measure of damages is net, not gross profit. Overhead attributable to a particular contract may be found to be an avoided cost of performance following a contractual breach. However, when overhead costs are ongoing, negligible, or otherwise unaffected by a particular performance, they need not be considered when a contractual breach prevents performance. *E.C.A. Env'tl. Case Notes

Prejudgment Interest Properly Denied When Costs Not Calculable Prior to Trial: Prejudgment interest is only allowed for claims that are capable of being made certain by calculation and is inappropriate when the amount of a party's damages is uncertain or disputed. In the present case, much evidence was presented concerning defendant's general liability for defective construction of a tennis facility, but the only evidence of costs for remediating the problem was disputed.

Additionally, no standards of computation or calculation were fixed in the construction contract, so any determination of the amount owed to plaintiff depended on a judicial determination after considering the conflicting evidence. Further, there was a considerable difference between the amount of damages claimed by plaintiff and the amount actually awarded by the jury, so the damages were not capable of being made certain by calculation. Thus, denial of prejudgment interest was not erroneous. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004), following Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994).

Judge as Well as Jury May Award Prejudgment Interest Under 27-1-212: The Logans argued that the lower court erred in awarding prejudgment interest on a judgment against them for negligent misrepresentation in their selling of a house to the Stroms. The Logans argued that the applicable statute was this section, which allows a court to award prejudgment interest on damages made certain by calculation, and that an award of interest in a negligence case does not meet that standard. The Supreme Court held that the applicable statute was 27-1-212 and that although it speaks of prejudgment interest being awarded by the jury in certain cases, the statutory discretion granted to a jury to award interest also applies to a judge sitting as the trier of fact. Strom v. Logan, 2001 MT 30, 304 M 176, 18 P3d 1024 (2001).

Standard of Review: The reduction of a jury award on the basis of a collateral source statute, an award of judgment interest on the basis of a statute, or an offset of a judgment based on a plaintiff's prior settlement with another tortfeasor is a question of law and is reviewed to decide whether the lower court correctly applied the law. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Date for Beginning of Prejudgment Interest on Damaged Crops: In an action for negligent damage to crops caused by improper spraying, which caused a smaller crop, the date on which prejudgment interest began on damages for the lost part of the crops was properly determined to be a date 30 days after the plaintiffs' attorney sent a letter to the defendants' insurance company stating the amount of the initial damage calculation. Semenza v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Claims Not Capable of Being Made Certain by Calculation — Prejudgment Interest Properly Denied: In construing the meaning of the phrase "capable of being made certain by calculation" in subsection (1) of this section, the Supreme Court held that when a claimant alleges an award that is substantially different from the amount ultimately awarded by the trial court, those damages are not capable of being made certain by calculation. Lacking that certainty, the denial of prejudgment interest was not error. Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248, 51 St. Rep. 623 (1994).

Failure to File Brief in Support of Motion for Interest — Right Waived to Appeal Interest: Lumber Enterprises, Inc. received a judgment on a contract against Hansens, but the District Court refused to award prejudgment interest. The Supreme Court affirmed the denial of interest based on the failure of Lumber Enterprises to file a brief in support of its motion to amend the findings of the District Court to allow the award of interest. By failing to abide by Rule 2(b), M.U.D.C.R. (Title 25, ch. 19), the Supreme Court held that Lumber Enterprises waived its right to bring a request to the Supreme Court to award that interest. Lumber Enterprises, Inc. v. Hansen, 257 M 11, 846 P2d 1046, 50 St. Rep. 138 (1993).

Award of Prejudgment Interest Reversed: In a suit against an accountant for negligence, the lower court allowed the plaintiff to recover prejudgment interest. The Supreme Court reversed on the grounds that the cause of action arose prior to the statute's enactment. The Supreme Court held that the statute created a new obligation and could not be applied retroactively without specific language authorizing such an application. Thayer v. Hicks, 243 M 138, 793 P2d 784, 47 St. Rep. 1082 (1990).

Prevailing Party in Specific Performance Enforcement Action Entitled to Attorney Fees as Specified in Contract — Also Entitled to Prejudgment Interest — Final Judgment Not Uncertain Just Because One Party Disputes Amount. Bender v. Rosman, 2023 MT 140, 413 Mont. 89, 532 P.3d 855.

Stipulation Agreeing to Uncertain Amount of Damages — Denial of Prejudgment Interest Proper: The parties entered into a settlement agreement that stated the defendant would pay the plaintiffs a certain amount “less the forthcoming award for attorneys’ fees and costs”. The plaintiff later asked the District Court to award it prejudgment interest, which the District Court denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the damages awarded in the stipulation were not certain at the time it was entered into and that the plaintiff was therefore not entitled to prejudgment interest. Kalispell Aircraft Co., LLC v. Patterson, 2019 MT 142, 396 Mont. 182, 443 P.3d 1100.

Incorrect Standard Applied by District Court to Determine Reasonableness of $29 Million Settlement Agreement: In Tidyman’s Management Serv. v. Nat’l Union Fire Ins., 2014 MT 205, 376 Mont. 80, 330 P.3d 1139, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court’s approval of a stipulated settlement of $29 million and remanded the matter to the District Court to conduct a hearing on whether the settlement amount was reasonable. On remand, the District Court concluded that the settlement amount was based on reliable evidence presented to it. The defendants appealed to the Supreme Court, which held that the District Court had not used the correct standard in assessing the reasonableness of the settlement. The court then set forth the standard for the District Court to apply and remanded the matter to the District Court to apply the standard. Tidyman’s Management Serv. v. Nat’l Union Fire Ins., 2016 MT 201, 384 Mont. 335, 378 P.3d 1182.

Prejudgment Interest — Accrual Upon Court Approval of Settlement, Not Date of Filing: The parties entered into a settlement agreement for a sum certain. The agreement was filed in 2010 but was not approved until 2013. The District Court determined that prejudgment interest began accruing on the date the court approved the agreement, not the date of filing, and entered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. On appeal, the plaintiffs claimed that prejudgment interest accrued beginning on the date the agreement was filed, but the Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the District Court’s determination. Tidyman’s Management Serv. v. Davis, 2014 MT 201, 376 Mont. 72, 330 P.3d 1135. However, in Tidyman’s Management Serv. v. Nat’l Union Fire Ins., 2016 MT 201, 384 Mont. 335, 378 P.3d 1182, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court had erred in awarding prejudgment interest and ordered the District Court to evaluate whether it should award postjudgment interest on remand.

Insurance Dispute — Fees, Interest, and Costs Awarded: Plaintiff was injured while working on his vehicle. He had a medical insurance policy and a separate motor vehicle policy with a medical payment provision. The medical insurer paid most of the claim. The plaintiff then sought payment of the entirety of the claim from the motor vehicle insurer, who denied the claim. The plaintiff alleged breach of contract and unfair trade practices. The Supreme Court found that the policy language did not limit the plaintiff from receiving a duplicate payment of medical expenses and that the plaintiff was entitled to attorney fees under the insurance exception to the American Rule, prejudgment and postjudgment interest, and costs. Winter v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2014 MT 168, 375 Mont. 351, 328 P.3d 665. See also Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Dissolution Decree Granting Ranch to Husband — Wife Not Entitled to Appreciation or Subject to Liability Accruing on Property — Judgment Interest Owing on Money Judgment: A dissolution decree entered in 1996 granted ranch property to the husband and a liquidated money judgment of $305,855 to the wife. When the remainder of the issues concerning the marital estate was finally addressed in 1999, the wife contended that the subsequent appreciation of the ranch marital assets must be accounted for in determining the final disposition of the 1996 decree. The Supreme Court held that the wife was not entitled either to appreciation or, conversely, to any liability that may have accrued on the property because the ranch was exclusively awarded to the husband. However, the wife was entitled to judgment interest on the money as a statutory right pursuant to 25-9-205. On remand, the Supreme Court applied the statutory 10% interest rate to the balance of the wife’s money judgment that remained unpaid following entry of the decree, not including interest accruing during the pendency of the appeal. The Supreme Court refigured the dollar amount due the wife after adjusting the figure, which had been incorrectly offset by the District Court because of the wife’s alleged receipt of livestock and sales and an interest debt allegedly due to the husband’s mother under a “conspiratorial sham” designed to deprive the wife of her interest in the farm property and to directly benefit the husband. In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

Defendant Not Allowed to Characterize Damages: Shilhaneks were injured in a vehicle accident, and defendants were ordered to pay more than $3 million in damages, including punitive damages. Defendants requested that the $750,000 tendered to Shilhaneks to date be allocated toward payment of the punitive award and that Shilhaneks be required to file a corresponding satisfaction of judgment with respect to the punitive damages award, in essence asserting that a defendant has the power to specifically designate payment toward a particular award. Defendants cited 25-9-311 for the rule that a satisfaction of judgment must be provided by the party in whose favor judgment is entered and contended that under 28-1-1106 and 28-1-1225, the power lies with the debtor, not the creditor, when it comes to designating to which particular obligation a payment should be credited. The District Court denied the request, noting that Title 28 applies only to contractual obligations and that Title 25 governs obligations arising from judgments. The District Court did not abuse its discretion, given defendants' failure to provide a legal basis that would allow them to dictate how damages owed are characterized, the fact that defendants owed more than double the available insurance coverage and were obligated to pay the policy limits to satisfy the verdict, and that allocating 22% of the available insurance proceeds to the punitive damage award would have harsh tax consequences on Shilhaneks. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2000 MT 16, 298 M 101, 994 P2d 1105, 57 St. Rep. 89 (2000).

Insured Entitled to Recover Attorney Fees, Costs, and Interest, Including Prejudgment Interest, Before Insurer May Recover Pursuant to Subrogation Rights: Park Plaza Hotel suffered extensive property damage when a train wrecked in subzero weather, causing a power outage during which the hotel's pipes burst. The hotel's insurer paid the hotel the limits of its policy, and the hotel sued the railroad for damages in excess of the policy limits. The insurer joined in the suit. The hotel cross-claimed against its insurer for attorney fees and costs expended in recovering its excess damages from the railroad. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court and held that the insured must recover all that it has lost, including attorney fees and costs expended in an attempt to recover sums over and above those received under its policy with the insurer, before the insurer may recover pursuant to its subrogation rights. The Supreme Court also held that the insurer was obligated to pay any prejudgment interest to which the lower court determined the insured was entitled. DeTienne Associates Ltd. Partnership v. Farmers Union Mut. Ins. Co., 266 M 184, 879 P2d 704, 51 St. Rep. 730 (1994), following and clarifying Skauge v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel. Co., 172 M 521, 565 P2d 628 (1977).

Contract Interest Proper: Although the District Court did not state the basis for the award, the award of interest on fees due and unpaid as stipulated in a contract was proper. Taylor, Thon, Thompson & Peterson v. Cannaday, 230 M 151, 749 P2d 63, 45 St. Rep. 102 (1988).

Breach in Sale of Restaurant — Measure of Damages and Interest: Where restaurant buyers breached a sales contract, the trial court properly granted sellers the amount expended on outstanding accounts payable incurred by the buyers, such as power service, garbage service, and advertising debts, as well as interest at 10% from the date of judgment. Stevens v. Abbott, 228 M 101, 740 P2d 1136, 44 St. Rep. 1374 (1987).

Deputy Sheriffs' Retroactive Overtime — Conflict of Laws: Since deputies' award of retroactive overtime compensation was grounded in federal rather than state law, the state laws relating to penalties, interest, attorney fees, and costs did not apply. Phillips v. Lake County, 222 M 42, 721 P2d 326, 43 St. Rep. 1046 (1986).

Contract Interest Rate for Particular Item — Statutory Rate Applied to Other Items: Plaintiff received damages for the value of a lease breached by defendant and for plaintiff's costs in renovating the premises as required by the lease. The lease provided that lessee would indemnify lessor for finance costs of the renovation at an 18% rate. The court properly gave plaintiff interest at the statutory 10% rate instead of the 18% rate. An interest rate in one relatively minor and discrete part of the lease should not be an umbrella over the entire obligation, and it is contrary to the parties' legitimate expectations to allow such an umbrella where the lease is otherwise complete in almost every detail. If the parties intended the 18% rate to apply to all obligations arising from the contract, including breach, they could have easily so provided in the lease. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Bond Covering Judgment — Use of Bond in Companion Case: District Court did not abuse its discretion in requiring a supersedeas bond in an amount large enough to cover the judgment, including interest, or in concluding that a bond deposited in companion cases was not available to satisfy the judgment in this case. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Lovely Agency, 215 M 420, 697 P2d 1354, 42 St. Rep. 509 (1985).

Award of Prejudgment Interest Favored: The Legislature intended prejudgment interest under this section to be the rule rather than the exception. Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Holms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553, 42 St. Rep. 84 (1985). See also Fitterer Sales Montana, Inc. v. Mullin, 2015 MT 272, 381 Mont. 107, 358 P.3d 885.

Conversion: This section does not alter the statutory damages for conversion as prescribed by 27-1-320. Galbreath v. Armstrong, 121 M 387, 193 P2d 630 (1948).

WHEN INTEREST TO BE ALLOWED

Breach of Duty to Defend — Prejudgment Interest on Settlement Amounts and Defense Costs Proper: The plaintiff insurance company provided the defendant, the state of Montana, with a comprehensive general liability policy from 1973 until 1976. In 2000, Libby Mine claimants started suing the state for its regulatory role of the Libby Mine based on the theory that the state had failed to warn them of the danger of asbestos exposure. The state continued to defend itself and settled claims after it rejected a qualified offer by the plaintiff to defend the cases. Six years after the state rejected the offer to defend, the plaintiff sought a declaratory judgment over its rights and duties under the liability policy. The District Court held that the plaintiff had breached its duty to defend by waiting 6 years to seek declaratory judgment. The District Court imposed prejudgment interest on the settlement amount and defense costs assessed against the plaintiff. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that it had attempted to pay defense costs earlier that the state would not accept. The Supreme Court affirmed the ruling, holding that the state's uncooperative actions did not disqualify it from an award of prejudgment interest. Nat'l Indemnity Co. v. St., 2021 MT 300, 406 Mont. 288, 499 P.3d 516.

Stay of Execution Does Not Stop Postjudgment Interest: A stay of execution of judgment obtained by the judgment debtor on cross-appeal did not toll the continued accrual of postjudgment interest. Postjudgment interest is a right and is not a matter of discretionary award. Warrington v. Great Falls Clinic, LLP, 2020 MT 174, 400 Mont. 360, 467 P.3d 567, overruling New Hope Lutheran Ministry v. Faith Lutheran Church of Great Falls, Inc., 2014 MT 69, 374 Mont. 229, 328 P.3d 586, in part regarding the effect of a stay of execution of judgment on the continued accrual of postjudgment interest.

Prejudgment Interest Not Allowed in Contract Claim — Recovery Not Certain or Capable of Being Made Certain: The District Court did not err in denying the defendant's motion for prejudgment interest pursuant to this section. Uncertainty over the terms of the agreement and damages meant that the amount of the defendant's recovery was not certain or capable of being made certain by calculation. The defendant's claim for prejudgment interest thus failed to meet the requirements of this section. Ryffel Family Partnership v. Alpine Country Constr., Inc., 2016 MT 350, 386 Mont. 165, 386 P.3d 971, following N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 Mont. 310, 811 P.2d 1276 (1991).

Prejudgment Interest Not Allowed in FELA Claim: The District Court correctly concluded that the defendant railroad company was not entitled to an interest offset on the settlement proceeds it paid pursuant to a release that was later invalidated. Federal law, not state law, governs the measure of damages in a Federal Employers' Liability Act claim, and prejudgment interest is not allowed. Cheff v. BNSF Ry Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115, following Monessen S.W. Ry. Co. v. Morgan, 486 US 330, 108 S Ct 1837 (1988).

Equalization of Capital Account Prior to Termination of Partnership — Interest Due: The District Court did not err in ordering one partner, Otto, to deposit $821,008 into a capital account in order to equalize the other partner's capital account balance to allow for an equal payment of partnership debts and expenses in preparation for terminating the partnership. Further, as a result of Otto's withdrawal of more than $800,000 from the capital account, the partnership incurred an interest expense of $210,143 on operating loans. Because Otto mismanaged the partnership finances, resulting in the partnership incurring interest costs to pay for business expenses and for Otto's compensation, the District Court correctly ordered Otto to repay the interest expenses. Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2008 MT 245, 344 M 489, 190 P3d 1034 (2008).

Right to Recover Prejudgment Interest Vests From Time Obligation Made Certain: Plaintiff entered a contract with the city of Libby for construction of a water treatment plant. Plaintiff then entered a subcontract with defendant to paint the filter tanks and pipes at the plant. Plaintiff was listed as an additional insured on defendant's commercial general liability insurance policy. Defendant used an improper paint, and the city sued plaintiff as the general contractor for repainting costs. The insurer refused to defend or indemnify plaintiff, claiming that policy exclusions precluded coverage for the city's claim. The District Court held that the exclusions applied only to defendant as the named insured, but denied plaintiff's claim for prejudgment interest on the settlement amount. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The amount of the obligation was made certain from the day on which the insurer paid the final settlement to the city, and plaintiff's right to recover prejudgment interest vested on that day. Swank Enterprises, Inc. v. All Purpose Serv., Ltd., 2007 MT 57, 336 M 197, 154 P3d 52 (2007). See also Nat'l Indemnity Co. v. St., 2021 MT 300, 406 Mont. 288, 499 P.3d 516.

Prejudgment Interest Allowable on Amount Recoverable Under Construction Lien: Although a construction contract provided for payment of prejudgment interest, the District Court refused to approve it on the amount that plaintiff was entitled to collect under a Construction lien. On appeal, the Supreme Court approved payment of prejudgment interest, notwithstanding defendant's challenge to the amount of the claim. Plaintiff's damages were certain or capable of being ascertained, and a dispute on the amount owed on the claim did not transform the claim into one that did not bear prejudgment interest, nor did a difference between claimed damages and the amount actually awarded preclude the award of prejudgment interest. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006), following Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Helms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553 (1985), and followed in LHC, Inc. v. Alvarez, 2007 MT 123, 337 M 294, 160 P3d 502 (2007), and Total Indus. Plant Serv., Inc. v. Turner Indus. Group, LLC, 2013 MT 5, 368 Mont. 189, 294 P.3d 363.

Conditions for Award of Prejudgment Interest: A person is entitled to prejudgment interest when the person possesses a right to recover damages that vests upon a particular day. Three criteria must be satisfied for an award of prejudgment interest: (1) there must be an underlying monetary obligation; (2) the amount of recovery must be certain or capable of being made certain by calculation; and (3) the right to recover must vest upon a certain day. In re Wage Claim of Ramsey v. Yellowstone Neurosurgical Associates, P.C., 2005 MT 317, 329 M 489, 125 P3d 1091 (2005). See also Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Crumleys, Inc., 2008 MT 2, 341 M 33, 174 P3d 948 (2008), Estate of Donald v. Kalispell Regional Medical Center, 2011 MT 166, 361 Mont. 179, 258 P.3d 395, Kraft v. High Country Motors, Inc., 2012 MT 83, 364 Mont. 465, 276 P.3d 908, Stafford v. Fockaert, 2016 MT 28, 382 Mont. 178, 366 P.3d 673, and In re Marriage of Fossen, 2019 MT 119, 395 Mont. 495, 443 P.3d 418.

Prejudgment Interest on Damages Not Capable of Calculation Improper — Jury Award Less Than Claim — No Explanation of Offset: Plaintiff presented a claim for actual damages of $208,222, representing the amount that defendants underpaid a profit share obligation under a contract. The jury returned a verdict on the claim for $82,000, and the District Court held that plaintiff was entitled to prejudgment interest on $82,000. On appeal, defendants contended that prejudgment interest was not owing on grounds that the amount of recovery was not capable of being made certain prior to the jury's verdict and that the awarded damages were less than what plaintiff requested. The Supreme Court agreed and reversed. The Supreme Court has repeatedly declined to allow an award of prejudgment interest when the judgment awarded is less than the claimant sought in damages and was not the result of a readily calculable offset. In this case, the difference between the amount plaintiff requested and the actual award did not correlate to any offset advanced by defendants. Because the award was less than plaintiff requested and there was no explanation for the offset applied by the jury, damages were not capable of being made certain by calculation and the award of prejudgment interest was error. Am. Music Co. v. Higbee, 2004 MT 349, 324 M 348, 103 P3d 518 (2004). See also Morning Star Enterprises, Inc. v. R.H. Grover, Inc., 247 M 105, 805 P2d 553 (1991).

No Error in Disallowing Prejudgment Interest When Amounts Owed Not Ascertainable Until Differences in Compensation Determined at Trial: After sorting through years of partnership transactions and property accumulations, the District Court found that one partner, Otto, owed the other partner, William, $94,607 and that Otto also owed William additional money because Otto had received excess compensation from a partnership construction project. William requested prejudgment interest on the amounts owed, but the request was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that a person's right to receive a sum certain in damages does not necessarily vest before judgment. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by declining to award prejudgment interest in this case because it was not until all the evidence was heard that the court could determine who was entitled to certain property and evaluate any discrepancies in total amounts owed. Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Repayment of Funds Because of Reversal of Court Decision Not Award of Damages Subject to Interest: In an initial action, the District Court ordered the state to pay to the plaintiff contractors payments withheld by the state pursuant to a contract dispute. The District Court's decision was set aside upon appeal, and upon receipt of a notice of remittitur, the District Court ordered the contractors to reimburse the state, pay costs, and pay interest from the date on which payment was tendered. The contractors refused to pay interest for the period between when they received the money as a result of the lower court's first decision and the date when the final judgment ordering them to reimburse the state was entered. The Supreme Court held that the lower court incorrectly determined that the state was entitled to interest because the order requiring the contractors to pay the state was an order to reimburse the state for payments made by the state to the contractors and was not an award of damages subject to prejudgment interest. Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 27, 304 M 157, 18 P3d 1018 (2001).

Trial Court Discretion to Determine Appropriateness of Interest Award — No Award of Prejudgment Interest Until Underlying Monetary Obligation Established: H-D Irrigating, Inc. (H-D), bought land and irrigation equipment from Hobbie Diamond Cattle Company (Hobbie) and Kimble Properties, Inc. (Kimble Properties), respectively, then sued both companies for constructive fraud when the land eroded and caused damage to the irrigation system. The District Court concluded that defendants were entitled to a net payment on the promissory note for the sale, less damages for defendant's misrepresentations, plus interest from the date of judgment. Defendants contended that the court subtracted an offset before calculating interest, calculated interest from a date 5 years later than should have been applied, and failed to award interest on the promissory note from the date on which the first payment was due. Plaintiffs contended that accrual of all interest should be suspended pending resolution of the dispute and that they should be entitled to prejudgment interest for their damages. Distinguishing Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966 (1988), which involved a breach of contract rather than constructive fraud, the Supreme Court noted that H-D was obligated to make timely payments on the promissory note, but not entitled to damages until the District Court adjudicated the fraud issue, and that H-D was not entitled to offset its promissory note obligation until the time of judgment because defendants did not have an underlying monetary obligation to H-D until liability was ascribed for constructive fraud. The District Court should have offset H-D's obligation by the damages resulting from the constructive fraud at the time of judgment. It was within the discretion of the judge as factfinder to determine whether interest was appropriate, and the court did not err in refusing to award prejudgment interest to H-D. Judgment was reversed for a recalculation of damages. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Dissolution Decree Granting Ranch to Husband — Wife Not Entitled to Appreciation or Subject to Liability Accruing on Property — Judgment Interest Owing on Money Judgment: A dissolution decree entered in 1996 granted ranch property to the husband and a liquidated money judgment of $305,855 to the wife. When the remainder of the issues concerning the marital estate was finally addressed in 1999, the wife contended that the subsequent appreciation of the ranch marital assets must be accounted for in determining the final disposition of the 1996 decree. The Supreme Court held that the wife was not entitled either to appreciation or, conversely, to any liability that may have accrued on the property because the ranch was exclusively awarded to the husband. However, the wife was entitled to judgment interest on the money as a statutory right pursuant to 25-9-205. On remand, the Supreme Court applied the statutory 10% interest rate to the balance of the wife's money judgment that remained unpaid following entry of the decree, not including interest accruing during the pendency of the appeal. The Supreme Court refigured the dollar amount due the wife after adjusting the figure, which had been incorrectly offset by the District Court because of the wife's alleged receipt of livestock and sales and an interest debt allegedly due to the husband's mother under a "conspiratorial sham" designed to deprive the wife of her interest in the farm property and to directly benefit the husband. In re Marriage of Pospisil, 2000 MT 132, 299 M 527, 1 P3d 364, 57 St. Rep. 547 (2000).

Payment of Ex-Husband's Debts — Wife Entitled to Interest: Although the divorce decree required the husband to pay medical and credit card debts upon the sale of the couple's home, the wife voluntarily made partial payments of the overdue bills to avoid damage to a good credit history. When the wife sued for damages plus interest, the District Court ruled that the wife was not entitled to receive interest because payments had been made voluntarily. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the wife's decision to preserve existing relationships with doctors and creditors by making partial payments was not wholly voluntary. The wife was entitled to interest on the debt owed as the result of the husband's nonpayment from the date on which each debt was paid. In re Marriage of Boyer, 274 M 282, 908 P2d 665, 52 St. Rep. 1233 (1995).

Punitive Damages Awarded — Prejudgment Interest Disallowed: Dees was awarded compensatory and punitive damages against his insurance company for the company's failure to settle his claim for hail damage to his crops. The District Court awarded prejudgment interest at the rate of 10% a year on both the compensatory and punitive damages, beginning with the date of the jury verdict up until the date of the final judgment. Citing Maddux v. Bunch, 241 M 61, 784 P2d 936 (1990), the Supreme Court held that prejudgment interest should not have been granted on the punitive damages. Because punitive damages must be reviewed and approved by the District Court, they neither vest nor are capable of being made certain until the trial court completes its review and issues a final judgment. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Prejudgment Interest Not Proper: Because damage sums awarded by the court were not for items set forth in the contract, the damages were not certain until the court delivered its judgment and prejudgment interest was not proper. Morning Star Enterprises, Inc. v. R.H. Grover, Inc., 247 M 105, 805 P2d 553, 48 St. Rep. 112 (1991).

Court Determination of Grazing Fees — Prejudgment Interest Inapplicable Prior to Judgment: The amount of rent due for grazing cattle was certain under an oral contract, but the amount due for grazing horses with the cattle was only determined after trial. Therefore, grazing fees for the horses were not subject to prejudgment interest. Heitz v. Heitz, 244 M 12, 795 P2d 486, 47 St. Rep. 1393 (1990).

Interest Precluded — Failure to Submit to Appraisal: The plaintiffs' insurance policy contained a clause that required implementing an appraisal procedure if the parties could not agree on the amount of loss. The policy also stated that no legal action could be initiated until there was full compliance with the terms of the policy. The insurer invoked the appraisal clause, but the plaintiffs refused to submit to the procedure and instead filed suit for damages and bad faith against the insurer. The Supreme Court held that summary judgment in favor of the insurer was appropriate in light of the clear language of the policy, and the court further held that no interest was due the plaintiffs because the amount of damages was not fixed. Dunn v. Way, 241 M 208, 786 P2d 649, 47 St. Rep. 213 (1990).

Certainty of Calculation of Damages:

The plaintiff sued his insurance company for failure to pay a claim in the amount of $35,614.08. In addition, he claimed prejudgment interest. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff in the amount of $23,378.95, and the Supreme Court held that the difference in the amount requested from the amount awarded demonstrated that the amount of damages was not so clear as to justify an award of prejudgment interest. Maddux v. Bunch, 241 M 61, 784 P2d 936, 47 St. Rep. 82 (1990).

In a counterclaim, defendants asked for $2 million in contract damages; at trial, they asked for $3 million; the jury awarded $300,000. These were not the type of contract damages that are certain or capable of being made certain by calculations; therefore, prejudgment interest was not available. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Weaver-Maxwell, Inc., 224 M 33, 729 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1995 (1986).

Insurance agent made misrepresentations on insurance application and forged insured's signature. Insurer found this out while handling a claim against insured. Insurer settled the claim for $300,000, then successfully sued the agent and his agency for damages for wrongfully issuing the policy and recovered a $300,000 judgment. The damages were certain or capable of being made certain by calculation as of the day insurer settled the claim against insured. That the amount of a claim is disputed does not make it uncertain. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Lovely Agency, 215 M 420, 697 P2d 1354, 42 St. Rep. 509 (1985).

In an action for breach of contract for sale of land, award of prejudgment interest on damages for loss of hay crops was improper because the damages for loss of hay crops were uncertain until the court made its determination as to the amount. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984).

Where plaintiff claimed a property loss by fire of $43,917.15, witnesses testified to the value of the lost property, and the jury awarded $25,000, the Supreme Court could not find that plaintiff showed damages capable of being made certain by calculation as required by this section and the award of prejudgment interest to plaintiff was error and was reversed. Swenson v. Buffalo Bldg. Co., 194 M 141, 635 P2d 978, 38 St. Rep. 1588 (1981).

Fixed Amount of Previous Judgment on Particular Day: In this action by the holder of a certificate of professional liability insurance against the insurer for negligence, the parties stipulated during trial as to the amount of plaintiff's damages on the underlying suit. The three criteria of this section were met when the fixed amount of the underlying judgment on a particular day was determined. Interest is allowed from that date. R.H. Grover, Inc. v. Flynn Ins. Co., 238 M 278, 777 P2d 338, 46 St. Rep. 1266 (1989).

Contention of Error in Award of Prejudgment Interest — Faulty Waiver Argument: Defendant argued that plaintiff's waiver of payments availed defendant of a defense to interest on the difference between the contract amount due and the amount actually paid. However, the Supreme Court discounted the waiver argument and noted that defendant did not pay the whole principal; therefore, interest was proper under this section. Pipe Indus. Ins. Fund Trust v. Consol. Pipe Trades Trust, 233 M 162, 760 P2d 711, 45 St. Rep. 1392 (1988).

Interest Due on Commission Fees: On appeal of a judgment awarding commission fees as detailed in a signed note but specifically denying award of interest on the debt, the Supreme Court found that the criteria to be eligible for prejudgment interest were met, that under 27-1-312 the remedy for breach of an obligation to pay money is "the terms of the obligation with interest thereon", and that the appropriate interest to be charged was ascertainable under 31-1-106. Byrne v. Terry, 228 M 387, 741 P2d 1341, 44 St. Rep. 1620 (1987), followed in Johnson v. Nyhart, 269 M 379, 889 P2d 1170, 52 St. Rep. 37 (1995).

No Prejudgment Interest on Business Liabilities Satisfied by Buyer, Which Were Later Ruled Responsibility of Sellers: Sellers reassumed possession of their former business after buyer defaulted on the sales contract. A dispute between buyer and sellers over who was responsible for the payment of accounts payable incurred by buyer was eventually resolved by the District Court in favor of buyer. Buyer then claimed he was entitled to prejudgment interest on the payments he had made after default. He was not entitled to interest under 27-1-211 because the award to buyer was one of reimbursement, not damages, nor was buyer entitled to interest under 27-1-212 because the money paid by buyer after default does not represent a breach of any obligation on the part of sellers. The District Court properly held that 31-1-106 applied. Heine v. Seibert, 217 M 224, 703 P2d 865, 42 St. Rep. 1152 (1985), followed in Idaho Asphalt Supply v. Dept. of Transportation, 2001 MT 27, 304 M 157, 18 P3d 1018 (2001).

Interest in Tort Actions: Insurance agent made misrepresentations on insurance application and forged insured's signature. Insurer found this out while handling a claim against insured. Insurer settled the claim for $300,000, then sued the agent and his agency for damages for wrongfully issuing the policy and recovered a $300,000 judgment. On appeal, defendants' claim that this section did not apply because the case was in tort was unsuccessful. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Lovely Agency, 215 M 420, 697 P2d 1354, 42 St. Rep. 509 (1985).

Failure to Prosecute Diligently Irrelevant: Lack of diligence in taking a case to trial is not one of the conditions which excuses the payment of interest under this statute. Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Holms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553, 42 St. Rep. 84 (1985).

Interest on Damages for Unjust Enrichment — Damages Incapable of Being Made Certain: Where the plaintiffs brought an action for damages against the defendant on the theory of unjust enrichment, the District Court erred in awarding prejudgment interest to the plaintiffs. In this case there was no ascertained or ascertainable amount of damages as the plaintiffs sought equitable restitution for an unquantified measure of unjust enrichment. Robertus v. Candee, 205 M 403, 670 P2d 540, 40 St. Rep. 1391 (1983).

No Authority for Prejudgment Interest on Discretionary Attorney Fees in Mandamus: In a prior decision, this case was remanded for a hearing on attorney fees. The District Court awarded fees, and plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs contend that the District Court should have awarded prejudgment interest on the award of attorney fees. In this case, the award of attorney fees is an award of damages under 27-26-402. The determination of reasonable attorney fees was within the discretion of the District Court, and the amount was not definite or capable of being calculated with certainty prior to judgment. Therefore, 27-1-211 did not provide authority for awarding interest. Kadillak v. Dept. of State Lands, 198 M 70, 643 P2d 1178, 39 St. Rep. 773 (1982).

Lessee Prevented by Lessor From Paying Rent — No Interest Allowed: The landlord unlawfully increased the rent from $650 a month to $1,175 a month. The tenant tendered $650, but payment was refused. The tenant then filed a lawsuit and tendered the $650 monthly payment into the court. Payments were made each month to the court while the lawsuit continued. The Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in awarding the landlord interest on the rental payments. The tenant should not be penalized for attempting to comply with the terms of the lease agreement, nor should the landlord be rewarded for unjustifiably refusing to accept the payments. Kosena v. Eck, 195 M 12, 635 P2d 1287, 38 St. Rep. 1736 (1981).

Interest on Unpaid Balance of Contract: Plaintiff was entitled to interest on the unpaid balance of the contract as a matter of law since there was an underlying monetary obligation, the recovery was certain or capable of being made certain by calculation, and the right to recover vested on a particular day. Agrilease, Inc. v. Gray, 173 M 151, 566 P2d 1114 (1977), followed in Albers v. Bar ZF Ranch, Inc., 229 M 396, 747 P2d 1347, 44 St. Rep. 2081 (1987).

Reimbursement Award Not Damages: Trial court properly allowed interest from filing of claim in divorce action where wife was merely reimbursed for her cash outlay from her separate property, which directly benefited her husband and his children by a former marriage because this section relates only to damages, not an equitable amount awarded for reimbursement. Rogers v. Rogers, 169 M 403, 548 P2d 141 (1976).

Prejudgment Interest: Prejudgment interest on a wrongful death claim is forbidden. Ryan v. Ford Motor Co., 334 F. Supp. 674 (D.C. Mont. 1971); Wyant v. Dunn, 140 M 181, 368 P2d 917 (1962); Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931).

Interest Added to Judgment: Where plaintiff in an action for breach of contract is entitled to interest under statutory authority as a legal incident to his claim and he asks for interest in his complaint and his claim is one which is certain or capable of being made certain by calculation, then the trial court may add the interest to the judgment when there is no controversy on the facts giving rise to the right to interest that should have been, but was not, submitted to the jury. W. J. Lake & Co. v. Mont. Horse Prod. Co., 109 M 434, 97 P2d 590 (1939).

Liens — After Judgment: A materialman who secured judgment for the enforcement of his mechanics' lien (now construction lien) was entitled to interest under this section on the entire amount thereof, notwithstanding he had overstated the amount, where the correct amount was readily ascertainable by consulting the owner and there was no offer of payment so as to stop the running of interest under 28-1-1202 and 28-1-1225. Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Green, 108 M 56, 90 P2d 489 (1939), explained in U.S. v. Fuller, 250 F. Supp. 649 (D.C. Mont. 1965), followed in Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Holms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553, 42 St. Rep. 84 (1985).

Interest Exceeding Amount of Liability Fixed by Statute: Where a creditor of an insolvent bank is forced to bring suit to enforce the statutory liability of a stockholder, he is entitled to interest on his claim from the time of the commencement of the action even though the interest, when added to the principal, exceeds the amount of the liability fixed by the statute. Mitchell v. Banking Corp. of Mont., 94 M 165, 22 P2d 175 (1933).

Employee Suing for Services Rendered: Interest was properly allowed on the amount awarded an employee suing for services rendered under an oral agreement. Albertini v. Linden, 45 M 398, 123 P 400 (1912).

Balance Due a Physician: Interest on a balance due a physician for medical services seems to be properly allowable, under this section, in an action to recover such balance. Leggat v. Gerrick, 35 M 91, 88 P 788 (1907).

Party Prevented Performance — Interest Not Allowed: Where plaintiff gave defendant an option to buy a mine but, before the payment agreed upon became due, denied the existence of the contract and sued to recover the property, he was not entitled to interest on the purchase money, on specific performance being decreed against him, for the reason that he himself prevented defendant from making the payments. Finlen v. Heinze, 32 M 354, 80 P 918 (1905), overruled as to interest in Hughes v. Melby, 139 M 308, 362 P2d 1014 (1961).

Interest on Open Account From Demand: This section authorizes a recovery of interest on an open account from demand, and the institution of a suit on an open account for goods sold is a demand. Hefferlin v. Karlman, 29 M 139, 74 P 201 (1903). See also Clifton, Applegate & Toole v. Big Lake Drain District, 82 M 312, 267 P 207 (1928).

WHEN INTEREST COMMENCES RUNNING

On Remand for Calculation of Damages Caused by Breach: The defendants were employed by the plaintiff's accounting firm under an employment agreement containing a covenant restricting competition. When the defendants established a competing accounting firm and solicited the plaintiff's clients, the plaintiff filed a complaint against the defendants to declare the covenant enforceable and to recover damages. After the Supreme Court remanded the issue of damages caused by the breach back to the District Court in Junkermier v. Alborn, 2016 MT 218, 384 Mont. 464, 380 P.3d 747, the District Court determined that the covenant was reasonable, that the defendants were jointly and severally liable for damages arising out of the covenant's breach pursuant to the contractual calculation of 1 year's billings to the plaintiff's clients, and that the plaintiff was entitled to prejudgment interest. The Supreme Court affirmed on all issues with the exception of the date interest began accruing based on the language in the covenant, which was described as de minimus. Junkermier v. Alborn, 2020 MT 179, 400 Mont. 408, 469 P.3d 111.

Claim Against the State — Employee Health Benefits Plan — Interest Calculated From Time of Court Decision Declaring Provision Unenforceable: The plaintiff's right to recover prejudgment interest did not vest until the Supreme Court's decision in Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Mont. v. Mont. St. Auditor & Comm'r of Ins., 2009 MT 318, 352 Mont. 423, 218 P.3d 475 (BCBS), which held for the first time that the state employee health benefits plan's coordination of benefits provision violated Montana's made-whole laws. The coordination of benefits provision at issue was enforceable under Montana law until the BCBS decision. Thus, the particular day on which the plaintiff's right to recover vested was 30 days after the Supreme Court's remittitur in BCBS. Diaz v. St., 2016 MT 270, 385 Mont. 220, 383 P.3d 206.

Insurance Recovery — Prejudgment Interest Not Allowed Until Appraisal — Postjudgment Interest Allowed After Appraisal: After a building fire, the property owner pursued recovery in District Court against the insurer of the building and was awarded replacement costs and prejudgment interest beginning from the date of the loss. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's recovery calculation by lowering the judgment amount and remanded the case for the purpose of calculating postjudgment interest, but not prejudgment interest. The court reasoned that prejudgment interest was not appropriate, as the damages could not be made certain until an appraiser made adjustments for portions of the building that were slated for demolition before the fire. Lincoln County Port Authority v. Allianz Global Risks US Ins. Co., 2013 MT 365, 373 Mont. 60, 315 P.3d 934.

No Prejudgment Interest When Damages Uncertain or Disputed: The District Court correctly interpreted the law when it refused to award prejudgment interest when there were issues as to: (1) whether a contract existed; (2) if there was a contract, whether there was a breach; and (3) if there was a breach, the extent of damages. A party is not entitled to prejudgment interest when the amount of that party's damages is uncertain or disputed. DiMarzio v. Crazy Mtn. Constr., Inc., 2010 MT 231, 358 Mont. 119, 243 P.3d 718, following Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Crumleys, Inc., 2008 MT 2, 341 Mont. 33, 174 P.3d 948, and followed in First Nat'l Properties, LLC v. Hillstead Trust, 2020 MT 211, 401 Mont. 59, 472 P.3d 134.

Comparative Negligence Offset Improper When Some Amount of Award Based Upon Strict Liability — Pro Tanto Award Ordered — Amount of Award Uncertain for Purpose of Interest Pending Determination of Offset by Court: After plaintiffs settled with Anderson's, the installer of a heater that injured plaintiffs, plaintiffs received a jury verdict against Lennox, the manufacturer of the heater, based on both strict liability and negligence. Pursuant to 27-1-703(6)(d), the District Court offset its judgment by the amount of the settlement with Anderson's under the doctrine of comparative negligence and awarded interest pursuant to 27-1-211. The Supreme Court reversed the offset, holding that because the jury form showed that some amount of the damages was awarded on the basis of strict liability, a 30% offset under 27-1-703(6)(d), based upon comparative negligence, was improper but a pro tanto reduction under several previous decisions of the court was proper. The Supreme Court also held that postjudgment interest should have been awarded pursuant to 25-9-204, because the amount of the award could not be made certain until the jury rendered its verdict. The proper offset was calculated by the court and thus was uncertain under 27-1-211. Hulstine v. Lennox, 2010 MT 180, 357 Mont. 228, 237 P.3d 1277.

Repayment of Principal on Eve of Trial — Payment of Interest Not Precluded: Pursuant to an oil and gas development agreement, defendant owed plaintiff almost $2 million in overdue production revenue payments. After plaintiff sued, defendant began making periodic payments until, on the eve of trial, nearly all the principal on the debt was repaid. However, defendant refused to pay any interest on the debt. Based on 27-1-214, the District Court dismissed plaintiff's claim for interest on grounds that by accepting the entire principal, plaintiff waived any claim to interest. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the claim for interest was improperly dismissed. The general rule is that when a debtor knows what is to be paid and when the payment is to be made, no demand is necessary to start the running of interest from the date the payment should have been made. Pursuant to 27-1-211, defendant could not extinguish the interest obligation by repaying the principal at some later date through a series of irregular payments, nor did 27-1-214 allow defendant to withhold contractually obligated payments on millions of dollars of production revenue for several years and avoid interest obligations by repaying the principal on the eve of trial. Textana, Inc. v. Klabzuba Oil & Gas, 2009 MT 401, 353 M 442, 222 P.3d 580 (2009). See also W.J. Lake & Co. v. Mont. Horse Prod. Co., 109 M 434, 97 P.2d 590 (1939).

Money Judgment Partially Modified and Reversed by Supreme Court — Postjudgment Interest Owing From Date New Judgment Entered on Remand: Plaintiff sought postjudgment interest on various amounts owed pursuant to a Construction lien. The Supreme Court affirmed part of the judgment entered by the District Court and held that plaintiff was entitled to postjudgment interest on that amount, but the court reversed another part of the money judgment, holding that plaintiff was not entitled to postjudgment interest on an amount erroneously withheld by defendant or on an amount that plaintiff was erroneously ordered to pay to cover defendant's expenses incurred after defendant breached the construction contract. Credit due to plaintiff for the latter amounts bore interest only from the date of judgment on remand. In cases when the amount of judgment entered in District Court is increased by the Supreme Court as the result of an appeal and the amount of the increase equates to an amount sought by the prevailing party but wrongly denied by the District Court, that amount will bear interest from the date of the District Court decree or judgment from which the appeal is taken. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006), following and clarifying Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2004 MT 384, 325 M 106, 104 P3d 1045 (2004).

Stipulated Judgment as Basis for Debt of Guarantors — Vesting Date of Right to Interest — Prejudgment and Postjudgment Interest Awarded: Chicago Mining Corporation (CMC) made a contract with Western for the purchase of mining equipment, and when CMC did not make payments as required by the contract, Western filed a construction lien to collect the amount of $232,730.04. In January 1991, individuals acting as guarantors executed personal guaranties for that amount, and Western promised that it would not institute foreclosure proceedings to enforce its lien until February 1, 1991. In 1994, Western and the guarantors stipulated to entry of judgment in the amount of $196,849.72, and judgment was entered for that amount. Following a bankruptcy proceeding and pursuant to a motion for summary judgment, the District Court awarded Western $232,730.04 and prejudgment interest from February 1, 1991, to February 22, 1996. The Supreme Court held that the stipulated judgment conclusively established CMC's obligation and that because the obligation of guarantors cannot exceed the obligation of the principal debtor, the amount of the stipulated judgment is also the amount owed by the guarantors. The Supreme Court also held that because Western's right to recover from the guarantors vested on February 1, 1991, the day CMC failed to make payments and the date upon which the guarantors agreed to make payment, that date is the date upon which prejudgment interest was due and that postjudgment interest was due from the date of the judgment to the date upon which the judgment is satisfied. W. Indus., Inc. v. Chicago Min. Corp., 279 M 105, 926 P2d 737, 53 St. Rep. 1071 (1996).

Interest Not Allowable Until Amount Due Ascertained: The rule in this jurisdiction, as set out in Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931), is that interest is not allowable until the exact amount due is ascertained or is ascertainable. In re Marriage of Gerhart, 245 M 279, 800 P2d 698, 47 St. Rep. 2106 (1990).

Interest Paid From Date of Filing of Construction Lien: When a construction lien was found to be enforceable, the award of prejudgment interest on the contract price was proper from the date the construction lien was filed. DeVoe v. Gust. Lagerquist & Sons, Inc., 244 M 141, 796 P2d 579, 47 St. Rep. 1527 (1990).

Prejudgment Interest on Attorney Fees Disallowed: The sum awarded by the jury for attorney fees included $8,021 in prejudgment interest. However, a stipulation signed by the attorneys did not establish who would pay the fees. Only when the jury determined plaintiff was entitled to damages did the liability for those damages become fixed; therefore, interest on prejudgment attorney fees was inappropriate. Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

Standard for Interest Award Not Met — Contested Liability: Because liability was contested, no monetary obligation existed until the jury determined the degree of comparative negligence. The right to recover vested only on the date of the jury verdict, not on an earlier date certain; therefore, the District Court properly denied award of prejudgment interest. McPherson v. Schlemmer, 230 M 81, 749 P2d 51, 45 St. Rep. 33 (1988), followed in Palmer v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 233 M 515, 761 P2d 401, 45 St. Rep. 1694 (1988).

Right to Damage Interest Accrues From Date of Decision: In order following petition for rehearing on judgment by trial court awarding prejudgment interest on damages granted a commercial trout farm, the Supreme Court reversed, holding that interest accrues from and after the date the decision of the trial court is rendered. Crystal Springs Trout Co. v. First State Bank of Froid, 225 M 122, 732 P2d 819, 44 St. Rep. 90 (1987).

Accrued Interest on Loan as Part of Damages: The District Court awarded a two-thirds share of payment in kind (PIK) benefits to a tenant, plus accrued interest on his outstanding bank loan dating from the failure of the landlords to pay his share of PIK benefits. On appeal, one landlord asserted this was error because the tenant maintained only one account that covered living expenses as well as other farming operations; therefore, the loan balance was not solely attributable to the farming of the landlord's property. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that had the tenant received his share of PIK benefits at the proper time, he would have been able to pay the loan entirely and avoid further interest charges. The accrued interest on the loan balance from that date was held to be clearly part of his damages. Popp v. Gountanis, 221 M 267, 718 P2d 340, 43 St. Rep. 801 (1986).

Interest to Commence From Date of Judgment: This section allows interest only from the date of judgment, as that is the day the damages are capable of being made certain, citing Wyant v. Dunn, 140 M 181, 368 P2d 917 (1962). Callihan v. Burlington N., Inc., 201 M 350, 654 P2d 972 (1982), followed in In re Custody & Support of B.T.S., 219 M 391, 712 P2d 1298, 43 St. Rep. 37 (1986), and Plouffe v. Burlington N., Inc., 224 M 467, 730 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 2341 (1986).

Reversal of Judgment for Defendants — When Interest Commences: Insurance agent made misrepresentations on insurance application and forged insured's signature. Insurer found this out while handling a claim against insured. Insurer settled the claim for $300,000, then sued the agent and his agency for damages for wrongfully issuing the policy and recovered a $300,000 judgment. Judgment for defendants was reversed on appeal, the Supreme Court holding plaintiff entitled to recover as a matter of law and remanding for trial on damages. Defendants' claim that because of the reversal prejudgment interest should run from the date judgment was entered following reversal was denied. The right of insurer to recover vested on the date the settlement was made. Defendants' argument that the right to recover cannot vest until it is reduced to judgment leads to the absurd conclusion that there can never be an award of prejudgment interest, since the right to recover would never vest before judgment. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Lovely Agency, 215 M 420, 697 P2d 1354, 42 St. Rep. 509 (1985).

When Interest on Wrongfully Withheld Attorney Fees Commences: In an action by an attorney to secure attorney fees from the state compensation insurance fund, the Workers' Compensation Court improperly denied jurisdiction. The attorney now claims that interest should accrue on the fees wrongfully withheld by the court's denial of jurisdiction. A claim becomes liquidated, for the purpose of allowing prejudgment interest, when the amount due and the date on which it becomes due are fixed and certain. In the present case, the attorney fees could be computed to a certain amount upon the issuance of the state warrant establishing the specific amount of the attorney's client's compensation benefits. Thus, prejudgment interest on the attorney fees is allowed from the date the warrant was issued. Kelleher Law Office v. St. Comp. Ins. Fund, 213 M 412, 691 P2d 823, 41 St. Rep. 2203 (1984).

Breach of a Contract — Interest From Date of Judgment: In a breach of contract, the trial court awarded interest from the date of the breach. The Supreme Court held that the trial court erred in applying 27-1-211 to the case. The amount of the damages due upon breach was not clearly ascertainable until determined by the trial court. Since this was not an action on a negotiable instrument or for the definite unpaid balance of a contract or account, in which the damages would be a sum certain, 27-1-211 was not applicable. Interest from the date of judgment at the legal rate of 10% a year was allowable under 25-9-204 and 25-9-205. Carriger v. Ballenger, 192 M 479, 628 P2d 1106, 38 St. Rep. 864 (1981), followed in N. Mont. Hosp. v. Knight, 248 M 310, 811 P2d 1276, 48 St. Rep. 444 (1991), and Hulstine v. Lennox, 2010 MT 180, 357 Mont. 228, 237 P.3d 1277.

Interest on Liability for Payment of Dishonored Checks: Determination by the Supreme Court that the bank was liable for payment of dishonored checks, under 30-4-302, was based on contract law of negotiable instruments, and interest was ordered from the second day after the bank's receipt of the checks. Sun River Cattle Co. v. Miners' Bank of Mont., 164 M 479, 525 P2d 19 (1974).

Upon Filing of Complaint Against Surety Company: Interest commenced running upon filing of complaint against surety company on bond where no demand had been made on surety until filing of complaint; such interest was due notwithstanding surety's contention that since damages were not certain until time of filing of judgment, it could not be charged with interest from time of filing of complaint. Lapke v. Hunt, 151 M 450, 443 P2d 493 (1968).

Allowed From Date of Court Decision:

Where school district, contrary to an appraisal clause in insurance contract, brought suit to determine amount of damage caused by fire to an abandoned school, even though judgment was overruled and subsequent appraisal was ordered, interest on any amount later determined was to begin from the time a definite amount had been fixed by the jury. School District v. Globe & Republic Ins. Co., 146 M 208, 404 P2d 889 (1965).

Where a mechanics' lien (now construction lien) claimant considerably overstated the amount of his claim in the lien filed so that it required the judgment of the District Court in an action to foreclose the lien to decide the correct amount due, interest, a creature of statute, was allowable only from the date of the decision, and the District Court in allowing it from the date of the completion of the work committed error. Eskestrand v. Wunder, 94 M 57, 20 P2d 622 (1933), distinguished in Fed. Land Bank of Spokane v. Green, 108 M 56, 90 P2d 489 (1939), explained in Price Bldg. Serv., Inc. v. Holms, 214 M 456, 693 P2d 553, 42 St. Rep. 84 (1985).

Bankruptcy Claim: Where materialmen included items to which they were not entitled in their claim against surety in bankruptcy proceedings, interest could only be allowed from the time the District Court ascertained the exact amount of the claim. U.S. for Use and Benefit of Chemetron Corp. v. George A. Fuller Co., 250 F. Supp. 649 (D.C. Mont. 1965).

No Demand Necessary When Debtor Knows His Obligations: When a debtor knows what he is to pay and when he is to pay it, no demand is necessary to start the running of interest from the date the payment should have been made. W. J. Lake & Co. v. Mont. Horse Prod. Co., 109 M 434, 97 P2d 590 (1939).

Interest From Date of Completion of Services: As respects liability of contractor's surety, subcontractors were entitled to interest from date of completion of services rendered under fixed price contract. Am. Sur. Co. of New York v. Cove Irrigation District, 54 F2d 197 (9th Cir. 1931).

Not Entitled to Interest Before Judgment: Subcontractors were held not entitled to interest on quantum meruit claim from principal contractor or its surety before judgment determining such claim. Am. Sur. Co. of New York v. Cove Irrigation District, 54 F2d 197 (9th Cir. 1931).

Insolvent Bank — Interest From Date Doors Closed: If a person with money in a bank, part of which is subject to check, the remainder being shown by a passbook, is indebted on a note to the bank in excess of the amount of such money, the effect of the suspension and declared insolvency of the bank is to make the deposits due and actionable; the depositor is, therefore, entitled to interest on the deposits from the time that the bank's doors were closed until the date of the judgment on the note. Williams v. Johnson, 50 M 7, 144 P 768 (1914).

INTEREST RATE

Rate for Prejudgment Interest Same as Rate for Postjudgment Interest: Although the rate of postjudgment interest is statutorily established in 25-9-205, there is no comparable statutory provision for the rate of prejudgment interest. The Supreme Court concluded that, in the best interest of parties trying to anticipate their rights or obligations in an effort to avoid litigation and to provide guidance to District Courts for awards of prejudgment interest, the appropriate rate for prejudgment interest when it is awarded should be the same as the rate awarded for postjudgment interest. In re Marriage of DeBuff, 2002 MT 159, 310 M 382, 50 P3d 1070 (2002).

Interest on Judgment Not Compound Interest: In its initial summary judgment order, the District Court awarded a real estate broker the commission due plus interest at 6% on that amount from date of breach to date of judgment, pursuant to 27-1-211. On a second summary judgment dismissing a counterclaim, the court found the broker entitled to judgment at 10% on the initial judgment. The Supreme Court found this award was not compound interest in violation of 25-9-205, but was interest on the judgment, a correct calculation of interest due. Ellingson Agency, Inc. v. Baltrusch, 228 M 360, 742 P2d 1009, 44 St. Rep. 1598 (1987).

Breach of Oral Contract — Interest Rate: Plaintiff agreed to remodel a prefab home for defendant. He also built a foundation, added a bedroom and deck, and built a double garage. Plaintiff completed the basement and sent a bill to defendant. The bill was paid. The remainder of the work was completed, but defendant refused to pay, contending the oral agreement between the parties contained a "cap" of $30,000. Plaintiff contended the agreement was on a cost-plus basis, the unpaid portion of which was $63,310. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded the amount due with interest at 6% from the completion date. Defendant contended the award of damages was unreasonable. The amount awarded was the amount owed on the contract, not damages for breach. The award merely compensated plaintiff for what he was owed. Pursuant to 27-1-211, plaintiff was entitled to interest from the date he was entitled to payment. That was the date the District Court determined the work was completed. Since the parties had not agreed on an interest rate, the District Court used the legal rate stated in 31-1-106. This was within the court's reasonable discretion. Frank L. Pirtz Constr., Inc. v. Hardin Town Pump, Inc., 214 M 141, 692 P2d 460, 41 St. Rep. 2366 (1984).

Rate of Interest and Expenses Allowable: Plaintiff entered a buy-sell to purchase defendants' ranch. One of his major considerations was gaining investment tax credits. Defendants refused to perform, and plaintiff filed a breach of contract action. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded him prejudgment interest at 10% on his state and federal income tax obligation, the earnest money, and his capital expenditures on the ranch. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that interest on the earnest money was all that should be allowed as prejudgment interest under 27-1-211. Prejudgment interest should be 6% under 31-1-106. Interest should then be allowed on the judgment according to 27-1-211 at the amount of 10% under 25-9-205. The expenses that are allowable to a plaintiff are found in 25-10-201, and 25-10-101 outlines when costs are allowed. The cost of depositions not used during trial is not allowed. Various travel expenditures would not have been chargeable to defendants if the contract had been performed. The portion of capital expenditures allowed should be only the loss plaintiff suffered as a result of expenditures from the time of signing the buy-sell to the time of breach. Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984).

Case Notes

No Error in Disallowing Prejudgment Interest When Amounts Owed Not Ascertainable Until Differences in Compensation Determined at Trial: After sorting through years of partnership transactions and property accumulations, the District Court found that one partner, Otto, owed the other partner, William, $94,607 and that Otto also owed William additional money because Otto had received excess compensation from a partnership construction project. William requested prejudgment interest on the amounts owed, but the request was denied. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that a person's right to receive a sum certain in damages does not necessarily vest before judgment. The District Court did not abuse its discretion by declining to award prejudgment interest in this case because it was not until all the evidence was heard that the court could determine who was entitled to certain property and evaluate any discrepancies in total amounts owed. Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2003 MT 357, 319 M 23, 83 P3d 256 (2003).

Judge as Well as Jury May Award Prejudgment Interest Under This Section: The Logans argued that the lower court erred in awarding prejudgment interest on a judgment against them for negligent misrepresentation in their selling of a house to the Stroms. The Logans argued that the applicable statute was 27-1-210, which allows a court to award prejudgment interest on damages made certain by calculation, and that an award of interest in a negligence case does not meet that standard. The Supreme Court held that this section was the applicable statute and that although it speaks of prejudgment interest being awarded by the jury in certain cases, the statutory discretion granted to a jury to award interest also applies to a judge sitting as the trier of fact. Strom v. Logan, 2001 MT 30, 304 M 176, 18 P3d 1024 (2001).

Prejudgment Certainty of Damages Not Required in Damaged Crops Case: In an action for negligent damage to crops caused by improper spraying, which caused a smaller crop, prejudgment interest on damages for the lost part of the crops was properly granted even though plaintiffs did not reduce damages to a sum certain prior to judgment. Semenza v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Authority of Trial Court Acting as Trier of Fact to Award Prejudgment Interest — Certainty Requirements Inapplicable in Fraud Cases: While this section grants authority to award prejudgment interest only to the jury, the trial court, when acting as the trier of fact, may award prejudgment interest under this section. Contrary to 27-1-211, the award of interest under this section is discretionary and does not specify rigid certainty requirements. In contested fraud cases the right to recover a sum certain in damages does not vest until the date of the court's judgment. Therefore, to interpret this section as requiring absolute certainty as to the specific time a sum certain in damages vests would render the statute inoperative as to fraud cases. Further, the trier of fact may award prejudgment interest whether or not the plaintiff's right to receive a sum certain in damages has vested before judgment. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993). See also Redke v. Silvertrust, 490 P2d 805 (Calif. 1971), and Bullis v. Sec. Pac. Nat'l Bank, 582 P2d 109 (Calif. 1978).

No Prejudgment Interest on Business Liabilities Satisfied by Buyer, Which Were Later Ruled Responsibility of Sellers: Sellers reassumed possession of their former business after buyer defaulted on the sales contract. A dispute between buyer and sellers over who was responsible for the payment of accounts payable incurred by buyer was eventually resolved by the District Court in favor of buyer. Buyer then claimed he was entitled to prejudgment interest on the payments he had made after default. He was not entitled to interest under 27-1-211 because the award to buyer was one of reimbursement, not damages, nor was buyer entitled to interest under 27-1-212 because the money paid by buyer after default does not represent a breach of any obligation on the part of sellers. The District Court properly held that 31-1-106 applied. Heine v. Seibert, 217 M 224, 703 P2d 865, 42 St. Rep. 1152 (1985).

No Authority for Prejudgment Interest on Discretionary Attorney Fees in Mandamus: In a prior decision, this case was remanded for a hearing on attorney fees. The District Court awarded fees, and plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs contend that the District Court should have awarded prejudgment interest on the award of attorney fees. Interest was not properly awardable under 27-1-212 because it does not authorize a discretionary award of prejudgment interest since the award of attorney fees is itself discretionary under 27-26-402. In this case, plaintiffs entered into a contingent fee agreement with their attorneys. No attorney fees were owing prior to judgment; therefore, plaintiffs suffered no detriment in the nature of prejudgment interest on attorney fees since no prejudgment interest was owing. The Supreme Court held that there is no authority in Montana for an award of prejudgment interest on the discretionary award of attorney fees arising from a mandamus action. Kadillak v. Dept. of State Lands, 198 M 70, 643 P2d 1178, 39 St. Rep. 773 (1982).

Conflicts: The conflicts principle requiring application of the law of the place of the tort for questions of prejudgment interest has been followed by most courts. Ryan v. Ford Motor Co., 334 F. Supp. 674 (D.C. Mont. 1971).

Recovery of Unlawful Tax: Chapter 142, L. 1925 (15-1-402 and 15-1-403, 15-1-403 now repealed), providing that when taxes paid under protest may be recovered, recovery shall be had without interest, has no application to an action based on 15-16-601 (now repealed), authorizing refund of a tax "paid more than once"; in such an action plaintiff is entitled to interest on the unlawful tax from the date of payment, even though plaintiff, to avoid the imputation that the payment made was voluntary, made it under protest. Williams v. Harvey, 91 M 168, 6 P2d 418 (1931).

Section Not Applicable to Personal Injury Actions: This section, authorizing the jury "in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract", and in certain others, to award interest in their verdict, while applicable in actions for the destruction of property, has no application to personal injury actions. Daly v. Swift & Co., 90 M 52, 300 P 265 (1931).

Federal Employers' Liability Act: Interest was not allowable on recovery in personal injury action under Federal Employers' Liability Act (45 U.S.C. §§ 51 through 59), this section not being controlling. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R. v. Busby, 41 F2d 617 (9th Cir. 1930).

Wrongful Death: Under this section, providing that in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, interest may be awarded in the discretion of the jury, interest may be allowed on amount awarded in an action for death caused by the negligence, especially where the damages awarded do not include compensation for suffering extending for an indefinite period after the injury, but the time of the accrual of the right is fixed by death from which date interest may run. Burns v. Eminger, 84 M 397, 276 P 437 (1929), distinguished in Marinkovich v. Tierney, 93 M 72, 17 P2d 93 (1932).

Jury to Be Instructed on Interest: While, under this section, interest may be allowed in an action for damages to livestock shipments due to the carriers' negligence, the jury should be instructed that the question of interest is left to its discretion, and refusal to so instruct is error. Phelps v. Great N. Ry., 66 M 198, 213 P 610 (1923), reversed on other grounds in Great N. Ry. v. Galbreath Cattle Co., 271 US 99, 70 L Ed 954, 46 S Ct 439 (1926).

Property Injured by Grading Street: In an action against a city for damages caused to plaintiff's property by the grading of a street, the jury may, in its discretion, allow interest on the amount awarded from the time of the completion of the work, under this section. Wright v. Butte, 64 M 362, 210 P 78 (1922).

Livestock Killed by Railroad: In an action against a railroad company for the value of livestock killed on the track, the plaintiff, if successful, has a statutory right to interest. Dewell v. N. Pac. Ry., 54 M 350, 170 P 753 (1918).

Assignable Interest: The right to recover damages for the negligent destruction of property by fire, together with interest recoverable under this section in the discretion of the jury, is assignable and passes by subrogation to an insurance company to the extent of the proportion of the loss paid by it to the owner of the property destroyed. Caledonia Ins. Co. v. N. Pac. Ry., 32 M 46, 79 P 544 (1905), distinguished in Cascade County v. U.S., 75 F. Supp. 850 (D.C. Mont. 1948). See Gaugler v. Chicago, Milwaukee & Puget Sound Ry., 197 F 79 (D.C. Mont. 1912).

27-1-213. Validity of interest rate set by contract.Case Notes

Contract Interest Proper: Although the District Court did not state the basis for the award, the award of interest on fees due and unpaid as stipulated in a contract was proper. Taylor, Thon, Thompson & Peterson v. Cannaday, 230 M 151, 749 P2d 63, 45 St. Rep. 102 (1988).

Contract Interest Rate for Particular Item — Statutory Rate Applied to Other Items: Plaintiff received damages for the value of a lease breached by defendant and for plaintiff's costs in renovating the premises as required by the lease. The lease provided that lessee would indemnify lessor for finance costs of the renovation at an 18% rate. The court properly gave plaintiff interest at the statutory 10% rate instead of the 18% rate. An interest rate in one relatively minor and discrete part of the lease should not be an umbrella over the entire obligation, and it is contrary to the parties' legitimate expectations to allow such an umbrella where the lease is otherwise complete in almost every detail. If the parties intended the 18% rate to apply to all obligations arising from the contract, including breach, they could have easily so provided in the lease. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

27-1-214. Waiver of interest by accepting principal.Case Notes

Repayment of Principal on Eve of Trial — Payment of Interest Not Precluded: Pursuant to an oil and gas development agreement, defendant owed plaintiff almost $2 million in overdue production revenue payments. After plaintiff sued, defendant began making periodic payments until, on the eve of trial, nearly all the principal on the debt was repaid. However, defendant refused to pay any interest on the debt. Based on 27-1-214, the District Court dismissed plaintiff's claim for interest on grounds that by accepting the entire principal, plaintiff waived any claim to interest. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the claim for interest was improperly dismissed. The general rule is that when a debtor knows what is to be paid and when the payment is to be made, no demand is necessary to start the running of interest from the date the payment should have been made. Pursuant to 27-1-211, defendant could not extinguish the interest obligation by repaying the principal at some later date through a series of irregular payments, nor did 27-1-214 allow defendant to withhold contractually obligated payments on millions of dollars of production revenue for several years and avoid interest obligations by repaying the principal on the eve of trial. Textana, Inc. v. Klabzuba Oil & Gas, 2009 MT 401, 353 M 442, 222 P3d 580 (2009). See also W.J. Lake & Co. v. Mont. Horse Prod. Co., 109 M 434, 97 P2d 590 (1939).

Contention of Error in Award of Prejudgment Interest — Faulty Waiver Argument: Defendant argued that plaintiff's waiver of payments availed defendant of a defense to interest on the difference between the contract amount due and the amount actually paid. However, the Supreme Court discounted the waiver argument and noted that defendant did not pay the whole principal; therefore, interest was proper under 27-1-211. Pipe Indus. Ins. Fund Trust v. Consol. Pipe Trades Trust, 233 M 162, 760 P2d 711, 45 St. Rep. 1392 (1988).

Application of Section: This section has no application to money deposited to indemnify sureties on a bond against loss. Leggat v. Palmer, 39 M 302, 102 P 327 (1909).

27-1-220. Punitive damages — when allowed — limitation.Compiler's Comments

2003 Amendment: Chapter 457 in (1) in exception clause inserted reference to subsection (3); and inserted (3) limiting awards of punitive damages in civil cases other than class action lawsuits. Amendment effective October 1, 2003.

1987 Amendment: Substituted language describing the purpose of punitive damages and prohibiting such damages in contract actions (see 1987 Session Law for full text) for former section that read: "The purpose of 27-1-221 is to deter claims for punitive or exemplary damages that are not clearly based in fact, and to that end, the legislature intends for 27-1-221 to be used in combination with early and ready application and granting of motions for summary judgment pursuant to Rule 56 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure where such claims are not based in fact, and the application of the sanctions provided for in Rule 11 of the Montana Rules of Civil Procedure against those parties responsible for making such claims."

Applicability: Section 5, Ch. 627, L. 1987, provided: "This act applies to claims arising after the effective date of this act, except that subsections (6), (7), and (8) of 27-1-221 apply to trials that begin after the effective date of this act whether or not the claim arose after the effective date of this act." Pursuant to 1-2-201, the act was effective October 1, 1987.

Compensatory Damages Remanded for Clarification of Mortgage Offset — Punitive Damages Award Proper: The plaintiff and defendant were former business partners in an LLC. After the defendant terminated the lease to their jointly owned business and installed his own business on the premises, the plaintiff sued the defendant for lost profits of their former business. Following the Supreme Court's earlier rulings in DeTienne v. Sandrock, 2017 MT 181, 388 Mont. 179, 400 P.3d 682, and Sandrock v. DeTienne, 2010 MT 237, 358 Mont. 175, 243 P.3d 1123, the District Court awarded the plaintiff compensatory damages and punitive damages. On appeal, the defendant argued that the District Court had erred in awarding punitive damage and had abused its discretion in awarding compensatory damages without offsetting a mortgage he had paid. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded with instructions for the District Court to clarify its determination of damages with reference to the mortgage payment. The court, however, held that the defendant had not proven clear error in awarding the amount of punitive damages and affirmed that portion of the award. DeTienne v. Sandrock, 2018 MT 269, 393 Mont. 249, 431 P.3d 12.

Attorney Fees Not Recoverable in Prosecuting Claims Against Union: The plaintiff was a nonprobationary police officer whose employment was terminated after the plaintiff advocated for the Whitefish Police Protective Association (WPPA) to affiliate with the defendant, the Montana Public Employees' Association (MPEA). At termination, the defendant was the exclusive bargaining agent for the WPPA under the collective bargaining agreement and Title 39, ch. 31. WPPA's in-house counsel was exclusively responsible for handling the officer's grievance on behalf of the defendant; however, in-house counsel took no action on the officer's behalf, prompting the officer to retain separate counsel. The plaintiff filed a complaint in District Court asserting a wrongful discharge claim against the city and a duty of fair representation (DFR) claim and common law fraud claims against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to the plaintiff as an element of compensatory damages on the plaintiff's DFR claim and for awarding punitive damages without an award of compensatory damages. The Supreme Court affirmed its holding in Petaja v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2016 MT 143, 383 Mont. 516, 373 P.3d 40, by concluding that the American Rule does not provide for recovery of attorney fees accrued by an employee in the prosecution of a DFR claim against a union; however, the court distinguished Petaja by holding that the American Rule does not bar an employee from recovering attorney fees in the prosecution of a DFR claim against an employer. Because the Supreme Court reversed the plaintiff's award of punitive damages, the court declined to resolve the issue of whether punitive damages are recoverable against a union under a Montana DFR claim. Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

District Court's Application of Montana Law Improper — Motion to Apply Michigan Law Improperly Denied as Untimely — Breach of Contract: In an action involving several complex business transactions, before the District Court's final pretrial motion date, the defendant bank moved that the District Court apply Michigan law. The District Court denied the motion as untimely. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Supreme Court declined to hold that choice-of-law motions constituted an affirmative defense, finding instead that the parties negotiated a clear and unambiguous choice-of-law provision that applied Michigan law. As a result, the District Court improperly allowed the jury to consider issues of constructive fraud, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, deceit, and punitive damages. Masters Group Int'l, Inc. v. Comerica Bank, 2015 MT 192, 380 Mont. 1, 352 P.3d 1101.

Damages Under Breach of Contract Claims Considered Compensatory Damages Under Unfair Trade Practices Act for Pursuit of Punitive Damages: In an insurance dispute in which plaintiffs sued the defendant insurer to contest the denial of untimely filed claims, the District Court erred in instructing the jury that it must first find Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) damages beyond the breach of insurance contract damages in order to consider malice and punitive damages under the UTPA. When an insurer is found to have violated the UTPA, damages due to the breach of insurance contract may constitute compensatory UTPA damages sufficient to present the question of malice and punitive damages to the jury. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Punitive Damages Correctly Awarded Against Successor Corporation — False Affidavits — Failure to Supplement Discovery: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank's predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the predecessor bank that she received this loan. However, the predecessor bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. A jury eventually awarded $1 million in compensatory damages and $5 million in punitive damages against the successor bank. On appeal, the defendant argued that it can't be liable for punitive damages as a successor corporation and that the punitive damages award was grossly excessive. The Supreme Court held that the federal Bank Merger Act and 35-1-817 (now repealed) required the bank to be liable for punitive damages and that the award was not excessive in light of U.S. Supreme Court decisions. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Case Remanded for Application of 3% Limit to Punitive Damages Award: A defendant who failed to provide evidence of net worth did not gain an advantage by allowing the court to consider updated financial information because the jury was able to consider net worth information during its deliberations and the punitive award exceeded 3% of the defendant's net worth regardless of which financial statement was used. Further, because the court applies the 3% limit following the jury verdict, there was no hardship to the plaintiff because the jury was unable to consider updated financial information. It was always within the province of the court to apply the 3% limit to the most current financial information. Harrell v. Farmers Educ. & Co-op Union, 2013 MT 367, 373 Mont. 92, 314 P.3d 920.

Punitive Damage Award Upheld — Evidence That Employee Was Retaliated Against for Refusal to Violate Public Policy: A case was properly submitted to the jury when evidence established that the plaintiff was retaliated against for failing to waive his right to overtime and vacation, insisting on fair pay for his work, and challenging employer practices that the plaintiff believed were unfair to female employees. Harrell v. Farmers Educ. & Co-op Union, 2013 MT 367, 373 Mont. 92, 314 P.3d 920.

Insurance Settlements — Class Certification for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief Proper — Class Certification for Punitive Damages Not Proper Without Showing of Actual Fraud or Malice — Individual Cases Required to Establish Amount of Individual Punitive Damages: Six days after an auto accident, the plaintiff signed a release and settled with the defendant insurer for $3,500. About 1 month later, the plaintiff asked the defendant to rescind the release because the plaintiff experienced additional pain, but the defendant refused. The plaintiff then retained counsel, and the defendant rescinded the release and settled the claim for about $200,000. After settlement, the plaintiff pursued a class action lawsuit in District Court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief and certification of a potential classwide punitive damages award. On appeal, the defendant insurer asserted that there were multiple factual differences between the plaintiff and the proposed class and that the District Court abused its discretion by certifying the class. The Supreme Court held that the proposed class satisfied the commonality, typicality, and adequacy requirements and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in certifying the class for potential declaratory and injunctive relief. However, the Supreme Court reversed the certification of a potential classwide punitive damages award and instructed the District Court to determine if the defendant insurer was engaged in actual fraud or malice. Further, the Supreme Court determined that if there is a finding of actual fraud or malice, then later individual cases may determine the amount of individual punitive damages. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2013 MT 244, 371 Mont. 393, 310 P.3d 452.

Claims for Malice and Punitive Damages Properly Certified — Motion to Certify as Class Action Upheld: In a class action filed by former Montana Power Company employees against the company's successors in interest for past-due workers' compensation "impairment awards," the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it certified the class's claims for malice and punitive damages. The class's claims for malice and punitive damages were based on the company's conduct, including withholding information, failing to investigate, and the company's system and method of handling claims, not on fact-specific issues of reasonable reliance by members of the class. Gonzales v. Mont. Power Co., 2010 MT 117, 356 Mont. 351, 233 P.3d 328.

Applicable Standard for Evaluating Damages for Parasitic Emotional Distress Claims — Sacco Standard Applicable Only to Independent Claims of Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: The "serious or severe" standard for emotional distress announced in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), applies only to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. For claims of emotional distress as an element of damage for an underlying tort claim, known as parasitic emotional distress damages, the Supreme Court adopted the standard set forth in Montana Pattern Jury Instruction 25.02, 15.01-03, as cited in Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), that when emotional distress damages are allowed in the absence of independent tort claims, an instruction should be given that the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental and emotional suffering and distress. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), followed in Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009), and McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, and overruling Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209 (1984), Noonan v. First Bank Butte, 227 M 329, 740 P2d 631 (1987), First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84 (1989), and similar cases that suggest that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

Statutory Maximum Punitive Damage Percentage Applicable Only if Accurate Net Worth Calculation Provided: A District Court cannot apply the 3% statutory maximum punitive damage award when a defendant fails to meet the burden of providing an accurate calculation of net worth. In this case, defendant reported a self-calculated, unaudited determination of net worth at $27,491.50. The jury awarded $41,700 in punitive damages. Defendant appealed on grounds that the award far exceeded 3% of net worth. However, the report contained numerous deficiencies, inconsistencies, and omissions. Based solely on the limited available financial information, the District Court was able to increase the estimate of net worth to at least $240,355.75. Thus, defendant failed to meet the burden of providing an accurate calculation of net worth to which the court could apply the punitive damage limit, and the punitive damage award was affirmed. Blue Ridge Homes, Inc. v. Thein, 2008 MT 264, 345 M 125, 191 P3d 374 (2008), followed in Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169.

Plaintiff's Failure to Establish Actual Damages by Defendant's Conduct — Summary Judgment on Punitive Damage Claim Affirmed: Stipe asserted that defendant intentionally and maliciously violated 81-8-303 and that because of defendant's negligence per se, punitive damages were proper. However, Stipe failed to establish that any actual damages were suffered. Actual damages are a predicate for punitive damages, and a person with no real or actual damages has no right of action for punitive damages. Thus, the District Court did not err in summarily dismissing Stipe's claim for punitive damages absent a showing of actual damages. Stipe v. First Interstate Bank-Polson, 2008 MT 239, 344 M 435, 188 P3d 1063 (2008), following Paulson v. Kustom Enterprises, Inc., 157 M 188, 483 P2d 708 (1971). See also Feller v. First Interstate Bancsystem, Inc., 2013 MT 90, 369 Mont. 444, 299 P.3d 338.

Posttrial Motions to Amend Judgment, to Limit Punitive Damages, and for Attorney Fees Properly Denied: In a construction contract case, defendants filed numerous posttrial motions, including motions to amend the judgment, to limit the punitive damages award, and for attorney fees and costs. The motions were denied, and defendants appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The motion to amend the judgment was unsupported by any authority. The motion to limit punitive damages was based on the statutory limit of 3% of net worth enacted by the 2003 Legislature, effective October 1, 2003, but the cause of action accrued prior to October 1, 2003, and the statutory limit did not apply retroactively. For the motion for attorney fees and costs to be granted, defendants would have to have been the prevailing party in the action, but defendants failed to provide any argument explaining how they were the prevailing party. Accordingly, the District Court did not err in denying the posttrial motions. Murphy Homes, Inc. v. Muller, 2007 MT 140, 337 M 411, 162 P3d 106 (2007).

Consideration of Defendant's Financial Condition Proper in Determining Amount of Punitive Damages: Defendants contended that allowing consideration of a defendant's financial condition, as allowed by 27-1-221(7)(a), conflicted with the decision in St. Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 538 US 408 (2003). The Supreme Court disagreed. Nothing in Campbell invalidates 27-1-221(7)(a). Although evidence of a defendant's financial condition may not be considered when determining whether to award punitive damages, Campbell does not hold that juries are not allowed to consider a defendant's financial condition as a factor in determining an appropriate amount of punitive damages. The purpose of a punitive damage verdict is to have an impact on the defendant in the form of punishment and deterrence, and without knowledge of the defendant's financial condition, a jury cannot know what impact any particular damage award will have. Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007).

Limit on Punitive Damages Inapplicable to Cause Accruing Prior to Effective Date of Statutory Cap: On October 1, 2003, the Legislature instituted a limit on punitive damages not to exceed $10 million or 3% of a defendant's net worth, whichever is less. Defendants asserted that the statutory cap on punitive damages should apply to the present case, which was filed nearly 8 months prior to the effective date of the legislative limit. The Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiffs cause of action accrued well before the effective date of the statutory cap, so the limit on punitive damages did not apply to or require a reduction of the jury's punitive damage award in this case. Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007), following Dvorak v. Huntley Project Irrigation District, 196 M 167, 639 P2d 62 (1981).

Postverdict Challenge to Punitive Damage Verdict Proper: A constitutional challenge regarding the size of a punitive verdict may be raised by postverdict motion. Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007). See also Local Union No. 38 v. Pelella, 350 F3d 73 (2nd Cir. 2003).

When Punitive Damages Considered Grossly Excessive: States possess broad discretion regarding the imposition of punitive damages; however, the federal due process clause prohibits the imposition of grossly excessive or arbitrary punishments on a tortfeasor (see St. Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 538 US 408 (2003)). When a punitive damage award can be categorized as grossly excessive in relation to a state's interests in punishment and deterrence, it enters the zone of arbitrariness that violates the federal due process clause, furthers no legitimate purpose, and constitutes an arbitrary deprivation of property. Although the exact meaning of "grossly excessive" is imprecise, the Supreme Court applied the guideposts outlined in BMW of N. America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 US 559 (1996): (1) the degree of reprehensibility of defendant's misconduct; (2) the disparity or ratio between the actual or potential harm suffered by plaintiff and the punitive damage award; and (3) the difference between the punitive damages awarded by the jury and civil penalties authorized or imposed in comparable cases. Under Montana law, punitive damages may be awarded only when a defendant has been found guilty of actual fraud or actual malice. In this case, the Supreme Court affirmed a punitive damages award after finding that the defendant legal firm used the judicial system as a tool to intimidate and oppress plaintiff in a manner that was uniquely egregious. Defendants' actions amounted to legal thuggery that was repugnant to Montana's foundational notions of justice and was highly reprehensible, and a particularly high sanction comported with due process. The court concluded that under the Gore guideposts, a punitive award of $9.9 million was warranted and that the District Court did not err in applying federal due process law to the jury's punitive damages verdict. Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007). See also Pac. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip, 533 S2d 537 (Ala. 1989).

Punitive Damages Owing for Fraud Connected With Sexual Assault: Following a sexual assault by a coworker, Beaver sought punitive damages. The District Court held that the coworker was unable to control his impulses, but was not guilty of fraud or malice and thus was not liable for punitive damages. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed. The record showed that the coworker's actions were not a spur-of-the-moment development but that the coworker had worked for several hours to place Beaver in a position in which she would be vulnerable to sexual advances, including making false representations of work-related necessity. These acts constituted actual fraud, and the coworker was liable for punitive damages under 27-1-221 and this section. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Punitive Damages From Breach of Contract Prohibited Absent Showing of Actual Fraud or Malice: Under this section, punitive damages arising from a breach of contract are prohibited, although 27-1-221 does permit an award of punitive damages if the claimant proves by clear and convincing evidence that defendant is guilty of actual fraud or malice outside the contract context. Here, plaintiff contended that defendants filed malicious claims and defenses in the present case and in other civil proceedings including tribal court, but presented insufficient evidence that defendants acted with actual malice toward plaintiff. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that punitive damages were not owing. Weter v. Archambault, 2002 MT 336, 313 M 284, 61 P3d 771 (2002).

No Award for Punitive Damages in Contract Action Absent Evidence of Tortious Conduct: Lessee Anderson filed counterclaims against lessor Grenfell for tortious interference with business or contractual relations and for punitive damages. The alleged tortious interference occurred after Anderson's business or contractual relationship was terminated, so the tortious interference claim was properly dismissed. Absent evidence of any traditional contract-related tort, the counterclaim for punitive damages was also properly dismissed. Grenfell v. Anderson, 2002 MT 225, 311 M 385, 56 P3d 326 (2002).

No Error in Failure of Trial Court to Detail From Bench Its Analysis of Statutory Factors Regarding Award of Punitive Damages: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. The jury held Payless liable and awarded Onstad $500,000 in compensatory damages, plus an additional $1 million in punitive damages. On appeal, Payless contended that the trial court erred in approving punitive damages, asserting that Onstad did not prove actual malice, thereby failing to establish a necessary foundation for punitive damages, and that the court failed to adequately review the support for the award by enumerating from the bench its consideration of the statutory factors for approving punitive damages. The Supreme Court affirmed. The jury was instructed on malice and specifically found that Payless's conduct amounted to malice, a conclusion that was supported by the evidence. Further, it was immaterial that the trial court did not detail from the bench its analysis of each of the statutory factors as to the award of punitive damages. It was sufficient that the court made individual findings on each of the statutory factors in its subsequent written findings. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

Damages Proper for Emotional Distress Based on Sale of Real Estate — Punitive Damages Appropriate: The Maloneys were promised an option to purchase property adjacent to their own, hoping to build their retirement home near Glacier Park. The real estate agent who listed the property was aware of the Maloneys' option but sold to another instead. That person then developed the property, building a 3,000-square-foot home on the very site that the Maloneys had desired and within sight of the Maloneys' residence, and then listed the newly developed property for almost six times what the Maloneys could have paid had the option been properly offered. A special master concluded, and the District Court agreed, that the Maloneys had suffered and were entitled to compensation for the shock, worry, anger, disappointment, and frustration that they had suffered and would continue to suffer in light of the inherent duration of the Maloneys' adjacent ownership. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under French v. Ralph E. Moore, Inc., 203 M 327, 661 P2d 844, 40 St. Rep. 481 (1983), emotional distress damages may result from negligent or intentional damage to property arising from interference with the use and enjoyment of land and that under Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982), compensatory damages could include compensation for humiliation, embarrassment, distress, and ridicule associated with interference with plaintiffs' use of their private property. The private property interest at issue here sufficiently involved the use and enjoyment of land to fall within these holdings. Further, the award of punitive damages was also affirmed in this instance despite defendant's claims of the special master's improper estimation of net worth, a syntax error, and the special master's improper recognition of punitive damages assessed against defendant in a prior case. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), followed in Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169, affirming that a nuisance claim demonstrating an interference with the enjoyment of property may support an award of parasitic emotional distress damages. See also Recovery for Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress Attendant to Economic Loss: A Reassessment, Sandor & Berry, 37 Ariz. L. Rev. 1247 (1995).

Standard of Review for Clear and Convincing Evidence Standard of Proof: In an insurance fraud action, each element of a punitive damages claim had to be proved by clear and convincing evidence, a standard that is more than a preponderance of the evidence but less than beyond a reasonable doubt. Addressing the standard of review for the first time, the court stated that the standard was whether there was substantial evidence to support the award of punitive damages, the same standard of review as when the standard of proof is a preponderance of the evidence. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Award of Punitive Damages Against Estate of Deceased Tortfeasor: In a case of first impression, the Supreme Court noted that because under 27-1-501 a cause of action or defense does not abate because of the death of a party but survives and may be maintained by the party's representatives, punitive damages may be assessed against the estate of a deceased tortfeasor. Whether it is appropriate to assess punitive damages to set an example is a question for the trier of fact. Tillett v. Lippert, 275 M 1, 909 P2d 1158, 53 St. Rep. 1 (1996).

New Standard for Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress — Proof of Serious or Severe Emotional Stress Required: A photographer for a Belgrade newspaper sued the newspaper and a city police officer, alleging that both falsely and maliciously conspired to criminally prosecute the photographer for stealing photographs from the newspaper. After the District Court granted the newspaper and officer a summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court, after reviewing cases using the traditional approach, reversed and remanded the case for determination under a new standard for negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. Applying the new standard, the Supreme Court held that an independent cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will arise in circumstances in which serious or severe emotional distress to a claimant, as defined in Comment j of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, was the reasonably foreseeable consequence of a negligent or intentional act or omission. The difference between negligent infliction and intentional infliction lies not in the elements of the tort but in the nature and culpability of the defendant's conduct. Punitive damages may be requested in a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. It is for the court to determine whether the evidence of serious or severe emotional distress can be found; it is for the jury to determine whether, on the evidence, it has in fact existed. Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995). But see Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), where the Sacco "serious or severe" standard was limited to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. Sacco was followed in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2000 MT 292, 302 M 289, 16 P3d 992, 57 St. Rep. 1238 (2000), Winslow v. Mont. Rail Link, Inc., 2001 MT 269, 307 M 269, 38 P3d 148 (2001), Pospisil v. First Nat'l Bank of Lewistown, 2001 MT 286, 307 M 392, 37 P3d 704 (2001), Wages v. First Nat'l Ins. Co. of America, 2003 MT 309, 318 M 232, 79 P3d 1095 (2003), McConkey v. Flathead Elec. Co-op, 2005 MT 334, 330 M 48, 125 P3d 1121 (2005), and Judd v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 181, 343 M 416, 186 P3d 214 (2008). Sacco was distinguished, with regard to the inapplicability of the standard to civil rights cases brought under Title 49, ch. 2, commonly known as the Montana Human Rights Act, in Vortex Fishing Sys., Inc. v. Foss, 2001 MT 312, 308 M 8, 38 P3d 836 (2001), and clarified in Henricksen v. St., 2004 MT 20, 319 M 307, 84 P3d 38 (2004), to the extent that when there is a physical manifestation of bodily harm resulting from emotional distress, such as posttraumatic stress disorder, this bodily harm is sufficient evidence that the emotional distress is genuine and severe. Punitive Damages Not Allowed for Breach of Commercial Lease: The lower court determined that the tenant, Rogers, had remained in possession of the property for 6 days for which he owed rent in the amount of $95.85. The court awarded the landlord treble damages in the amount of $95.85 x 3 and $95.85 as rent for the 6-day period. The Supreme Court ruled that the landlord was entitled to only $95.85 x 3 and was not entitled to the additional $95.85. The Supreme Court also held that the additional $95.85 could not be characterized as exemplary damages because exemplary damages are punitive in nature and punitive damages cannot be given for a breach of contract. Sage v. Rogers, 257 M 229, 848 P2d 1034, 50 St. Rep. 244 (1993).

Tortious Interference With Business as Creating Liability for Punitive Damages Over and Above Contract Damages: The Supreme Court, relying on Bolz v. Meyers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606 (1982), held that a party may breach a contract and may also separately and distinctly engage in conduct, outrageous in nature, that tortiously interferes with the other party's business relations. A prima facie case of interference with contractual or business relations requires intentional and willful acts: (1) calculated to cause damage to the plaintiff or the plaintiff's business; (2) done with the unlawful purpose of causing damage or loss, without justifiable cause on the part of the actor; and (3) resulting in actual damages and loss. Defendants' tortious interference with plaintiff's business relationships entitled plaintiff to punitive damages. Daniels v. Dean, 253 M 465, 833 P2d 1078, 49 St. Rep. 535 (1992).

Punitive Damages Awarded Despite Underlying Contract: The defendant argued that the lower court had erred in awarding punitive damages because the action was based upon breach of contract. The Supreme Court held that the statute precluding punitive damages for breach of contract did not apply to causes of action arising before the law's passage in 1987. The Supreme Court also held that if the conduct of a defendant is found to be fraudulent, an underlying contract will not defeat the award of punitive damages. Lee v. Armstrong, 244 M 289, 798 P2d 84, 47 St. Rep. 1421 (1990).

Closing Argument Seeking Punitive Damages — Not Prejudicial: In his closing argument, the plaintiff's attorney urged the jury to award the plaintiff the amount requested so that the defendant would not continue to engage in the same kind of activity in the future. The defendant argued that the plaintiff's attorney's statements sought punitive damages that were not an issue in the case and therefore prejudiced the defendant. The Supreme Court held that the statement was not so prejudicial as to deny the defendant a fair trial and that there was no evidence that the verdict was inflated in any way. Kalanick v. Burlington N. RR Co., 242 M 45, 788 P2d 901, 47 St. Rep. 532 (1990).

Award of Punitive Damages in Conversion Action: Defendant contended that punitive damages were improper in a case where he was convicted of conversion of an employee's commission checks because the employment was based on a contractual relationship. The Supreme Court noted that conversion is a tort, that the breach of contract argument was not supported by evidence or the verdict, and that in light of substantial evidence of malice or oppression, punitive damages were warranted. Lane v. Dunkle, 231 M 365, 753 P2d 321, 45 St. Rep. 686 (1988).

No Entitlement to Exemplary Damages as Matter of Right: No plaintiff is ever entitled to exemplary damages as a matter of right, regardless of the situation or the sufficiency of the facts. Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966), followed in Davis v. Sheriff, 234 M 126, 762 P2d 221, 45 St. Rep. 1783 (1988).

Punitive Damages Award Not Based on Consideration of Net Worth Alone — Evidence of Racial Motivation Relevant and Admissible to Determine Punitive Damages Award. Two Leggins v. Gatrell, 2023 MT 160, 413 Mont. 172, 534 P.3d 668.

Punitive Damages Recoverable for Tort Claims Even if Contract Relationship Exists — Substantial Evidence of Actual Fraud — Punitive Damages Cap Correctly Applied to Each Defendant Individually — District Court Decision Upheld. Romo v. Shirley, 2022 MT 249, 411 Mont. 111, 522 P.3d 401.

Postjudgment Interest From Date of Jury Decision: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank's predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the bank that she received this loan. However, the bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. On the first appeal, the Supreme Court found that several sworn affidavits presented by the defendant were false. On remand, a jury awarded $1 million in compensatory damages and $5 million in punitive damages in favor of the plaintiff. In a cross appeal, the plaintiff argued that any interest must be on the verdict and not the decision of the court. The Supreme Court found that 27-1-221 requires postjudgment interest from the date of the jury decision. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Punitive Damage Award Upheld — Evidence That Employee Was Retaliated Against for Refusal to Violate Public Policy: A case was properly submitted to the jury when evidence established that the plaintiff was retaliated against for failing to waive his right to overtime and vacation, insisting on fair pay for his work, and challenging employer practices that the plaintiff believed were unfair to female employees. Harrell v. Farmers Educ. & Co-op Union, 2013 MT 367, 373 Mont. 92, 314 P.3d 920.

Insurance Settlements — Class Certification for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief Proper — Class Certification for Punitive Damages Not Proper Without Showing of Actual Fraud or Malice — Individual Cases Required to Establish Amount of Individual Punitive Damages: Six days after an auto accident, the plaintiff signed a release and settled with the defendant insurer for $3,500. About 1 month later, the plaintiff asked the defendant to rescind the release because the plaintiff experienced additional pain, but the defendant refused. The plaintiff then retained counsel, and the defendant rescinded the release and settled the claim for about $200,000. After settlement, the plaintiff pursued a class action lawsuit in District Court seeking declaratory and injunctive relief and certification of a potential classwide punitive damages award. On appeal, the defendant insurer asserted that there were multiple factual differences between the plaintiff and the proposed class and that the District Court abused its discretion by certifying the class.

The Supreme Court held that the proposed class satisfied the commonality, typicality, and adequacy requirements and that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in certifying the class for potential declaratory and injunctive relief. However, the Supreme Court reversed the certification of a potential classwide punitive damages award and instructed the District Court to determine if the defendant insurer was engaged in actual fraud or malice. Further, the Supreme Court determined that if there is a finding of actual fraud or malice, then later individual cases may determine the amount of individual punitive damages. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2013 MT 244, 371 Mont. 393, 310 P.3d 452.

District Court Must Make Findings Pursuant to Statutory Factors for Award of Punitive Damages: To justify an award of punitive damages, the District Court must make findings pursuant to the factors listed in 27-1-221(7)(b). Osman v. Cavalier, 2011 MT 60, 360 Mont. 17, 251 P.3d 686.

Plaintiff to Prove Elements of Punitive Damages Claim With Clear and Convincing Evidence: In an easement action, when the plaintiffs presented numerous exhibits at trial that established through deeds and maps, photographs depicting the easement, and testimony of several witnesses the existence of an easement and obstruction of the easement by the defendants, the plaintiffs met the burden of establishing their claim by clear and convincing evidence. Osman v. Cavalier, 2011 MT 60, 360 Mont. 17, 251 P.3d 686.

No Abuse of Discretion — Request to Amend Complaint with Punitive Damages Claim Properly Denied: The District Court did not err in denying the plaintiff's request to amend her complaint with a claim for punitive damages in a failure to warn case against the defendant pharmaceutical company. The plaintiff requested the amendment 3 weeks before the period for discovery ended, and the defendant did not have adequate time to defend against a charge of actual fraud or malice. The District Court properly exercised its discretion in denying the request. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Claims for Malice and Punitive Damages Properly Certified — Motion to Certify as Class Action Upheld: In a class action filed by former Montana Power Company employees against the company's successors in interest for past-due workers' compensation "impairment awards," the District Court did not abuse its discretion when it certified the class's claims for malice and punitive damages. The class's claims for malice and punitive damages were based on the company's conduct, including withholding information, failing to investigate, and the company's system and method of handling claims, not on fact-specific issues of reasonable reliance by members of the class. Gonzales v. Mont. Power Co., 2010 MT 117, 356 Mont. 351, 233 P.3d 328.

Limit on Punitive Damages Inapplicable to Cause Accruing Prior to Effective Date of Statutory Cap: On October 1, 2003, the Legislature instituted a limit on punitive damages not to exceed $10 million or 3% of a defendant's net worth, whichever is less. Defendants asserted that the statutory cap on punitive damages should apply to the present case, which was filed nearly 8 months prior to the effective date of the legislative limit. The Supreme Court disagreed. Plaintiffs' cause of action accrued well before the effective date of the statutory cap, so the limit on punitive damages did not apply to or require a reduction of the jury's punitive damage award in this case. Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007), following Dvorak v. Huntley Project Irrigation District, 196 M 167, 639 P2d 62 (1981).

Sufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Awarding Punitive Damages for Breach of Fiduciary Duty by Insurer in Dealings With Its Agent: An insured brought an action against Deonier, an insurance agent, and Paul Revere Life Insurance Company (Revere) to recover benefits and damages after the insured's claim was denied on grounds of a preexisting condition, despite the incontestability clause in the policy. The agent cross-claimed against the company for indemnity and breach of fiduciary duty, contending that there was a significant amount of evidence that Revere planned to assert the Forman defense in Montana (see Mass. Cas. Ins. Co. v. Forman, 516 F2d 425 (5th Cir. 1975), in which an insurer asserted a legal defense to the incontestability clause based on its definition of sickness as excluding disabilities that manifested themselves prior to the date of issue of the policy) and that Revere's failure to inform Deonier of its intention to invoke the defense was a clear breach of Revere's duty to inform its agents of a risk of pecuniary loss from potential lawsuits. Revere asserted that pursuant to Doettl v. Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co., 505 F. Supp. 127 (D.C. Mont. 1981), in which a Montana federal District Court endorsed the Forman defense, it had no reason to believe that its policy interpretation might be in violation of Montana law and therefore did not breach its duty to inform its agents of risk of pecuniary loss. Revere argued that punitive damages were inappropriate as a matter of law because it was entitled to assert any defense, including the Forman defense, that had a reasonable basis in the law. Deonier countered by pointing out that she had introduced evidence that by 1994 when Revere first used the Forman defense in Montana, it knew that its selling agents had been sued in at least 20% of the previous lawsuits and the company nevertheless refused to inform its agents of the risk of pecuniary loss if Revere decided to assert that defense. The Supreme Court held that based on the evidence alone, it could conclude that there was a complete absence of any evidence that would justify submitting the issue of punitive damages to the jury and therefore the lower court did not err in denying the motion for judgment as a matter of law on punitive damages. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

Punitive Damages From Breach of Contract Prohibited Absent Showing of Actual Fraud or Malice: Under 27-1-220, punitive damages arising from a breach of contract are prohibited, although this section does permit an award of punitive damages if the claimant proves by clear and convincing evidence that defendant is guilty of actual fraud or malice outside the contract context. Here, plaintiff contended that defendants filed malicious claims and defenses in the present case and in other civil proceedings including tribal court, but presented insufficient evidence that defendants acted with actual malice toward plaintiff. Thus, the District Court correctly concluded that punitive damages were not owing. Weter v. Archambault, 2002 MT 336, 313 M 284, 61 P3d 771 (2002).

State Law Tort Claims Not Protected or Prohibited by FELA — Dismissal for Failure to State Claim Improper: Reidelbach worked for the railroad for about 20 years but was forced to stop working because of job-related disabling cumulative spinal injuries. Reidelbach reached an agreement with the railroad's claim representatives under which he would forego pursuing a claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) and the railroad would propose a fair settlement for the injuries. After 2 years, no settlement was offered, and ultimately the parties exchanged counteroffers, but no agreement on an amount was reached. Reidelbach then filed a timely FELA claim and also brought several state claims, alleging that the railroad had engaged in unfair, dilatory, and fraudulent claims practices. The District Court concluded that all the postinjury state claims were preempted by FELA and dismissed them pursuant to former Rule 12(b), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), so Reidelbach appealed. Following an extensive analysis of federal law related to preemption in its various forms, the Supreme Court held that Reidelbach's state claims were neither expressly nor impliedly preempted by FELA and did not conflict with or stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of FELA. Therefore, the District Court erred in dismissing Reidelbach's state claims on grounds of FELA preemption, and the case was reversed and remanded for trial in state court. Reidelbach v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2002 MT 289, 312 M 498, 60 P3d 418 (2002). See also Dannels v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2021 MT 71, 403 Mont. 437, 483 P.3d 495.

Claim for Punitive Damages Not Precluded by Estoppel — Issues of Previous Litigation Not Identical: Finstad was injured by asbestos in defendant's mine. A jury trial resulted in a verdict for Finstad and an award of $400,000 in compensatory damages, as well as a determination that punitive damages were warranted. The District Court conducted a minitrial on the issue of punitive damages, and the jury awarded $83,000. Defendant contested the award of punitive damages and moved for dismissal on grounds that Finstad's claim was barred by collateral estoppel by virtual representation because the issue had already been litigated in two previous Lincoln County cases against defendant. Defendant contended that the issues were identical, that final judgment had been rendered, and that Finstad was a party to or in privity with a party in the previous cases and thus was virtually represented by those parties in the previous cases. The District Court denied the motion to dismiss, finding that the issues were not identical, and also ruled for Finstad on the question of estoppel by virtual representation. On appeal, the Supreme Court reviewed the record, noting that although some of the evidence and witnesses regarding the punitive damages claim were the same as in the previous cases, several significant factual distinctions and legal claims existed. Because the first element of collateral estoppel regarding identical parties was not met, the Supreme Court affirmed without reaching the question of estoppel by virtual representation. Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000), following Holtman v. 4-G's Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 264 M 432, 872 P2d 318 (1994).

Error in Allowing Evidence of Other Litigation and Fictional Average Amounts for Each Pending Claim: Finstad was injured in defendant's Lincoln County asbestos mine and was awarded compensatory damages. In a minitrial on the issues of punitive damages, the District Court allowed evidence from defendant's economic expert regarding the number of asbestos claims pending in Lincoln County, as well as nationwide, and fictional average amounts for each of those claims. Finstad alleged that the evidence was irrelevant, misleading, and prejudicial, and the Supreme Court agreed. Although this section allows consideration of any other circumstances that may operate to increase or reduce punitive damages, this was not the kind of evidence intended by the Legislature to be allowed, given the purpose for punitive damages and the factors for reviewing punitive damage awards, especially considering that this section specifically mandates consideration of previous punitive damage awards against a defendant. Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000).

Punitive Damages Case Considered Civil Action — Requirement That Punitive Damages Award Be Unanimous Unconstitutional: Under Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., in all civil actions, two-thirds of the jury may render a verdict that has the same force and effect as if the entire jury had concurred in the decision. A civil action is prosecuted for the enforcement or protection of a right or the redress or prevention of a wrong. Here, Finstad was injured by asbestos in defendant's mine and sued for redress and to prevent defendant from committing similar wrongful conduct. Thus, Finstad's suit, including the claim for punitive damages, constituted a civil action. Punitive damages are merely a component of recovery of the underlying civil cause of action, imposed as enlarged damages for a civil wrong, not a substitute for criminal punishment. Because punitive damages are civil actions, the portion of subsection (6) of this section that requires that an award of punitive damages be unanimous as to liability and amount directly conflicts with Art. II, sec. 26, Mont. Const., and is unconstitutional. (See 2003 amendment.) Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000).

Burden on Defendant to Show That Financial Condition Does Not Warrant Punitive Damages: This section requires that following a verdict of punitive damages against a defendant, a separate proceeding must be held to determine the amount and that a defendant's financial condition must be considered. The defendant is required to show that the defendant's financial condition does not support an award. The plaintiff need not show that the defendant's financial condition supports an award. Therefore, the District Court's failure to completely set aside defendant's punitive damages was not error when defendant offered no evidence of his financial condition. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Standard of Review for Clear and Convincing Evidence Standard of Proof: In an insurance fraud action, each element of a punitive damages claim had to be proved by clear and convincing evidence, a standard that is more than a preponderance of the evidence but less than beyond a reasonable doubt. Addressing the standard of review for the first time, the court stated that the standard was whether there was substantial evidence to support the award of punitive damages, the same standard of review as when the standard of proof is a preponderance of the evidence. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Test for Whether Principal Is Subject to Punitive Damages for Acts of Its Agent: Punitive damages were awarded against an insurance agent, who fraudulently misled insureds, and his company. The jury was instructed that the Restatement (Second) of Torts 909 (1979) is the law in Montana on whether punitive damages can be awarded against a principal for the acts of its agent. Neither party objected to the instruction. Therefore, the Supreme Court, although expressing no opinion on whether the Restatement was the law, reviewed the evidence to determine whether the evidence supported punitive damages under the Restatement. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Punitive Damages Awarded — Prejudgment Interest Disallowed: Dees was awarded compensatory and punitive damages against his insurance company for the company's failure to settle his claim for hail damage to his crops. The District Court awarded prejudgment interest at the rate of 10% a year on both the compensatory and punitive damages, beginning with the date of the jury verdict up until the date of the final judgment. Citing Maddux v. Bunch, 241 M 61, 784 P2d 936 (1990), the Supreme Court held that prejudgment interest should not have been granted on the punitive damages. Because punitive damages must be reviewed and approved by the District Court, they neither vest nor are capable of being made certain until the trial court completes its review and issues a final judgment. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Reduction of Punitive Damages Upheld — Role of Passion and Prejudice: Dees was awarded compensatory and punitive damages against his insurance company for the company's failure to settle his claim for hail damage to his crops. The District Court reduced the amount of punitive damages awarded by the jury from $575,000 to $300,000, noting the existence of "passion and prejudice" and saying that the wrong committed by the insurer "certainly does not justify that [Dees] should receive a half million dollar windfall" but also saying that the punitive damages should be "large enough to get the company's attention". Citing Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217 (1986), the Supreme Court upheld the reduction in punitive damages, saying that the District Court performed its duty of reviewing the damages and reducing them when it found passion and prejudice. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Clear and Convincing Evidence Required — Allegation in Complaint, Statements in Judgment, and Unqualified Expert Medical Opinion Insufficient: Because of allegations that alcohol was involved in a car accident, the District Court awarded $25,000 for punitive damages to Maulding as part of a default judgment against Hardman. The Supreme Court noted that the only evidence of the use of alcohol was an unsubstantiated allegation in the complaint and that the only rationale by the District Court was a statement in the judgment that "evidence showed" that the accident was caused by the use of alcohol. The Supreme Court also noted that at the hearing on the matter, Maulding's counsel was allowed to give unqualified expert medical opinion, which the District Court should not have accepted. For these reasons, the Supreme Court reversed the denial of a motion to set aside the default. Maulding v. Hardman, 257 M 18, 847 P2d 292, 50 St. Rep. 141 (1993), overruled in part by Green v. Gerber, 2013 MT 35, 369 Mont. 20, 303 P.3d 729.

Award of Punitive Damages Reserved Pending Violation of Final Judgment: In a prescriptive easement case, the District Court granted injunctive relief and nominal compensatory damages but reserved imposition of punitive damages pending any violation of the final judgment and order keeping a road open. In light of the fact that the earlier injunction was not disobeyed, reserving the award of punitive damages was not clearly erroneous. Rasmussen v. Fowler, 245 M 308, 800 P2d 1053, 47 St. Rep. 2134 (1990).

Separate Hearing to Be Held to Determine Amount of Punitive Damages: The jury found that the plaintiffs were entitled to receive punitive damages from the defendant bank. Upon the defense counsel's suggestion that a hearing to determine the amount of damages based on the bank's finances would precipitate a run on the bank, the lower court held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to punitive damages. The Supreme Court held that once a jury finds that punitive damages should be awarded, the law requires the lower court to conduct a separate proceeding in which the jury is to decide the amount of damages. Prior to that time, any decision by the lower court to increase or decrease the award is premature. First Sec. Bank of Glendive v. Gary, 245 M 394, 798 P2d 523, 47 St. Rep. 1646 (1990).

No Clear and Convincing Evidence Justifying Punitive Damages: The plaintiff maintained that his insurance company intentionally avoided learning facts pertaining to coverage of his claim. The Supreme Court held that there was a great amount of conflicting evidence concerning the degree of risk of harm to the plaintiff created by the defendant's lack of factfinding and that therefore punitive damages were inappropriate. Maddux v. Bunch, 241 M 61, 784 P2d 936, 47 St. Rep. 82 (1990).

Failure to Present Prima Facie Case — Punitive Damages Denied: The District Court did not err in striking a claim for punitive damages after finding plaintiff failed to present a prima facie case, including clear and convincing evidence of all elements of the claim as required in this section. Niles v. Big Sky Eyewear, 236 M 455, 771 P2d 114, 46 St. Rep. 504 (1989), followed in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Failure to Present Findings Regarding Punitive Damages — Remand for Presentation of Evidence: The District Court erred by not presenting findings pursuant to this section regarding punitive damages. The Supreme Court remanded so that evidence could be presented in order to consider the statutory requirements. Ward v. Vibrasonic Laboratories, Inc., 236 M 314, 769 P2d 1229, 46 St. Rep. 387 (1989).

Evidence of Witness's Misrepresentations and Omissions Improperly Excluded — "Collateral Matters" Rule Incorrectly Applied: The District Court excluded evidence of a witness's misrepresentations and omissions after holding that the evidence constituted impeachment on collateral matters. The Supreme Court found the exclusion of evidence improper on two issues: the issue of the credibility of the witness and the issue of punitive damages. Further, the Supreme Court noted that the rule on collateral matters was abolished in favor of the relevancy approach contained in Rule 607. M.R.Ev. Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988), followed in St. v. Kowalski, 252 M 166, 827 P2d 1253, 49 St. Rep. 197 (1992), and McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that evidence of the defendant's bid on state trust land, for which it had no use, was properly admitted to prove the plaintiffs' punitive damages claim as it was relevant to whether the defendant was acting maliciously toward the plaintiffs.

Award of Punitive Damages in Conversion Action: Defendant contended that punitive damages were improper in a case where he was convicted of conversion of an employee's commission checks because the employment was based on a contractual relationship. The Supreme Court noted that conversion is a tort, that the breach of contract argument was not supported by evidence or the verdict, and that in light of substantial evidence of malice or oppression, punitive damages were warranted. Lane v. Dunkle, 231 M 365, 753 P2d 321, 45 St. Rep. 686 (1988).

Award of Punitive Damages Without Showing of Underlying Actual Damages: Just as punitive damages may be awarded where plaintiff is granted nominal damages, so may punitive damages be awarded where no monetary value has been assigned to the actual damages suffered. Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Punitive Damages Not Recoverable Under FELA: The remedial provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) are comprehensive and exclusive, and the congressional intent to preempt the application of state remedial tort law to all cases falling within the ambit of FELA is implicit in the structure and purpose of the Act. Therefore, the holding in Kozar v. Chesapeake & Ohio Ry. Co., 449 F2d 1238 (6th Cir. 1971), that punitive damages, being nonpecuniary in nature, are not recoverable under FELA was applicable to a claim for punitive damages under Montana law. Toscano v. Burlington N. RR Co., 678 F. Supp. 1477, 45 St. Rep. 367 (D.C. Mont. 1987), distinguishing Silkwood v. Kerr-McGee Corp., 464 US 238, 78 L Ed 2d 443, 104 S Ct 615 (1984).

Failure to Assign Lease — Damages Proper: Punitive damages were proper where defendant breached his duty to assign a lease over to landlords and attempted to avoid the duty to assign by interposing in bad faith and without justifiable cause various defenses to the assignment of the lease. Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477, 45 St. Rep. 108 (1988).

Burden of Proving Net Worth in Determination of Punitive Damages: In a case in which a defendant's net worth does not support an award of punitive damages in an amount the plaintiff seeks, it is up to the defendant to bring in evidence of net worth if the plaintiff does not do so. Gurnsey v. Conklin Co., Inc., 230 M 42, 751 P2d 151, 45 St. Rep. 1 (1988).

Recovery Limited in Fraudulent Sale of Securities — Punitive Damages Claim Dismissed: In a case alleging breach of contract for sale of a security by means of fraud, recovery was limited under 30-10-307 to consideration paid for the security plus interest, costs, and attorney fees. A claim for punitive damages was properly dismissed. State ex rel. Vranish v. District Court, 228 M 59, 741 P2d 412, 44 St. Rep. 1341 (1987).

Award of Attorney Fees and Costs as Punitive Damages — Award Vacated: A District Court award of punitive damages by way of compensating plaintiffs for one-half their attorney fees plus costs was held inappropriate. The award was vacated and case remanded to determine if a proper punitive damage award was warranted. Reintsma v. Lawson, 223 M 520, 727 P2d 1323, 43 St. Rep. 1962 (1986).

Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing — General Test for Contracts Covered: Plaintiff, who owned a building and two construction companies, and defendant insurance company signed a lease for office space in a building. Plaintiff was to renovate the space, and the two were to confer on and mutually approve the renovation plans. Disagreements arose on the plans. Plaintiff claimed he had difficulties contacting defendant. Defendant rescinded the lease on the ground that it had continually invested more time and money than plaintiff and that from a business standpoint the lease was no longer feasible. After failing in an attempt to contact defendant's president, plaintiff sent a notice of default and sued. The court affirmed an award of punitive damages to plaintiff. The court declined to extend the tort of breach of an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing to all contracts of any type, including arms-length and substantially equal bargaining power contracts, but stated that: (1) whether breach of a contract constitutes the tort depends on whether there has been some impermissible activity; (2) the nature and extent of an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is measured in a particular contract by the justifiable expectations of the parties and, whether performing or breaching, each party has a justifiable expectation that the other will act as a reasonable person; (3) a party who acts arbitrarily, capriciously, or unreasonably exceeds the justifiable expectations of the other party, and the other party should be compensated for damages resulting from the culpable conduct; and (4) for punitive damages to be awarded for breach of an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in a contract breach situation, the breach must amount to oppression, fraud, or malice. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985), followed in McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910, 44 St. Rep. 2111 (1987), and in Tresch v. Norwest Bank of Lewistown, 238 M 511, 778 P2d 874, 46 St. Rep. 1459 (1989), and distinguished and limited to contracts involving special relationships in Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767, 47 St. Rep. 850 (1990).

Amount Awarded — Trial Court Discretion: The amount of punitive damages to be awarded is within the sound discretion of the trier of fact. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984) (decided prior to 1985 amendment of 27-1-221).

Insurance Contract Language Excluding Payment of Punitive Damage Award Not Effective: Following the award of general, special, and punitive damages to the plaintiff for injuries suffered in a car accident, the insurance company refused to pay the punitive damages, whereupon the plaintiff sued the insurance company. On appeal from a summary judgment for the plaintiff, the Supreme Court held that the language in the insurance policy relied on by the company to deny the payment of punitive damages was ambiguous and should be construed against the company to allow payment of those damages. Fitzgerald v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 209 M 213, 679 P2d 790, 41 St. Rep. 654 (1984).

Insurance Coverage of Punitive Damages — Not Violative of Public Policy: Punitive damages may be insured against in Montana, and insurance coverage of such damages does not violate public policy. First Bank of Billings v. Transamerica Ins. Co., 209 M 93, 679 P2d 1217, 41 St. Rep. 573 (1984), followed in Fitzgerald v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 209 M 213, 679 P2d 790, 41 St. Rep. 654 (1984).

Causal Relationship for Relevance — Watergate and Split Tire Rim: In a tort action relating to the explosive failure of a Goodyear K-type split tire rim, it was error to admit material relating to Watergate in an attempt to receive exemplary damages. The Supreme Court held that the Watergate material was irrelevant under Rule 402, M.R.Ev., because the record showed only a speculative connection between the incident complained of and allegations by the plaintiff that political activities by defendant Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company during Watergate included an illegal political contribution by Goodyear in an attempt to avoid the recall of the K-type rims by the Nixon administration. Kuiper v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 207 M 37, 673 P2d 1208, 40 St. Rep. 1861 (1983).

Tort of Breach of Duty to Deal Fairly and in Good Faith in Employment Relationship — Punitive Damages Recoverable: This section only exempts breach of contract actions from its provisions. Breach of the duty owed to deal fairly and in good faith in the employment relationship is a tort for which punitive damages may be recovered if defendant's conduct is sufficiently culpable. Gates v. Life of Montana, 205 M 304, 668 P2d 213, 40 St. Rep. 1287 (1983).

Prior Guilty Plea — Irrelevant to Misconduct or Punitive Damages: Defendant and plaintiff, who was 16, were drinking and driving at a high rate of speed in Anaconda. Defendant was driving plaintiff's car when he lost control and hit a house. Plaintiff was severely injured. At a trial for damages based on negligence, plaintiff's counsel sought to introduce evidence of defendant's having pleaded guilty to two prior incidents of supplying intoxicating beverages to minors. Defendant's attorney moved for a motion in limine, which was denied. The jury awarded compensatory and punitive damages. On appeal the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the evidence of appellant's prior guilty pleas did not have the tendency to make the existence of his alleged willful and wanton misconduct on the night in question more or less probable. The evidence was irrelevant to establishing misconduct on the night in question or for establishing a basis for punitive damages. The fact that defendant had purchased alcohol for minors did not go toward establishing his operation of the vehicle in a reckless fashion, the act complained of. Therefore the evidence was also irrelevant toward showing a basis for punitive damages. Derenberger v. Lutey, 207 M 1, 674 P2d 485, 40 St. Rep. 902 (1983), followed in Maurer v. Clausen Distrib. Co., 275 M 229, 912 P2d 195, 53 St. Rep. 78 (1996).

Government Punitive Damages Immunization — Constitutionality: Plaintiff had a constitutional right to redress against the state for all of her injuries but did not have a constitutional right to punitive damages. Thus the rational basis test, rather than the strict scrutiny test, was applied to equal protection review of 2-9-105, immunizing the state and other governmental entities from exemplary and punitive damages. There is a rational basis for distinguishing governmental from other entities in the grant of punitive damages, in that such damages are to punish the wrongdoer and deter future similar conduct of the wrongdoer and others similarly disposed. The deterrent effect upon a government is extremely small, and innocent taxpayers are the persons punished. Therefore, 2-9-105 is not unconstitutional. White v. St., 203 M 363, 661 P2d 1272, 40 St. Rep. 507 (1983).

Lessor's Interference With Leased Property: Lessor sued for failure of lessee to vacate, and lessee counterclaimed that lessor converted the premises to his own use and interrupted her peaceful possession. Lessee could not get punitive damages under the conversion theory because conversion is a tort applicable to personal chattels and a leasehold interest is not a personal chattel. Nor could punitive damages be granted for interruption of peaceful possession, as it was not proven. In the absence of a showing of tortious conduct, it was error to grant lessee punitive damages in a simple contract action. Lemley v. Allen, 203 M 37, 659 P2d 262, 40 St. Rep. 279 (1983).

Punitive Damage — Tort Not Shown: Lessor sued for failure of lessee to vacate, and lessee counterclaimed that lessor converted the premises to his own use and interrupted her peaceful possession. Lessee could not get punitive damages under the conversion theory because conversion is a tort applicable to personal chattels and a leasehold interest is not a personal chattel. Nor could punitive damages be granted for interruption of peaceful possession, as it was not proven. In the absence of a showing of tortious conduct, it was error to grant lessee punitive damages in a simple contract action. Lemley v. Allen, 203 M 37, 659 P2d 262, 40 St. Rep. 279 (1983).

Title Insurers' Liability for Failure to Defend Suits Against Insured: Adjoining landowner sued insured for interference with his easement rights, title insurance companies refused to defend, insured hired his own counsel, the suit was settled, and adjoining landowner again sued insured when insured refused to abide by the settlement. The insurers again refused to defend. The policy obligated insurers to defend any litigation founded upon a defect, lien, encumbrance, or other matter insured against. Insurers had failed to disclose and insure against the easements, though they were contained in the title records. The insurers acted in bad faith in refusing to defend the first suit but not in refusing to defend the second suit, since it arose from insurers' refusal to abide by the settlement in the first suit. Insurers were liable to insured for his costs in defending the first suit, and punitive damages could be imposed for failure to defend. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982).

Purpose of Punitive Damages: The defendants have been victims of false accusations which the plaintiff knew to be false. Each of the allegations was made maliciously and viciously. The defendant was accused of criminal conduct, which seriously and directly affected his business reputation. The award of punitive damages is meant to make an example and punish a person so that he will cease this type of conduct in the future. An award of $50,000 punitive damages in this case is proper. Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126, 39 St. Rep. 1867 (1982).

No Actual Damages Awarded — Liability of Insurance Company for Punitive Damages: Where the owner of a car, arriving on the scene of an accident involving his car driven by another with his permission, intentionally tampered with physical evidence at the scene and was thereafter found liable for punitive damages by a state court, but neither he nor the driver were liable for actual damages, under the policy in question the insurance company was not liable for either the punitive damages or attorney's fees. Lee v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 39 St. Rep. 1761 (D.C. Mont. 1982) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Tort of "Bad Faith" — Punitive Damages Recoverable: Since violation of the implied-in-law duty of good faith and fair dealing is tortious in nature, notwithstanding that it may also constitute a breach of contract, punitive damages are recoverable in an action founded on such a violation. In a "bad faith" tort action, failure of a complaint to allege violation of the insurance code (33-1-101, et seq.) did not preclude a claim for punitive damages. Bostwick v. Foremost Ins. Co., 539 F. Supp. 517, 39 St. Rep. 980 (D.C. Mont. 1982).

Limits on State Liability Not to Be Applied Retroactively: Irrigation district, a state governmental entity, was subject to punitive damages in tort action where action arose in and was limited to summer of 1974. The 1972 Montana Constitution provided that state governmental entities have no immunity from suit for injury to person or property except as may be specifically provided by law. The Legislature did not provide immunity for certain governmental entities until 1977 when it enacted 2-9-104 (repealed, 1983) and 2-9-105. Those sections cannot be retroactively applied. Dvorak v. Huntley Project Irrigation District, 196 M 167, 639 P2d 62, 38 St. Rep. 2176 (1981).

Exemplary Damages for Unlawful Act — No Underlying Tort Liability: Exemplary damages may be awarded to a plaintiff under 27-1-221 even though plaintiff did not suffer any emotional distress and even though there was no underlying tort negligence found by the jury. Under 27-1-202, plaintiff is entitled to compensation since defendant knowingly attempted to obliterate evidence of the cause of a car accident, and it is equally apparent under 27-1-221 that a jury may award exemplary damages where the defendant has been guilty of either actual or implied malice. The statutory framework of 27-1-221 sets forth no specific requirement of an underlying tort or mental distress, nor will the Supreme Court imply such requirements through judicial construction. A plaintiff need only show actual damages pursuant to 27-1-202. Lauman v. Lee, 192 M 84, 626 P2d 830, 38 St. Rep. 499 (1981).

Town Meeting Minutes and Related Documents: The Troy Town Council had passed a resolution requesting a speed limit of 25 miles per hour on trains passing through town, due to the hazardous nature of the crossing where the accident in question occurred. The minutes of the Town Council, letters between the Town Council and the railroad, and intercorporate memoranda between railroad officials on the subject matter of the crossing should have been admitted into evidence. They were relevant to show notice of the claimed hazardous conditions and the intent of the railroad with respect to the same. These documents go to the issue of ordinary care to be exercised by the railroad and may go to the issue of punitive damages as an indication of wantonness or oppressiveness. The intercorporate memoranda are also relevant as possible admissions of a party opponent. Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980), followed in McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that evidence of the defendant's bid on state trust land, for which it had no use, was properly admitted to prove the plaintiffs' punitive damages claim as it was relevant to whether the defendant was acting maliciously toward the plaintiffs.

Quiet Title Action — Punitive Damages and Attorney Fees Awards: Lack of good faith in an adverse possession case will not necessarily support a punitive damages award for slander of title. Testimony of failure to recognize the opposing party in a quiet title action from a previous business transaction and of reliance on the Secretary of State's information that the party corporation had no registered agent for service of process, although part of the determination of a lack of good faith, was sufficient to rebut an allegation of malice as required for the award of punitive damages. There being no statutory or contractual provision for attorney fees in this case, a common-law exception would be required for such an award. Without proof that the defendant acted fraudulently, maliciously, or with bad faith toward the plaintiff in a quiet title action, attorney fees will not be awarded. A decision denying attorney fees will not be disturbed absent abuse of discretion by the trial court. Russell Realty v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980).

Closing Argument — Punitive Damages: When punitive damages were held impermissible in a prior appeal of this case, plaintiffs counsel did not make arguments for punitive damages in closing statements at retrial as defendant alleged. McGee v. Burlington N., Inc., 174 M 466, 571 P2d 784 (1977).

Punitive Damages Not Allowable Under Federal Employers' Liability Act: Court erred in allowing plaintiff to amend his complaint alleging willful and wanton conduct as a basis for punitive damages because only compensatory damages are the measure of damages recoverable under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. State ex rel. Burlington N., Inc. v. District Court, 169 M 480, 548 P2d 616 (1976).

Fraud in Contract: Fact that alleged trickery by carpet seller arose during the contracting for the sale and installation of the carpeting did not make it "arise from the contract" within this section; the action was in tort, independent of the contract, and exemplary damages were not barred by this section. Paulson v. Kustom Enterprises, Inc., 157 M 188, 483 P2d 708 (1971).

Attractive Nuisance: In attractive nuisance case, parents of deceased child were not entitled to exemplary damages in absence of proof of willful disregard of duty or indifference on part of contractor which would permit inference of malice; exemplary damages are extraordinary in nature and are allowed as punishment where something more than mere negligence is alleged and proven. Gagnier v. Curran Constr. Co., 151 M 468, 443 P2d 894 (1968).

Counterclaim: On counterclaim by debtor against bank suing on note of debtor, evidence showing that bank converted funds and property of debtor to satisfy obligations of debtor's son for which debtor was not responsible and evidence showing bona fide intent of debtor to pay note was sufficient to warrant award of exemplary damages to debtor. Sec. St. Bank of Harlem v. Kittleson, 149 M 183, 425 P2d 72 (1967).

Breach of Contract:

Under this section an insurer is not liable for exemplary damages for willful or fraudulent breaches of contract. Wade v. Great Am. Ins. Co., 255 F. Supp. 735 (D.C. Mont. 1966).

Punitive damages could not be allowed on a contract between laundromat owner and company that sold washing machines and dryers, where laundromat owner relied on the contract rather than on prior oral promises to help install the machines. Ryan v. Ald, Inc., 146 M 299, 406 P2d 373 (1965).

Plaintiff was not entitled to exemplary damages in action for allegedly fraudulent representations by defendant's insurance adjuster inducing execution of a contract of release by the plaintiff. Westfall v. Motors Ins. Corp., 140 M 564, 374 P2d 96 (1962).

Exemplary Damages — Not a Right: The plaintiff is never entitled to exemplary damages as a matter of right, regardless of the situation or the sufficiency of the facts, and something more than mere negligence must be alleged and proved. Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966).

Inadmissibility of Oral Statements: Since punitive damages cannot be awarded on obligations arising out of contract, evidence outside the agreement that attempts to prove a basis for such damages is inadmissible as falling within the parol evidence rule. Ryan v. Ald, Inc., 146 M 299, 406 P2d 373 (1965), followed, with respect to photographic evidence, in Barnes v. United Indus., Inc., 275 M 25, 909 P2d 700, 53 St. Rep. 17 (1996).

Auto Collision — Evidence Insufficient — No Exemplary Damages: Complaint in an action arising out of an automobile collision, alleging that defendant was driving at the rate of 40 miles an hour and on the wrong side of the road, was sufficient to sustain a charge of mere negligence but insufficient to warrant recovery of exemplary damages. Thompson v. Shanley, 93 M 235, 17 P2d 1085 (1932), distinguished in Linney v. Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pac. R.R., 94 M 229, 21 P2d 1101 (1933).

When Supreme Court Will Interfere on Appeal: Unless an alleged excessive award of punitive damages appears to have been influenced by passion, prejudice, or some improper motive or is outrageously disproportionate either to the wrong done or the situation or circumstances of the parties, the Supreme Court will not generally interfere; there is no established rule to be followed for ascertaining whether such an award is excessive. Johnson v. Horn, 86 M 314, 283 P 427 (1929).

Conversion of Personal Property:

Where the jury in an action in conversion found in favor of plaintiff's contention that defendant chattel mortgagee, in violation of his agreement extending the time within which plaintiff could pay his debt, caused an officer to seize the chattel, thus acting maliciously and oppressively, an award of exemplary damages was justified. Ramsbacher v. Hohman, 80 M 480, 261 P 273 (1927).

In cases of conversion of personal property, the statute authorized the imposition of punitive damages where the defendant acted maliciously, fraudulently, or oppressively, either in taking or detaining the property in controversy. De Celles v. Casey, 48 M 568, 139 P 586 (1914).

The complaint in an action for damages for a conversion, which alleged, among other things, that defendants "did unlawfully, maliciously, fraudulently, and oppressively take and carry away" the property in controversy and refused restitution of the same after repeated demands, was broad enough to warrant inquiry into the motives and behavior of defendants and to justify the giving of an instruction that exemplary damages might be awarded for oppressively, fraudulently, or maliciously withholding the chattels after demand. Shandy v. McDonald, 28 M 393, 100 P 203 (1909).

Malicious Prosecution: It is within the province of the jury to allow exemplary as well as compensatory damages in an action for malicious prosecution, and unless its determination appears to have been influenced by passion, prejudice, or some other improper motive or the amount is outrageously disproportionate to the wrong done or the situation or circumstances of the parties, the award will not generally be disturbed. Cornner v. Hamilton, 62 M 239, 204 P 489 (1922).

Exemplary Damages to Be Separately Stated: Where in an action in claim and delivery exemplary damages were not authorized upon any theory and the jury allowed $500 damages in a lump sum without designating what part was intended as actual and what part as punitive damages, the cause will be remanded for a new trial, it being impossible to determine from the verdict the amount intended to be allowed as damages by way of punishment. Luther v. Lee, 62 M 174, 204 P 365 (1922).

Wrongful Death: Damages by way of punishment, in addition to those actually sustained, may be recovered in an action against a mining company for the negligent and wrongful killing of plaintiff, a miner, where the complaint charges that the defendant company was primarily responsible for the death of decedent. Olsen v. Mont. Ore Purchasing Co., 35 M 400, 89 P 731 (1907).

OPPRESSION, FRAUD, OR MALICE

Punitive Damages Recoverable for Tort Claims Even if Contract Relationship Exists — Substantial Evidence of Actual Fraud — Punitive Damages Cap Correctly Applied to Each Defendant Individually — District Court Decision Upheld. Romo v. Shirley, 2022 MT 249, 411 Mont. 111, 522 P.3d 401.

Transfer of Stock Owned in Joint Tenancy With Right of Survivorship Improper — Delay of Five Years to Transfer Stock Back to Rightful Owner — Punitive Damages Award Reasonable: The plaintiff owned stock in the defendant company as a joint tenant with right of survivorship with his father. Two days prior to the father's death, the father attempted to unilaterally transfer all of the stock from his son to his wife; however, he passed away before the proper signatures were made to allow for the transfer. Nevertheless, the defendant company transferred the stock to the decedent's wife without authorization from the son. After the son unsuccessfully attempted to have the stock transferred back to him, he filed an action alleging fraud and breach of fiduciary duty and sought punitive damages. The District Court ordered that all of the stock be transferred to the son and awarded punitive damages. The defendant company appealed the punitive damages award. The Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the defendant had acted with willful disregard to its own policies, Montana law, and the rights associated with the plaintiff's ownership of the stock. Estate of Cote, 2019 MT 10, 394 Mont. 68, 433 P.3d 221.

Punitive Damages Reasonable When Defendant Guilty of Actual Malice: When the defendants were aware of an easement existing in favor of the plaintiffs and had no right to block a road but placed posts and other obstructions on the easement, thereby restricting travel of the plaintiffs, the defendants intentionally, unlawfully, and maliciously obstructed the road, and the plaintiffs were entitled to punitive damages. Osman v. Cavalier, 2011 MT 60, 360 Mont. 17, 251 P.3d 686.

Failure to State Claims for Fraudulent and Negligent Misrepresentation — Intent to Injure and Requirements of Former Rules 8(a) and 9(b) — Confusion of Law by District Court: In a case in which two banks brought an action against an accounting firm for damages caused by an unqualified audit statement, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the accounting firm's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Citing Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 Mont. 7, 594 P.2d 324 (1979), the Supreme Court held that the requirements to particularly plead fraud must be balanced with the provisions of former Rule 8(a) M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly applied a heavier burden of pleading an "intent to injure" than was justified under 27-1-221 because the language in that section could be interpreted to apply to a claim for punitive damages. The Supreme Court also found that the District Court's dismissal of the negligent misrepresentation claim occurred because the District Court confused it with a claim for professional negligence and that that confusion resulted from an incorrect jury instruction confusing "near privity" under Thayer v. Hicks, 243 Mont. 138, 793 P.2d 784 (1990), with the standard for duty of care in third-party negligent misrepresentation cases under Restatement (Second) of Torts 552. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case for a new trial with the correct jury instructions. W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

Sufficient Finding of Malicious Conduct in Building of Golf Course to Warrant Punitive Damage Award: Reasonable punitive damages may be awarded when a defendant has been found guilty of actual fraud or actual malice. In this case, defendant began developing a golf course on subdivision property adjacent to plaintiffs and, while deliberately misinforming plaintiffs concerning tree cutting, proceeded to cut a swath through the trees along the boundary of plaintiffs' property for a road and constructed a golf course maintenance building adjacent to plaintiffs' residence. The jury viewed the property and heard evidence regarding conversion of the trees. The Supreme Court concluded that defendant went about developing its golf course in such a way that the jury could find, by clear and convincing evidence, that defendant's conduct was malicious. McKay v. Wilderness Dev., LLC, 2009 MT 410, 353 M 471, 221 P3d 1184 (2009).

Admissibility of Design Defects in Similar Products in Strict Product Liability Case to Show State of Mind of Manufacturer: Plaintiffs sued the manufacturer of a child car seat for strict product liability after their 4-month-old child suffered fatal brain injuries in a vehicle rollover. Plaintiffs contended that the seat contained a design defect that caused the child's death. At trial, the District Court allowed evidence of test failures and a recall conducted on a similar previously manufactured seat. Defendant asserted that admitting the evidence essentially put a different seat on trial to defendant's prejudice. The Supreme Court disagreed. The District Court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the seats were substantially similar with respect to the design defect and that defendant's conduct surrounding the testing and recall of the earlier model constituted relevant evidence regarding defendant's state of mind with respect to sale of the later model, which represented a key element in determining whether defendant acted with actual fraud or malice. Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009). See also Preston v. District Court, 282 M 200, 936 P2d 814 (1997), and *Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Release of Federal Claims Precluding State Claim for Damages — Fraud and Punitive Damage Claims Preempted by Federal Law Properly Dismissed: Sinclair sued the defendant railroad for injuries received during employment. As part of the settlement, Sinclair signed a release of claims for injuries, illnesses, or damages that were unknown at the time of settlement.

Sinclair learned later that the defendant had similar safety complaints and injury reports dating back several years that had not been disclosed to Sinclair during discovery. Sinclair then filed another complaint alleging fraud and seeking punitive damages, including an alternative claim under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), so that if the state claims were dismissed, Sinclair could rescind the prior settlement on grounds of fraud and relitigate the FELA case. Defendant's motion to dismiss the state claims was granted on grounds that the state claims were preempted by FELA, so Sinclair could not simultaneously affirm the validity of the release and independently pursue state law fraud claims. Sinclair appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Sinclair executed a FELA release that was inextricably linked to Sinclair's claims, and under FELA Sinclair could challenge the validity of the release and have the release set aside if there was fraud in the inducement. However, federal law did not permit Sinclair to affirm the release and then separately sue for state law damages. Therefore, the District Court did not err in dismissing the state law fraud and punitive damages claims on grounds that they were preempted by FELA. Sinclair v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2008 MT 424, 347 M 395, 200 P3d 46 (2008), distinguishing Reidelbach v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co., 2002 MT 289, 312 M 498, 60 P3d 418 (2002). See also Counts v. Burlington N. RR Co., 896 F2d 424 (9th Cir. 1990).

Neighbors' Long-Term Campaign of Vulgar, Abusive Language and Conduct Sufficient Evidence of Severe Emotional Distress — Compensatory and Punitive Damages Proper and Reasonable: In a subdivision covenant violation case, defendants counterclaimed for severe emotional distress based on plaintiffs' incessant verbal assaults against defendants in violation of a covenant that prohibited noxious or offensive activities that were annoying or constituted a nuisance to other owners. The District Court awarded each defendant $25,000 for emotional distress and imposed a $10,000 punitive award against plaintiffs as well. Plaintiffs appealed, asserting that there was no evidence of severe emotional distress, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Emotional distress can manifest in both physical and nonphysical harm, and when the distress is accompanied by shock, illness, or other bodily harm, those physical manifestations afford evidence that the distress is genuine and severe. In this case, plaintiffs' behavior was indecent, atrocious, and utterly intolerable and was exclusively intended to anger, humiliate, and embarrass defendants. Under these outrageous circumstances, the physical manifestations of defendants' emotional distress were sufficient to support the conclusion that defendants suffered compensable, serious emotional distress that was a reasonably foreseeable consequence of plaintiffs' tortious conduct. Given the intensity and duration of the verbal attacks over a 4-year period and defendants' physical and emotional reactions to the attacks, defendants adequately established a compensable claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, and the District Court's award of $50,000 in compensatory damages was not grossly disproportionate to the injury or an abuse of discretion. Additionally, because plaintiffs acted with malice, the punitive damage award was not clearly erroneous. Czajkowski v. Meyers, 2007 MT 292, 339 M 503, 172 P3d 94 (2007).

Genuine Issue of Fact Regarding Unfair Trade Practices and Punitive Damages in Insurance Case — Summary Judgment Precluded: Following an auto accident, Shelton filed claims under her insurance policy for medical payments and underinsured motorist coverage. After several unsuccessful attempts at settlement, Shelton amended the complaint 4 years after the accident to add claims for punitive damages and bad faith. The parties agreed to bifurcate the punitive damages and bad faith claims from the underinsured motorist claim. Citing 33-18-242(5), the insurer moved for summary judgment on the punitive damages and bad faith claims on grounds that the insurer had a reasonable basis in law or in fact for contesting the claim or the amount of the claim. The District Court found, with respect to the bad faith claim, that Shelton did not present any material fact that precluded summary judgment and, with regard to the punitive damages claim, that Shelton admitted that there was no factual basis for a claim of malice and that there was no evidence of fraudulent behavior by the insurer. Summary judgment was granted to the insurer, and Shelton appealed. The Supreme Court reversed. Shelton provided evidence tending to show that the insurer failed to collect necessary records and reports and failed to share the information among its own experts, neglected to attempt in good faith to effectuate a settlement, and may have acted with malice in failing to pay Shelton the minimum amount of money that it determined that Shelton deserved. These questions of material fact precluded summary judgment, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Shelton v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 132, 337 M 378, 160 P3d 531 (2007).

Misrepresentation of Substituted Seed — Remand for Determination of Damages Beyond Subsequent Crop Loss and for Consideration of Actual Fraud: Plaintiff delivered a load of wheat seed to defendant's facility for cleaning and treating. Defendant inadvertently dumped the load into a waste bin, replaced the seed with a similar but different variety, and charged plaintiff for cleaning and treatment without informing plaintiff of the error. When the crop came up, plaintiff noticed that the seed was a different variety, sued defendant for negligent misrepresentation, and sought compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court held that defendant did not commit actual fraud, but misconstrued the differing definitions of actual fraud in Title 27 and Title 28 in determining that no punitive damages were allowed. The Supreme Court remanded for reconsideration of the punitive damage claim based on actual fraud as defined in this section. Additionally, the District Court failed to address plaintiff's claim for damages beyond the actual crop loss suffered because of the substituted seed, and that issue was also remanded for further consideration. However, the District Court did not err in refusing to award damages for plaintiff's lost crop insurance payments, in its findings regarding the per acre loss and value per bushel of lost production, by qualifying plaintiff's expert witness, or by awarding prejudgment interest. Hallenberg v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 2006 MT 191, 333 M 143, 141 P3d 1216 (2006).

No Actual Malice Shown in Replacement of Seed With Different Variety: Plaintiff delivered a load of wheat seed to defendant's facility for cleaning and treating. Defendant inadvertently dumped the load into a waste bin, replaced the seed with a similar but different variety, and charged plaintiff for cleaning and treatment without informing plaintiff of the error. When the crop came up, plaintiff noticed that the seed was a different variety, sued defendant for negligent misrepresentation, and sought compensatory and punitive damages. The District Court found no actual malice on defendant's part and declined to award punitive damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Substantial credible evidence showed that defendant's personnel assumed that plaintiff was planting a variety that was commonly used in the area and substituted that common variety, assuming that no injury would result in the misrepresentation that the seed plaintiff was going to plant was the same seed plaintiff delivered. Defendant neither had knowledge of facts nor intentionally disregarded facts that created a high probability of injury to plaintiff, so the definition of actual malice was not met and the District Court correctly declined to award punitive damages without a finding of actual malice. Hallenberg v. Gen. Mills Operations, Inc., 2006 MT 191, 333 M 143, 141 P3d 1216 (2006).

No Genuine Issue Whether Employer Acted With Intention or Malice in Employee's Injury — Summary Judgment Proper Under Shermer Standard: Roy contended that his employer was liable for damages beyond workers' compensation coverage by failing to provide training in ladder safety, having no policy concerning the use of safety belts on aerial ladders, and failing to abide by a letter from the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) giving notice that there was a high probability that employees would be injured while performing midline work on aerial ladders without a safety belt. The District Court summarily dismissed the claims, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Although the employer did not provide training in the use of safety belts, there was no evidence that the employer failed to train Roy in the face of knowledge that Roy would be injured if a safety belt was not used, nor was there a genuine issue of fact whether the employer had a policy requiring the use of safety belts on aerial ladders. Roy also failed to show that the employer was aware of the OSHA letter, and given the unclear language of federal regulations on the issue, Roy could not prove that the employer acted with malice, as defined in this section. Applying Shermer v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), the Supreme Court concluded that absent a showing that the employer had knowledge of a high probability of injury and acted with intentional indifference to or disregard of that knowledge, summary judgment was proper. Roy v. Blackfoot Tel. Co-op, Inc., 2004 MT 316, 324 M 30, 101 P3d 301 (2004). See also Gee v. Egbert, 209 M 1, 679 P2d 1194 (1984).

Employer Unaware That Employee Would Be Injured During Routine Job Activity — No Showing of Employer Malice Under Shermer Standard: Olszewski was seriously injured while loading building trusses onto a flatbed truck. Olszewski recovered workers' compensation benefits but also brought an action alleging that the injury was covered under the 1999 intentional act exception in 39-71-413, which was in effect when the injury occurred. The District Court found no showing of malicious action on the part of the employer or foreman and granted summary judgment to the employer and foreman. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the malicious intent standard in Shermer v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), and affirmed. Olszewski was unable to provide evidence that the employer knew that employees would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident, and absent a showing of that material fact, the statutory exception did not apply and summary judgment was proper. Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004).

No Showing of Malicious Act or Omission by Coworker in Death of Employee — Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Doctrine Applicable under 1999 Statute: Under the 1999 version of 39-71-413 and Shermer v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990 (2000), a plaintiff was required to show both an intentional and malicious act or omission in order to avoid the workers' compensation exclusivity doctrine (revised in 2001 to require only the showing of an intentional act or omission). Here Everhard, a mine worker, was killed by a train driven by Aafedt after signaling that Aafedt could proceed. Everhard's estate sued Aafedt and the mining company. The District Court concluded that Aafedt's conduct was intentional when he moved the train without seeing Everhard, but there was no showing that Everhard suffered an injury caused by actual malice by Aafedt or the company, so summary judgment was granted to defendants. The Supreme Court affirmed. As a matter of law, it could not be said that Aafedt deliberately proceeded to act in conscious or intentional disregard or even indifference to the high probability of injury to Everhard under the definition of actual malice, so the estate failed to overcome the workers' compensation exclusive remedy rule, and summary judgment was proper. Blain v. Stillwater Min. Co., 2004 MT 141, 321 M 403, 92 P3d 4 (2004).

Punitive Damages Owing for Fraud Connected With Sexual Assault: Following a sexual assault by a coworker, Beaver sought punitive damages. The District Court held that the coworker was unable to control his impulses, but was not guilty of fraud or malice and thus was not liable for punitive damages. The Supreme Court disagreed and reversed. The record showed that the coworker's actions were not a spur-of-the-moment development but that the coworker had worked for several hours to place Beaver in a position in which she would be vulnerable to sexual advances, including making false representations of work-related necessity. These acts constituted actual fraud, and the coworker was liable for punitive damages under 27-1-220 and this section. Beaver v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 2003 MT 287, 318 M 35, 78 P3d 857 (2003).

Erroneous Conclusion That Elements of Malicious Prosecution by State Not Established — Judgment as Matter of Law Improper: Plaintiffs were cited by the state for various water quality violations related to their public swimming pools, drinking water, and discharge from a sewage lagoon. The charges were ultimately dropped, and both plaintiffs filed separate actions that were settled, except for plaintiffs' malicious prosecution claims against the state, which were joined for trial by jury. At the close of plaintiffs' case, the state's motion for judgment as a matter of law was granted, so plaintiffs appealed. As set out in Orser v. St., 178 M 126, 582 P2d 1227 (1978), in a civil action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must introduce sufficient proof of the following elements: (1) a judicial proceeding has been commenced and prosecuted against the plaintiff; (2) the defendant was responsible for litigating, prosecuting, or continuing the proceeding; (3) there is lack of probable cause for the defendant's acts; (4) the defendant was actuated by malice; (5) the proceeding terminated in favor of the plaintiff; and (6) the plaintiff suffered damages. Here, the District Court found that plaintiffs had not met their burden of proof regarding elements three, four, and five. The Supreme Court examined each of those elements—lack of probable cause, malice, and favorable termination of the underlying suit—and concluded that the elements were met, warranting reversal for trial on the merits. Judgment as a matter of law averts trial by jury and is proper only in rare cases when undisputed evidence admits of only one conclusion. Although the proceedings to date in this case did not demonstrate guilt or innocence, plaintiffs nevertheless made out a prima facie case that warranted jury determination. Plouffe v. Dept. of Public Health and Human Services, 2002 MT 64, 309 M 184, 45 P3d 10 (2002), following McGuire v. Armitage, 184 M 407, 603 P2d 253 (1979), Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126 (1982), and Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995). Plouffe was followed in Seipel v. Olympic Coast Investments, 2008 MT 237, 344 M 415, 188 P3d 1027 (2008).

New Standard for Determining Whether Intentional or Malicious Act by Employer Constitutes Tortious Conduct — Summary Judgment Improper: Sherner was injured on the job and sued his employer, Conoco, Inc. (Conoco), for damages on grounds that Conoco was guilty of malicious acts or omissions that caused the injuries. The District Court ruled that the tort claim against Conoco was barred by the exclusivity provision in 39-71-411. Citing Calcaterra v. Mont. Resources, 1998 MT 187, 289 M 424, 962 P2d 590 (1998), the court concluded that Sherner was required to allege and establish that Conoco had actual knowledge that Sherner was being harmed in order to establish that Conoco's acts were malicious and, absent sufficient facts to raise a genuine issue of material fact that Conoco directed intentional harm at Sherner, granted summary judgment for Conoco. In District Court, Sherner sufficiently raised the issue of the proper standard for determining whether Conoco's act was malicious to allow the Supreme Court to address the issue on appeal, so the court proceeded to create a new standard, applying the plain meaning of the statutory definitions, by which to judge whether an act or omission is intentional or malicious. Applying common definitions of "intentional" and "act" and the appropriate definition of "malice" for use in 39-71-413—the one provided in this section, rather than the one in 1-1-204—the Supreme Court reversed, finding that genuine issues of material facts existed, regarding whether Conoco acted maliciously, as to preclude summary judgment. A worker need show only that an employer's act or omission, which caused the injury, was intentional or malicious to bring a tort action against the employer under 39-71-413. Sherner v. Conoco, Inc., 2000 MT 50, 298 M 401, 995 P2d 990, 57 St. Rep. 241 (2000), following Sitzman v. Schumaker, 221 M 304, 718 P2d 657, 43 St. Rep. 831 (1986). See also Enberg v. Anaconda Co., 158 M 135, 489 P2d 1036 (1971). See also Olszewski v. BMC W. Corp., 2004 MT 187, 322 M 192, 94 P3d 739 (2004), in which summary judgment was held to be proper under the Sherner standard absent evidence that an employer knew that an employee would actually be injured by a routine that was usually performed without incident.

Tort of Intentional Interference With Business Relations or Prospective Economic Advantage — Contract Between Parties Not Required: The elements of the tort of intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are identical with the tortious or intentional interference with contractual relations, consisting of acts that: (1) are intentional and willful; (2) are calculated to cause damage to plaintiff's business; (3) are done with the unlawful purpose of causing damage or loss without right or justifiable cause on the part of the actor; and (4) result in actual damages or loss. The key difference between the two tort theories is that unlike interference with contractual relations, intentional interference with either business relations or prospective economic advantage does not require that a contract exist between any of the involved parties. Rather, the focus of the legal inquiry is on the intentional acts of the malicious interloper in disrupting a business relationship, and "business" includes the reasonable expectation of entering into a valid business relationship. Under the theory of intentional interference with either business relations or prospective economic advantage, a person who is involved in an economic relationship with another or who is pursuing reasonable and legitimate prospects of entering such a relationship is protected from a third person's wrongful conduct that is intended to disrupt the relationship. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000). The test for tortious interference was also applied in Stokes v. St., 2007 MT 169, 338 M 165, 162 P3d 865 (2007). See also Buckaloo v. Johnson, 537 P2d 865 (Calif. 1975), Bolz v. Myers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606 (1982), Ellis v. Valdez, 686 P2d 700 (Alaska 1984), and Sebena v. Am. Auto. Ass'n, 280 M 305, 930 P2d 51 (1996), and Emmerson v. Walker, 2010 MT 167, 357 Mont. 166, 236 P3d 598.

Bank Loan for Purchase of Contaminated Real Property — Negligent Misrepresentation, Constructive Fraud, and Punitive Damages — Summary Judgment Reversed: After the Department of Health and Environmental Sciences (now Department of Environmental Quality) discovered that soil had been contaminated with gasoline leaking from Habets' and other service station gas tanks in violation of 75-10-715, Habets entered into a buy-sell agreement for sale of his service station to Mattingly. Mattingly then met with First Bank Vice President Joe Dolan to secure financing. Dolan conducted a physical inspection of the service station property in order to obtain an impression of the value of the property and to determine whether First Bank would be secure in its loan. At the time of his inspection, Dolan was aware of the contamination caused by the service station gas tanks. The loan was approved by the First Bank loan committee made up of Dolan, Susan Hemmer, the bank president, and John Mulcare, an owner of another service station, all three of whom were aware of the contamination but did not discuss it with Mattingly or the loan committee. Mattingly learned of the contamination much later when he tried to sell the station. He then brought an action against Habets, Habets' realtor, and First Bank, alleging constructive fraud, negligence, and negligent misrepresentation by First Bank and seeking punitive damages. The District Court granted summary judgment to First Bank on all issues. The Supreme Court, following Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990), which was overruled, with regard to the elements for a claim of negligent misrepresentation against a financial institution, in Morrow v. Bank of America, N.A., 2014 MT 117, 375 Mont. 38, 324 P3d 1167, stated that a threshold issue in a claim of negligent misrepresentation is whether the defendant made a representation as to a past or existing material fact upon which the claim is based. The Supreme Court pointed out that except for some basic facts involving the existence of the contamination, Dolan's visit to the gas station, and the action of the loan committee, the parties disagreed over the nature, scope, and import of the valuation of the property; disagreed whether First Bank's appraisal of the property and approval of the Mattingly loan constituted a representation as to the value of the property; and, if it was a representation, disagreed over whether Mattingly relied upon that representation. Citing McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536 (1986), the Supreme Court also stated that special circumstances may support a claim for constructive fraud when a party makes misleading statements concerning the physical condition or commercial value of real estate and pointed out that a jury might find that representations by First Bank with regard to the property would constitute these “special circumstances”. Concerning the requirement of 28-2-406 that in a claim for constructive fraud one party must gain an advantage over the other, the Supreme Court cited the fact that upon closing the sale of the station to Mattingly, First Bank was able to pay off a loan for the property made to Habets and that in making the loan to Mattingly, First Bank was able to collect interest income from the loan. Because there were facts in dispute as to the foregoing issues, the Supreme Court held that summary judgment was not appropriate and that the District Court erred in granting summary judgment in favor of First Bank. Because this section allows punitive damages against a party guilty of actual fraud or malice, the Supreme Court also reversed the District Court on the issue of punitive damages. Mattingly v. First Bank of Lincoln, 285 M 209, 947 P2d 66, 54 St. Rep. 1116 (1997).

Punitive Damages Properly Denied: When defendant insurance company was found not liable for fraud or actual malice, punitive damages were properly denied. Bartlett v. Allstate Ins. Co., 280 M 63, 929 P2d 227, 53 St. Rep. 1300 (1996).

Fraudulent Insurance Agent Whose Company Knew of and Did Nothing About Fraud — Punitive Damages Justified Against Both: An insurance agent was found to have fraudulently misled the plaintiff insureds, and compensatory damages were granted against the agent and his company. The agent’s conduct was described by coworkers as unethical and by various managers as fraudulent and was repeatedly reported to higher executive personnel. Regional and national personnel knew about it. One manager frequently made such disparaging remarks as “piss on ‘em” in reference to customers. Two managers told another, who complained to the two about the agent, that he should mind his own business, and one of the managers told the complaining manager that they operated under the “buyer beware” theory. Nothing was done about the agent’s fraudulent practices, and when he was terminated, it was for lack of production, not the fraudulent practices. There was substantial credible evidence clearly and convincingly supporting an award of $30,000 in punitive damages against the agent and $6,127,845 in punitive damages against the company. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc’y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Sufficiency of Defrauded Insureds’ Testimony When Supported by Defrauding Insurance Agent’s Superior and When Largely Supported by Agent: In an insurance fraud action, four other insureds testified that the insurance agent misled them in the same way as he did plaintiffs and the agent’s testimony corroborated plaintiffs’ testimony in many particulars. A superior of the agent, who was responsible for Montana, Colorado, and Wyoming, wrote memos reviewing the agent’s misrepresentations and referring, among other things, to that “mess up in Montana”, meaning complaints against the agent, and to “another policy holder being raped by” the agent. He testified that he developed no evidence that would refute any of the complaints, and that after reviewing the complaints, he concluded that it was the agent’s common practice to mislead people, thereby destroying the value of their policies, in order to sell them more life insurance. This met the clear and convincing evidence standard of proof at trial and the standard of review that the lower court’s award must be supported by substantial credible evidence. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc’y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Substantial Evidence of Malicious Conduct in Conversion Action — Punitive Damages Proper: Evidence that a corporate secretary intentionally filed a false police report in an attempt to convert a truck from the lessor to the corporation was sufficient to support a jury finding of malicious conduct, warranting the award of punitive damages. King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895, 51 St. Rep. 659 (1994).

Malice as Applied to Intentional Injury: The definition of actual malice in this section, adopted in 1987 for purposes of punitive damages, did not change the standard used to determine whether an injury was intentional for purposes of the exclusivity provision of the Workers’ Compensation Act. The definition of malice in 1-1-204 is still applicable to workers’ compensation cases. Blythe v. Radiometer America, Inc., 262 M 464, 866 P2d 218, 50 St. Rep. 1640 (1993).

No Error in Court’s Refusal to Strike Punitive Damages Award — Interpretation of Testimony Sustained: Dees sued American National Fire Insurance Company, alleging that the insurer was guilty of actual malice in failing to settle his claim for crop damage caused by hail. Testimony at trial showed that the insurance adjusters did not examine adjacent fields to determine whether any damage had occurred there, nor did they consult experts to determine how Dees’ variety of wheat differed in hail damage compared to other varieties of wheat. An executive officer of the insurer also testified on the issue of punitive damages by using language that could be interpreted to mean that in a future similar situation, the insurer would take action to get the attention of its adjusters to change their investigation and adjustment procedures. The Supreme Court held that the jury could have concluded that there was clear and convincing evidence that American National was guilty of malice as defined in subsection (2) of this section. The Supreme Court also held that the District Court Judge was in the best position to hear and evaluate the testimony of the insurer's executive and to determine whether the requirements for punitive damages had been met. The District Court therefore did not err in refusing to strike the award of punitive damages. Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141, 50 St. Rep. 1068 (1993).

Salesman Personally Liable for Negligent Misrepresentation: Plaintiffs purchased a subdivision parcel from defendant and subsequently contracted with defendant, a sales agent for a home center, to purchase a modular home to be placed on the parcel. Relying on defendant's advice and assurance that the property would be properly prepared, plaintiffs installed the home on concrete piers instead of a full foundation. Upon learning from engineering reports that extensive water damage to the home was caused by foundation instability, plaintiffs filed an action, alleging that the defendant had falsely misrepresented that the land had been properly prepared prior to installation of the home. Affirming the District Court decision, the Supreme Court ruled that the defendant was personally liable for selling property as appropriate for a modular home and for unreasonably representing to plaintiffs that the home was suitable for the pier-type foundation. Williams v. DeVinney, 259 M 354, 856 P2d 546, 50 St. Rep. 831 (1993).

Requisite Criteria Followed — Punitive Damage Award Proper: Appellant was found guilty of both actual fraud and actual malice, and in a separate hearing, punitive damages of $30,000 were awarded. Appellant argued that the award was inappropriate because there was no basis for a finding of actual fraud. However, the uncontested finding of actual malice was a sufficient basis for the award. Because the District Court followed the requisite criteria in determining the award and stated the reasons for making it, the punitive damages award was affirmed. Flikkema v. Kimm, 255 M 34, 839 P2d 1293, 49 St. Rep. 880 (1992).

Punitive Damages Awarded Despite Underlying Contract: The defendant argued that the lower court had erred in awarding punitive damages because the action was based upon breach of contract. The Supreme Court held that the statute precluding punitive damages for breach of contract did not apply to causes of action arising before the law's passage in 1987. The Supreme Court also held that if the conduct of a defendant is found to be fraudulent, an underlying contract will not defeat the award of punitive damages. Lee v. Armstrong, 244 M 289, 798 P2d 84, 47 St. Rep. 1421 (1990).

Malicious Interference With Another's Business — Punitive Damages Justified: The defendant claimed to have a personal service contract with the plaintiff. When the plaintiff refused to honor the alleged service contract, the defendant contacted the lessee of a gravel pit owned by the defendant and ordered the lessee to refuse to honor a contract the lessee had with the plaintiff to sell gravel to the plaintiff. The plaintiff had to obtain the needed gravel elsewhere at an additional cost of $7,500. The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's award of $7,500 compensatory damages and $8,500 punitive damages on the basis that the defendant's action was intentional and malicious. Tindall v. Konitz Contracting, Inc., 240 M 345, 783 P2d 1376, 46 St. Rep. 2182 (1989).

Intentional Interference With Prospective Economic Advantage: Plaintiff alleged that defendant knew plaintiff needed to receive a subcontract award to avoid financial ruin and that defendant intentionally pressured the contractor into accepting another party's bid. The Supreme Court reversed the lower court and remanded for a new trial, ruling that the issue of punitive damages should have been submitted to the jury and that the jury could find that defendant had intentionally taken advantage of plaintiff's financial disability in order to cause cruel and unjust hardship. Phillip R. Morrow, Inc. v. FBS Ins. Mont.-Hoiness Labar, Inc., 236 M 394, 770 P2d 859, 46 St. Rep. 455 (1989).

Sufficient Evidence of Malice in Wrongful Attachment: Defendants contended that evidence was insufficient to support a verdict that they were guilty of malice in a wrongful attachment case. However, evidence showed that defendants must have been aware from the time of attachment that it was probably wrongful, yet they perfected and maintained attachment for some 8 years. Such evidence was sufficient to support the finding of malice or oppression, justifying the award of punitive damages. Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

Jury Finding of Fraud and Breach of Good Faith and Fair Dealing in Contract Action — Punitive Damages Warranted: Defendant contended a tort recovery was incorrectly allowed in a breach of contract action because the case dealt with an ordinary commercial setting in which two parties negotiated with relatively equal bargaining power and without any special relationship that would generate an exceptional duty. The Supreme Court noted that the jury found not only a breach of contract and good faith but also actions constituting fraud. The court held that when both fraud and a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing are found, the plaintiff is free to pursue punitive damages. Webcor Electronics, Inc. v. Home Electronics, Inc., 231 M 377, 754 P2d 491, 45 St. Rep. 695 (1988).

Refusal to Instruct on Punitive Damages Proper Absent Demonstration of Oppression, Fraud, or Malice: Plaintiffs seeking punitive damages on a claim of negligence in purchase of a mobile home were able to show, at most, that defendant's repeated attempts to repair defects were ineffective. The District Court correctly refused to instruct on punitive damages because plaintiffs failed to demonstrate oppression, fraud, or malice, actual or presumed, by clear and convincing evidence. McJunkin v. Kaufman, 229 M 432, 748 P2d 910, 44 St. Rep. 2111 (1987). (See 1987 amendment.)

Punitive Damages Proper in Action to Quiet Title: In this action to quiet title to certain real property, the defendants ignored the plaintiffs' request to negotiate the boundary line and destroyed plaintiffs' fences. Punitive damages therefore were recoverable for these tortious acts of malice and oppression. Bollinger v. Hollingsworth, 227 M 454, 739 P2d 962, 44 St. Rep. 1228 (1987). (See 1987 amendment.)

Fraud and Misrepresentation — Punitive Damages Proper: Bank appealed a judgment awarding compensatory and punitive damages to a commercial trout company upon a finding that a breach of contract and misrepresentation by the bank and its agent proximately caused the trout farm's failure. The Supreme Court ruled that punitive damages were properly awarded upon a sufficient showing of fraud and misrepresentation. Crystal Springs Trout Co. v. First State Bank of Froid, 225 M 122, 732 P2d 819, 44 St. Rep. 90 (1987).

Punitive Damages for Malicious Conduct Not Arising From Contract: Plaintiffs amended complaint requested punitive damages for the removal of a sprinkler from his property. The District Court awarded $5,000 punitive damages as a punishment for the "breach of defendant's obligation, not arising from the contract she broke, to allow the Plaintiff peaceable occupation of his home and property" and for "Defendant's refusal to return either the spray system or the money ($5,000) paid down on it", both of which the court found "oppressive and malicious". On appeal, defendant argued that the award of punitive damages was improper because this was a contract action. The Supreme Court affirmed the award, holding that there was substantial evidence that the defendant's trespass on plaintiff's property constituted malicious conduct not arising from contract under 27-1-221. Rauch v. Michel, 221 M 1, 716 P2d 617, 43 St. Rep. 587 (1986).

Commission of Bad Faith Tort Against Depositor by Bank: The District Court did not err in instructing the jury to consider recovery by bank depositor against the bank under bad faith tort principles and to accordingly consider punitive damages. The depositor and his nephew opened a checking account with a card requiring the signatures of both on checks. They then formed a partnership. The nephew induced the bank to change the card so that he could issue checks without the depositor's signature. The bank did not notify the depositor of the change or obtain his authorization for it. The bank told depositor his signature was not needed but did not tell him about the new card, and depositor disagreed. Later the bank told him it would not change its policy of honoring checks signed only by the nephew. When depositor's attorney told bank not to do so, the bank stated the card required only one signature and the bank would not change the card unless both the nephew and the depositor requested it. The bank then told depositor the card was lost but later that day produced both cards. Depositor sued, and the bank subsequently took various negative and detrimental actions against his credit status, refused loans of a type formerly granted, canceled his ready reserve account, and refused to pay several items presented before he was notified that the account had been canceled. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985). See also Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986).

Punitive Damages Proper in Action for Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing and for Negligent Investigation: The plaintiff was properly granted punitive damages for the hospital's breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and for negligence in investigating the charges for which plaintiff was dismissed from employment as a probationary employee. Crenshaw v. Bozeman Deaconess Hosp., 213 M 488, 693 P2d 487, 41 St. Rep. 2251 (1984).

Lender's Failure to Honor Renegotiated Loan Payments: Bank's employee, Johnson, told defendants that their note with the bank would be renegotiated to allow further time for payment. Another employee then refused to renegotiate, and he offset defendants' checking account balance against the note without telling defendants, after defendants told him they had relied on Johnson and would not be able to pay on the note's due date. Several of defendants' checks were then dishonored due to insufficient funds. If a duty to exercise good faith is imposed by law rather than by a contract, breach of the duty is tortious and punitive damages are thus recoverable if the conduct is sufficiently culpable. Here, punitive damages could have been granted on the basis of malice, fraud, oppression, or all three, and a new trial was granted because the judge refused to submit the punitive damages issue to the jury. First Nat'l Bank of Libby v. Twombly, 213 M 66, 689 P2d 1226, 41 St. Rep. 1948 (1984). See also Flanigan v. Prudential Fed. S&L Ass'n, 221 M 419, 720 P2d 257, 43 St. Rep. 941 (1986), Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, Inc., 221 M 447, 720 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 964 (1986), Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988), and Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989).

Bad Faith — Allowance of Punitive Damages Proper: Plaintiff, a Kalispell ophthalmologist, pierced Frisnegger's eyeball with a needle while administering a local anesthetic to his eyelid. A cataract formed on the eye. Plaintiff notified his local insurance agent and on his direction notified defendant in writing that defendant was entirely at fault. Frisnegger filed suit against plaintiff. Defendant did not feel the claim was worth over $45,000 and refused to settle within the policy limits of $100,000. A jury verdict was returned for Frisnegger in the amount of $175,000. Plaintiff then brought suit against defendant alleging negligence and bad faith on the part of defendant for failure to settle the claim within policy limits. A jury verdict awarding plaintiff compensatory damages of $250,000 and punitive damages of $300,000 was returned. On appeal, defendant contended that the award of punitive damages was unsupportable, as there was no evidence of intentional wrongdoing, a desire to injure plaintiff, or any illegal withholding of policy benefits. Plaintiff contended the award was proper in light of defendant's failure to investigate, evaluate, or negotiate the claim in good faith and failure to disclose matters of material interest to the insured. The Supreme Court stated that presumed malice sufficient to justify punitive damages includes unjustifiable conduct. In Owens v. Parker Drilling Co., 207 M 446, 676 P2d 162, 41 St. Rep. 66 (1984), the court defined unjustifiable conduct to include reckless disregard of duty. The testimony in this case was such that the jury could find defendant was recklessly indifferent to the risk to which it was putting plaintiff. Gibson v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 210 M 267, 682 P2d 725, 41 St. Rep. 1048 (1984) (decided prior to 1985 and 1987 amendments).

Auto Accident — Gross Negligence and Recklessness: Failure to yield to oncoming traffic that constitutes gross negligence and recklessness supports an award of punitive damages. It is not necessary to show actual malice to recover punitive damages. The District Court's findings meet the standard for presumed malice. Eliason v. Wallace, 209 M 358, 680 P2d 573, 41 St. Rep. 758 (1984) (decided prior to 1985 and 1987 amendments).

Actual or Implied Malice — Jury Question: Scaffolding was needed elsewhere, so Lins used a ladder to remove the coverings from ceiling sprinkler nozzles. The ladder was leaned against the sprinkler pipes. The ladder slipped, and Lins was injured when he fell. Mydlarz was later directed to complete the removal of the nozzle covers using the ladder. He also fell and was seriously injured. A jury can award exemplary damages if the defendant has been found guilty of either actual or implied malice. The defendants were arguably guilty of actual or implied malice, and the issue of punitive damages should not have been taken from the jury. When deciding a motion for directed verdict by the defendants, the trial judge must view the evidence in a light most favorable to the plaintiff. Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695, 41 St. Rep. 738 (1984) (decided prior to 1985 and 1987 amendments).

Punitive Damages Recoverable for Employment Discrimination Against Handicapped: A violation of 49-4-101 warrants a claim for punitive damages if such violation is shown to be intentional or reckless. Owens v. Parker Drilling Co., 207 M 446, 676 P2d 162, 41 St. Rep. 66 (1984). (See 1987 amendment.)

Standard for Presumed Malice: When a person knows or has reason to know of facts which create a high degree of risk of harm to the substantial interests of another, and either deliberately proceeds to act in conscious disregard of or indifference to that risk or recklessly proceeds in unreasonable disregard of or indifference to that risk, his conduct meets the standard of willful, wanton, and/or reckless to which the law of this state will allow imposition of punitive damages on the basis of presumed malice. Owens v. Parker Drilling Co., 207 M 446, 676 P2d 162, 41 St. Rep. 66 (1984) (decided prior to 1985 and 1987 amendments), followed in Hart-Anderson v. Hauck, 230 M 63, 748 P2d 937, 45 St. Rep. 18 (1988), and Cooper v. Rosston, 232 M 186, 756 P2d 1125, 45 St. Rep. 978 (1988).

Constructive Fraud as Basis for Punitive Damages: Section 27-1-221 allows punitive damages for fraud. Section 28-2-404 specifically defines fraud as including constructive fraud. The breach of a fiduciary relationship constituting a constructive fraud forms the basis for an award of punitive damages. Purcell v. Automatic Gas Distrib., Inc., 207 M 223, 673 P2d 1246, 40 St. Rep. 1997 (1983). (See 1987 amendment.)

Fraud Involving Underlying Contract — Exemplary Damages Allowed: If the conduct of a defendant is tortious, the fact that there was an underlying contract does not defeat an award of punitive damages. In this case, the trial court found fraud, which would constitute a tort and provide a basis for an award of exemplary damages. Purcell v. Automatic Gas Distrib., Inc., 207 M 223, 673 P2d 1246, 40 St. Rep. 1997 (1983).

Punitive Damages — Insurance Settlement Practice of Restrictive Endorsement: Plaintiff's son purchased life insurance, including an accidental death rider, from defendant. The son was found dead in a Bozeman motel room. The death was determined to be an overdose of chloroform through inhalation. The policy rider excluded payment on death due to suicide or drug overdose. On June 11, 1980, defendant sent plaintiff a check for the basic policy amount with a restrictive endorsement on the back. Plaintiff contested the denial of accidental death benefits. On August 20, plaintiff returned the tendered check, and on September 5, 1980, filed suit against defendant seeking actual and punitive damages. On September 9, 1980, defendant mailed the same check without the restrictive endorsement. A jury found that the plaintiff was not entitled to the accidental death benefits but awarded $30,000 in punitive damages. Defendant appealed. In order to award punitive damages there would have had to be a violation of the insurance laws for which a penalty is prescribed and actual damages. The court found that a restrictive endorsement as a general business practice in contested settlements was an unfair claim settlement practice. The actual damages were lost interest earnings and out-of-pocket expenses for legal counsel. Actual damages need only be nominal in order to award punitive damages. Harris v. Am. Gen. Life Ins. Co., 202 M 393, 658 P2d 1089, 40 St. Rep. 164 (1983).

General Rule:

When punitive damages are given for the sake of example and to punish the defendant, to sustain an award against the objection that the evidence is insufficient, there must be substantial evidence in the record of oppression, fraud, or malice, actual or presumed, toward the plaintiff. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982). (See 1987 amendment.)

To warrant the recovery of punitive damages, the act complained of must not only be unlawful but must also partake somewhat of a criminal or wanton nature. It is an almost universally recognized rule that such damages may be recovered only in cases where the wrongful act complained of is characterized by some such circumstances of aggravation as willfulness, wantonness, malice, oppression, brutality, insult, recklessness, gross negligence, or gross fraud on the part of the defendant. Graham v. Clarks Fork Nat'l Bank, 193 M 282, 631 P2d 718, 38 St. Rep. 1140 (1981). (See 1987 amendment.)

Harassing Persons by Legal Processes: A peace officer gave defendant a speeding ticket with a maximum $5 fine. Defendant sued officer's supervisor and supervisor's wife for $1,050,007 by way of a "counterclaim" to the ticket, charging the supervisor and his wife with intimidation, compounding a felony, attempting to take money under false pretenses, using unauthorized police powers, operating a radio transmitter without an FCC license, and failure to display such a license. He also filed purported common-law liens against their personal property, crops, machinery, motor vehicles, estates, checking and savings accounts, stocks and bonds, bank safe deposit boxes, real property, and "signatures". He notified local banks of the liens and told supervisor and his wife the liens would not be removed until they satisfied his demands. The supervisor and his wife sued defendant. Defendant refused to settle, delayed the proceeding, did not hire an attorney to represent him, disregarded the Court Clerk's bill for filing his answer until default against him was requested, ignored a notice for hearing on damages, and showed utter disregard for plaintiff's rights and the proceedings of the courts. Malice was shown, and the evidence sustained award of $100,000 general damages and $100,000 punitive damages. No society governed by law and not by men could tolerate his deliberate and unprincipled actions. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Exemplary Damages — Intentional Interference With Business Relationships of Another: When defendant committed the tort of intentional interference with business relationships of another and was guilty of fraud, oppression, or malice, actual or presumed, exemplary damages may be given in addition to actual damages. Bolz v. Myers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606, 39 St. Rep. 1747 (1982). (See 1987 amendment.)

Malice Not Required in Contract Rescission Action: In an action to rescind a contract to purchase an automobile, there was no requirement that plaintiff show malice, oppression, or fraud on the part of the seller in order to recover exemplary damages under 30-14-133. T & W Chevrolet v. Darval, 196 M 287, 641 P2d 1368, 39 St. Rep. 112 (1982).

Implied Malice — Proof: It is not necessary to show actual malice to recover punitive damages, as malice may be actual or presumed. Implied malice may be shown by proof that defendant engaged in a course of conduct knowing it to be harmful and unlawful. Dvorak v. Huntley Project Irrigation District, 196 M 167, 639 P2d 62, 38 St. Rep. 2176 (1981). (See 1987 amendment.)

Malice Presumed: In awarding exemplary damages, the jury may take into account whether the acts complained of are "of such nature as to demonstrate a reckless disregard of the rights of others". (Butcher v. Petranek, 181 M 358, 593 P2d 743 (1979).) The record amply supports a determination that the defendant evinced a reckless disregard for the rights of the plaintiffs. Under this section, the malice required for exemplary damages to be awarded may be actual or presumed. Where defendant's conduct is unjustifiable, "malice in law" is presumed. Defendant's use of force was unjustifiable. Magnuson v. Billmeyer, 189 M 458, 616 P2d 368, 37 St. Rep. 1597 (1980). (See 1987 amendment.)

Duress Upon Official: The District Court erred in excluding the testimony of a former Town Councilman and railroad employee regarding the railroad's reaction to his motion to reduce the speed of trains at the crossing. If the railroad in fact utilized its position as employer to exert a form of duress upon its employee acting in an official capacity, such evidence might have a bearing in the mind of the jury to demonstrate wantonness or oppressiveness sufficient to establish a basis for punitive damages. Runkle v. Burlington N., Inc., 188 M 286, 613 P2d 982 (1980). (See 1987 amendment.)

Willful and Malicious Deprivation of Use of Property — Damages: In an action for actual and punitive damages for removal of a gate and approach to property of which plaintiff was a cotenant with defendant's wife, the Supreme Court found substantial evidence to support the findings of fact and conclusions of law determining the existence of a willful and malicious deprivation of the use of the property as well as the amount of damages (actual damages of $230 and punitive damages of $1,000). Toeckes v. Baker, 188 M 109, 611 P2d 609 (1980).

Quiet Title Action — Punitive Damages and Attorney Fees Awards: Lack of good faith in an adverse possession case will not necessarily support a punitive damages award for slander of title. Testimony of failure to recognize the opposing party in a quiet title action from a previous business transaction and of reliance on the Secretary of State's information that the party corporation had no registered agent for service of process, although part of the determination of a lack of good faith, was sufficient to rebut an allegation of malice as required for the award of punitive damages. There being no statutory or contractual provision for attorney fees in this case, a common-law exception would be required for such an award. Without proof that the defendant acted fraudulently, maliciously, or with bad faith toward the plaintiff in a quiet title action, attorney fees will not be awarded. A decision denying attorney fees will not be disturbed absent abuse of discretion by the trial court. Russell Realty v. Kenneally, 185 M 496, 605 P2d 1107 (1980).

Punitive Damages — Malice Implied: The insurer's conduct was both harmful to the insured and unlawful because it violated a statute. Its malice will therefore be implied because its actions were unjustifiable. Punitive damages are justified in such a case. First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Goddard, 181 M 407, 593 P2d 1040 (1979). (See 1987 amendment.)

Exemplary Damages — Wrongful Attachment: The trial judge, without putting a money value on the damages, found "that the defendant incurred expenses and interruption of his business affairs caused by his having to stay in Montana to initiate legal proceedings to release the attachment . . ." and that defendant suffered embarrassment when served with the Writ of Attachment at a fairground grandstand in the presence of his friends, wife, and child. Therefore, exemplary damages were properly awarded in an action for wrongful attachment. Miller v. Fox, 174 M 504, 571 P2d 804 (1977), followed in McNeil v. Currie, 253 M 9, 830 P2d 1241, 49 St. Rep. 312 (1992). (See 1987 amendment.)

Misrepresentation in Sale of Home: Where the seller of a house represented that it had "two bathrooms" and showed buyers a room on the second floor equipped with the usual accoutrements of a bathroom, which buyer later discovered were not connected to any plumbing, and where shortly after buyers took possession the main sewerline burst due to faulty materials and installation, the buyer is not precluded from choosing to affirm the contract of sale and suing in tort seeking actual and punitive damages for fraud and deceit. State ex rel. Dimler v. District Court, 170 M 77, 550 P2d 917 (1976). (See 1987 amendment.)

When Exemplary Damages Not Recoverable: Taking possession of hay crop in exercise of rights under security agreement is not a ground for finding malice justifying assessment of exemplary damages. Fairchild v. Williams Feed, Inc., 169 M 18, 544 P2d 1216 (1976).

Slander of Title: In a slander of title action, where the defendant did not survey the lots which he claimed, never studied the abstract of title, and attempted to rely on a quitclaim deed from his secretary on the basis of her maiden name, there was a showing of malice that would entitle the plaintiff to punitive damages. Jumping Rainbow Ranch v. Conklin, 167 M 367, 538 P2d 1027 (1975).

Insurance Settlement: Where fraud of the insurer and agent in settling an automobile insurance claim by "cost of repair" and not "total loss" is alleged but no provision of the insurance code was violated, the insured was not entitled to exemplary damages. State ex rel. Cashen v. District Court, 157 M 40, 482 P2d 567 (1971), distinguished in Firestone v. Bradshaw, 157 M 181, 483 P2d 709 (1971).

Water Rights Dispute: In action concerning disputed water rights, plaintiff was not entitled to punitive damages under this section since defendants were not found to be guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice; further, exemplary or punitive damages cannot be recovered in absence of award of actual damages. Smith v. Krutar, 153 M 325, 457 P2d 459 (1969).

Slander: Where home owner's slanderous statements that builder had cheated him were made to numerous people in community over 2-year period and where speaker stated that "he was going to tack his [builder's] hide to the wall", jury had basis for finding sufficient malice to justify award of punitive damages. McCusker v. Roberts, 152 M 513, 452 P2d 408 (1969).

Insurance Policy Default: Insured was entitled to sue insurance company for actual damages for default on policy requiring it to pay car installments upon insured's disability as well as for exemplary damages since default was oppressive, malicious, or fraudulent and in violation of statute requiring prompt payment of claim. State ex rel. Larson v. District Court, 149 M 131, 423 P2d 598 (1967), distinguished in State ex rel. Cashen v. District Court, 157 M 40, 482 P2d 567 (1971).

Eviction of Tenant:

Where a landlord, in doing an act which constructively evicts the tenant, is motivated by a desire to vex, injure, or annoy the tenant, the act is done maliciously and a jury may award punitive damages. Cruise v. Clawson, 137 M 439, 352 P2d 989 (1960).

A hotel proprietor who wrongfully forces an entry into the room of a guest and without just cause ejects him from it and from the house is liable not only for compensatory but also exemplary damages if the ejection is accompanied by circumstances indicating that it was prompted by malice, fraud, or a spirit of oppression. Jones v. Shannon, 55 M 225, 175 P 882 (1918). (See 1987 amendment.)

Malice in Law: "Malice in law" justifying an award of exemplary damages will be implied where defendant's conduct is unjustifiable. Evidence that overtaking automobile without warning, during severe snowstorm, seeking to pass, and, in so doing, sideswiping automobile in which accident victim rode would warrant finding that conduct of driver of overtaking automobile was unjustifiable, authorizing an implication of malice as basis for an award of exemplary damages. Cherry-Burrell Co. v. Thatcher, 107 F2d 65 (9th Cir. 1939). See also Dvorak v. Huntley Project Irrigation District, 196 M 167, 639 P2d 62, 38 St. Rep. 2176 (1981). (See 1987 amendment.)

Not Necessary to Claim Eo Nomine:

In an action for damages for the fraudulent use of a trademark, complaint asking exemplary damages need not set them out eo nomine but must allege that the acts of defendant were characterized by fraud, oppression, malice, or the like under this section. Truzzolino Food Prod. Co. v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 108 M 408, 91 P2d 415 (1939), overruled on another point in Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949). (See 1987 amendment.)

To entitle plaintiff to recover punitive damages in an action for malicious prosecution, in addition to those actually sustained, it is not necessary that he claim them eo nomine in his complaint. Martin v. Corscadden, 34 M 308, 86 P 33 (1906).

Guilty Intent Required:

To warrant the recovery of exemplary damages in a tort action, the complaint must allege either that the act complained of was done maliciously, willfully, or wantonly or the facts surrounding its commission must be set forth with such particularity as that one or more of such elements may be inferred therefrom. Thompson v. Shanley, 93 M 235, 17 P2d 1085 (1932). (See 1987 amendment.)

To warrant the recovery of exemplary damages, defendant must have entertained a guilty intent, the wrongful acts being characterized by circumstances of aggravation, malice, oppression, and the like. Luther v. Lee, 62 M 174, 204 P 365 (1922). (See 1987 amendment.)

Conversion of Personal Property:

Where the jury in an action in conversion found in favor of plaintiff's contention that defendant chattel mortgagee, in violation of his agreement extending the time within which plaintiff could pay his debt, caused an officer to seize the chattel, thus acting maliciously and oppressively, an award of exemplary damages was justified. Ramsbacher v. Hohman, 80 M 480, 261 P 273 (1927). (See 1987 amendment.)

In cases of conversion of personal property, the statute authorized the imposition of punitive damages where the defendant acted maliciously, fraudulently, or oppressively, either in taking or detaining the property in controversy. De Celles v. Casey, 48 M 568, 139 P 586 (1914). (See 1987 amendment.)

The complaint in an action for damages for a conversion, which alleged, among other things, that defendants "did unlawfully, maliciously, fraudulently, and oppressively take and carry away" the property in controversy and refused restitution of the same after repeated demands, was broad enough to warrant inquiry into the motives and behavior of defendants and to justify the giving of an instruction that exemplary damages might be awarded for oppressively, fraudulently, or maliciously withholding the chattels after demand. Shandy v. McDonald, 28 M 393, 100 P 203 (1909). (See 1987 amendment.)

Malice Actual or Presumed: In an action in conversion in which exemplary damages were asked, an instruction defining the terms "actual" and "presumed" malice was not open to the objection that it authorized an award of punitive damages for malice in law as well as malice in fact. Wray v. Great Falls Paper Co., 72 M 461, 234 P 486 (1925). (See 1987 amendment.)

Trespass: Where acts constituting a trespass are shown to be wanton, malicious, or oppressive and of such a character as to indicate a reckless disregard of the rights of the plaintiff, the jury in its discretion may award a reasonable amount as punitive damages in addition to compensatory damages. Mosback v. Smith Bros. Sheep Co., 65 M 42, 210 P 910 (1922). (See 1987 amendment.)

Malicious Prosecution: It is within the province of the jury to allow exemplary as well as compensatory damages in an action for malicious prosecution, and unless its determination appears to have been influenced by passion, prejudice, or some other improper motive or the amount is outrageously disproportionate to the wrong done or the situation or circumstances of the parties, the award will not generally be disturbed. Cornner v. Hamilton, 62 M 239, 204 P 489 (1922).

Alienation of Affections: Punitive damages may be awarded in an action for the alienation of a husband's affections, even though the evidence furnishes no basis for a finding of malice, since malice may be implied from the conduct of defendant in causing the wrong complained of, its existence being a question for the jury. Moelleur v. Moelleur, 55 M 30, 173 P 419 (1918). (See 1987 amendment.)

Punitive Damages Allowed — Railroad Employee's Willful Failure to Stop: In an action against a railway company to recover damages for failure to stop its train at a station where it was scheduled to stop when flagged, punitive, in addition to compensatory, damages may be awarded if it is shown that the engineer saw the signal but willfully refused to stop for the purpose of receiving plaintiff as a passenger. Burles v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 49 M 129, 140 P 513 (1914). See Jones v. Shannon, 55 M 225, 175 P 882 (1918). (See 1987 amendment.)

Telegraph Operator — Fraud — Punitive Damages Allowed: Where the element of fraud entered into the wrongdoing of a telegraph operator in withholding messages to and from a customer of his company, thus enabling him to profit by it, the provisions of this section, awarding the right to punitive damages, governed and 69-11-303 (now repealed) did not. Lahood v. Cont. Tel. Co., 52 M 313, 157 P 639 (1916).

Taking or Detaining Property: Where evidence was insufficient to justify an inference of malice, fraud, or oppression in either taking or detaining property in controversy, in an action in conversion, imposition of punitive damages, otherwise recoverable under this section, was unwarranted. De Celles v. Casey, 48 M 568, 139 P 586 (1914).

DAMAGES

Punitive Damages Recoverable for Tort Claims Even if Contract Relationship Exists — Substantial Evidence of Actual Fraud — Punitive Damages Cap Correctly Applied to Each Defendant Individually — District Court Decision Upheld. Romo v. Shirley, 2022 MT 249, 411 Mont. 111, 522 P.3d 401.

Attorney Fees Not Recoverable in Prosecuting Claims Against Union: The plaintiff was a nonprobationary police officer whose employment was terminated after the plaintiff advocated for the Whitefish Police Protective Association (WPPA) to affiliate with the defendant, the Montana Public Employees' Association (MPEA). At termination, the defendant was the exclusive bargaining agent for the WPPA under the collective bargaining agreement and Title 39, ch. 31. WPPA's in-house counsel was exclusively responsible for handling the officer's grievance on behalf of the defendant; however, in-house counsel took no action on the officer's behalf, prompting the officer to retain separate counsel. The plaintiff filed a complaint in District Court asserting a wrongful discharge claim against the city and a duty of fair representation (DFR) claim and common law fraud claims against the defendant. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to the plaintiff as an element of compensatory damages on the plaintiff's DFR claim and for awarding punitive damages without an award of compensatory damages. The Supreme Court affirmed its holding in Petaja v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2016 MT 143, 383 Mont. 516, 373 P.3d 40, by concluding that the American Rule does not provide for recovery of attorney fees accrued by an employee in the prosecution of a DFR claim against a union; however, the court distinguished Petaja by holding that the American Rule does not bar an employee from recovering attorney fees in the prosecution of a DFR claim against an employer. Because the Supreme Court reversed the plaintiff's award of punitive damages, the court declined to resolve the issue of whether punitive damages are recoverable against a union under a Montana DFR claim. Folsom v. Mont. Pub. Employees Ass'n, 2017 MT 204, 388 Mont. 307, 400 P.3d 706.

Punitive Damages Correctly Awarded Against Successor Corporation — False Affidavits — Failure to Supplement Discovery: The plaintiff financed a home through the defendant bank's predecessor. The plaintiff requested a 30-year residential loan and was told by the predecessor bank that she received this loan. However, the predecessor bank issued an 18-month commercial loan and did not inform the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued alleging fraud. A jury eventually awarded $1 million in compensatory damages and $5 million in punitive damages against the successor bank. On appeal, the defendant argued that it can't be liable for punitive damages as a successor corporation and that the punitive damages award was grossly excessive. The Supreme Court held that the federal Bank Merger Act and 35-1-817 (now repealed) required the bank to be liable for punitive damages and that the award was not excessive in light of U.S. Supreme Court decisions. McCulley v. U.S. Bank of Montana, 2015 MT 100, 378 Mont. 462, 347 P.3d 247.

Denial of Discovery of Financial Records Pending Judgment Regarding Punitive Damages: The District Court denied plaintiff's request for discovery of defendant's financial records. The records were provided to the court under seal but were not provided to plaintiff. The Supreme Court reversed the case because the District Court had improperly decided issues of material fact on motion for summary judgment and held that if plaintiff's claims for punitive damages survived on remand, the financial records should be opened to plaintiff for discovery for purposes of determining damages. Corporate Air v. Edwards Jet Center, Mont., Inc., 2008 MT 283, 345 M 336, 190 P.3d 1111 (2008). See also Baker v. CNA Ins. Co., 123 F.R.D. 322 (D. Mont. 1988).

Determination of Punitive Damage Award — Improper Exclusion of Evidence Tending to Indicate Defendant's Action: The trial court held defendant strictly liable for damages related to environmental damage caused by defendant's refinery but refused to allow defendant to introduce evidence at trial of state involvement with site remediation or of defendant's attempts to comply with state law or to instruct the jury at the hearing on punitive damages to consider whether defendant's actions comported with state regulations or had been approved by the state regulator. The Supreme Court held that a trial court may not categorically exclude evidence tending to show why a defendant acted as it did, or failed to act, when a jury considers whether to award punitive damages. The punitive damage award was vacated and the case remanded in order to allow a new jury to consider evidence of the state's role for purposes of determining whether defendant acted with actual fraud or malice and to allow defendant to explain any remedial measures taken in response to the discovery of misconduct as a means to mitigate punitive damages. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P.3d 1079 (2007). See also Two Leggins v. Gatrell, 2023 MT 160, 413 Mont. 172, 534 P.3d 668, holding that evidence of racial motivation is admissible when considered for the exclusive purpose of determining a punitive damages award.

When Punitive Damages Considered Grossly Excessive: States possess broad discretion regarding the imposition of punitive damages; however, the federal due process clause prohibits the imposition of grossly excessive or arbitrary punishments on a tortfeasor (see St. Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 538 US 408 (2003)). When a punitive damage award can be categorized as grossly excessive in relation to a state's interests in punishment and deterrence, it enters the zone of arbitrariness that violates the federal due process clause, furthers no legitimate purpose, and constitutes an arbitrary deprivation of property. Although the exact meaning of "grossly excessive" is imprecise, the Supreme Court applied the guideposts outlined in BMW of N. America, Inc. v. Gore, 517 US 559 (1996): (1) the degree of reprehensibility of defendant's misconduct; (2) the disparity or ratio between the actual or potential harm suffered by plaintiff and the punitive damage award; and (3) the difference between the punitive damages awarded by the jury and civil penalties authorized or imposed in comparable cases. Under Montana law, punitive damages may be awarded only when a defendant has been found guilty of actual fraud or actual malice. In this case, the Supreme Court affirmed a punitive damages award after finding that the defendant legal firm used the judicial system as a tool to intimidate and oppress plaintiff in a manner that was uniquely egregious. Defendants' actions amounted to legal thuggery that was repugnant to Montana's foundational notions of justice and was highly reprehensible, and a particularly high sanction comported with due process. The court concluded that under the Gore guideposts, a punitive award of $9.9 million was warranted and that the District Court did not err in applying federal due process law to the jury's punitive damages verdict. Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007). See also Pac. Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Haslip, 553 S2d 537 (Ala. 1989).

Reversible Error for Lower Court to Substitute Its Judgment for Jury's in Determining Credibility of Witnesses and Evidence: The jury found for the plaintiff, Deonier, in a breach of fiduciary duty case against the insurer for which Deonier was a selling agent and awarded Deonier $1 million in punitive damages in addition to compensatory damages. The District Court, after making extensive findings of fact, reduced the award to $375,000. The Supreme Court reinstated the jury award, stating that it was implicit in the size of the award that the jury found the insurer's witnesses and evidence less credible than the plaintiffs and that it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court to substitute its judgment for the jury's. Deonier & Associates v. Paul Revere Life Ins. Co., 2004 MT 297, 323 M 387, 101 P3d 742 (2004).

Breach of Fiduciary Duty in Conversion of Corporate Property Without Requisite Notice and Shareholder Approval — Punitive Damages Unavailable Absent Showing of Actual Malice or Fraud: Phil was two-thirds majority shareholder in Trifad Entertainment, Inc. (Trifad), and Brad was one-third minority shareholder and Trifad director. Following Phil's extradition to Florida on racketeering charges, Brad secured a loan for $15,000, deposited the money in the Trifad account, and then sold virtually all of Trifad's assets to himself for $15,000. In addition, Brad wrote checks on Trifad's account for taxes owed and for estimated tax payments and withdrew one-third of the remaining balance and left two-thirds in the account, all without attempting to contact Phil. Phil later sued Brad for breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and conversion and requested punitive damages, contending that Brad's actions were performed with actual malice and constituted actual fraud. At trial, Brad contended that the actions were reasonable considering Phil was in jail facing criminal charges, and Brad cross-claimed for indemnification from Trifad for litigation expenses and liabilities incurred in his capacity as Trifad director. The District Court found for Brad on all counts, but denied corporate indemnification. Both Phil and Brad appealed. The Supreme Court reversed, finding that Brad failed to comply with 35-1-823 (now repealed) by selling corporate property without the requisite notice and shareholder approval. Although contacting Phil would have been difficult, it was not impossible. However, even if Phil had been unavailable for consultation, 35-1-823 (now repealed) does not contain any exceptions to the notice and approval requirements governing the sale of corporate assets. Further, the sale constituted conversion because Brad exercised unauthorized dominion over Trifad property by transferring ownership to himself. The case was remanded for a determination of damages, including possible damages other than those provided in 27-1-320 if peculiar circumstances warranted compensation for future lost income and profits. The District Court erred in concluding that Brad did not breach his fiduciary duties to Trifad; however, absent proof of actual malice or actual fraud, punitive damages were not warranted. Because a breach of fiduciary duty occurred, Brad could not claim to be wholly successful in the action, so Brad's claim for corporate indemnification also failed under 35-1-453 (now repealed). Trifad Entertainment, Inc. v. Anderson, 2001 MT 227, 306 M 499, 36 P3d 363 (2001).

No Error in Failure of Trial Court to Detail From Bench Its Analysis of Statutory Factors Regarding Award of Punitive Damages: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. The jury held Payless liable and awarded Onstad $500,000 in compensatory damages, plus an additional $1 million in punitive damages. On appeal, Payless contended that the trial court erred in approving punitive damages, asserting that Onstad did not prove actual malice, thereby failing to establish a necessary foundation for punitive damages, and that the court failed to adequately review the support for the award by enumerating from the bench its consideration of the statutory factors for approving punitive damages. The Supreme Court affirmed. The jury was instructed on malice and specifically found that Payless's conduct amounted to malice, a conclusion that was supported by the evidence. Further, it was immaterial that the trial court did not detail from the bench its analysis of each of the statutory factors as to the award of punitive damages. It was sufficient that the court made individual findings on each of the statutory factors in its subsequent written findings. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

Damages Proper for Emotional Distress Based on Sale of Real Estate — Punitive Damages Appropriate: The Maloneys were promised an option to purchase property adjacent to their own, hoping to build their retirement home near Glacier Park. The real estate agent who listed the property was aware of the Maloneys' option but sold to another instead. That person then developed the property, building a 3,000-square-foot home on the very site that the Maloneys had desired and within sight of the Maloneys' residence, and then listed the newly developed property for almost six times what the Maloneys could have paid had the option been properly offered. A special master concluded, and the District Court agreed, that the Maloneys had suffered and were entitled to compensation for the shock, worry, anger, disappointment, and frustration that they had suffered and would continue to suffer in light of the inherent duration of the Maloneys' adjacent ownership. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under French v. Ralph E. Moore, Inc., 203 M 327, 661 P2d 844, 40 St. Rep. 481 (1983), emotional distress damages may result from negligent or intentional damage to property arising from interference with the use and enjoyment of land and that under Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982), compensatory damages could include compensation for humiliation, embarrassment, distress, and ridicule associated with interference with plaintiffs' use of their private property. The private property interest at issue here sufficiently involved the use and enjoyment of land to fall within these holdings. Further, the award of punitive damages was also affirmed in this instance despite defendant's claims of the special master's improper estimation of net worth, a syntax error, and the special master's improper recognition of punitive damages assessed against defendant in a prior case. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), followed in Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169, affirming that a nuisance claim demonstrating an interference with the enjoyment of property may support an award of parasitic emotional distress damages. See also Recovery for Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress Attendant to Economic Loss: A Reassessment, Sandor & Berry, 37 Ariz. L. Rev. 1247 (1995).

Adequacy of Compensatory and Punitive Damages Upheld — Motion for Directed Verdict Properly Denied: In a civil action for damages against Huggins and the Carpet Barn, stemming from criminal acts damaging plaintiffs David and Susan Black's automobiles, the Blacks' wholly owned corporation was awarded $35,000 in compensatory damages and $51 in punitive damages. The Blacks contended that the award was insufficient because it failed to award damages for emotional distress and property damages and awarded only $51 in punitive damages. The District Court denied Blacks' motion for a directed verdict. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly denied the motion because there was conflicting evidence as to the cause of Blacks' emotional distress and because the record showed that Susan Black had been reimbursed through criminal restitution and that amount was not deducted from the award to the Blacks' corporation. Concerning the amount of punitive damages awarded, the Supreme Court cited Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217 (1986), and Dees v. Am. Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., 260 M 431, 861 P2d 141 (1993), and held that the District Court properly instructed the jury, reviewed the award in accordance with this section, and left the award intact. The Supreme Court therefore held that the District Court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion. Rocky Mtn. Enterprises, Inc. v. Pierce Flooring, 286 M 282, 951 P2d 1326, 54 St. Rep. 1410 (1997).

Burden on Defendant to Show That Financial Condition Does Not Warrant Punitive Damages: This section requires that following a verdict of punitive damages against a defendant, a separate proceeding must be held to determine the amount and that a defendant's financial condition must be considered. The defendant is required to show that the defendant's financial condition does not support an award. The plaintiff need not show that the defendant's financial condition supports an award. Therefore, the District Court's failure to completely set aside defendant's punitive damages was not error when defendant offered no evidence of his financial condition. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

Insurance Fraud Punitive Damages of $6,127,845 Against Company and $30,000 Against Agent Justified: Based on its following findings, the District Court properly allowed punitive damages against a fraudulent insurance agent and his company and improperly reduced those amounts from $30,000 to $18,000 for the agent and from $6,127,845 to $4 million for the company: (1) the agent deliberately deceived the plaintiff insureds and his other clients to gain added commissions, thereby reducing the value of the policies or resulting in their cancellation; (2) the agent's training supervisor engaged in highly questionable practices and was essentially unsupervised himself; (3) the company had notice of the defendant agent's fraud, but complaints to the company by other agents about the defendant agent were ignored; (4) the company's policy was to urge customers to trust and rely on agents and to portray the company as a caring, paternal company but was also to protect its own interests, not the insureds', with regard to complaints; (5) both the agent and the company profited from the fraud; (6) the actual damages, $358,591, were substantial, it was doubtful that the agent could pay much of them, and it was also doubtful that they were large enough to impress the company of the extent of its wrongdoing; (7) the company's net worth was $1,832,462,923, and the punitive damages against it might make it examine its actions, but not make it insolvent; (8) criminal prosecution of the company was not viable; and (9) the jury was conservative, well informed by the evidence, and did not act from passion or prejudice. Cartwright v. Equitable Life Assurance Soc'y, 276 M 1, 914 P2d 976, 53 St. Rep. 268 (1996).

New Trial Based on Excessive Punitive Damages — Abuse of Discretion Warranting Reversal: The District Court vacated a jury award of $1 million in punitive damages against an employer and $75,000 against an employee, concluding that the awards were excessive. The Supreme Court reversed, noting that the award against the employer was not excessive when compared with the employer's overall financial condition and that the employee's financial condition was improperly valued. The employee failed to produce evidence that his net worth could not support the punitive damage award, so vacation of the jury award was a manifest abuse of discretion warranting reversal. Maurer v. Clausen Distrib. Co., 275 M 229, 912 P2d 195, 53 St. Rep. 78 (1996), distinguished in Anderson v. Werner Enterprises, Inc., 1998 MT 333, 292 M 284, 972 P2d 806, 55 St. Rep. 1350 (1998).

Reversal of Jury Findings Regarding Liability Not Allowed Upon Court Review of Punitive Damage Award: A jury, by special verdict, found that defendants had no reasonable basis in law or fact for contesting plaintiffs' claim for crop damages and awarded plaintiffs punitive damages. Upon review of the damage award, the District Court concluded that defendants had a reasonable basis upon which to deny the claim and modified the damage award. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because plaintiffs invoked their right to a jury trial, allowing the court to reverse issues of underlying liability previously submitted to and decided by the jury would interfere with the jury as trier of fact deciding the issues. Court review pursuant to subsection (7)(c) of this section must be conducted without contradicting findings of fact made by the jury, and failure to do so constitutes reversible error. Debruycker v. Guar. Nat'l Ins. Co., 266 M 294, 880 P2d 819, 51 St. Rep. 835 (1994).

Tort of Bad Faith — Not Available for Most Contract Actions — Breach: In a contract action, the Supreme Court ruled that a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing constituted a breach of the contract and that only contract damages would be available to the prevailing party. The court stated that tort-type damages would not be available for a breach of the covenant. The court also held that the tort of bad faith would apply only in exceptional circumstances to discourage oppression in contracts that necessarily give one party a superior position. Every contract, regardless of the type, contains an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. A breach of the covenant is a breach of the contract. Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767, 47 St. Rep. 850 (1990), followed in Keller v. Dooling, 248 M 535, 813 P2d 437, 48 St. Rep. 554 (1991), Haines Pipeline Constr., Inc. v. Mont. Power Co., 251 M 422, 830 P2d 1230, 48 St. Rep. 1102 (1991), and Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725, 55 St. Rep. 541 (1998).

Improper Exercise of Setoff — Punitive Damages Granted: A bank exercised a setoff, leaving a company with no operating cash or line of credit. As a result of the bank's action, the company could not meet payroll, lost all its employees, was sued many times, had its corporate goodwill destroyed, and had to enter into joint venture agreements with general contractors in order to stay in business. Absent any complaint of improper jury instruction, an award of $50,000 in punitive damages for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and $50,000 for negligent misrepresentation was affirmed. Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989).

Jury Finding of Fraud and Breach of Good Faith and Fair Dealing in Contract Action — Punitive Damages Warranted: Defendant contended a tort recovery was incorrectly allowed in a breach of contract action because the case dealt with an ordinary commercial setting in which two parties negotiated with relatively equal bargaining power and without any special relationship that would generate an exceptional duty. The Supreme Court noted that the jury found not only a breach of contract and good faith but also actions constituting fraud. The court held that when both fraud and a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing are found, the plaintiff is free to pursue punitive damages. Webcor Electronics, Inc. v. Home Electronics, Inc., 231 M 377, 754 P2d 491, 45 St. Rep. 695 (1988).

Misrepresentation of Business Profits — Compensatory and Punitive Damage Awards Affirmed: Despite contentions that damage awards were too low in a case in which business profits were misrepresented to the detriment of buyers, the Supreme Court affirmed as adequate an award of $62,238 in compensatory damages to cover annual losses of $31,338 and reasonable wage losses of $30,900 and an award of $10,000 punitive damages to deter future similar behavior. Selvidge v. McBeen, 230 M 237, 750 P2d 429, 45 St. Rep. 168 (1988).

Award of Grossly Excessive and Disproportionate Damages — Based on Passion or Prejudice: A jury award of $5 million in punitive damages, which was found to be 20,000% above the award for economic damage caused insured and 5,000% more than the maximum of the insurance policy, was held to be so grossly excessive and disproportionate to the injury as to shock one's conscience. Noting that appellate courts in most jurisdictions, including Montana, ordinarily defer to the discretion of the factfinder when reviewing punitive damage awards, the court found that as a matter of law this award must have been determined by passion or prejudice. On remittitur, the judgment was modified to an award of $1 million total. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986). In a strong dissent, Mr. Justice Morrison noted no reversible error on any liability question and pointed out that up to this time "there is little, if any, precedent supporting the Montana Supreme Court substituting its judgment for that of the jury. Unfortunately that strong support for the jury system has now been dynamited. The majority announces loud and clear that from this day forward, four justices, robed in judicial omniscience, will replace our jury." Mr. Justice Sheehy, also dissenting, said that the "deleterious effect of the opinion in this case is its announcement that the right of a jury to set damages is hereafter subject to the consent of the majority of this Court".

Award of Punitive Damages by Trier of Fact: Appellant argued that under this section only a jury may award punitive damages. The Supreme Court, noting its decision in Miller v. Fox, 174 M 504, 571 P2d 804 (1977), construed the statute to mean that a District Court sitting as a trier of fact may award punitive damages. Shors v. Branch, 221 M 390, 720 P2d 239, 43 St. Rep. 919 (1986).

Requirement of Actual Damage Before Punitive or Exemplary Damages Recoverable:

Without a finding of actual damages, whether or not determined in amount, exemplary damages are not proper. Doll v. Major Muffler Centers, Inc., 208 M 401, 687 P2d 48, 41 St. Rep. 429 (1984).

Plaintiff's son purchased life insurance, including an accidental death rider, from defendant. The son was found dead in a Bozeman motel room. The death was determined to be an overdose of chloroform through inhalation. The policy rider excluded payment on death due to suicide or drug overdose. On June 11, 1980, defendant sent plaintiff a check for the basic policy amount with a restrictive endorsement on the back. Plaintiff contested the denial of accidental death benefits. On August 20, plaintiff returned the tendered check, and on September 5, 1980, filed suit against defendant seeking actual and punitive damages. On September 9, 1980, defendant mailed the same check without the restrictive endorsement. A jury found that the plaintiff was not entitled to the accidental death benefits but awarded $30,000 in punitive damages. Defendant appealed. In order to award punitive damages there would have had to be a violation of the insurance laws for which a penalty is prescribed and actual damages. The court found that a restrictive endorsement as a general business practice in contested settlements was an unfair claim settlement practice. The actual damages were lost interest earnings and out-of-pocket expenses for legal counsel. Actual damages need only be nominal in order to award punitive damages. Harris v. Am. Gen. Life Ins. Co., 202 M 393, 658 P2d 1089, 40 St. Rep. 164 (1983).

This section does not require actual damages to flow from the commission of the tort before punitive damages can be assessed. If a basis for actual damages exists in the record, the fact that none are awarded does not prevent the assessment of punitive damages. Where the trial court found that insurers breached their contract with insured and also that they acted in bad faith and it awarded actual damages for the breach of contract, the court could have as easily held that the damages flowed from the bad faith actions of insurers. Punitive damages were properly awarded insured based on the insurers' bad faith. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982).

Where the owner of a car, arriving on the scene of an accident involving his car driven by another with his permission, intentionally tampered with physical evidence at the scene and was thereafter found liable for punitive damages by a state court, but neither he nor the driver were liable for actual damages, under the policy in question the insurance company was not liable for either the punitive damages or attorney's fees. Lee v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 39 St. Rep. 1761 (D.C. Mont. 1982) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

When one count of a predominantly contract action was based on an intentional tort of false representation of a refund of the purchase price if plaintiff would return the defective merchandise and judgment denied plaintiff's claim of actual damages, an award of punitive damages was beyond the power and authority of the trial court. Purington v. Sound W., 173 M 106, 566 P2d 795 (1977).

Where actual damages appear from the evidence, an award of punitive or exemplary damages will stand, though the verdict of the jury shows no finding of actual damages. Brown v. Grenz, 127 M 49, 257 P2d 246 (1953).

When the jury was instructed by the court that it could allow exemplary damages if "you find by a preponderance of the evidence that plaintiff suffered actual damages", and the jury returned a verdict of actual damages "none" and exemplary damages "$250", the presumption is that the jury found actual damages. The fact that they did not assess a money award for the actual damages is not controlling, for there are various reasons why it did not assess a money award; an obvious one is the existence of a counterclaim by the defendant. Welsh v. Roehm, 125 M 517, 241 P2d 816 (1952).

In action for malicious prosecution where jury found malice, verdict was valid where it gave exemplary damages but entered "none" in the space on the verdict for actual damages. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420, 17 ALR 2d 518 (1949).

Where actual damage is shown although the extent of the damage cannot be shown in money value, exemplary damages may be awarded. Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420, 17 ALR 2d 518 (1949), overruling Gilham v. Devereaux, 67 M 75, 214 P 606, 33 ALR 381 (1923); Bowman v. Lewis, 110 M 435, 102 P2d 1 (1940); Truzzolino Food Prod. Co. v. F. W. Woolworth Co., 108 M 408, 91 P2d 415 (1939).

Before exemplary damages may be awarded, actual damages must first be found to have been suffered. Gilham v. Devereaux, 67 M 75, 214 P 606, 33 ALR 381 (1923), overruled on another point in Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

In a husband's action for damages for alienation of affections, where the jury expressly found that plaintiff had not suffered any actual damages, an award of $2,000 exemplary damages was unwarranted. Gilham v. Devereaux, 67 M 75, 214 P 606, 33 ALR 381 (1923), distinguished in Long v. Davis, 68 M 85, 217 P 667 (1923), overruled on another point in Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Damages Granted for Suing Wrong Person — Punitive Damages Not Reduced by Contributory Negligence: The defendant sued the plaintiff in connection with an automobile accident. The plaintiff informed the defendant that he was the wrong person to sue in that action. The plaintiff refused to defend the action and the defendant obtained a default judgment. As a result of the default plaintiff lost his driver's license. Plaintiff then brought this action. The court found that there was sufficient evidence for the jury to determine that defendant acted recklessly and should pay punitive damages. Punitive damages cannot be reduced by the percentage of plaintiff's contributory negligence. Shahrokhfar v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 194 M 76, 634 P2d 653, 38 St. Rep. 1669 (1981). (See 1987 amendment.)

Determination of Damages — Requisite Support: When a hospital interferes with its employee's statutory right under 50-5-503 to refuse to participate in a sterilization operation, its violation of 50-5-504 may entitle the employee to damages to be determined by a compensation theory, including reasonably certain future damages and possibly exemplary damages. Plaintiff, however, introduced no evidence supporting claims for exemplary damages. Finding no evidence to support the claim and noting that there was no particular difficulty in producing such evidence, the Supreme Court held that neither the likelihood of such improper behavior or injury nor the difficulty of proving damages is so great as to justify awarding damages without proof that such improper behavior took place. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 189 M 259, 615 P2d 883, 37 St. Rep. 1420 (1980).

When Punitive Damages Allowable: Plaintiff contended that the District Court erred in determining that defendants were not liable for punitive damages. The jury returned a verdict of no liability for actual damages on the part of the State and Burlington Northern. Such a verdict precludes an award of punitive damages. Penn v. Burlington N., Inc., 185 M 223, 605 P2d 600 (1980).

Apportionment Between Joint Tortfeasors: The jury may properly apportion exemplary damages among joint tortfeasors in a conversion action, but before a finding of such damages may be made, actual damages must have been assessed, and where exemplary damages only were assessed against one of the defendants, reversal of the judgment carries with it the award of costs against such defendants. Bowman v. Lewis, 110 M 435, 102 P2d 1 (1940), overruled on another point in Fauver v. Wilkoske, 123 M 228, 211 P2d 420 (1949).

Assault and Battery — Malice — Test for Damages: In an assault case where malice is alleged, it is not the quantum of force used but whether the assailant was in a malicious state of mind which is the test in awarding exemplary damages; the use of a dangerous weapon (a hammer) is some evidence of a wanton disregard of human life and generally gives rise to such damages; the question of malice is generally one for the jury. Vaughn v. Mesch, 107 M 498, 87 P2d 177, 123 ALR 1106 (1939).

JURY QUESTION AND INSTRUCTION

Damages Under Breach of Contract Claims Considered Compensatory Damages Under Unfair Trade Practices Act for Pursuit of Punitive Damages: In an insurance dispute in which plaintiffs sued the defendant insurer to contest the denial of untimely filed claims, the District Court erred in instructing the jury that it must first find Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA) damages beyond the breach of insurance contract damages in order to consider malice and punitive damages under the UTPA. When an insurer is found to have violated the UTPA, damages due to the breach of insurance contract may constitute compensatory UTPA damages sufficient to present the question of malice and punitive damages to the jury. Estate of Gleason v. Cent. United Life Ins. Co., 2015 MT 140, 379 Mont. 219, 350 P.3d 349.

Failure to State Claims for Fraudulent and Negligent Misrepresentation — Intent to Injure and Requirements of Former Rules 8(a) and 9(b) — Confusion of Law by District Court: In a case in which two banks brought an action against an accounting firm for damages caused by an unqualified audit statement, the Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly granted the accounting firm's motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim. Citing Fraunhofer v. Price, 182 Mont. 7, 594 P.2d 324 (1979), the Supreme Court held that the requirements to particularly plead fraud must be balanced with the provisions of former Rule 8(a) M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded). The Supreme Court held that the District Court incorrectly applied a heavier burden of pleading an "intent to injure" than was justified under 27-1-221 because the language in that section could be interpreted to apply to a claim for punitive damages. The Supreme Court also found that the District Court's dismissal of the negligent misrepresentation claim occurred because the District Court confused it with a claim for professional negligence and that that confusion resulted from an incorrect jury instruction confusing "near privity" under Thayer v. Hicks, 243 Mont. 138, 793 P.2d 784 (1990), with the standard for duty of care in third-party negligent misrepresentation cases under Restatement (Second) of Torts 552. The Supreme Court therefore remanded the case for a new trial with the correct jury instructions. W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

Evidence of Product Test Results Not Relevant to Compensatory Damages but Relevant to Punitive Damages: Plaintiffs sued the manufacturer of a child car seat for strict product liability after their 4-month-old child suffered fatal brain injuries in a vehicle rollover. Plaintiffs contended that the seat contained a design defect that caused the child's death. At trial, the District Court disallowed evidence of tests conducted pursuant to federal standards as the tests applied to the question of both compensatory and punitive damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court agreed that because the case presented a strict product liability issue emphasizing maximum protection for the consumer and placing risk of loss on the manufacturer, evidence of the tests was not relevant to the question of compensatory damages, in that strict liability law rejects concepts such as reasonableness and foreseeability that are fundamental to negligence law. However, test compliance evidence was relevant to the issue of punitive damages. Defendant may or may not have been able to convince the jury that its compliance with the tests showed that defendant had not evinced deliberate indifference to the welfare of users of the car seat, but the District Court erred in preempting the debate by not allowing defendant to explain itself. The Supreme Court remanded for purposes of reconsidering the appropriateness of punitive damages after defendant was allowed to present evidence of the car seat's test compliance. Malcolm v. Evenflo Co., Inc., 2009 MT 285, 352 M 325, 217 P3d 514 (2009). See also Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007), and Two Leggins v. Gatrell, 2023 MT 160, 413 Mont. 172, 534 P.3d 668, holding that evidence of racial motivation is admissible when considered for the exclusive purpose of determining a punitive damages award.

Consideration of Defendant's Financial Condition Proper in Determining Amount of Punitive Damages: Defendants contended that allowing consideration of a defendant's financial condition, as allowed by subsection (7)(a) of this section, conflicted with the decision in St. Farm Mut. Auto Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 538 US 408 (2003). The Supreme Court disagreed. Nothing in Campbell invalidates subsection (7)(a) of this section. Although evidence of a defendant's financial condition may not be considered when determining whether to award punitive damages, Campbell does not hold that juries are not allowed to consider a defendant's financial condition as a factor in determining an appropriate amount of punitive damages. The purpose of a punitive damage verdict is to have an impact on the defendant in the form of punishment and deterrence, and without knowledge of the defendant's financial condition, a jury cannot know what impact any particular damage award will have. Seltzer v. Morton, 2007 MT 62, 336 M 225, 154 P3d 561 (2007).

No Error in Instructing Jury as to Where Punitive Damage Payment Goes: Plaintiff alleged that the District Court abused its discretion by refusing to give an instruction stating that the jury was not to consider where punitive damage payments would go, contending that the instruction was necessary because jury consideration of any effect of a punitive damage award, including the beneficiary of the award, improperly distracts the jury from the purpose of a punitive damage award, which is to punish the wrongdoer and set an example, and results in an improper reduction in the amount awarded. Instead, the court gave a pattern instruction setting forth the statutory criteria for determining the amount of a punitive damages award and made no mention of the recipient of the award. The Supreme Court affirmed. The law does not preclude juries from considering where a punitive damage award will go when determining the amount of the award. Finstad v. W.R. Grace & Co., 2000 MT 228, 301 M 240, 8 P3d 778, 57 St. Rep. 934 (2000).

Award of Punitive Damages Not Automatic on Finding of Fraud — New Trial Not Required — Standard of Review: In a case in which the jury found that the defendants had engaged in fraudulent conduct and did not award punitive damages, the trial court did not err in denying a new trial when the evidence that would have supported an award of punitive damages was contradicted and the jury's decision to not award punitive damages was supported by substantial evidence. All elements of a claim for punitive damages must be proved by clear and convincing evidence. An appellate court will review a jury's verdict to award or not to award punitive damages under the substantial evidence rule. It is in the province of a jury to find that there is sufficient evidence of proof of fraud, yet not the quantum of evidence necessary to support an award of punitive damages. Sandman v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 1998 MT 286, 291 M 456, 969 P2d 277, 55 St. Rep. 1165 (1998).

Instruction on Vicarious Liability Not in Error When Damages Assessed for Actual Conduct: The District Court instructed the jury on Clausen's vicarious liability. The jury returned a verdict assessing punitive damages against Clausen based on its own conduct rather than because of Clausen's potential vicarious liability. Clausen's argument that the instruction was not appropriate was moot because Clausen was held liable for its own actions rather than those of another; therefore, the instruction was not prejudicial. Maurer v. Clausen Distrib. Co., 275 M 229, 912 P2d 195, 53 St. Rep. 78 (1996).

Refusal to Give Instructions Proper When Unsupported by Evidence: Appellants contended the District Court erred in refusing to give proffered instructions regarding punitive damages incurred through a power company's alleged violations of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968. Although limited evidence was presented regarding each claimed violation, for none of the alleged infractions was evidence sufficient to support a determination that the Act was violated. As set out in Mydlarz v. Palmer/Duncan Constr. Co., 209 M 325, 682 P2d 695 (1984), instructions not supported by the evidence need not be given. Day v. Mont. Power Co., 242 M 195, 789 P2d 1224, 47 St. Rep. 626 (1990).

Instructions Not Requiring Jury Finding of Wrongful Act: Jury instructions explained compensation for actual and punitive damages if the jury found liability for wrongful attachment. Defendants argued that after receiving the instructions, all that remained for the jury was to determine whether property was intentionally attached. However, the jury was not required to find that defendants acted wrongfully or with malice and therefore was not required to award punitive damages. Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

Franchisor's Right to Determine Franchise Location — Duty to Reasonably Consider Relocation: Appellant franchisor had the sole contractual right to determine location of the franchise; however, the law imposed a duty to reasonably consider facts regarding relocation. The Supreme Court found evidence that vital information was withheld from respondents and from the vice president in charge of authorizing relocation which, if believed, would provide a basis for finding appellant acted unreasonably, thereby breaching its duty to exercise good faith. The evidence was sufficient to warrant submission to the jury on the question of good faith. Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, Inc., 221 M 447, 720 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 964 (1986).

Inadequate Jury Instruction — Implied Covenant of Good Faith: The District Court instructed the jury on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, stating that good faith means honesty in fact in the conduct or transaction concerned and then equating the implied covenant to an obligation imposed by law on defendants to do nothing to deprive plaintiffs of the benefits of their commercial transaction. On appeal, defendants argued that the implied covenant had no application in a case involving an arms-length contract. The Supreme Court, relying on its decision in Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985), held that a breach of the implied covenant which results in damages can give rise to an action in tort, but that in order to recover additional punitive damages, plaintiffs must prove that defendants' actions in breaching the implied covenant met the requirements of 27-1-221. The tort of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires more than a lack of honesty in fact. The instruction given to the jury on this issue inadequately defined the tort. McGregor v. Cushman/Mommer, 220 M 98, 714 P2d 536, 43 St. Rep. 206 (1986), followed in Noonan v. First Bank Butte, 227 M 329, 740 P2d 631, 44 St. Rep. 1124 (1987), and in Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989). See also Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, Inc., 221 M 447, 720 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 964 (1986).

Auto Accident — Intoxicated Driver on Icy Road: The jury was properly instructed on punitive damages in action arising from defendant's collision with plaintiff's auto, which was proceeding in the same direction as and in front of defendant's truck on an icy road. Defendant, according to three persons who observed him after the collision, was grossly intoxicated, and a test of his blood alcohol content found it to be .20%. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

Punitive Damages — Scope of Review: Plaintiffs sued defendant for damages claimed to have occurred to their farmlands when a seismograph hole drilled and shot by defendant brought a continuous water flow to the surface, damaging farmland. Defendant left the area and later tried unsuccessfully to plug the hole. A questionable permission to do the drilling was given by the plaintiffs, and explicit directions were given not to drill where the water commenced to flow. The District Court denied motions to remove the issue of punitive damages from the jury. The Supreme Court held that the issue was properly submitted to the jury and that the jury's determination would stand, since the Supreme Court had no basis in law upon which to set it aside. Dahl v. Petroleum Geophysical Co., 194 M 294, 632 P2d 1136, 38 St. Rep. 1474 (1981).

Failure of Jury to Fix Monetary Value on Actual Damages Not to Preclude Exemplary Damages: The failure of a jury to fix a monetary value as plaintiff's damages does not of necessity indicate an absence of actual damages so as to preclude an award of exemplary damages. Although the precise extent of damages attributable to the destruction of physical evidence by defendant may be elusive, an identifiable basis for actual damages exists which arises from the deprivation to plaintiff of tests and results necessary to prove his case. Lauman v. Lee, 192 M 84, 626 P2d 830, 38 St. Rep. 499 (1981).

Fraud in Purchase: The jury was clearly within its province in awarding punitive damages where there was substantial evidence of fraud on the part of real estate agent's use of multiple corporate identities in purchase of motel. Flemmer v. Ming, 190 M 403, 621 P2d 1038, 37 St. Rep. 1916 (1980).

Malicious Acts — Reckless Disregard: When the acts complained of are shown to be malicious, wanton, or oppressive and of such character as to indicate a reckless disregard for the rights of the plaintiff, the jury, in its discretion, may award a reasonable amount as punitive damages, in addition to compensatory damages. Butcher v. Petranek, 181 M 358, 593 P2d 743 (1979). (See 1987 amendment.)

Punitive Damage Instruction Denied: The lower court correctly refused plaintiffs' instruction regarding punitive damages, since there was no evidence of actual or implied malice on the part of defendants. Ferguson v. Town Pump, 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978). See also Gee v. Egbert, 209 M 1, 679 P2d 1194, 41 St. Rep. 515 (1984). (See 1987 amendment.)

Punitive Damages Instruction — Implied Malice: The trial court did not err in giving an instruction on implied malice that advised the jury that it is not necessary to show actual malice to recover punitive damages or in giving an instruction on punitive damages when it was clear from the record and a pretrial order that plaintiffs were bringing this case in tort, separate and distinct from any action arising out of contract. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 176 M 37, 575 P2d 578 (1978). (See 1987 amendment.)

Matters for Jury to Consider in Assessing:

The rule that where exemplary damages are sought, the jury may take into consideration the pecuniary ability of defendant to pay, as shown by the evidence, applies in an action against joint tortfeasors; in such a case the jury may make awards of such damages in different amounts according to the various degrees of culpability of each defendant, keeping in mind the financial condition of each. Edquest v. Tripp & Dragstedt Co., 93 M 446, 19 P2d 637 (1933). See also Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

In assessing exemplary damages, the jury should take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding the act complained of and may consider the wealth and pecuniary ability of defendant, the matter of fixing the amount resting largely in its discretion. Johnson v. Horn, 86 M 314, 283 P 427 (1929).

Case Notes

No Implied Contract Agister's Lien Absent Custody or Control of Cattle: Bellanger obtained loans from the Daniels-Sheridan Federal Credit Union to finance a ranching operation, securing the loans with several promissory notes securing an interest in the cattle on the ranch. Bellanger subsequently defaulted on the loans, and the credit union initiated an action to enforce the promissory notes pursuant to the Uniform Commercial Code. The case broadened to encompass a dispute over proceeds from the sale of the cattle to include Bellanger's father Alfred, who asserted an agister's lien for having kept the cattle on his property. The cattle were subsequently seized and sold for $79,012.27, and the District Court split the proceeds, with $45,467.94 paid to the credit union and a judgment for the remainder owed on the promissory notes and $33,544.33 paid to the owner of the auction company where Bellanger customarily sold cattle, but Alfred and Bellanger were foreclosed of all interest in the proceeds. On appeal, Alfred asserted that his agister's lien should have entitled him to some of the proceeds. Alfred contended that an agister's lien was commenced via an implied contract when the credit union obtained a preliminary injunction against removal or sale of the cattle, which required Alfred to care for the cattle on his property, pursuant to 45-8-211, 70-6-206, and this section. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's finding that because Alfred never had custody or control of the cattle, allowing Bellanger to run the cattle on the property rent-free in exchange for looking after Alfred's cattle, the statutory duties upon which Alfred relied in support of an implied contract agister's lien were inapplicable. The court declined to recognize any manner for the creation of an agister's lien except as provided in 71-3-1201. Daniels-Sheridan Fed. Credit Union v. Bellanger, 2001 MT 235, 307 M 22, 36 P3d 397 (2001).

Logging Truck Collision With Cattle: In an action for damages resulting from collision of plaintiffs' logging truck with defendant's cattle, in which defendant cross complained for loss of cattle and exemplary damages, an award of $2,500 exemplary damages for loss of 20 head of cattle was not improper. Franck v. Hudson, 140 M 480, 373 P2d 951 (1962).

Jury's Province: Under this section it is within the province of the jury to fix the amount of exemplary damages, and the Supreme Court will not interfere with such a determination unless it appears to have been influenced by passion, prejudice, or some improper motive. Franck v. Hudson, 140 M 480, 373 P2d 951 (1962).

Part 3

No Unjust Enrichment When Contract Existed — Defendant Not at Fault — Constructive Trust Not Raised by Plaintiff or Considered by Court: The District Court did not err in determining that the defendants were not unjustly enriched. Neither party disputed the existence of a contract involving the property at issue. Because it was undisputed that a contract existed, the plaintiff's unjust enrichment arguments were not well taken by the Supreme Court. In short, because the District Court found no fault or misconduct on the part of the defendant, the Supreme Court did not impose an unjust enrichment recovery against him. The Supreme Court also acknowledged that a constructive trust may be imposed in the absence of any wrongdoing on the part of the defendant, but since the plaintiff did not argue in the District Court or on appeal for the imposition of a constructive trust, the Supreme Court declined to impose one. Welu v. Twin Hearts Smiling Horses, Inc., 2016 MT 347, 386 Mont. 98, 386 P.3d 937, distinguishing Robertus v. Candee, 205 Mont. 403, 670 P.2d 540 (1983).

Award for Damages for Breach of Letter of Agreement Improper Absent Valid Contractual Interest — Remand for New Trial: Plaintiff was awarded $2.5 million based on defendant's alleged breach of a letter of agreement to grant plaintiff an option to develop certain oil and gas interests after the jury found that the letter of agreement was not a contract. The Supreme Court reversed the award. Although there was sufficient evidence for the jury to conclude that plaintiff suffered $2.5 million in damages from the sale of the development rights, plaintiff was entitled to damages only if the letter created some right or interest in the development rights. However, because there was no extant contractual obligation running from defendant to plaintiff with respect to the development property, there was no legal basis for the damage award. The jury was confused about available remedies and rendered an inconsistent verdict that could not be reconciled with the evidence, argument, and legal theories presented at trial, which violated the constitutional rights of the litigants to a fair trial. Therefore, the case was reversed and remanded to the District Court for a new trial. D.R. Four Beat Alliance, LLC v. Sierra Prod. Co., 2009 MT 319, 352 M 435, 218 P3d 827 (2009).

Multiple Cause Instruction Not Appropriate When Only One Negligent Defendant Involved: Neal's vehicle was rear-ended by Nelson's vehicle. During trial, Nelson repeatedly referred to Neal's unrelated medical conditions and injuries and argued that other causes injured Neal, so Neal contended that the trial court should have instructed the jury on multiple causation. The Supreme Court disagreed. Citing Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996), the court noted that when there are allegations that the acts of more than one person combined to produce a result, a multiple cause instruction is warranted. However, when, as here, only one negligent defendant is involved and the injury was not caused by anyone other than the defendant, a multiple cause instruction is not appropriate. Neal v. Nelson, 2008 MT 426, 347 M 431, 198 P3d 819 (2008).

Contradictory Evidence of Loss of Consortium — Award of No Damages Affirmed: Hoffman was rear-ended by a logging truck while attempting a turn off of a two-lane highway, and Hoffman's wife sued the truck driver for loss of consortium. However, neither Hoffman nor his wife testified as to any impact of the accident on their relationship, but relied instead on the testimony of family members that Hoffman's behavior changed after the accident from a loving and caring man to one who was cold and distant and from an ordinarily calm and patient person to one who was irritable and snappy. The truck driver countered with testimony from Hoffman's former girlfriend that Hoffman was irritable before the accident and that Hoffman was known among his coworkers as having a temperamental personality. The jury weighed the conflicting testimony and concluded that the truck driver did not cause the wife's loss of consortium, and the Supreme Court declined to retry the case simply because the jury decided to believe one party over the other. Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

Violation of Federal Railroad Safety Regulations Negligence Per Se — Evidence of Contributory Negligence Disallowed: Railroad employee Woods accompanied track supervisor Holloway to inspect a section of track. Holloway exceeded the authorized limits of the track warrant and proceeded another 4 miles down the track where the inspection vehicle was struck by a train and Woods was killed. Following an investigation, the railroad concluded that Holloway's violation of the working limits caused Woods's death. Woods's widow moved for partial summary judgment that the railroad was negligent per se, but the motion was denied. The widow then requested a ruling that Woods was not contributorily negligent, but the motion was denied as untimely. The jury found that Woods was 50% negligent, and the award to the widow was reduced by half. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA) governing the case is a remedial statute, the specific intent of which is to prevent railroad accidents and casualties. Federal railroad administration regulations are reviewed and construed as a comprehensive scheme of protection for railroad workers, and an interpretation of federal railroad administration regulations that leads to an unreasonable or absurd result will be rejected in favor of an interpretation that leads to a reasonable result. To conclude that federal railroad administration regulations define working limits but do not prohibit exceeding them would lead to an absurd result. Thus, the trial court erred in concluding that violation of the working limits of the track warrant was not negligence per se. FELA also provides that an employee will not be held liable for contributory negligence when a railroad's violation of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to an employee's injury or death, and the restriction against the use of contributory negligence as a defense applies to regulation violations as well, so it was also error for the trial court to allow the railroad to argue Woods's contributory negligence. The case was remanded for judgment reinstating the entire jury award. Woods v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry., 2004 MT 332, 324 M 151, 104 P3d 1037 (2004), following Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273 (1998), and distinguished in Giambra v. Kelsey, 2007 MT 158, 338 M 19, 162 P3d 134 (2007).

Damages Proper for Delayed Sale of Property Blocked by Void Zoning Ordinance: Plaintiffs bought property for investment purposes, but the sale was blocked by a county zoning ordinance that was subsequently found to be void for vagueness. Despite the fact that plaintiffs had no actual contract to sell the property, the District Court held that plaintiffs were entitled to lost interest that they would have received had a sale occurred as planned and that plaintiffs did not fail to mitigate their damages. After examining the record, the Supreme Court held that the damage award was not an abuse of discretion. Yurczyk v. Yellowstone County, 2004 MT 3, 319 M 169, 83 P3d 266 (2004). See also Sletteland v. Roberts, 2000 MT 382, 304 M 21, 16 P3d 1062 (2000).

State Agricultural Lease — Negligent Misrepresentation That State Land Available for Lease — Lost Profits Not Recoverable: The Department of Natural Resources and Conservation (DNRC) informed Bokma Farms, Inc. (Bokma), by telephone and certified letter that certain agricultural property was available for lease after Maclean failed to make a lease payment to the DNRC. Bokma made expenditures in reliance upon the DNRC's statement that the property was available for lease. The DNRC later determined that Maclean did make the lease payment and therefore renewed the lease with Maclean. Bokma sued the DNRC, alleging breach of contract and negligent misrepresentation, and asked for damages for lost profits. The Supreme Court held that the District Court properly dismissed the breach of contract claim because no lease had been signed. The Supreme Court also held, citing the Restatement (Second) of Torts 552B (1976), that although damages for lost profits may be awarded as consequential damages for negligent misrepresentation, lost profits could not be awarded in this case because the loss of profits was not caused by the misrepresentation but by the fact that Bokma did not have an enforceable lease with the DNRC. Bokma Farms, Inc. v. St., 2000 MT 298, 302 M 321, 14 P3d 1199, 57 St. Rep. 1253 (2000).

Insurance Reimbursement Under Contract Obligation: A lease agreement required the lessee to keep the building insured against loss or damage by fire. Under its sublease, a sublessee undertook this responsibility to provide fire insurance. Following destruction of the property by fire, the sublessee's insurance provided sufficient money to the lessor to rebuild the property and to the sublessee to purchase replacement equipment. The lessor sought additional money from the original lessee to recover the cost of removing and replacing the building and the rental income lost while the building was being rebuilt. The trial court properly held that the payment to the lessor under insurance purchased by the sublessee should be credited against the tort liability of the lessee. Five U's, Inc. v. Burger King Corp., 1998 MT 216, 290 M 452, 962 P2d 1218, 55 St. Rep. 906 (1998).

Lost Rental Income Not Recoverable When Contract Provides Payment Abatement: A lease agreement required the lessee to keep the building insured against loss or damage by fire. Under its sublease, a sublessee undertook this responsibility to provide fire insurance. Following destruction of the property by fire, the sublessee's insurance provided sufficient money to the lessor to rebuild the property and to the sublessee to purchase replacement equipment. The lessor sought additional money for damages for loss of rentals while the property was being rebuilt, based on the sublessee's liability in causing the fire. However, the lease contained a rent abatement clause for periods during which the property was rendered unusable, making no distinction as to the cause of a fire. The clear language of the contract required rent to abate regardless of whether the fire was caused by events unrelated to the lessee's negligence, so the claim for damages for lost rental income was properly denied. Five U's, Inc. v. Burger King Corp., 1998 MT 216, 290 M 452, 962 P2d 1218, 55 St. Rep. 906 (1998).

FELA — Stipulation That Jury Awards Not Be Added Together — Greater Award Subsuming Smaller Awards: Under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (FELA), 45 U.S.C. 51 through 60, an injured railroad worker is entitled to recover damages if the negligence of the railroad played any part, no matter how slight, in causing the injury or death for which damages are sought. In the present case, the jury found independent railroad negligence and causation in each of three work-related incidents that played a part in the condition of Bevacqua's knee. Under FELA, Bevacqua was entitled to judgment of $200,000 for a 1973 injury, $320,000 for a 1980 injury, and $40,000 for a 1990 injury. However, the parties stipulated that the jury awards for each incident would not be added together, precluding any double recovery. The Supreme Court held that Bevacqua was entitled to $320,000, the greatest of the jury awards, and that under the terms of the stipulation, the smaller awards were subsumed in the greater award. Bevacqua v. Union Pac. RR Co., 1998 MT 120, 289 M 36, 960 P2d 273, 55 St. Rep. 469 (1998), following Rogers v. Mo. Pac. RR Co., 352 US 500, 1 L Ed 2d 493, 77 S Ct 443 (1957).

No Damages for Loss of Established Way of Life: Although evidence was conflicting, the jury properly denied an award of damages for loss of established way of life to plaintiffs whose restaurant was destroyed in a natural gas explosion upon a showing that: (1) the restaurant never did more than break even since it was purchased; (2) plaintiffs paid their living expenses from proceeds received from the sale of another cafe; (3) the restaurant lost $53,667 in the period immediately preceding the explosion; (4) plaintiffs never received a salary the entire time the restaurant was operating; and (5) plaintiff was required to leave the restaurant business because of a preexisting heart condition and high blood pressure. Day v. Mont. Power Co., 242 M 195, 789 P2d 1224, 47 St. Rep. 626 (1990).

Unjust Enrichment — Misconduct by Defendant Required — Denial of Restitution to Defaulting Purchaser: Upon default by purchasers, seller resold the property. Purchasers sought restitution, contending it was unfair to allow seller to be unjustly enriched by selling the property twice. However, restitution is normally denied to a defaulting purchaser. (See Contract Damages in Montana Part II: Reliance and Restitution, Burnham, 45 Mont. L. Rev. 1 (1984).) Further, in order for the equitable doctrine of unjust enrichment to apply, plaintiff must show some element of misconduct or fault on the part of defendant. Schweigert v. Fowler, 240 M 424, 784 P2d 405, 47 St. Rep. 1 (1990). See also Owen v. Skramovsky, 2013 MT 348, 372 Mont. 531, 313 P.3d 205.

Damaged Party to Mitigate Damages — Reasonable Expectations: A damaged party is only expected to do what is reasonable under the circumstances to mitigate his damages and need not embark on a course of action that may cause further detriment to him. Romain v. Earl Schwartz Co., 238 M 500, 779 P2d 54, 46 St. Rep. 1450 (1989).

Breach of Contract — Cause of Damages Not Proven: The District Court properly found that an oral agreement to cut and bale the first crop of hay by July 10 was breached since the work was not completed until July 20. However, the delay was not proven to be the cause of the failure to get a second crop. Despite the breach of contract, failure to award damages was proper. Burns v. Hinman, 229 M 62, 744 P2d 879, 44 St. Rep. 1782 (1987).

Verdict of Zero Damages — No Abuse of Discretion: In a wrongful termination suit against newspaper, reporter Dawson appealed a District Court award of zero damages after the jury found in his favor on the issues of liability and proximate cause. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that although the newspaper had breached its duty of good faith and fair dealing and was the proximate cause of Dawson's damages, the reporter had three other sources of income and had failed to mitigate his damages by accepting comparable journalism work. Thus, the jury was justified in awarding zero damages. Dawson v. The Billings Gazette, 223 M 415, 726 P2d 826, 43 St. Rep. 1838 (1986), distinguished in Martinell v. Mont. Power Co., 268 M 292, 886 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1329 (1994).

Overgrazing Damages Remanded — No Offset — Open Range Law: The District Court ruled that Helehan was liable for $3,000 in overgrazing damages caused to Ueland's property by horses allowed on Helehan's land and that Ueland was not entitled to reimbursement for a $3,000 fence. The court offset these amounts. The Supreme Court remanded, finding that the costs did not offset since damages flowed from Helehan to Ueland but not from Ueland to Helehan. However, the error was harmless since under Montana's open range law Helehan could not be legally obligated to restrain the horses and could not be held liable for damages occurring prior to the time the fence was built. Helehan v. Ueland, 223 M 228, 725 P2d 1192, 43 St. Rep. 1679 (1986).

Plaintiff's Refusal of Settlement — Not Relevant to Mitigation of Damages or to Defendant's Intent: The District Court properly excluded evidence of defendant's offer to compromise and settle plaintiff's claim. The court was not persuaded by defendant's argument that refusing a settlement offer is a failure to mitigate damages and that the offer showed defendant did not seek to act towards plaintiff in an oppressive or retaliatory fashion. Tribby v. NW. Bank of Great Falls, 217 M 196, 704 P2d 409, 42 St. Rep. 1133 (1985).

Old Well-Casing Valuation — Evidence Unavailable or Vague — Reasonable Valuation Attempt Affirmed: The District Court found that defendants were entitled to receive from a plaintiff the present value of casing in place in a well less the cost of removing it. The court stated that evidence of the value of the casing was "sketchy", that the casing was 17 years old, and that the cost of removal was speculative. In view of the difficulty in ascertaining the value of the casing, the lower court adopted a reasonable method and amounts based on the evidence of experts before the court. The award was affirmed. Edington v. Creek Oil Co., 213 M 112, 690 P2d 970, 41 St. Rep. 1990 (1984).

Reentry by Lessee Following Termination of Lease — Willful Trespass: Oil and gas lease contained a provision that if production and operations were stopped and lessee did not resume them within 90 days, the lease was terminated. Production and operations were stopped and not resumed until years later, at a time when the lease had terminated and lessor had granted a lease to someone else. Lessee was a willful trespasser in entering and recommencing drilling as lessee knew the lease had expired by its own terms. Lessee thus was not entitled to proceeds from the oil produced after the reentry or to cost of producing the oil. Edington v. Creek Oil Co., 213 M 112, 690 P2d 970, 41 St. Rep. 1990 (1984).

Reduction to Present Value of Amount Due Over Time: Court ordered contract for sale of ranch rescinded at request of seller. The buyers had already resold parts of the ranch to third parties at sums to be paid over a period of time and totaling $249,345. The lower court ordered that the full $249,345 due first buyers over time be tendered by first buyers to first seller as a setoff against the money first buyers had paid to first seller, which court ordered first seller to return to first buyers. The ordered setoff was erroneous as to amount, and the case was remanded for a determination of the present value of the amounts owing to appellants, which figure would be the proper setoff. Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188, 41 St. Rep. 286 (1984).

Unjust Enrichment Measure of Damages — Quantum Meruit or Value of Enhancement to Land: Where the plaintiffs failed to make a final payment to the defendant under a lease of property upon which the plaintiffs expended considerable time and effort to grow wheat and the defendant wrongfully terminated the lease, the District Court erred in awarding damages to the plaintiffs consisting of a composite of enhanced land value, custom work, fixed costs, and/or crop value. The measure of damages for unjust enrichment is either the quantum meruit value of the plaintiffs' labor or the value of the enhancement to the defendant's property, whichever is greater. In this case the total unjust enrichment as measured by the enhancement to the defendant's property was more than the quantum meruit measure of unjust enrichment, but both measures of damages cannot be used. The damages awarded to the plaintiffs were therefore reduced. Robertus v. Candee, 205 M 403, 670 P2d 540, 40 St. Rep. 1391 (1983), followed in Storms v. Bergsieker, 254 M 130, 835 P2d 738, 49 St. Rep. 655 (1992).

Unjust Enrichment — Recovery for Repudiated Contract Not Barred by Statute of Frauds: Where the plaintiffs failed to make a final payment to the defendant under a lease of property upon which the plaintiffs had spent considerable time and effort to grow wheat and the defendant thereafter wrongfully terminated the lease and retained the proceeds from the sale of plaintiffs' crop, the District Court erred in holding the plaintiffs' claim of unjust enrichment barred by the Statute of Frauds. Where one party repudiates a contract or breaches it by nonperformance, the injured party may seek restitution of the unjust enrichment whether the Statute of Frauds applies or not. Here the defendant breached the lease, and the theory of unjust enrichment applies. Robertus v. Candee, 205 M 403, 670 P2d 540, 40 St. Rep. 1391 (1983).

Valuation of Plaintiffs' Work in Unjust Enrichment Claim — Substantial Evidence Found: Where the plaintiffs brought an action for damages against the defendant on the theory of unjust enrichment of the defendant by the plaintiffs' work in breaking and planting land leased to them by the defendant, the Supreme Court found that there was substantial evidence to support the District Court's valuation of the plaintiffs' groundbreaking work. The trial court properly considered the plaintiffs' expert testimony and exhibits, which were based on assumptions in evidence, and properly considered the profit margin included in the plaintiffs' calculations. Under the rationale of Cameron v. Cameron, 179 M 219, 587 P2d 939 (1978), the court refused to disturb the District Court findings because they were based on substantial, though conflicting, evidence. Robertus v. Candee, 205 M 403, 670 P2d 540, 40 St. Rep. 1391 (1983).

Duty to Mitigate Damages — Procedure at Trial: A nondefaulting party in a contractual arrangement must act reasonably under the circumstances so as not to unnecessarily enlarge damages caused by a default. Whether the duty to mitigate damages was violated is for the trier of fact when the evidence conflicts, and the Supreme Court's function is to review the record to determine if there is substantial credible evidence to support the trial court's finding. Since the trial court's order and supporting memo did not include findings on the duty to mitigate or the reasonableness of the nondefaulting party's actions in consuming or destroying wine he did not sell after wine broker terminated wine distributorship contract, the damages award to nondefaulting party for unsold wine it consumed or destroyed was vacated and the issue remanded for further consideration. Bronken's Good Time Co. v. J. W. Brown & Associates, 203 M 427, 661 P2d 861, 40 St. Rep. 549 (1983), followed in Fordyce v. Musick, 245 M 315, 800 P2d 1045, 47 St. Rep. 2137 (1990).

Mitigation of Damages — Financial Inability to Mitigate: The duty to mitigate damages does not require an injured party to do that which is unreasonable or impracticable; consequently, when expenditures are necessary for minimization of damages, the duty does not apply to a party who is financially unable to make such expenditures. McPherson v. Kerr, 195 M 454, 636 P2d 852, 38 St. Rep. 2021 (1981), expressly overruling that portion of Stahl v. Farmer's Union Oil Co. of Richland, 145 M 106, 399 P2d 763 (1965), which declares that recovery cannot be had for damages accruing as a result of injured party's financial inability to mitigate damages.

Effect of Inflation on Damages: Where the effect of inflation on damages arising from defects in a modular home purchased from defendant consisted of testimony that as inflation made the value of the house go up it also increased the discrepancy in value caused by the defects, and there was no testimony on the percentage rate of inflation, the jury must have considered the effects of inflation, since it reached a $9,000 verdict in the face of evidence of a $3,000 cost of repairs and a $5,000 diminution in value as of 1979, approximately 2 years before trial. There was insufficient evidence on which inflation could be considered, and error occurred. Little v. Grizzly Mfg., 195 M 419, 636 P2d 839, 38 St. Rep. 1994 (1981).

Compensation for Loss of Capacity to Pursue an Established Career: A plaintiff who has been permanently injured as a result of the negligence of the defendant may recover such sum as will compensate him reasonably for the destruction of his capacity to pursue an established course of life as an element of damages distinct from plaintiff's loss of earning capacity. Johnson v. U.S., 510 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 599 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Measure for Pain and Suffering Within Discretion of Fact Finder: In personal injury actions there is no measuring stick by which to determine the amount of damages to be awarded for pain and suffering other than the intelligence of a fair and impartial trier of fact governed by a sense of justice; each case must of necessity depend upon its own peculiar facts. Johnson v. U.S., 510 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 599 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Recovery for Expenses of Future Medical Treatment: In a trial on the issue of damages where plaintiff suffered severe physical damage causing him to be a quadriplegic, the court found that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the reasonable value of necessary expenses for any medical, surgical, hospital, and other services, care, and supplies that the finder of fact determines to be reasonably certain to be required in the future in the treatment of the plaintiff as the proximate result of the injury in question. In this case, the jury awarded compensation for 12 hours a day as reasonable compensation even though the plaintiff required 24-hour care. Johnson v. U.S., 510 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 599 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Present Cash Value of Future Damages: On the issue of damages in a personal injury action, the finder of fact must reduce future damages to the present cash value of such an amount and award the present cash value of such future damages. Johnson v. U.S., 510 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 599 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

When Profits on Collateral Contract Recoverable: The purchaser of an old log cabin claimed on appeal that he lost resale profits because of the actions of the seller. The Supreme Court found the sale agreement was informal and oral. No resale of the cabin was mentioned by the purchaser at that time. The purchaser did not at that time have an agreement to resell the cabin and did not inform the seller that he wanted to resell or that he actually was going to resell. The court cited the general rule that gains or profits of collateral enterprises or subcontracts are as a rule too speculative and contingent to afford an element of recovery in the case of a breach of the primary contract. At trial, the only testimony concerning the intention of the purchaser when he bought the cabin was his intention to move it. Damages must be within the contemplation of the parties when they enter the contract and be such damages as might be expected to result naturally from a breach. Without testimony that the seller should have contemplated a resale of the cabin here, the purchaser could not recover for the loss of profits from a collateral sale contract. Jeffery v. Neville, 190 M 300, 620 P2d 1218, 37 St. Rep. 1983 (1980).

Market Value as Measure of Damage: A person whose personal property is totally destroyed by the act of another is entitled to no more than damages for the market value of the property plus loss of use during the period reasonably required to replace it. Cuddy v. U.S., 489 F. Supp. 390 (D.C. Mont. 1980).

Case Notes

Ambiguous Contract — Contract Construction — Award of Certain Damages Reversed: The plaintiff, a real estate brokerage firm, entered into an investment agreement with the defendant, a Montana corporation, to make three installment payments in exchange for a 33.33% interest in the plaintiff business. The defendant made the first two installment payments but refused to make the final payment. Following a bench trial, the District Court found that the contract was ambiguous, the mutual intention of the parties at the time of contracting was for the defendant to be an equal owner after making three payments, and that the defendant breached the investment agreement by not making the third payment while the plaintiff breached the operating agreement by withholding access to various financial records and information. The District Court awarded prejudgment interest, attorney fees and costs, and damages to both parties. Both parties appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly ascertained the parties' mutual intent and that the agreement was ambiguous. However, the Supreme Court also held that the District Court lacked sufficient evidence to award damages for the plaintiff's breach of the operating agreement claims. AWIN Real Estate, LLC v. Whitehead Homes, Inc., 2020 MT 225, 401 Mont. 218, 472 P.3d 165.

Consent Judgment — Finding of Collusion — Case Dismissed With Prejudice: In earlier litigation related to the construction of a multimillion-dollar home, Abbey/Land, LLC v. Interstate Mechanical, Inc., 2015 MT 77, 378 Mont. 372, 345 P.3d 1032, the Supreme Court ordered the District Court to allow the defendant's insurer to intervene and challenge the reasonableness of a $12 million consent judgment. On remand, and after the parties conducted discovery, the District Court found that the original parties had colluded and that the judgment was unreasonable. The District Court ordered that the judgment be reduced to $2.4 million but denied the insurer's motion to dismiss the case with prejudice. The original parties appealed. The Supreme Court agreed that the initial consent judgment was the product of collusion by the parties. However, it ruled that because the parties' actions were so offensive to justice, the District Court had erred by denying the motion to dismiss the case with prejudice. Accordingly, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's entry of judgment and ordered the District Court to dismiss the parties' claims with prejudice. Abbey/Land, LLC v. Glacier Constr. Partners, LLC, 2019 MT 19, 394 Mont. 135, 433 P.3d 1230.

Failure of District Court to Instruct Jury on Law of Case — New Trial Warranted — Plaintiffs Satisfied Burden of Proof on Value of Lost Opportunity to Settle in Legal Malpractice Claim: The District Court erred in instructing the jury to decide whether the plaintiffs would have settled a medical malpractice claim underlying their legal malpractice suit. The plaintiffs satisfied their burden of proving the likely value of the lost opportunity to settle through expert testimony, and the jury could have weighed conflicting expert testimony to determine a value for the lost opportunity. Because the District Court's instruction did not fairly instruct the jury on the law of the case that the Supreme Court established in Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160, the instruction was an abuse of discretion that demanded a new trial. Labair v. Carey, 2016 MT 272, 385 Mont. 233, 383 P.3d 226.

Doctrine of Election of Remedies Inapplicable — Position of Blameless Party After Contractual Breach — Making Whole but No More: The plaintiff brought a suit for damages 6 years after the defendants breached a contract to buy the plaintiff's interests in Dealerspan, LLC, a software company, resulting in the defendants' forfeiture of their interests in Dealerspan. Defendants argued that the doctrine of election of remedies barred damages because the plaintiff elected to pursue forfeiture and thus had rescinded the contract. However, the subject of the contract was the sale of the plaintiff's interests, and the forfeiture of the defendants' interests in Dealerspan did not return the parties to their original positions before executing the contract, so the forfeiture and contractual damages were not inconsistent. Nevertheless, the contract was not designed to place the plaintiff in a better position under the defendants' breach than under the defendants' performance, so the plaintiff could recover only damages covering the difference between the contract purchase price and the value of the forfeited interests, subsequent profits from the business, and profits from selling Dealerspan's physical assets. Bottrell Family Investments Ltd. Partnership v. Diversified Financial, Inc., 2015 MT 185, 379 Mont. 504, 352 P.3d 620.

Amount Billed by Hospital for Medical Bills Relevant — Evidence Not Limited to Amount Paid by Insurance — Supervisory Control Granted — District Court Order Vacated: In a wrongful death suit between the estate of the deceased and the defendant, the District Court granted the defendant's motion in limine to restrict the evidence regarding medical bills to the amount covered by insurance instead of the amount billed by the hospital. The District Court concluded that despite the higher amount billed, the estate had no exposure or obligation to pay any charges beyond those actually paid by insurance. The estate sought a writ of supervisory control, and the Supreme Court directed the District Court to vacate the order regarding the medical bills. The Supreme Court reasoned that under 27-1-308, a jury is required to determine its award without consideration of any collateral source. As applied, the payments made by insurance were clearly a collateral source. Meek v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2015 MT 130, 379 Mont. 150, 349 P.3d 493.

Insured Entitled to Contest Reasonableness of Confessed Judgment: In a construction case involving multiple parties, an arbitration action, a U.S. District Court case, and a confessed judgment in a Montana District Court Case, an insurer moved to intervene in the Montana court proceedings for the sole purpose of challenging the reasonableness of the confessed judgment. The District Court entered the final judgment, but it never specifically ruled on the insurer's motion to intervene or on related issues of reasonableness. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the insurer was entitled to intervene to meaningfully contest the reasonableness of the confessed judgment. Abbey/Land, LLC v. Interstate Mechanical, Inc., 2015 MT 77, 378 Mont. 372, 345 P.3d 1032.

Stipulated Settlement of $29 Million — Insurer Request to Conduct Discovery and Hold Hearing on Stipulation's Reasonableness of Settlement Amount Properly Denied — Remanded for Hearing: Shareholders sued two corporate officers for breach of their corporate duties related to a merger. Initially, the carrier of the corporation's corporate liability insurance policy paid the defense costs for the two officers. Later, however, the carrier informed them it would discontinue paying their defense costs. Shortly thereafter, the officers entered into a stipulation with the shareholders in which the officers assigned their rights to the shareholders and agreed that the shareholders were entitled to $29 million in damages. The carrier then asked the court to allow it to conduct discovery related to the stipulated settlement and to hold a hearing on the reasonableness of the settlement amount. The District Court refused both requests and the carrier appealed. The Supreme Court concluded that there were insufficient facts to rule on the issue and therefore reversed and remanded the case to the District Court to determine the reasonableness of the settlement amount. Tidyman's Management Serv. v. Davis, 2014 MT 201, 376 Mont. 72, 330 P.3d 1135. See also Tidyman's Management Serv. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins., 2016 MT 201, 384 Mont. 335, 378 P.3d 1182, in which the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court had not used the correct standard in assessing the reasonableness of the settlement and remanded the matter to the District Court with instructions on how to assess the reasonableness of the settlement.

Award for Reasonable Compensatory Damages in Breach of Contract Claim: In Watson I (Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 Mont. 120, 218 P.3d 1227), the Supreme Court remanded the issue of reasonable and nonspeculative damages to the District Court. On remand, the District Court found that compensatory damages of $42,000 for services from January to July 2002 were supported by substantial credible evidence. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the District Court had subject matter jurisdiction over the damages awarded, that the District Court followed the Supreme Court's instructions regarding damages, and that the defendant was not denied due process of law since she had reasonable notice of the damages sought by the plaintiff. Watson v. West, 2011 MT 57, 360 Mont. 9, 250 P.3d 845.

Offset Required for Prior Payments — Federal Law Applied in FELA Claim: The District Court correctly concluded that the defendant railroad company was entitled to offset a damages award under the Federal Employers' Liability Act by deducting settlement proceeds that it paid pursuant to a release that was later invalidated. When a release is executed and later invalidated, the sum paid pursuant to the release must be deducted from any award determined to be due to the injured employee. Cheff v. BNSF Ry. Co., 2010 MT 235, 358 Mont. 144, 243 P.3d 1115, following Hogue v. S. Ry. Co., 390 US 516, 88 S Ct 1150 (1968).

Reasonable Damages for County's Expenditures Related to Subdivision Review Proper: After reviewing and denying an application for a Granite County subdivision, the District Court awarded the county $30,197 in damages still owed by plaintiffs for their application for preliminary plat approval for the subdivision. Plaintiffs appealed on grounds that the damage award was unreasonable and unsupported by clear and convincing evidence. The Supreme Court disagreed. Evidence indicated that because the county had only contract planning staff at the time the application was submitted and because that staff lacked the experience and expertise to review the large subdivision project, the county incurred additional costs related to application review. There was no evidence that the costs were incorrect, excessive, or unwarranted or that plaintiffs had already paid the costs when the application was submitted. Thus, the award of costs to the county as damages was reasonable and was affirmed. Hansen v. Granite County, 2010 MT 107, 356 Mont. 269, 232 P.3d 409.

Remand for Determination of Clearly Ascertainable Damages in Breach of Contract Action: Watson was awarded $730,000 in compensatory damages in a default judgment against West for breach of an employment contract. The District Court based the amount on Watson's claims for 5 years of missed employment and the value of Watson's promised stock shares in West's corporation. However, the Supreme Court noted that questions remained whether the corporation was ever capitalized or brought into operation, that the parties' employment agreement was effectively canceled a mere 5 months after it was negotiated, and that the corporation itself was not named as a defendant, so it was questionable whether the award of 5 years of salary and the claimed full value of stock shares was reasonable. The fact that the judgment was entered by default did not abrogate the requirement that the damages be reasonable and clearly ascertainable, so the award was vacated and the case was remanded for further proceedings regarding the extent of Watson's reasonable and nonspeculative damages. Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 M 120, 218 P3d 1227 (2009).

Award for Damages for Breach of Letter of Agreement Improper Absent Valid Contractual Interest — Remand for New Trial: Plaintiff was awarded $2.5 million based on defendant's alleged breach of a letter of agreement to grant plaintiff an option to develop certain oil and gas interests after the jury found that the letter of agreement was not a contract. The Supreme Court reversed the award. Although there was sufficient evidence for the jury to conclude that plaintiff suffered $2.5 million in damages from the sale of the development rights, plaintiff was entitled to damages only if the letter created some right or interest in the development rights. However, because there was no extant contractual obligation running from defendant to plaintiff with respect to the development property, there was no legal basis for the damage award. The jury was confused about available remedies and rendered an inconsistent verdict that could not be reconciled with the evidence, argument, and legal theories presented at trial, which violated the constitutional rights of the litigants to a fair trial. Therefore, the case was reversed and remanded to the District Court for a new trial. D.R. Four Beat Alliance, LLC v. Sierra Prod. Co., 2009 MT 319, 352 M 435, 218 P3d 827 (2009).

Substantial Evidence That Damage Award Included Some Amount for Pain and Suffering — Verdict Affirmed: Plaintiff contended that a new trial was warranted because a jury award of only $7,358.56 in damages for plaintiff's injuries sustained in a car accident was not supported by the evidence, given uncontroverted evidence that plaintiff also experienced pain and suffering. The amount awarded was the exact amount claimed by plaintiff for past medical expenses. Nevertheless, the Supreme Court declined to second-guess the jury or speculate on whether damages for pain and suffering were left out of the award. Substantial credible evidence supported the verdict, which could have included some amount for pain and suffering, and the award was affirmed. Neal v. Nelson, 2008 MT 426, 347 M 431, 198 P3d 819 (2008).

Award of Restoration Damages in Excess of Market Value of Real Property: Defendant's refinery contaminated property and ground water in Sunburst, Montana, over a period of many years. Following trial, the District Court held defendant strictly liable as a matter of law for conducting an abnormally dangerous activity and found that defendant's trespass extended to all Sunburst plaintiffs who owned property above the contamination plume. Part of the damage award included costs reasonably necessary to restore plaintiffs' property to the condition that it would have been absent defendant's contamination. Citing Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966), defendant contended that restoration damages may not exceed the market value of the property. The Supreme Court distinguished Spackman because it dealt with readily replaceable items of personal property with an established market value. Instead, the court cited Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443 (1990), and adopted Restatement (Second) of Torts 929 for calculating damages for injuries to real property. The Restatement explains that restoration damages may be recoverable even though they might be greater than the entire value of the property and allows a trial court to craft an appropriate remedy to restore plaintiffs' property to the condition that it would have been had the wrong not occurred. Restoration awards may compensate a plaintiff more effectively than diminution in value when diminution in value fails to provide an adequate remedy. In this case, the jury awarded plaintiffs $15 million in restoration damages, and the Supreme Court affirmed the award as reasonable under the circumstances. The award was not viewed as a windfall because testimony indicated that the entire award would be used to repair the damaged property. Additionally, the fact that one collateral beneficiary was a plaintiff school district did not defeat an award of restoration damages because defendant could not remediate the ground water beneath the personal residences owned by other plaintiffs without also treating the ground water beneath the school. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007). See also Lampi v. Speed, 2011 MT 231, 362 Mont. 122, 261 P.3d 1000, in which the Supreme Court, applying and clarifying Sunburst and the restoration damages rule set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts 929, concluded that the District Court wrongly denied the plaintiffs' motion to establish restoration damages as the appropriate measure of damages in the plaintiff's lawsuit to recover damages for lost trees and vegetation, and McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that a property owner may seek to recover restoration costs for a commercial family ranch, where the family lives and earns its living, in the same manner that a property owner may recover restoration damages for recreational or residential use.

Calculation of Restoration Damages — Burk Guidelines Applied: Defendant's refinery contaminated property and ground water in Sunburst, Montana, over a period of many years. Following trial, the District Court held defendant strictly liable as a matter of law for conducting an abnormally dangerous activity and found that defendant's trespass extended to all Sunburst plaintiffs who owned property above the contamination plume. Part of the damage award included costs reasonably necessary to restore plaintiffs' property to the condition that it would have been absent defendant's contamination. On appeal of the restoration costs, the Supreme Court applied the guidelines for cases involving damage to real property as set out in Burk Ranches, Inc. v. St., 242 M 300, 790 P2d 443 (1990). Although the difference between the value of the property before and after the injury, or the diminution in value, generally constitutes the appropriate measure of damages, no single measure of damages can serve in every case to adequately compensate an injured party. Restoration costs may be awarded if an injury is temporary, and a temporary injury may be abated or discontinued at any time either by an act of the wrongdoer or by the injured party. The ability to repair an injury must be more than a theoretical possibility in order for an injury to be temporary. A presumption exists that when restoration costs exceed the market value of the property, the injuries are considered permanent and the diminution in value rule applies, but the presumption of permanence can be overcome by statutory and common laws, such as environmental laws, that compel repair or replacement. However, the court held that a strict cap on restoration damages would equip the tortfeasor with the equivalent of a private right of inverse condemnation akin to a private right of eminent domain and would also fail to provide an adequate remedy for an injury to the environment or a special purpose property, such as an area with great ecological value but little or no commercial value. Evidence that restoration damages will be used to repair the damaged property may overcome the general rule in favor of diminution in value as the appropriate measure of damages. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007). See also Lampi v. Speed, 2011 MT 231, 362 Mont. 122, 261 P.3d 1000, in which the Supreme Court, applying and clarifying Sunburst and the restoration damages rule set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts 929, concluded that the District Court wrongly denied the plaintiff's motion to establish restoration damages as the appropriate measure of damages in the plaintiff's lawsuit to recover damages for lost trees and vegetation, and McEwen v. MCR, LLC, 2012 MT 319, 368 Mont. 38, 291 P.3d 1253, in which the Supreme Court concluded that a property owner may seek to recover restoration costs for a commercial family ranch, where the family lives and earns its living, in the same manner that a property owner may recover restoration damages for recreational or residential use.

Common-Law Action Not Usurped by Statutory Scheme for Environmental Remediation and Cleanup: Plaintiffs brought a common-law action against defendant for restoration damages related to environmental damage caused by defendant's refinery. Defendant asserted that the action would interfere with the statutory plan in the Comprehensive Environmental Cleanup and Responsibility Act (CECRA), Title 75, ch. 10, part 7, and contended that the common-law action was preempted by the statutory provisions. The Supreme Court disagreed. As set out in Brewington v. Employers Fire Ins. Co., 1999 MT 312, 297 M 243, 992 P2d 237 (1999), statutory preemption of common-law claims is limited to situations in which there are a direct conflict between statutes and a common-law claim. However, nothing in CECRA preempts a common-law claim that seeks to recover restoration damages beyond the statutes' health-based standards, and the court declined to add to CECRA a prohibition against common-law claims when the Legislature declined to do so. Sunburst School District No. 2 v. Texaco, Inc., 2007 MT 183, 338 M 259, 165 P3d 1079 (2007).

Damages Payable for Corporate Partner's Breach of Fiduciary Duty: In dissolving a corporation, the District Court found that one partner had breached a fiduciary duty to the corporation, causing damages. However, the District Court did not make a specific dollar finding for the amount of damages or award the corporation any compensation. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a determination of damages to be paid to the corporation by the partner who breached the fiduciary duty. Attorney fees were properly denied because the corporate agreement contained no provision for award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in a civil action. Sartori v. S&S Trucking, Inc., 2006 MT 164, 332 M 503, 139 P3d 806 (2006), following Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 2001 MT 28, 304 M 163, 19 P3d 223 (2001).

Jury Award Based on Contested Expenses — Sufficient Evidence to Support Verdict: Plaintiffs asserted that a new trial was warranted because the jury in a personal injury case returned a verdict of $9,873, which amounted to significantly less than plaintiffs' evidence of past and future medical expenses, loss of past and future wages, and pain and suffering. However, the District Court denied a new trial, and the Supreme Court affirmed, noting that if a jury award is insufficient to cover uncontested expenses, then it is not supported by substantial evidence, but that was not the case here. Evidence presented by both parties revealed a significant dispute in the nature, cause, and severity of the injury, the need for future treatment, the existence and amount of past and future wage loss, and pain and suffering. Based on the record of disputed expenses, there was substantial evidence to support the jury award, and the Supreme Court declined to retry the case or disturb the judgment, especially when the District Court had already upheld the sufficiency of the evidence on motion for a new trial. Jenks v. Bertelsen, 2004 MT 50, 320 M 139, 86 P3d 24 (2004).

Damages Proper for Delayed Sale of Property Blocked by Void Zoning Ordinance: Plaintiffs bought property for investment purposes, but the sale was blocked by a county zoning ordinance that was subsequently found to be void for vagueness. Despite the fact that plaintiffs had no actual contract to sell the property, the District Court held that plaintiffs were entitled to lost interest that they would have received had a sale occurred as planned and that plaintiffs did not fail to mitigate their damages. After examining the record, the Supreme Court held that the damage award was not an abuse of discretion. Yurczyk v. Yellowstone County, 2004 MT 3, 319 M 169, 83 P3d 266 (2004). See also Sletteland v. Roberts, 2000 MT 382, 304 M 21, 16 P3d 1062 (2000).

Jury Finding That Accident Did Not Result in Injury Supported by Substantial Evidence: Ele alleged that he was injured in a low-impact motor vehicle accident for which Ehnes admitted liability. The jury, however, found that Ele was not injured as a result of the accident, and Ele appealed, requesting that the zero damage award be set aside, in part based on a medical bill from the emergency room where Ele went after the accident and on the fact that Ehnes failed to refute the attending physician's testimony that Ele was injured and sustained damages. The Supreme Court declined to disturb the jury decision. The emergency room bill was not direct evidence that the visit was caused by the accident, but merely showed that Ele went to the emergency room. Also, notwithstanding that the physician found evidence of injury, the doctor's testimony showed that he was not aware of Ele's preexisting medical condition. Further, testimony at trial from several of Ele's coworkers showed that Ele had engaged in numerous activities following the accident that Ele later testified he was unable to do because of pain. It is the trier of fact that weighs the credibility of witnesses, and there was sufficient credible evidence for the jury to conclude that Ele had prior back problems and could do more than he claimed, that the doctor's opinion relied on an inaccurate medical history supplied by Ele, and that the accident was so minor that Ele suffered no injury necessitating an emergency room visit. Ele v. Ehnes, 2003 MT 131, 316 M 69, 68 P3d 835 (2003), following Magart v. Schank, 2000 MT 279, 302 M 151, 13 P3d 390 (2000), distinguishing Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), and Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400 (2000), and distinguished in Reis v. Luckett, 2015 MT 337, 381 Mont. 490, 362 P.3d 632.

Failure by Insurer to Present Facts to Controvert Testimony That Ongoing Medical Expenses Causally Related to Accident — Declaratory Judgment Proper: In Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400 (2000), the Supreme Court held that defendant insurer was liable for all expenses related to a collision involving Renville and remanded for a new trial on the issue of damages. Renville then asked the District Court for a declaratory judgment ordering defendant to pay for ongoing medical expenses incurred by Renville subsequent to trial. The District Court denied the request on grounds that factual issues existed regarding Renville's ongoing medical expenses that required resolution by a jury. Renville appealed, asserting that the court failed to follow the law of the case, and the Supreme Court agreed and reversed. Although an insurer is entitled to dispute its obligation to pay medical expenses, there must be a factual basis for doing so. Here, defendant insurer refused to pay Renville's ongoing medical expenses because the expenses were allegedly not causally related to the collision; however, the insurer failed to present any evidence to controvert Renville's expert testimony on causation, choosing instead to rely on testimony from the first trial that had been disregarded by the jury and that was not relevant to the issue of ongoing medical expenses. Thus, the District Court erred in failing to grant Renville's motion for declaratory judgment, and defendant insurer was required to pay Renville's ongoing medical expenses pursuant to Ridley v. Guarantee Nat'l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997), and the law of the case. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003), followed in Hoffman v. Austin, 2006 MT 289, 334 M 357, 147 P3d 177 (2006).

Damages for City's Wrongful Delay in Approving Preliminary Subdivision Plat: Plaintiff subdivider's certified valuation analyst presented evidence that because of the city's delay of its decision on an application for preliminary plat approval, the subdivider lost investment value of funds, and the subdivider testified that its property was devalued because of a decline in market value and that the subdivider incurred costs from the delay and suffered lost future investment value. The city claimed that the damages award should be modified. The Supreme Court concluded that the conditional plat approval ordered by the court should not eliminate or reduce the damages award and that it was not error for the District Court to decline to adjust the award. Kiely Constr. v. Red Lodge, 2002 MT 241, 312 M 52, 57 P3d 836 (2002).

Jury Award of Compensatory Damages Proportionate to Posttraumatic Stress Injuries — Affirmed: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. The jury held Payless liable and awarded Onstad $500,000 in compensatory damages. On appeal, Payless contended that the award was excessive and unsupported by the evidence. However, Onstad was entitled to reasonable compensation for any pain and suffering that she experienced and would reasonably probably experience in the future, and the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental pain and suffering. Only when the amount awarded is so grossly out of proportion as to shock the conscience will an appellate court intervene. In this case, Onstad was terrified during the attack and subsequently became withdrawn; her sense of safety, security, and self was violated; she felt extremely powerless; and her whole sense of self-esteem and self-confidence was affected. The amount of compensatory damages awarded was not so grossly disproportionate to Onstad's posttraumatic stress injury as to shock the conscience, and the Supreme Court declined to alter the award. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

No Error in Failure of Trial Court to Detail From Bench Its Analysis of Statutory Factors Regarding Award of Punitive Damages: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. The jury held Payless liable and awarded Onstad $500,000 in compensatory damages, plus an additional $1 million in punitive damages. On appeal, Payless contended that the trial court erred in approving punitive damages, asserting that Onstad did not prove actual malice, thereby failing to establish a necessary foundation for punitive damages, and that the court failed to adequately review the support for the award by enumerating from the bench its consideration of the statutory factors for approving punitive damages. The Supreme Court affirmed. The jury was instructed on malice and specifically found that Payless's conduct amounted to malice, a conclusion that was supported by the evidence. Further, it was immaterial that the trial court did not detail from the bench its analysis of each of the statutory factors as to the award of punitive damages. It was sufficient that the court made individual findings on each of the statutory factors in its subsequent written findings. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

Insufficient Evidence to Support Jury Verdict Limiting Damages to Past Medical Expenses but Not Pain and Suffering: Renville was injured as a passenger in an automobile accident in 1995, and liability was not contested. Evidence was uncontroverted that Renville had subsequently experienced pain and suffering as a result of the accident. The jury was instructed to award damages for past and future medical expenses, loss of earnings and earning capacity, pain and suffering, and loss of the ability to pursue an occupation and an established course of life. However, the jury limited its verdict to only past medical expenses, so Renville sought a new trial on grounds of insufficient evidence to support the award and irregularities in the proceedings. On review, the Supreme Court noted that a jury may not disregard uncontradicted, credible, nonopinion evidence. The court applied Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48 (1997), in holding that if a jury fails to award damages when the only evidence of record supports an award, that verdict is not supported by substantial evidence and may be set aside. Renville was entitled to some award for damages for proved pain and suffering, and the Supreme Court remanded for new trial limited to the issue of damages. Renville v. Taylor, 2000 MT 217, 301 M 99, 7 P3d 400, 57 St. Rep. 864 (2000). On remand, the District Court concluded that factual issues still existed as to the amount of Renville's past medical expenses and that the issues must be determined by a jury on retrial. The court found that the effect of the decision in Renville I, id., was to remand the entire issue of damages for a new trial. The Supreme Court disagreed. The decision in Renville I clearly stated that the award was limited to Renville's past medical expenses, which had been proved and awarded. Therefore, the law of the case precluded the District Court from revisiting the issue of Renville's past medical expenses on remand. It was an abuse of discretion for the District Court to deny Renville's motion for summary judgment and request for declaratory judgment on the issue of past medical expenses. Renville v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2003 MT 103, 315 M 295, 69 P3d 217 (2003). See also St. v. Gilder, 2001 MT 121, 305 M 362, 28 P3d 488 (2001), and *Carestia v. Unreasonable Compensatory Award for Loss of Established Course of Life — New Trial Proper: Maurer produced evidence to support an award of $90,000 for loss of established course of life. Instead, the jury awarded him $500,000, which was not supported in the record. The District Court did not err in ordering a new trial on compensatory damages. A reduction in a compensatory award is justified when the award substantially exceeds what the evidence can sustain. Maurer v. Clausen Distrib. Co., 275 M 229, 912 P2d 195, 53 St. Rep. 78 (1996), distinguished in Anderson v. Werner Enterprises, Inc., 1998 MT 333, 292 M 284, 972 P2d 806, 55 St. Rep. 1350 (1998).

Plaintiff Entitled to Damages for Pain and Suffering: When a jury found defendant liable for assault and battery and awarded damages for plaintiff's medical expenses, it was the jury's duty to award damages for pain and suffering for plaintiff's serious injuries. There was not substantial evidence to support the jury's failure to award damages for pain and suffering and hearing loss. Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854, 52 St. Rep. 268 (1995).

Crops Damaged by Spraying and Held for Sale at Higher Price Some Time After Harvest: In an action for negligent damage to crops caused by improper spraying, which caused a smaller crop, damages for the lost part of the crops were properly calculated on the basis of the amount that a bushel of the remaining crop was sold for minus the expense of growing and marketing it, rather than the market price on the date of harvest minus the growing and marketing costs. Although the plaintiffs waited for some time after harvest to sell, it is a common practice (and their common practice) engaged in to enable farmers to sell at a higher price than when there is a market glut at the time of harvest. Plaintiffs did not wait to sell in order to enhance their damages. Semenza v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Adding Interest Payments to Principal Not Failure to Mitigate: The plaintiff was unable to sell industrial revenue bonds due to the defendant's negligence and had to obtain a commercial construction loan. The plaintiff did not pay the interest on the loan for the first 2 years, and that amount was added to the principal, resulting in more interest paid by the plaintiff over the life of the loan. The defendant argued that the additional interest could not be recovered because that amount resulted from the plaintiff's failure to mitigate its damages. The Supreme Court held that the loan obtained by the plaintiff was the only one available and that the terms of the loan that allowed the "financing" of the interest expense was proper and reasonable and therefore the additional interest paid was a recoverable element of damages. Billings Clinic v. Peat Marwick Main & Co., 244 M 324, 797 P2d 899, 47 St. Rep. 1464 (1990).

No Offset for Tax Benefits Received by Plaintiff: The defendant claimed that the damage award received by the plaintiff should have been reduced by the amount of tax benefits that had passed through to the individual members of the plaintiff partnership. The Supreme Court held that it was speculative as to what tax benefit would be received by each individual member of the partnership and that offsets, like damages, had to be reasonably certain in their nature and origin to be recoverable. Billings Clinic v. Peat Marwick Main & Co., 244 M 324, 797 P2d 899, 47 St. Rep. 1464 (1990).

Amount of Damages — Standard of Review: The amount of damages is committed first to the discretion of the jury and next to the discretion of the trial judge who, in passing on a motion for a new trial, may set aside the verdict if it is not just. The standard of review for the Supreme Court is not the adequacy of the damages, but whether the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant a new trial. Davis v. Sheriff, 234 M 126, 762 P2d 221, 45 St. Rep. 1783 (1988). See also Daines v. Knight, 269 M 320, 888 P2d 904, 52 St. Rep. 8 (1995).

Compensatory Award Reasonably Computed and Supported by Credible Evidence: A bank attacked a compensatory award on the grounds that the amount included for excessive interest paid by plaintiffs was wrong on its face and that the amounts awarded for crop loss and other expenses were speculative. The Supreme Court found that although the compensatory award was in the nature of general damages and not broken down as to items used by the jury to compute the award, it was clear from the record that the award was based on amounts claimed by plaintiffs as items of damage. Further, although crop loss amounts were gross rather than net amounts, evidence of the losses appeared to be reasonably computed. Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Amount of Investments Represents Reasonable Measure of Damages: Bank appealed judgment awarding compensatory damages, based on the amount of shareholders' investments, to a commercial trout company upon a finding that failure of the trout farm was proximately caused by a breach of contract and misrepresentation by the bank and its agent. The Supreme Court held that the trial court acted reasonably and properly in determining that the damages suffered by the trout company were the amount of shareholders' investments at the time the bank entered the picture. Crystal Springs Trout Co. v. First State Bank of Froid, 225 M 122, 732 P2d 819, 44 St. Rep. 90 (1987).

Award of Grossly Excessive and Disproportionate Damages — Based on Passion or Prejudice: A jury award of $5 million in punitive damages, which was found to be 20,000% above the award for economic damage caused insured and 5,000% more than the maximum of the insurance policy, was held to be so grossly excessive and disproportionate to the injury as to shock one's conscience. Noting that appellate courts in most jurisdictions, including Montana, ordinarily defer to the discretion of the factfinder when reviewing punitive damage awards, the court found that as a matter of law this award must have been determined by passion or prejudice. On remittitur, the judgment was modified to an award of $1 million total. Safeco Ins. Co. v. Ellinghouse, 223 M 239, 725 P2d 217, 43 St. Rep. 1689 (1986). In a strong dissent, Mr. Justice Morrison noted no reversible error on any liability question and pointed out that up to this time "there is little, if any, precedent supporting the Montana Supreme Court substituting its judgment for that of the jury. Unfortunately that strong support for the jury system has now been dynamited. The majority announces loud and clear that from this day forward, four justices, robed in judicial omniscience, will replace our jury." Mr. Justice Sheehy, also dissenting, said that the "deleterious effect of the opinion in this case is its announcement that the right of a jury to set damages is hereafter subject to the consent of the majority of this Court".

Determination of Damages — "Good Sense": A District Court faced with widely varying estimates of value for services performed on an oral contract "split the difference" as a setoff to a recovery. The Supreme Court, recalling its decision in Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966), found that formulas may serve as useful guides in determining damages, but that the final answer rests in good sense rather than mechanical application of formulas. The "compromise" developed by the District Court was found to be well in line with contract principles. Hostetter v. Donlan, 221 M 380, 719 P2d 1243, 43 St. Rep. 909 (1986).

Substantial Evidence Supporting Award — Error to Grant New Trial: District Court committed error when it granted a new trial based on inadequacy of damages when jury awarded plaintiff $2,000 of which no more than $700 was for pain and suffering caused by injuries received in automobile accident. In reversing the grant of new trial and ordering entry of judgment on the jury's verdict, the Supreme Court stated that the jury is not compelled to believe plaintiff's testimony and that to allow the District Court to simply substitute its judgment for that of the jury when there is substantial evidence to support the jury award would "create a bench supremacy and sap the vitality of jury verdicts". Maykuth v. Eaton, 212 M 370, 687 P2d 726, 41 St. Rep. 1800 (1984), distinguished in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Loss of Tax Savings as Damages: Plaintiff offered to buy defendants' ranch. One of plaintiff's disclosed purposes for wanting the ranch was for investment tax credits and depreciation for income tax purposes. After much negotiation, plaintiff paid earnest money and the parties entered into a buy-sell agreement under which the chattels were to be transferred in 1981 and the real property in 1982. Defendants later presented plaintiff with new terms, claiming transfer in different years would cause loss of grazing permits. A Forest Service official offered three alternatives in a letter. Defendants chose the one alternative inconsistent with the buy-sell agreement. At trial for breach of contract, the District Court awarded plaintiff damages for tax losses. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff's gain of the investment tax credit upon performance of the contract was within the contemplation of the parties and reasonably foreseeable. Defendants' failure to perform their obligations under the contract negated the possibility of plaintiff's claiming the tax credits and was the legal cause of the lost opportunity. The damages were reasonably foreseeable and ascertainable and were properly awardable. Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984).

Plaintiffs Injured by Defendants' Intentionally Tortious Conduct Entitled to Damages for Pain and Suffering: In a dispute over who was entitled to lease a parcel of agricultural land, defendants intentionally interfered with plaintiffs' livestock and intentionally injured plaintiffs themselves. Plaintiffs sued defendants, and the jury found that the defendants had committed wrongful acts toward the plaintiffs which were the cause of the injuries sustained by the plaintiffs. The jury awarded plaintiffs their medical expenses and $10,000 each in punitive damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that because liability had been established, the jury should have awarded damages for pain and suffering for the serious injuries suffered. The case was remanded for trial on the damages issue. Gehnert v. Cullinan, 211 M 435, 685 P2d 352, 41 St. Rep. 372 (1984), opinion withdrawn for en banc rehearing and same opinion reissued at 211 M 435, 685 P2d 352, 41 St. Rep. 1474 (1984), distinguished in Walls v. Rue, 233 M 236, 759 P2d 169, 45 St. Rep. 1451 (1988), and followed in Thompson v. Bozeman, 284 M 440, 945 P2d 48, 54 St. Rep. 957 (1997).

Damages for Humiliation, Embarrassment, and Distress: The law does not require that any witness must express an opinion as to the amount of damages that would compensate for humiliation, distress, or embarrassment; the amount of the award rests of necessity in the sound discretion of the trier of fact. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Determination of Damages — Reason and Evidence: A judgment for damages must be supported by substantial evidence, and the damages must be the product of the exercise of calm and reasonable judgment. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Necessity of Precision: If there is strong evidence of the fact of damage, a defendant should not escape liability because the amount of damage cannot be proven with precision. Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982).

Liquidated Damages to Be Reasonable: In an action in which compensatory damages are awardable, liquidated damages awarded by the court must, under the rationale of Morgen & Oswood Constr. Co. v. Big Sky of Mont., 171 M 268, 557 P2d 1017 (1976), be shown to be reasonably related to actual damages sustained by a party. Lilienthal v. District Court, 200 M 236, 650 P2d 779, 39 St. Rep. 1711 (1982).

Excessiveness of Damages — Award for Back Injury and Loss of Earnings: Award of approximately $75,000 for impairment of earning capacity, $52,000 compensatory damages, and $15,000 punitive damages to plaintiff whose auto was hit from the rear on an icy road by defendant who was intoxicated did not constitute excessive damages. Plaintiff alleged that his back and neck were permanently injured and that as a result he would experience pain for the rest of his life whenever he participated in strenuous activities. He had been a manual laborer all his adult life, was out of work for 6 months after the accident, and fell and reinjured his back 9 months after the collision and had not returned to work as of the date of the opinion on appeal, April 15, 1982. Allers v. Willis, 197 M 499, 643 P2d 592, 39 St. Rep. 745 (1982).

Adverse Possession — Sufficiency of Damages: The appellants in an adverse possession case alleged there was insufficient evidence of the amount of damages to sustain the verdict against them. The Supreme Court considered delay rental receipts and lost profits. A judgment for damages must be supported by substantial evidence that it is not the product of mere guess or speculation. Substantial damages exist whenever the owner of property is deprived of the use of that property. Recovery of damages would not be denied provided the evidence was sufficient to afford a reasonable basis for determining the specific amount awarded. The court held that there was no uncertainty about the existence of substantial damages here. Cremer v. Cremer Rodeo Land & Livestock Co., 192 M 208, 627 P2d 1199, 38 St. Rep. 574 (1981).

Holder of Land Under Erroneous Judgment — Offset of Lease Payments: The trial court held that Fix was the owner of a state lease based on an oral agreement to assign the lease. The Supreme Court reversed the decision in Aye v. Fix, 176 M 474, 580 P2d 97 (1978). The rightful assignee of the lease contended it was error to permit Fix to offset from reasonable rental value the lease payments that Fix made to the state. The party to whom property has been awarded under an erroneous judgment may, upon reversal, deduct expenses that he necessarily incurred in the protection of that property and the payment of taxes and liens. The lease payments by Fix were an expense incurred to protect the property and therefore properly deducted from the stipulated rental. Aye v. Fix, 192 M 141, 626 P2d 1259, 38 St. Rep. 578A (1981).

Interest on Construction Loan as Reasonable Damages: In an action for damages caused by the defendants' breach of contract in refusing to complete the construction of a road for the plaintiff, the trial court did not err in granting the plaintiff interest damages for the difference between the cost of a home construction loan, conditioned upon completion of the road, at the time performance was due and at the time the plaintiff brought suit. These interest damages are not speculative and remote. The damages are prospective, but a reasonable certainty that future damages will occur will sustain an award for future damages. This test satisfies the statutory requirement that damages be reasonable. Julian v. Buckley, 191 M 487, 625 P2d 526, 38 St. Rep. 128 (1981).

Measure for Pain and Suffering Within Discretion of Fact Finder: In personal injury actions there is no measuring stick by which to determine the amount of damages to be awarded for pain and suffering other than the intelligence of a fair and impartial trier of fact governed by a sense of justice; each case must of necessity depend upon its own peculiar facts. Johnson v. U.S., 510 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 599 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Recovery for Expenses of Future Medical Treatment: In a trial on the issue of damages where plaintiff suffered severe physical damage causing him to be a quadriplegic, the court found that the plaintiff is entitled to recover the reasonable value of necessary expenses for any medical, surgical, hospital, and other services, care, and supplies that the finder of fact determines to be reasonably certain to be required in the future in the treatment of the plaintiff as the proximate result of the injury in question. The trier of fact found the compensation for 12 hours a day was a reasonable award even though plaintiff required 24-hour care. Johnson v. U.S., 510 F. Supp. 1039, 38 St. Rep. 599 (D.C. Mont. 1981).

Damages for Breach — When Speculative: In a case relating to the sale of an old log cabin, the trial court held that the buyer's costs of hiring a man to haul logs from the dismantled cabin were too speculative to recover. The proof of the damages was speculative at best. The log hauler did not testify about any debt, and the appellant did not produce a bill, although over a year had passed since the work was done for the appellant. Jeffery v. Neville, 190 M 300, 620 P2d 1218, 37 St. Rep. 1983 (1980).

Mitigation of Damages: Where mitigation of damages is concerned, the Supreme Court has supported the reasonable person test or the ordinarily prudent person test in property damage cases. The District Court properly submitted the mitigation issues to the jury on that basis here, a medical malpractice case, and the mandatory instruction requested by the doctor would have been improper where the evidence was conflicting or uncertain as to the duty of the injured party to submit to an operation. Frisnegger v. Gibson, 183 M 57, 598 P2d 574 (1979).

Review of Damage Award: The amount to be awarded as damages is properly left to the jury, and the court on appeal will not substitute its judgment for that of the jury particularly where, as here, the trial court has approved the verdict by denying a new trial. It is only where the amount awarded is so grossly out of proportion to the injury as to shock the conscience that the appellate court will intervene. Frisnegger v. Gibson, 183 M 57, 598 P2d 574 (1979), following Salvail v. Great N. Ry., 156 M 12, 473 P2d 549 (1970).

Damages in Action Against City: It was proper for the court to award a reasonable amount of damages for the continuing interference with the flow of plaintiff's irrigation water and the continuing flooding and discharge of polluted waters upon his land. Walton v. Bozeman, 179 M 351, 588 P2d 518 (1978).

Case Notes

Election of Remedies — Breach of Contract Damages Selected by Plaintiffs — Error for Court to Award Negligence Damages: The plaintiffs and the defendant city had an agreement whereby the city would collect fees from those hooking up to sewer lines that were constructed by the plaintiffs and then forward the payments to the plaintiffs. After the city failed to collect payments under the contract, the plaintiffs filed both contract and negligence claims against the city. Ultimately, the District Court required the plaintiffs to choose whether to pursue the contract claims or the negligence claims so as not to receive double damages, and the plaintiffs chose to pursue the contract claims. The District Court later awarded a small sum related to the negligence claims, and the city appealed the award to the Supreme Court. The court held that the District Court had erred by granting the award given the plaintiffs' election of contract damages and reversed it. Folsom v. Livingston, 2016 MT 238, 385 Mont. 20, 381 P.3d 539.

Improper Disallowance of Evidence of Costs in Developing Oil and Gas Claim: Under an oil and gas development agreement plaintiff was required to explore and develop claims and notify defendant. Defendant was then required to pay 75% of development costs in exchange for 75% of the profits. When defendant asserted that plaintiff had fraudulently developed a claim without informing defendant, the District Court denied the offset on grounds that plaintiff had breached the agreement and disallowed plaintiff's motion to introduce evidence of development costs. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Defendant was required to pay costs if allowed to benefit from the profits, so plaintiff's evidence of development costs should have been admitted. Textana, Inc. v. Klabzuba Oil & Gas, 2009 MT 401, 353 M 442, 222 P3d 580 (2009).

No Evidence of False Representation of Material Fact — Claim of Negligent Misrepresentation Properly Dismissed: Plaintiff claimed that vinyl siding was sold, furnished, and installed on her home under misleading circumstances because the installer failed to clearly identify the relationship with the siding manufacturer. However, plaintiff failed to specify any false statements made by either the installer or the manufacturer that led her to believe that this was true. Absent evidence demonstrating the primary element of the cause of action, plaintiff's negligent representation claim failed as a matter of law. Osterman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 2003 MT 327, 318 M 342, 80 P3d 435 (2003), following Yellowstone II Dev. Group, Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 M 223, 20 P3d 755 (2001).

No Statutory Shield From Liability for Joint and Severable Tortfeasors: Plaintiff received a default judgment against defendant in another case, and then amended this action to add defendants with the allegations involving the same actions that led to the default in the other case. The District Court granted summary judgment for defendants, concluding that plaintiff was barred from recovery by this section because plaintiff had already received a judgment against defendants and because granting judgment against additional defendants would allow plaintiff to recover more than the satisfaction of its losses. Plaintiff appealed and the Supreme Court reversed. Although the plain language of this section limits total recovery to the satisfaction of a plaintiff's losses for breach of an obligation unless otherwise provided by statute, the wording does not shield from liability any parties that may be jointly or severally liable or prevent a party from pursuing and receiving separate judgments against jointly and severally liable tortfeasors, even if more than one judgment entitles the plaintiff to the full amount of damages. The District Court's interpretation would effectively shield other tortfeasors who are jointly and severally liable simply because the plaintiff received a judgment or right of recovery against one of the tortfeasors, providing an effective route through which those tortfeasors could avoid liability, which is not the purpose or intent of this section. Trux, L.P. v. Mine & Mill Hydraulics, Inc., 2003 MT 20, 314 M 93, 63 P3d 1142 (2003).

Contract Remedy Providing Transfer of Twenty-Acre Parcel of Land as Security for Contractual Obligations Not Considered Unenforceable Liquidated Damages Provision — Award of Actual Damages Not Including Expectancy Damages and Lost Profits: As part of a sale of real property, Canton pledged a 20-acre parcel to Riverview Homes II, Ltd. (Riverview), as security in the event that Canton breached his contractual obligation to complete a proposed subdivision and construct an artificial lake. Canton breached the contract, and Riverview sought to quiet title to the 20-acre parcel. The District Court agreed that Canton breached the contract, but held that the contract remedy was an unenforceable liquidated damages provision because the amount of damages to be paid for breach of Canton's obligations was determined in anticipation of Canton's possible breach. The court then examined the contract for another possible method to determine the appropriate amount of damages, and ultimately awarded Riverview $92,046 as the amount that Riverview would have received for the sale of the property as bare lots without homes. Riverview appealed, contending that the contractual language was not a liquidated damages provision because the parties did not agree on the amount of compensation or damages to be paid by Canton in case of a breach of contract, and arguing that the District Court erred in setting the damage amount by failing to account for the profit that Riverview would have received from the sale of the lots with homes. The Supreme Court agreed that the contract language was not an unenforceable liquidated damages provision, but found that the discussion regarding liquidated damages was not essential to the resolution of the parties claims, and moved on to the actual award of damages. The Supreme Court declined to allow Riverview an award of speculative profits in the absence of lost profits attributable to Riverview's inability to sell developed lots. The District Court's determination of damages was affirmed. If the contract had been performed, Riverview would have had six bare lots approved as a subdivision and an artificial lake. Because of Canton's breach, Riverview had neither. The District Court's award accounted for the expectations of the parties at the signing of the contract, and Riverview was not allowed to recover a greater amount of damages than would have been gained by full performance of the contract. Riverview Homes II, Ltd. v. Canton, 2001 MT 309, 307 M 517, 38 P3d 848 (2001).

Defaulting Buyer Under Unambiguous Written Contract Cannot Rely Upon Expectations Not Covered by Contract to Avoid Contract — Disposition of Downpayment Amounts Paid and Due — County Not Liable for Negligent Misrepresentation as to Recordability of Deeds and Seller's Title Insurer Not Liable for Loss in Marketability: Documents for the sale and purchase of two sections of land unambiguously showed, and it was undisputed, that the resale of 20-acre parcels by the buyer, the immediate acceptance by the county of 20-acre resale deeds of a type that would make subdivision review unnecessary, and the ability to resell without having to undergo subdivision review were not parts of the bargain. The parties knew that these things were contemplated, but the documents did not refer to them or make them a part of the contract. Before the contract was made, the county indicated that it would accept the 20-acre resale deeds. The deal fell through when the county changed its position after the contract was signed. The buyer failed to pay the whole downpayment, and the seller terminated the contract and kept the paid portion of the downpayment. Precontract discussions on the matter must be disregarded as parol evidence because the documents were unambiguous and did not refer to the matter. The buyer was not entitled to rescind the contract and have the paid portion of the downpayment returned based on mutual mistake or failure of consideration. There was no mutual mistake because the parties knew that it was not a certainty that the county would accept the deeds. There was no failure of consideration because the resale, county acceptance of the deeds, and avoidance of subdivision review were not part of the written contract. In addition, the need for a subdivision review would not make the land unmarketable; at most, its market value decreased and it would take longer to sell it. Furthermore, a party in default is not entitled to rescission. The seller was entitled to terminate the contract. The seller was also entitled to keep an amount of the paid portion of the downpayment equal to the amount by which the contract price for the land exceeded the market value of the land at the time of the breach. The seller was not entitled to keep the remainder of the paid portion of the downpayment or to a judgment for the unpaid portion of the downpayment because the contract did not provide for that remedy. The county was not liable in tort to the seller for negligent misrepresentation, and the buyer's title insurance company was not liable to the seller for the loss in the marketability of the land caused by the need for subdivision review. Yellowstone II Dev. Group, Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 M 223, 20 P3d 755 (2001), overruled in Mary J. Baker Revocable Trust v. Cenex Harvest St., Cooperatives, Inc., 2007 MT 159, 338 M 41, 164 P3d 851 (2007), to the extent that Yellowstone II held that the determination of whether a term in a contract is ambiguous is not a question involving parol evidence.

Damages for Emotional Distress Improperly Awarded in Breach of Contract Action: Distinguishing emotional distress claims in a breach of contract action from emotional distress damage claims in tort actions, the Supreme Court applied 27-1-317 as the measure of damages to be used in tort actions and 27-1-311 for damages collectible under a breach of contract action, noting that 27-1-311 contains the additional limitation that the detriment must, in the ordinary course of things, be likely to result from the breach of contract and that damages must be clearly ascertainable in nature and origin. Lacking such a showing, the award of emotional damages in a breach of contract action constituted reversible error. Larson v. Udem, 246 M 336, 805 P2d 1318, 47 St. Rep. 2088 (1990).

Lessee's Breach of Agreement to Lease Office Renovated for Him: After defendant refused to move into office space plaintiff renovated under a lease agreement, a jury gave plaintiff damages for the value of the lease and for the renovation expenses. There was no improper double recovery in also granting the renovation expenses as damages when the two principal witnesses on the matter were plaintiff and his expert, who testified that there was little chance of leasing the renovated premises to someone else and that the premises would have to be completely rerenovated for any new tenant. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Award Properly Calculated: The defendant was awarded $23,000 for actual damages for contract on 23 colts. The court determined that there were 50 colts for the 3-year breeding period and that each party was entitled to 25 colts. Defendant received two of the colts, and the fair market value of the colts was $1,000 each. The award of $23,000 was therefore proper. Miller v. Watkins, 200 M 455, 653 P2d 126, 39 St. Rep. 1867 (1982).

Partial Performance — Restitution — Damages: A joint venture was formed, the contract contemplating the feeding of cattle by one party until 80% graded "choice", followed by sale and splitting of the proceeds with the supplier of the cattle, who was the second party. When cattle prices dropped, the feeder lost his financing and defaulted on the contract. The agreement was entire and nonseverable. Having failed in the complete performance of the contract, the feeder could not recover under it. Restitution to the feeder of his expenses before default would have to be based on implied contract theory. In order for a claim of restitution to lie, there must be no willful or intentional departure from the contract, and the defects in performance must not pervade the whole, or be so essential that the object which the parties intended to accomplish is not accomplished. The feeder could not recover his prior expenses because a party who has completely breached an entire, nonseverable contract without justification or excuse may not recover for any performance rendered prior to the breach. On the contrary, a counterclaim against the feeder for damages was upheld. Roundup Cattle Feeders v. Horpestad, 184 M 480, 603 P2d 1044 (1979), distinguishing Murphy v. Redland, 178 M 296, 583 P2d 1049 (1978).

Punitive Damages Instruction — Implied Malice: The trial court did not err in giving an instruction on implied malice that advised the jury that it is not necessary to show actual malice to recover punitive damages or in giving an instruction on punitive damages when it was clear from the record and a pretrial order that plaintiffs were bringing this case in tort, separate and distinct from any action arising out of contract. Harrington v. Holiday Rambler Corp., 176 M 37, 575 P2d 578 (1978).

Case Notes

Damages to Purchaser: This section and 27-1-314 must be construed together in determining damages in a case where the property of which the buyer is deprived has a peculiar value to him. Orford v. Topp, 136 M 227, 346 P2d 566 (1959).

Deprivation of Property: Similar statutes have been held applicable to cases involving damage to property in which an individual has had an interest or possession or has made special use thereof over a period of time and in which the property has acquired a value which was peculiar to that individual alone and where a measure of damages based on market value would be manifestly inadequate. Orford v. Topp, 136 M 227, 346 P2d 566 (1959).

Insufficient Evidence of Peculiar Value: Where there was no evidence to show any peculiar value to the plaintiffs in the property of which they were deprived, a verdict in excess of the difference between the price which the purchasers agreed to pay and the price for which the property was sold by the vendor was not supported. Orford v. Topp, 136 M 227, 346 P2d 566 (1959).

2005 Amendment: Chapter 130 at end of second sentence, deleted “or another nationally published used vehicle or appraisal guide approved by the department of revenue”; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective October 1, 2005.

2000 Amendment by Referendum — Not Codified: Chapter 515, L. 1999, at end of second sentence substituted “national appraisal guides referred to in 61-3-208” for “used car guides listed in 61-3-503(1)(c)”. Amendment effective November 7, 2000. The code commissioner has not codified this amendment because the Ch. 51 and Ch. 472, L. 1999, amendments substituted references to the specific guides for a reference to the location of the guides, rendering the Ch. 515 amendment meaningless.

1999 Amendments — Composite Section: Chapters 51 and 472 in second sentence substituted “most recent volume of the Mountain States Edition of the National Automobile Dealers Association (N.A.D.A.) Official Used Car Guide, the National Edition of N.A.D.A. Appraisal Guides Official Older Used Car Guide, or another nationally published used vehicle or appraisal guide approved by the department of revenue” for “used car guides listed in 61-3-503(1)(c)”. Case Notes

Survival Action — Written-Off Medical Care Expenses Cannot Be Recovered — Write-Off Not Collateral Source: The plaintiff brought a survival action related to her husband's death against the defendant, who conceded negligence. The plaintiff sought all medical expenses incurred for her husband's medical treatment even though the hospital, under its charitable care program, had written off some of its charges. The District Court concluded that, for a claim that accrued prior to the 2021 effective date of 27-1-308, a plaintiff cannot recover the reasonable value of medical care when those costs are written off; however, the write-off is not a collateral source within the meaning of 27-1-307. Gibson v. U.S., 2021 MT 309, 406 Mont. 450, 499 P.3d 1165.

Offset of Social Security Benefits Improper — District Court Reversed: A jury awarded the plaintiff $3.2 million in compensatory damages for the defendant's failure to warn about risks associated with a drug it manufactured. The District Court reduced the award to $2,657,257.32, in part because of Social Security benefits the plaintiff received and would receive in the future. Because the verdict did not provide a “line-item” breakdown of the damages, the District Court did not comply with 27-1-308, which allows a jury award to be reduced only by amounts attributable to losses compensated by collateral sources. There was no factual basis for the offset, so the judgment of the District Court was reversed and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Applicable Standard for Evaluating Damages for Parasitic Emotional Distress Claims—Sacco Standard Applicable Only to Independent Claims of Negligent or Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress: The “serious or severe” standard for emotional distress announced in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), applies only to independent claims of negligent or intentional infliction of emotional distress. For claims of emotional distress as an element of damage for an underlying tort claim, known as parasitic emotional distress damages, the Supreme Court adopted the standard set forth in Montana Pattern Jury Instruction 25.02, 15.01-03, as cited in Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008), that when emotional distress damages are allowed in the absence of independent tort claims, an instruction should be given that the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental and emotional suffering and distress. Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), followed in Ammondson v. NW. Corp., 2009 MT 331, 353 M 28, 220 P3d 1 (2009), and McVey v. USAA Cas. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 346, 372 Mont. 511, 313 P.3d 191, and overruling Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P2d 209 (1984), Noonan v. First Bank Butte, 227 M 329, 740 P2d 631 (1987), First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P2d 84 (1989), and similar cases that suggest that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

Emotional Distress Over Loss of Adult Child Not So Severe as to Be Compensable: Plaintiff argued that she suffered extreme emotional distress as the result of her son’s death, allegedly caused by defendant’s negligence. Applying the test for emotional distress in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P2d 411 (1995), the District Court held that plaintiff’s emotional distress was insufficiently severe to support her claim, so defendant’s motion for summary judgment was granted. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that plaintiff’s testimony that “life goes on” and that it was a loss that she “must learn to deal with” showed a philosophical strength that would likely be absent in a case of severe emotional distress. Plaintiff’s emotional distress was not so severe as to rise to the level of a compensable claim, so the District Court was affirmed. Renville v. Fredrickson, 2004 MT 324, 324 M 86, 101 P3d 773 (2004).

Separate and Distinct Claims Against Multiple Defendants — Settlement Proceeds of One Defendant Not Offset Against Settlement Against Another Defendant: Plaintiffs entered a settlement and release agreement with one defendant, apportioning the settlement proceeds to plaintiffs’ claim for emotional distress, and releasing that defendant. Damages were awarded on plaintiffs’ claim against another defendant, Schonrock, for violating the Montana Unfair Trade Practices and Consumer Protection Act of 1973. Schonrock claimed to be entitled to an offset of the emotional distress settlement against the verdict based on violation of the Act. The District Court denied the offset, and the Supreme Court affirmed. Under Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002 (2000), a dollar-for-dollar pro tanto offset reduction applies only if two or more concurrent or joint tortfeasors cause a single invisible harm. Here, the award of damages by the jury and the settlement proceeds were the result of separate and distinct injuries, so an offset of the settlement against the damages was not appropriate. Plath v. Schonrock, 2003 MT 21, 314 M 101, 64 P3d 984 (2003). See also Jim’s Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994).

Social Security Survivorship Benefits for Decedent’s Lost Earnings Not Within Definition of “Collateral Source”: Social Security survivorship benefits paid to the decedent’s wife to compensate her for the decedent’s lost earnings were not within this section’s definition of a collateral source and could not be deducted from a judgment intended to cover the decedent’s lost earnings. The definition of “collateral source” specifically refers to Social Security medical expense and disability payments and does not refer to Social Security survivorship payments for lost earnings. The lost earnings survivorship payments are not included in the definition’s phrase “any other public program” because that phrase is limited by the more specific reference to “medical expenses and disability payments”. The lost earnings survivorship payments are not included in the definition’s phrase “any other source” because that phrase means any source other than those identified and addressed in the definition and the definition addresses Social Security benefits. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

No Basis for Court to Award Offset Against Judgment Entered Against Defendant: Columbus Hospital argued that the amount of death benefits received by the Busta estate from the Veterans Benefits Administration should have been deducted from the judgment entered against the hospital for Busta's death. The Supreme Court held that the jury award did not specify what portion, if any, of the award was for the loss of financial support and therefore even if the Veterans Administration death benefits were a "collateral source" subject to being offset, there was no basis for the lower court to determine what amount of the award was subject to being offset. The Supreme Court also stated that it would not make a determination of whether or not the death benefits were to be construed as a collateral source under this section. Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996).

(b) the amount the plaintiff paid from the date of injury to the date of judgment; and

(c) the present value of the amount the plaintiff is obligated to pay to keep the policy in force for the period for which any reduction of an award is made pursuant to subsection (3)"; in (3) near beginning after "jury shall determine its award" inserted "for the reasonable value of medical services or treatment", after "without consideration of any" substituted "charges for medical services or treatment that were included on health care providers' bills but resolved by way of contractual discount, price reduction, disallowance, gift, writeoff, or otherwise not paid" for "collateral sources. After the jury determines its award, reduction of the award must be made by the trial judge at a hearing and upon a separate submission of evidence relevant to the existence and amount of collateral sources", and at end substituted "Evidence to establish the reasonable value of medical services or treatment is limited to evidence identifying the amounts actually" for "Evidence admissible at the hearing to show that the plaintiff has been or may be reimbursed from a collateral source that does not have a subrogation right. The amount deposited and any interest on that amount are subject to the further order of the court, pursuant to the requirements of this section"; inserted (3)(c) regarding future medical services or treatment and excluding certain evidence; inserted (4) regarding reduction in a plaintiff's award based on prior payment of costs for medical services or treatment; in (5) after "state or federal law" inserted "or provided by contract" and after "from a collateral source" substituted "for an award entered as provided in subsection (2)" for "if an award is reduced by that amount under subsection (1)"; and made minor changes in style. Amendment effective April 30, 2021.

Survival Action — Written-Off Medical Care Expenses Cannot Be Recovered — Write-Off Not Collateral Source: The plaintiff brought a survival action related to her husband's death against the defendant, who conceded negligence. The plaintiff sought all medical expenses incurred for her husband's medical treatment even though the hospital, under its charitable care program, had written off some of its charges. The District Court concluded that, for a claim that accrued prior to the 2021 effective date of 27-1-308, a plaintiff cannot recover the reasonable value of medical care when those costs are written off; however, the write-off is not a collateral source within the meaning of 27-1-307. Gibson v. U.S., 2021 MT 309, 406 Mont. 450, 499 P.3d 1165.

Failure of District Court to Dismiss Case — Unfair Trade Practices Claim Not Precluded by Insurance Settlement— Collateral Source Reduction Subject to Review: The District Court erred in granting the defendants' motion to dismiss by relying on Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 Mont. 67, 155 P.3d 1278, and concluding as part of a declaratory judgment action that a justiciable controversy did not exist. Unlike Miller, the plaintiff was litigating a claim under existing rights or interests provided for in the Unfair Trade Practices Act (UTPA). The plaintiff and the defendants, two insurance companies, entered into and completed a settlement. Once the defendant insurers entered into a settlement with the plaintiff, the insurers became subject to the UTPA. Under the UTPA, insurers have duties and obligations regarding their settlement practices to an insured or third-party claimant. Thus, the parties had existing and genuine rights arising from the UTPA. The first requirement to find a justiciable controversy under the Uniform Declaratory Judgments Act therefore was met. A judgment in the plaintiff's case would determine the parties' rights, status, or legal relationship by deciding whether the defendant insurers reduced the plaintiff's damages by applying the collateral source statute pursuant to 27-1-308. Assuming the defendant insurers unlawfully reduced the plaintiff's damages by relying on the collateral source rule, the plaintiff would be able to seek recovery. Marshall v. Safeco Ins. Co., 2018 MT 45, 390 Mont. 358, 413 P.3d 828, distinguishing Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 Mont. 67, 155 P.3d 1278.

Failure to Inform of Prenatal Tests — Collateral Source Prohibition — Expert Disclosure: The plaintiff had a child that was born with cystic fibrosis. The plaintiff alleged that her health care providers did not sufficiently inform her that a test she received while pregnant would only test for Down syndrome and certain other abnormalities but not cystic fibrosis. At trial, the plaintiff introduced testimony relating to her insurance coverage and medical expenses to counter defense assertions that she would have declined medical services because of cost and to establish her mental anxiety. However, the plaintiff objected when the District Court permitted the jury to hear similar evidence when elicited by the defense, because it violated the collateral source prohibition in 27-1-308. On appeal, the Supreme Court found that the District Court properly applied the rule of curative admissibility or opening the door doctrine because the plaintiff introduced collateral source information herself. Additionally, the Supreme Court found that the District Court properly allowed an expert witness to testify because his expert disclosure covered his testimony topics and comments made by the defense counsel were not properly objected to or were properly allowed. Evans v. Scanson, 2017 MT 157, 388 Mont. 69, 396 P.3d 1284.

Amount Billed by Hospital for Medical Bills Relevant — Evidence Not Limited to Amount Paid by Insurance — Supervisory Control Granted — District Court Order Vacated: In a wrongful death suit between the estate of the deceased and the defendant, the District Court granted the defendant's motion in limine to restrict the evidence regarding medical bills to the amount covered by insurance instead of the amount billed by the hospital. The District Court concluded that despite the higher amount billed, the estate had no exposure or obligation to pay any charges beyond those actually paid by insurance. The estate sought a writ of supervisory control, and the Supreme Court directed the District Court to vacate the order regarding the medical bills. The Supreme Court reasoned that under 27-1-308, a jury is required to determine its award without consideration of any collateral source. As applied, the payments made by insurance were clearly a collateral source. Meek v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2015 MT 130, 379 Mont. 150, 349 P.3d 493.

Offset of Social Security Benefits Improper — District Court Reversed: A jury awarded the plaintiff $3.2 million in compensatory damages for the defendant's failure to warn about risks associated with a drug it manufactured. The District Court reduced the award to $2,657,257.32, in part because of Social Security benefits the plaintiff received and would receive in the future.

Because the verdict did not provide a “line-item” breakdown of the damages, the District Court did not comply with 27-1-308, which allows a jury award to be reduced only by amounts attributable to losses compensated by collateral sources. There was no factual basis for the offset, so the judgment of the District Court was reversed and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Stevens v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 2010 MT 282, 358 Mont. 474, 247 P.3d 244.

Evidentiary Hearing to Determine Collateral Sources Required Following Jury Award: Under 27-1-308(3), the jury is required to determine its award without consideration of any collateral sources. After a jury award, the trial judge must hold an evidentiary hearing to determine the existence and amount of collateral sources. Tucker v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2009 MT 247, 351 M 448, 215 P3d 1 (2009).

Failure of District Court to Rule Whether Collateral Source Reduction Applicable During Settlement Negotiations — Declaratory Judgment Inappropriate Absent Justiciable Controversy: Miller sought a declaratory judgment in District Court concerning whether this section regarding collateral source reduction could be applied by insurance companies when evaluating cases and making settlement offers. Miller’s motion for a declaratory judgment was denied, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Before a court may exercise declaratory judgment jurisdiction, a justiciable controversy must exist. Seeking a declaratory judgment too early in the proceedings, when other remedies are still available, may amount to an advisory opinion. Here, Miller was requesting the District Court to interject its opinion regarding what factors and circumstances parties may consider in negotiating a settlement. As a matter of state policy, settlement is encouraged, and once a settlement is reached, courts can enforce the agreement. Insurers have a duty to attempt in good faith to negotiate prompt, fair, and equitable settlements in cases in which liability is reasonably clear. In this case, a dispute existed over the settlement amount, but there was no justiciable controversy regarding the existing and genuine rights or interests of the parties. Neither party was legally obligated to settle, nor can a court dictate what factors a party may or may not consider while engaging in a voluntary settlement process. Absent a justiciable controversy, a declaratory judgment was inappropriate. Miller v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2007 MT 85, 337 M 67, 155 P3d 1278 (2007), following Northfield Ins. Co. v. Mont. Ass’n of Counties, 2000 MT 256, 301 M 472, 10 P3d 813 (2000), and distinguishing Ridley v. Guar. Nat’l Ins. Co., 286 M 325, 951 P2d 987 (1997).

No Collateral Source Reduction of Judgment for Workers’ Compensation Payments: Because a workers’ compensation insurer is entitled under 39-71-414 to subrogation for all compensation and benefits paid or to be paid, payments may not be deducted from a judgment as a collateral source under this section, which allows a collateral source deduction from a judgment, but not if the collateral source payor has a subrogation right. Therefore, the trial court properly refused to deduct ongoing workers’ compensation death benefits and erroneously deducted workers’ compensation medical and funeral expense payments. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000), followed, with regard to a claim brought against a third-party tortfeasor pursuant to 39-71-412, in Haman v. Maco Ins. Co., 2004 MT 44, 320 M 108, 86 P3d 34 (2004).

No Constitutional Right to Attorney Fees or to Reduction of Collateral Source or Settlement Offset by Plaintiffs’ Attorney Fees: The right to full legal redress contained in Art. II, sec. 16, Mont. Const., is limited to the recovery of those damages provided by the general tort law, and pursuant to the American Rule on attorney fees, attorney fees are not damages recoverable pursuant to the general tort law because it pertains to survival and wrongful death actions. Montana Supreme Court cases that include the costs of recovery in the concept of full compensation and that relate to equitable principles unique to the law of legal subrogation are inapplicable to the constitutional issue of whether full legal redress under the constitution requires payment of attorney fees. Montana’s common law has followed the American Rule that attorney fees are not an element of damages unless expressly provided by statute or contract. Attorney fees are the subject of a contract between a party and the party’s attorney. They are what the party chooses to do with part of the recovered damages, based on a prior agreement. Therefore, the right to full legal redress does not create a right to attorney fees, and the defendant’s right to have collateral source and settlement payments offset against the judgment was not subject to a right of the plaintiff to have the offset amount reduced by the plaintiffs’ attorney fees. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Offsetting Judgment by Amount of Settlement or Collateral Source Payment Not Denial of Full Compensation for Loss: An offset against a judgment of an amount received through settlement or from a collateral source does not deny full compensation for a loss. It simply ensures a single recovery for a single injury. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Standard of Review: The reduction of a jury award on the basis of a collateral source statute, an award of judgment interest on the basis of a statute, or an offset of a judgment based on a plaintiff's prior settlement with another tortfeasor is a question of law and is reviewed to decide whether the lower court correctly applied the law. Schuff v. A.T. Klemens & Son, 2000 MT 357, 303 M 274, 16 P3d 1002, 57 St. Rep. 1499 (2000).

Full Compensation Required Prior to Collateral Source Reduction: Prior to any collateral source reduction under this section, two requirements must be met: (1) the total award against all defendants must be in excess of $50,000; and (2) the plaintiff must be fully compensated. The statute also provides that it is a plaintiff's recovery that must be reduced by any amount paid or payable from a collateral source without a subrogation right, not a plaintiff's award, to ensure that a plaintiff's eventual recovery has a ceiling no higher than the full amount of the award, minus the appropriate collateral offsets. If an injured party receives an award of monetary damages against a judgment-proof defendant, it cannot be said that the party will be fully compensated because full compensation indicates that full payment must be made. Here, defendants sought a collateral source reduction after paying plaintiffs about $750,000 of a judgment in excess of $3 million. Based on the clear language of this section requiring full compensation, the District Court did not err in denying defendants' request for a collateral source reduction. Shilhanek v. D-2 Trucking, Inc., 2000 MT 16, 298 M 101, 994 P2d 1105, 57 St. Rep. 89 (2000).

Collateral Source Reduction of Insured's Verdict Against Insurer in Amount of Medical Benefits Insurer Had Paid Insured: Insured's action against her insurer for injuries sustained in a motor vehicle accident was "an action arising from bodily injury or death" within the meaning of those words as used in this section. The Supreme Court did not accept insured's claim that her action was in contract and that this section did not apply because this section applies to tort actions, not contract actions. The lower court properly used medical benefits payments to insured by the insurer as a collateral source reduction from the jury verdict. Liedle v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 283 M 129, 938 P2d 1379, 54 St. Rep. 528 (1997).

No Basis for Court to Award Offset Against Judgment Entered Against Defendant: Columbus Hospital argued that the amount of death benefits received by the Busta estate from the Veterans Benefits Administration should have been deducted from the judgment entered against the hospital for Busta's death. The Supreme Court held that the jury award did not specify what portion, if any, of the award was for the loss of financial support and therefore even if the Veterans Administration death benefits were a "collateral source" subject to being offset, there was no basis for the lower court to determine what amount of the award was subject to being offset. The Supreme Court also stated that it would not make a determination of whether or not the death benefits were to be construed as a collateral source under 27-1-307. Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996).

Statute of Limitations Applicable to Subrogee in Insurance Claim: St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company (St. Paul), as subrogee, sought to recover from Glassing a payment made to its insured Lynn for underinsured motorist coverage, interest, and costs. Montana has no statutory authority extending the statute of limitations for subrogation claims in such cases. Because an insurer's claim is derived from that of the insured, St. Paul's claim was subject to the same defenses, including the statute of limitations, as though the action were sued upon by the insured and St. Paul had no claim for its damages independent of Lynn's claim. An insurer's right to subrogation attaches upon paying an insured's loss; thus, the 3-year statute of limitations in 27-2-204 applied to St. Paul's claim in the same manner that the original action brought by Lynn and, when raised after the 3-year limit, was time-barred. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Glassing, 269 M 76, 887 P2d 218, 51 St. Rep. 1437 (1994), followed in Nimmick v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 270 M 315, 891 P2d 1154, 52 St. Rep. 208 (1995). See also Skaug v. Mtn. St. Tel. & Tel., 172 M 521, 565 P2d 628 (1977), and Beedie v. Shelly, 187 M 556, 610 P2d 713 (1980).

Constitutionality of Statute Left Undecided: The plaintiffs argued that this section is unconstitutional because it distinguishes between awards exceeding $50,000 and those not exceeding $50,000. The Supreme Court stated that since it was remanding the case for a new trial on other grounds, it was not convinced that the plaintiffs had standing to challenge the statute's constitutionality. Knutson v. Barbour, 266 M 170, 879 P2d 696, 51 St. Rep. 749 (1994).

27-1-310. Damages for emotional or mental distress prohibited in contract actions — exception.

Case Notes

Emotional Distress Damages Properly Awarded by Jury for Property-Related Distress — Plaintiffs Showed Personal-Identity Connection to Family Farms — No Physical Injury Required for Claim Rooted in Tort — Sufficient Evidence Supports Jury Award — No Abuse of Discretion. Romo v. Shirley, 2022 MT 249, 411 Mont. 111, 522 P.3d 401, following Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 Mont. 213, 994 P.2d 1124, and Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169, and distinguished in Childress v. Costco Wholesale Corp., 2021 MT 192, 405 Mont. 113, 493 P.3d 314.

Denial of Tort Claims Affirmed — Evidence Relating to Contract Claim and Damages Properly Admitted — Special Relationship Contract Damages Unavailable: The plaintiff accepted a job offer by the defendant, a health clinic. Before the plaintiff began her new job but after she informed her employer she was leaving, the defendant informed the plaintiff that it would not be employing her. The plaintiff sued, alleging breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and promissory estoppel. In a subsequent action to Great Falls Clinic v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2016 MT 245, 385 Mont. 95, 381 P.3d 550, the District Court denied the plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment that sought to establish a "special relationship" in which the plaintiff sought damages for emotional distress, loss of enjoyment of life, embarrassment, anxiety, and punitive damages. The District Court denied the plaintiff's request to amend her complaint to add additional tort claims in addition to holding that the only issue to be tried was the damages for the breach of contract. At trial, the jury awarded contract damages. On appeal and cross-appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly determined that the only claim to be tried was the damages for breach of contract, that the elements to demonstrate a contract involving a special relationship were not met, that evidence of the plaintiff's contract expectations were relevant to the determination of expectancy damages, that efforts by the plaintiff's counsel to admit evidence not germane to the contract claim did not ultimately prejudice the jury, that the plaintiff presented sufficient evidence that her damages were appropriate and reasonably incurred, and that the denial of a jury instruction that the contract term was only for a year under 39-2-602 was proper. Warrington v. Great Falls Clinic, LLP, 2019 MT 111, 395 Mont. 432, 443 P.3d 369.

Award for Emotional Distress Proper When Based on Claims Not Tied to Breach of Contract: The Whites entered into a construction contract with Longley for the construction of their home. Subsequently, Longley failed to build a house that could be occupied or salvaged. In addition to other damages, the trial court awarded the Whites a sum for emotional distress, and Longley argued that such an award could not be made for breach of contract. The Supreme Court upheld the award on the basis that in addition to breach of contract, the trial court also found that Longley had acted negligently and fraudulently. White v. Longley, 2010 MT 254, 358 Mont. 268, 244 P.3d 753.

No Recovery of Damages for Mental Distress for Negligent Handling of Dead Body: The family of the deceased, when viewing the body, observed a stain on the clothing that was determined to be caused by leaking embalming fluid. The Supreme Court held that there could be no recovery for mental distress based upon breach of contract because the family members had not been personally injured as required by this section. Contreras v. Michelotti-Sawyers & Nordquist Mortuary, Inc., 271 M 300, 896 P.2d 1118, 52 St. Rep. 454 (1995). See also Meech v. Hillhaven W., Inc., 238 M 21, 776 P.2d 488 (1989).

Emotional Distress Damages — Error to Submit to Jury: Jury instruction on emotional distress damages was improper when the evidence was insufficient to raise a question of fact about the existence of severe emotional distress. Defendant's cross-claim alleged only that he felt bad, lost sleep, and became withdrawn as a result of the defendant's failure to release plaintiff's personal guaranty in violation of the alleged agreement. The Supreme Court endorsed the severe emotional distress standard found in the Restatement (Second) of Torts, holding that the adoption of the standard was only a new interpretation of the existing "significant impact" requirement and not a departure from prior law. First Bank-Billings v. Clark, 236 M 195, 771 P.2d 84, 46 St. Rep. 291 (1989), followed in Lence v. Hagadone Inv., 258 M 433, 853 P.2d 1230, 50 St. Rep. 601 (1993), and affirmed in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P.2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), to the extent that it addressed the "serious" or "severe" element articulated in Sacco v. High Country Independent Press, Inc., 271 M 209, 896 P.2d 411, 52 St. Rep. 407 (1995), which is synonymous with the "significant impact" element found in Johnson v. Supersave Mkt., Inc., 211 M 465, 686 P.2d 209, 41 St. Rep. 1495 (1984). First Bank-Billings and Johnson were overruled in Jacobsen v. Allstate Ins. Co., 2009 MT 248, 351 M 464, 215 P3d 649 (2009), to the extent that First Bank-Billings and Johnson suggest that a plaintiff must make a threshold showing of serious or severe emotional distress before a claim for parasitic emotional distress damages is allowed to go to the jury.

Award for Mental Anguish Caused by Wrongful Attachment of Property: A jury award of $5,000 for mental anguish was warranted where, due to wrongful attachment of property, plaintiff was unable to sleep; suffered embarrassment because of the inability to pay bills; discontinued attendance at club and board meetings; and generally avoided public contact due to embarrassment. Stensvad v. Towe, 232 M 378, 759 P2d 138, 45 St. Rep. 1129 (1988).

GENERAL

Summary Judgment Appropriate When Issues Raised for First Time on Appeal — No Evidence Presented Showing That Operation of Day-Care Service Without License Caused Financial Harm. Kostelecky v. Peas in a Pod, LLC, 2022 MT 195, 410 Mont. 239, 518 P.3d 840.

Breach of Contract Between Defendant and Involuntarily Dissolved LLC — 6 Years to Wind Up Business Not Reasonable — Summary Judgment in Favor of Defendant Proper: In 2003, the plaintiff created a limited liability company (LLC), of which he was the only listed member and agent. The plaintiff and his wife later leased property to the LLC, which in turn subleased it to the defendant for mining. Approximately 6 years later, the plaintiff, both individually and as an agent of the LLC, filed a complaint against the defendant seeking unpaid royalties. During litigation, the plaintiff learned that the LLC had been involuntarily dissolved 6 years earlier after failing to file an annual report. The plaintiff then created another LLC with the same name as the dissolved LLC. Nevertheless, the District Court determined that the plaintiff lacked standing to sue on behalf of the dissolved LLC and granted the defendant summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that 6 years exceeded a reasonable amount of time for the LLC to wind up its business affairs. The Supreme Court further concurred that neither the plaintiff individually nor the new LLC had standing to sue the defendant since neither was a party to the sublease. Deschamps v. Farwest Rock, Ltd., 2020 MT 270, 402 Mont. 15, 474 P.3d 1282.

Ambiguous Contract — Contract Construction — Award of Certain Damages Reversed: The plaintiff, a real estate brokerage firm, entered into an investment agreement with the defendant, a Montana corporation, to make three installment payments in exchange for a 33.33% interest in the plaintiff business. The defendant made the first two installment payments but refused to make the final payment. Following a bench trial, the District Court found that the contract was ambiguous, the mutual intention of the parties at the time of contracting was for the defendant to be an equal owner after making three payments, and that the defendant breached the investment agreement by not making the third payment while the plaintiff breached the operating agreement by withholding access to various financial records and information. The District Court awarded prejudgment interest, attorney fees and costs, and damages to both parties. Both parties appealed. The Supreme Court held that the District Court correctly ascertained the parties' mutual intent and that the agreement was ambiguous. However, the Supreme Court also held that the District Court lacked sufficient evidence to award damages for the plaintiff's breach of the operating agreement claims. AWIN Real Estate, LLC v. Whitehead Homes, Inc., 2020 MT 225, 401 Mont. 218, 472 P.3d 165.

Issue Preclusion and Claim Preclusion Inapplicable — Tort Claim in Motor Vehicle Accident Not Identical to Underinsured Motorist Contract Claim Against Insurer: The plaintiff recovered damages arising from injuries sustained in an automobile accident from the insurance company of the person that hit him in the full amount of the policy limit. The plaintiff also filed a separate underinsured motorist claim against his own insurance company. The plaintiff's insurance company, as the defendant in the second court action, moved for summary judgment, arguing that the underinsured motorist claim was barred by the doctrines of issue preclusion and claim preclusion because the plaintiff had recovered damages from another party. The District Court affirmed the motion and the Supreme Court reversed, holding that the defendant's underinsured motorist claim was not barred by either the doctrine of issue preclusion or claim preclusion. The related common-law doctrines of issue preclusion and claim preclusion, also known as collateral estoppel and res judicata, respectively, exist to preclude future litigation of a final judgment. Issue preclusion bars the same parties or their privies from relitigating issues in a second suit that is based on a "different cause of action". Claim preclusion bars a second suit involving the same parties or their privies based on the "same cause of action". The defendant's issue preclusion and claim preclusion arguments failed, because the personal injury issue decided in the prior adjudication was not identical to the contractual issue in the underinsured motorist claim. Reisbeck v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 2020 MT 171, 400 Mont. 345, 467 P.3d 557.

Election of Remedies — Breach of Contract Damages Selected by Plaintiffs — Error for Court to Award Negligence Damages: The plaintiffs and the defendant city had an agreement whereby the city would collect fees from those hooking up to sewer lines that were constructed by the plaintiffs and then forward the payments to the plaintiffs. After the city failed to collect payments under the contract, the plaintiffs filed both contract and negligence claims against the city. Ultimately, the District Court required the plaintiffs to choose whether to pursue the contract claims or the negligence claims so as not to receive double damages, and the plaintiffs chose to pursue the contract claims. The District Court later awarded a small sum related to the negligence claims, and the city appealed the award to the Supreme Court. The court held that the District Court had erred by granting the award given the plaintiffs' election of contract damages and reversed it. Folsom v. Livingston, 2016 MT 238, 385 Mont. 20, 381 P.3d 539.

Conditional Buy-Sell Agreement — Alleged Intentional Interference With Agreement — Judgment as Matter of Law For Defendants Proper: The plaintiff entered into a buy-sell agreement to purchase land. The agreement placed certain conditions on the purchase. Ultimately, the deal fell through and one of the defendants purchased the land. The plaintiff also sued his real estate agent who had represented him but who later represented the purchaser of the land and the adjacent property owner. The District Court granted the defendants judgment as a matter of law on the plaintiffs' claim for intentional interference with the buy-sell contract. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, agreeing that the plaintiff had not presented proof that any of the defendants had prevented him from completing the purchase. Wagner v. MSE Technology Applications, Inc., 2016 MT 215, 384 Mont. 436, 383 P.3d 727.

District Court's Application of Montana Law Improper — Motion to Apply Michigan Law Improperly Denied as Untimely — Breach of Contract: In an action involving several complex business transactions, before the District Court's final pretrial motion date, the defendant bank moved that the District Court apply Michigan law. The District Court denied the motion as untimely. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. The Supreme Court declined to hold that choice-of-law motions constituted an affirmative defense, finding instead that the parties negotiated a clear and unambiguous choice-of-law provision that applied Michigan law. As a result, the District Court improperly allowed the jury to consider issues of constructive fraud, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, deceit, and punitive damages. Masters Group Int'l, Inc. v. Comerica Bank, 2015 MT 192, 380 Mont. 1, 352 P.3d 1101.

Breach of Insurance Contract — Stipulated Judgment Not Proper Measure of Damages: The victim of a car accident in which her father was killed entered into a stipulated settlement and judgment with the negligent driver, her mother, for $2.7 million. The insurer refused to pay the stipulated judgment. After the Supreme Court ruled that the insurer had improperly denied her claim, the plaintiff filed a claim for breach of the insurance contract and sought damages in the amount of the stipulated judgment. While the Supreme Court agreed that the insurer had breached the insurance contract, it did not agree that the judgment reflected the proper amount of damages and remanded the case to the District Court to determine the amount of damages, if any, related to the insurer's breach of the contract. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer, 2013 MT 301, 372 Mont. 191, 312 P.3d 403.

Reasonable Basis in Law for Denial — No Application to Claim for Breach of Contract: The conservator for a baby girl who had suffered minor injuries in a car accident that killed her father demanded payment for her claims. The insurer denied the claims based on its belief that it had already paid out the maximum coverage under the policy. However, in St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer (Freyer I), 2010 MT 191, 357 Mont. 329, 239 P.3d 143, the Supreme Court concluded that the insurer owed the daughter for her claims. Following the Supreme Court's decision, the conservator filed new claims against the insurer, including a claim for breach of the insurance contract. The insurer argued that it had a reasonable basis in law for denying the daughter's claims. Applying this rationale, the District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the insurer. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that while the "reasonable basis in law" defense applies to bad faith claims, it does not apply to a breach of contract claim. The court reversed and remanded the case to the District Court to determine the proper measure of damages related to the breach of contract. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Freyer, 2013 MT 301, 372 Mont. 191, 312 P.3d 403.

Professional Negligence and Negligent Misrepresentation Distinguished — Restatement of Torts 552 Controls Third-Party Negligent Misrepresentation — Accountant's Duty of Care to Third Parties: After Eide Bailly, an accounting firm, issued an unqualified opinion stating that an audit of IMC, a mortgage company, showed that its financial statements didn't contain misstatements, the holding company owning IMC was purchased by plaintiff Glacier Bank, which merged the holding company into plaintiff Western Bank. When it was later discovered that an employee of IMC had manipulated IMC's financial records to make IMC appear more profitable than it was, the plaintiffs sued Eide Bailly, alleging that Eide Bailly owed a duty of care to the plaintiffs. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's ruling that no duty of care was owed. Citing Jim's Excavating Service v. HKM Associates, 265 Mont. 494, 878 P.2d 248 (1994), and the Restatement (Second) of Torts, 552 (1977), the Supreme Court held that the plaintiffs had failed to rebut the affidavits from Eide Bailly that it didn't intend to supply the information to the plaintiffs and that it didn't know the plaintiffs would receive the accounting statement. The Supreme Court therefore affirmed the District Court's grant of summary judgment for defendant Eide Bailly. Relying upon Jim's Excavating, the Supreme Court also distinguished professional negligence claims from claims for third-party negligent misrepresentation claims but treated the case before the court as a case of third-party negligent misrepresentation. W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

Improper Disallowance of Evidence of Costs in Developing Oil and Gas Claim: Under an oil and gas development agreement plaintiff was required to explore and develop claims and notify defendant. Defendant was then required to pay 75% of development costs in exchange for 75% of the profits. When defendant asserted that plaintiff had fraudulently developed a claim without informing defendant, the District Court denied the offset on grounds that plaintiff had breached the agreement and disallowed plaintiff's motion to introduce evidence of development costs. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Defendant was required to pay costs if allowed to benefit from the profits, so plaintiff's evidence of development costs should have been admitted. Textana, Inc. v. Klabzuba Oil & Gas, 2009 MT 401, 353 M 442, 222 P3d 580 (2009).

Breach of Intervention Agreement — Issue Preclusion Applicable: McDaniel was sentenced to 20 years for burglary, with the sentence suspended subject to several conditions. About 4 months after sentencing, McDaniel tested positive for drugs, and the probation officer elected to initiate an intervention hearing, where an agreement was entered into in lieu of a formal violation being filed. Upon learning of the intervention hearing, the County Attorney filed a petition to revoke McDaniel's suspended sentence based on McDaniel's drug use. McDaniel moved for partial summary judgment on grounds that the intervention hearing agreement constituted a final adjudication of the probation violation and a binding contract and that the state was barred from relitigating the issue. The District Court denied the motion, McDaniel appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. McDaniel and the state, acting through the Department of Corrections, entered a valid binding contract that precluded filing of a formal violation, and the state breached the contract by filing the revocation petition. Additionally, the elements of issue preclusion were satisfied with respect to the state's liability on the breach of contract claim, including the state's opportunity to argue liability, so absent any genuine issue of material fact, McDaniel was entitled to partial summary judgment on the breach of contract claim. McDaniel v. St., 2009 MT 159, 350 M 422, 208 P3d 817 (2009), following Baltrusch v. Baltrusch, 2006 MT 51, 331 M 281, 130 P3d 1267 (2006).

Contract Action Not Applicable When Contract Terms Not Fulfilled — Wrongful Discharge Claim Dismissed as Untimely: Zier signed an agreement that he would become president of defendant bank when the bank obtained a contingent charter from the division of banking and when the bank received federal approval for operation. Zier began working for the bank in a different capacity, but neither contingency occurred, so Zier was not offered the president position and was subsequently discharged from employment. Zier filed a breach of contract action, but the bank argued that the contract claim was actually a claim for wrongful discharge. The District Court agreed with the bank and dismissed the claim because Zier failed to bring the action within 1 year as required under 39-2-911. Zier appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. The bank was not liable for breach of contract because the conditions of the agreement did not occur, so the District Court properly refused to consider the claim under a contract theory and correctly considered the claim as a wrongful discharge claim. Zier's failure to bring the claim within the 1-year statute of limitations warranted dismissal. Zier v. Hancock, 2008 MT 255, 345 M 89, 189 P3d 1189 (2008). See also Kneeland v. Luzenac America, Inc., 1998 MT 136, 289 M 201, 961 P2d 725 (1998).

Admissibility of Evidence From Prior Suit — Distinct Causes of Action and Different Instances of Alleged Wrongdoing: Plaintiffs sued defendant insurer for breach of contract for failing to cover medical expenses, even though coverage had been provided for similar medical costs in the past and the insurance policy remained the same. The District Court held that evidence from prior settled disputes could not be used in the present suit and granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment on grounds of res judicata and collateral estoppel. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed. Although the medical issue was similar to the prior settled coverage, the instant action alleged wrongdoing by the insurer after the prior coverage dispute was settled and alleged a distinct cause of action arising from a different instance of alleged wrongdoing, so plaintiffs' use of evidence that was relevant in the previous dispute did not constitute relitigation of the prior dispute that would be barred by res judicata and collateral estoppel, and the District Court erred in so holding. The prior evidence was admissible to provide a context for the instant claims by revealing the history of plaintiffs' relationship with the insurer. Lorang v. Fortis Ins. Co., 2008 MT 252, 345 M 12, 192 P3d 186 (2008). See also Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180 (1994).

Administrative Costs of Environmental Corrective Action Recoverable as Consequential Damages: A petroleum company held commercial liability and property insurance policies that contained a standard absolute pollution exclusion clause disclaiming coverage for spills resulting from pollutants. When a diesel fuel spill occurred on the company's property, the company sought insurance reimbursement under the policies and also submitted claims to the Montana Petroleum Tank Release Compensation Board for reimbursement for corrective action costs. The insurer denied the claim, and after the company subrogated the claim to the Board, the Board sought reimbursement from the insurer, but the insurer denied all reimbursement requests, so the Board sued to recover corrective costs from the insurer, including administrative costs of the corrective action. The District Court granted the Board's request for administrative costs, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because the Board, as subrogee, stood in the shoes of the company, as subrogor, and thus could not stand in a better position than the company, the court first considered what the company was entitled to recover for the insurer's breach of contract, noting that damages could be proximate or consequential. Pursuant to Safeco Ins. Co. v. Munroe, 165 M 185, 527 P2d 64 (1974), the company was entitled to recover its administrative costs as consequential damages if those costs were contemplated by both parties at the time that the contract was entered into and if administrative costs might naturally be expected to result from the insurer's refusal to indemnify. In this case, administrative costs were both anticipated and a natural result of the insurer's breach, so the company, and in turn the Board as subrogee, were entitled to administrative costs as consequential damages. Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Crumleys, Inc., 2008 MT 2, 341 M 33, 174 P3d 948 (2008).

Foreseeability Not Required in Breach of Contract Action Under Uniform Commercial Code When Injury Results From Breach of Warranty: A breach of contract action under the Uniform Commercial Code does not require foreseeability if injury to person or property proximately results from any breach of warranty. Rothing v. Kallestad, 2007 MT 109, 337 M 193, 159 P3d 222 (2007).

Contractor Entitled to Stop Work Pursuant to Developer's Breach of Contract — Contractor Improperly Required to Reimburse Postbreach Expenses: Plaintiff contractor submitted a claim for construction costs to defendant developer's architect, who approved payment, but the developer refused to pay the costs, so the contractor stopped work. The developer hired another contractor to finish the work, and the District Court penalized the contractor by requiring reimbursement of the developer's costs for finishing the work. The Supreme Court reversed the award. The contractor was entitled to stop work because of the developer's material breach of contract, and the developer was not entitled to benefit from its own wrong, so it was error to penalize the contractor for amounts expended by the developer to finish the work. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006).

Insufficient Evidence to Warrant Award of Home Office Overhead: Plaintiff contractor sought to enforce a contractor's lien and was awarded damages, but the contractor sought additional damages to cover extended costs for home office overhead occasioned by delays caused by defendant, claiming that under the contract, delay costs were to be borne by the responsible party. A special master found that plaintiff had failed to establish entitlement to additional home office overhead costs and that the evidence submitted in support of the claim was not credible. The District Court adopted the special master's findings, and on appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Without addressing the credibility of the evidence, the Supreme Court held that the evidence submitted by the contractor was insufficient to establish entitlement to additional home office overhead costs. James Talcott Constr., Inc. v. P&D Land Enterprises, 2006 MT 188, 333 M 107, 141 P3d 1200 (2006).

Questions of Fact Regarding Ambiguous Contract and Damages — Summary Judgment Inappropriate: Upon remand of a breach of contract action in Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2003 MT 82, 315 M 75, 67 P3d 306 (2003), the District Court granted Bradley's motion for summary judgment a second time without considering the merits of defendant's defense to the breach of contract. However, because questions of fact still existed regarding ambiguous language in the contract and potential damages, summary judgment was inappropriate, so the case was again reversed and remanded for further consideration. Bradley v. Crow Tribe of Indians, 2005 MT 309, 329 M 448, 124 P3d 1143 (2005).

Appeal Moot for Inability of Supreme Court to Grant Relief: Plaintiffs owned a ranch, but being in default and facing foreclosure, they made a deal with defendant Bell whereby Bell would borrow money to pay off plaintiffs' debt and plaintiffs would receive an ownership interest in Bell's company formed to manage the ranch. However, the mortgage was never transferred into the company, and plaintiffs sued Bell for fraud and breach of contract. A jury granted plaintiffs $500,000 in damages for Bell's breach of contract, and Bell appealed. Bell ultimately declared bankruptcy and sold the ranch to pay off the loan and to pay off the money judgment owed to plaintiffs, whereby plaintiffs' mortgage on the ranch was released. Plaintiffs moved that Bell's appeal be dismissed for mootness, and the Supreme Court agreed. The $500,000 judgment could not simply be reversed with plaintiffs retaining ownership because the ranch had been sold, and Bell would be considerably richer than he was at the beginning of the deal, having invested little of his own money, and plaintiffs would have nothing. Therefore, applying Turner v. Mtn. Eng'r & Constr., Inc., 276 M 55, 915 P2d 799 (1996), the Supreme Court held that Bell's claim was moot based on the court's inability to grant effective relief. Graveyard Creek Ranch, Inc. v. Bell, 2005 MT 172, 327 M 491, 116 P3d 779 (2005). Turner was also applied on the same grounds in Mills v. Alta Vista Ranch, LLC, 2008 MT 214, 344 M 212, 187 P3d 627 (2008).

Agreement to Agree to Future Lease Terms Unenforceable: Defendant agreed to lease plaintiff farmland on a cash per acre basis for 5 years with an option to extend the lease on terms to be determined later. Toward the end of the 5-year lease, defendant offered to sell the land to plaintiff, but plaintiff declined, so defendant sold the land to a third party, and plaintiff filed a complaint alleging breach of the lease agreement. Both parties moved for summary judgment, and the District Court concluded that because the lease extension language constituted an agreement to agree and was vague and unenforceable, defendant was entitled to summary judgment. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because the parties failed to include complete and material terms for determining the duration and payments for another lease term in the negotiation clause, the clause was rendered unenforceable, and specific performance was unavailable to enforce an agreement to agree to material terms in the future. Additionally, damages were not clearly ascertainable and calculation of damages was also untenable under the lease extension, so plaintiff could not recover damages. GRB Farm v. Christman Ranch, Inc., 2005 MT 59, 326 M 236, 108 P3d 507 (2005), following Steen v. Rustad, 132 M 96, 313 P2d 1014 (1957), Riis v. Day, 188 M 253, 613 P2d 696 (1980), and Quirin v. Weinberg, 252 M 386, 830 P2d 537 (1992), and followed in Bitterroot Int'l Sys., Ltd. v. W. Star Trucks, Inc., 2007 MT 48, 336 M 145, 153 P3d 627 (2007).

Duty of Contractor to Adhere to Building Code — Liability for Radon Damage Properly Submitted to Jury: A contractor built an indoor tennis facility, and the facility developed water leakage and radon damage. The District Court submitted the question of radon mitigation damages to the jury, which the contractor contended was error because neither the construction contract nor building codes required radon mitigation. However, the building code did require installation of a subsurface vapor barrier and proper sized gravel, which the contractor did not install, and breach of the duty to install the barrier and proper gravel resulted in damages, including radon damages. Thus, submission of radon damages to the jury was proper. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

No Negligence by Architect if Professional Information Not Communicated in Absence of Contract: A tennis club filed a negligence and breach of contract action against a contractor who constructed a tennis facility for the club. The contractor in turn filed a third-party negligence action against the architect who had provided preliminary design parameters and building specifications for the facility. The District Court summarily dismissed the third-party claim, and the contractor appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Applying Jim's Excavating Serv., Inc. v. HKM Associates, 265 M 494, 878 P2d 248 (1994), and Restatement (Second) of Torts 552 (1976), the court held that the architect owed no duty of care to the contractor because the contractor had no contract for the architect's services and failed to prove that the architect communicated professional information with the intention that the information be relied upon by the contractor. Absent a duty of care, there was no breach, so the third-party action failed as a matter of law, and summary judgment was proper. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004). Jim's Excavating was followed in W. Sec. Bank v. Eide Bailly, LLP, 2010 MT 291, 359 Mont. 34, 249 P.3d 35.

Conscionability Analysis of Contractual Liquidated Damages Clause — Liquidated Damages Clause Presumed Enforceable: To provide direction to contracting parties and resolve the disparities in case law regarding liquidated damages, the Supreme Court adopted a rule to analyze liquidated damages clauses from the perspective of whether or not the clause is unconscionable as indicated by the nature of the bargaining process between the parties. Unconscionability involves a two-pronged determination regarding whether: (1) the clause fits the doctrine of contract of adhesion such that the weaker party had no meaningful choice regarding acceptance of the contract provisions; and (2) the contractual terms are unreasonably favorable to the drafter, which is usually the party with superior bargaining power. Whether the clause is unreasonably favorable to the drafter in turn involves an inquiry into whether the clause is within the reasonable expectations of or unduly oppressive to the weaker party. Liquidated damages clauses are presumed enforceable, and the party seeking to avoid the clause has the burden of proving unconscionability. Unless there are underlying disputed issues of fact, the question of unconscionability is purely a matter of law for the court to decide. Arrowhead School District No. 75 v. Klyap, 2003 MT 294, 318 M 103, 79 P3d 250 (2003), followed in Highway Specialties, Inc. v. Mont. Dept. of Transportation, 2009 MT 253, 351 M 527, 215 P3d 667 (2009), and overruling Daugherty Cattle Co. v. Gen. Constr. Co., 254 M 479, 839 P2d 562 (1992), to the extent that it prevented one party from introducing relevant evidence by granting summary judgment based on contract language alone, overruling Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202 (1993), to the extent that it placed the burden on the nonbreaching party to prove the enforceability of a liquidated damages clause, and followed in Am. Music Co. v. Higbee, 2004 MT 349, 324 M 348, 103 P3d 518 (2004).

Liquidated Damages Clause in Personal Services Contract — Conscionability of Liquidated Damages Clause in Teacher's Form Contract: In determining the enforceability of a 20% liquidated damages clause in defendant's teaching contract, the Supreme Court examined the conscionability of the clause. The court first held that the clause constituted a contract of adhesion because defendant, as the weaker bargaining party, had no meaningful choice regarding acceptance of the contract provisions. The court also noted that the contract was a form contract that provided no negotiation between the parties. However, the court held that unconscionability does not render all form contracts unacceptable and that form contracts are only unconscionable if the terms are not within the reasonable expectation of the party who had no opportunity to negotiate. Although the liquidated damages clause in defendant's contract was harsher than most, as a teacher, defendant knew that teachers are typically employed for an entire year and how difficult it is to replace equivalent services at small rural schools, so it was within defendant's reasonable expectations to agree to a contract with a 20% liquidated damages provision for departing so close to the start of the school year, even though defendant had no meaningful choice regarding the provision. The enforceability of the liquidated damages clause was affirmed. Arrowhead School District No. 75 v. Klyap, 2003 MT 294, 318 M 103, 79 P3d 250 (2003).

Use of Corporation by Individual as Subterfuge — Piercing Corporate Veil to Hold Individual Liable for Breach of Lease: Defendant formed a corporation to render dental services and leased a building for a dental practice with two other dentists, including plaintiff. After the practice became successful, defendant demanded possession of the entire property by letter. When plaintiff did not respond, defendant vacated the building on behalf of the corporation and discontinued paying rent, but the decision was never documented in the corporation's records. Plaintiff sued for breach of the lease contract. Following trial, the District Court concluded that defendant was the alter ego of the corporation and the real party in interest under the lease and that it would be inequitable to allow defendant to use the corporation as a subterfuge to defeat public convenience or justify wrong. Thus, the corporate veil was pierced, and defendant was held personally responsible for damages arising from the breached lease. On appeal, the Supreme Court applied the test in Berlin v. Boedecker, 268 M 444, 887 P2d 1180 (1994), to determine whether circumstances were appropriate for piercing the corporate veil. The court noted that the veil may not be pierced simply because an individual is the alter ego of a corporation and the true party in interest. There must be substantial evidence that the corporate entity was used as a subterfuge to defeat public convenience, justify wrong, or commit fraud, but bad faith alone may be a sufficient cause for piercing the veil. Here, the corporation was unable to satisfy the judgment because it was undercapitalized from its inception, suggesting defendant acted in bad faith. Further, it was inequitable for defendant to personally profit from renting property to the corporation and protect himself from liability with the undercapitalized corporation. The judgment was affirmed. Peschel Family Trust v. Colonna, 2003 MT 216, 317 M 127, 75 P3d 793 (2003).

Negligence During House Moving — Breach of House Moving Agreement — Remand for Determination of Causation and Damages: Kelly entered an agreement with Hall to move four of Kelly's housing units. Hall agreed to obtain cargo insurance on each unit but did not do so. During the move, two units were damaged, and Kelly filed a claim against Hall's insurer for remuneration. The claim was denied, and the insurer sought a declaratory judgment against both Hall and Kelly. Kelly filed negligence and breach of contract claims against Hall, and Hall counterclaimed for breach of contract against Kelly. The District Court concluded that Kelly failed to establish negligence, that both parties breached the contract, and that neither party could recover against the other. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the finding that Hall breached the contract by failing to obtain cargo insurance and that, based on the presumption against conditions precedent and inconclusive evidence, Kelly also breached the contract and thus could not recover breach of contract damages. However, there was no evidence to rebut Kelly's negligence claim, nor did the District Court address the damages that Hall conceded occurred during the move. Because it was error to find that Kelly failed to establish negligence, the case was remanded for trial on causation and damages. Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Hall, 2003 MT 188, 316 M 460, 73 P3d 819 (2003).

Disclosure of Building Leakage and Source of Water Not Material Fact: Plaintiffs purchased a building in Philipsburg for use as a residence. Water began seeping into the basement a couple of years later, and plaintiffs sued the sellers for breach of the warranty of habitability and the city because the source of the water may have been from a broken water line nearby. The District Court summarily dismissed the claim against the sellers because the sellers' knowledge of prior leakage was not a material fact and because the question of the source of the water was not material to the transaction between the parties. Plaintiffs appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Plaintiffs all but conceded that the prior leakage was not important when they did not disclose the leakage to the bank when they refinanced the property. Further, plaintiffs' initial claim against the sellers was for nondisclosure of the leakage without regard to the source, so summary judgment was not precluded because the source was not essential to the case against the sellers. Bond v. Philipsburg, 2003 MT 74, 315 M 7, 67 P3d 255 (2003).

Plaintiffs Residing in House for Several Years Not Entitled to Instruction on Warranty of Habitability: The Satterfields appealed the District Court's refusal to submit a jury instruction regarding the implied warranty of habitability. The Supreme Court held that the instruction was properly excluded because the plaintiffs did not introduce enough evidence to support their argument especially in light of the fact that they inhabited the home for a period of several years after construction was finished. Satterfield v. Medlin, 2002 MT 260, 312 M 234, 59 P3d 33 (2002).

Material Misrepresentation on Application for Credit Life and Disability Insurance — Denial of Coverage Warranted: Schlemmer applied to the North Central Life Insurance Company (North Central) for credit life and disability insurance but misrepresented his health history. If he had answered correctly on the application, he would have been ineligible for the insurance. Nevertheless, he averred by his signature that he understood the form and that his application statements were true, so the policy was issued. Schlemmer later filed a claim for disability payments. North Central investigated, found that Schlemmer had been treated within the previous 2 years for hypertension, chronic obstructive lung disease, and disease or disorder of the kidneys, contrary to his statements in the application, and denied the claim and refunded Schlemmer's premiums. Schlemmer sued for damages, claiming that the application and underwriting procedures used by North Central violated 33-18-201, commonly known as the unfair claims settlement practices law, breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and constituted fraud. Schlemmer also maintained that the District Court erred in failing to rule on whether North Central's agent had knowledge of Schlemmer's condition, which might have created a question of material fact. The Supreme Court affirmed the District Court's rulings that: (1) Schlemmer's claim of ignorance of the contents of the written application could not prevail because the application language was clear and unambiguous and Schlemmer did not deny signing it; (2) Schlemmer materially misrepresented his health on the application; (3) the material misrepresentation was legally sufficient to allow North Central to deny coverage under the policy; and (4) Schlemmer's argument that North Central's agent knew or should have known about Schlemmer's health was mere speculation insufficient to create an issue of fact to defeat North Central's properly supported motion for summary judgment. Further, the Supreme Court declined to consider Schlemmer's argument that the misrepresentation could not serve as a basis to rescind the policy because he did not apply for benefits until more than 2 years after applying for the insurance, pursuant to 33-22-205, because Schlemmer never raised the issue at the District Court level. Schlemmer v. N. Cent. Life Ins. Co., 2001 MT 256, 307 M 203, 37 P3d 63 (2001).

Lack of District Court Jurisdiction Over Breach of Contract Dispute Regarding Work Performed Within Indian Reservation: The District Court held that it lacked subject matter jurisdiction over a breach of contract dispute between two Montana corporations and a non-Indian minority shareholder of one of the corporations for work performed within the boundaries of the Flathead Indian Reservation, concluding that the tribal court had sole jurisdiction to hear all commercial disputes arising on the reservation involving a tribal defendant and that any allegation of fraud or impropriety involving tribal policy for giving preference to Indian-owned businesses necessarily implicated tribal self-government. Plaintiff appealed, contending that a corporation, even if Indian-owned, is neither an "Indian" nor a "tribal member" for purposes of determining subject matter jurisdiction and that the matter was nothing more than one Montana corporation bringing a claim for money damages against another Montana corporation and did not call into question any tribal act. The District Court correctly applied the three-part test in State ex rel. Iron Bear v. District Court, 162 M 335, 512 P2d 1292 (1973), in determining whether a state court may assume subject matter jurisdiction when tribal adjudicatory sovereignty over a civil dispute arising on a reservation is involved. The test involves consideration of whether: (1) federal treaties and statutes preempt state jurisdiction; (2) exercise of state jurisdiction would interfere with reservation self-government; and (3) the tribal court is currently exercising jurisdiction or has exercised it in a manner that preempts state jurisdiction. Pursuant to U.S. Supreme Court case law, if either of the first two prongs of the test is established, the state lacks jurisdiction. In analyzing the second prong of the test, the court applied Milbank Mut. Ins. Co. v. Eagleman, 218 M 58, 705 P2d 1117 (1985), which states that a tribe's interest in self-government for civil matters arising within a reservation can be implicated if a state or federal court resolves a dispute that impinges on a tribe's right to adjudicate controversies arising within the province of tribal courts or if the dispute itself calls into question the validity or propriety of an act fairly attributable to the tribe as a governmental body. In the context of this case, the questions then became: (1) whether the subcontractor was an Indian-owned business for preference purposes under its subcontract with the general contractor; and (2) whether the subcontractor committed fraud upon the tribe or otherwise violated the tribe's preference policy to the detriment of plaintiff. Concluding that the answers to both questions clearly implicated tribal court jurisdiction and policymaking authority, the court concluded that it could not assert jurisdiction without violating the policy favoring tribal self-government or interfering with the tribe's sovereignty. The Supreme Court agreed. To assume jurisdiction and decide whether a corporation had committed fraud upon the tribe or a contractor in privity with the tribe or to decide whether or not a corporation should be considered Indian-owned in spite of a prior determination by the tribe would require the District Court to impinge upon the tribe's right to adjudicate controversies arising within the province of the tribe's own courts. Further, even if the District Court were to assume that all of plaintiff's allegations were true, a hearing on the jurisdictional question was unnecessary because the court could not assume subject matter jurisdiction as a matter of law, so the court did not err by issuing its order rather than conducting a hearing on the question. Gen. Constructors, Inc. v. Chewculator, Inc., 2001 MT 54, 304 M 319, 21 P3d 604 (2001). In In re Estate of Big Spring, 2011 MT 109, 360 Mont. 370, 255 P.3d 121, the Supreme Court overruled Iron Bear in its entirety and Gen. Constructors, Inc. v. Chewculator, Inc. to the extent it relied on Iron Bear.

Plain Language of Policies Providing Insurance on Rental Car Construed — Primary Versus Excess Coverage: Hudson used a credit card to rent a 1995 Ford Mustang convertible from P.C. Rental, Inc. (P.C.). Three days later, Hudson lost control of the car, resulting in damages rendering the vehicle a total loss. At the time of the accident, P.C. had a commercial lines policy through Empire Fire and Marine Insurance Company (Empire) that included liability and physical damage coverage. Hudson did not own a vehicle and was not covered under a personal policy, but auto rental insurance was provided by the company whose credit card Hudson used for the rental. Empire paid P.C. the agreed actual cash value of the vehicle, minus a $1,000 policy deductible, then sold the damaged vehicle for salvage and received an additional $1,108. The credit card company, Visa U.S.A. (Visa), also paid P.C. about $7,800 to cover P.C.'s deductible and lost rental fees. P.C. then brought a breach of contract action against Hudson for failing to return the vehicle in the same condition in which it was rented, as required by the rental agreement. Hudson alleged that Chase Manhattan Bank (Chase), as issuer of the credit card, was responsible for damages sustained to the rental car under the terms of the rental insurance. Hudson subsequently filed for bankruptcy and assigned all rights in the third-party action against Chase to P.C. P.C. then amended the complaint to include the credit card company as defendant, alleging that the rental insurance provided coverage on a 24-hour basis for damage to a car rented with the credit card up to the full value of the car. Visa denied P.C.'s allegations regarding the rental insurance, alleged that Visa had met its obligations under the policy by covering P.C.'s deductible and lost rental fees, and moved for summary judgment, which was granted. The District Court concluded that Hudson was an insured under the liability policy provided to P.C. by Empire and thus Empire was not entitled to subrogate against its own insured. The court determined that because both policies provided damage coverage for the same vehicle, it was necessary to look to the "other insurance" clauses of the policies. The Empire policy stated that its coverage was primary, while the Visa policy stated that its coverage was excess coverage, so Empire was not entitled to recover any of the amount that it paid to P.C. from Visa. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Given the nature of the coverage available, no determination of whether Hudson was an insured under Empire's physical damage coverage was necessary or possible under the policies. The District Court did not err when it concluded that, based on the clear language of the policies, P.C.'s physical damage coverage was primary and Visa's rental insurance was excess. P.C. Rental, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 2000 MT 106, 299 M 315, 998 P2d 1168, 57 St. Rep. 430 (2000).

Liability for Issuance of Conflicting Title Insurance Policies — Due Diligence Standard Applicable to Title Examination Resulting in Loss: Based on information in Realty Title Company's (Realty's) own records and abstract plant, a reasonably diligent inquiry would have disclosed that a survey had been completed and filed of record for purposes of defining the tract of land covered by the Turks' policy. When Realty later insured Weibert for the same tract, it violated the rule in Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982). Realty's own record and abstract plant put it on sufficient notice of a possible defect in Weibert's title, and Realty was therefore obligated to inquire further prior to issuing a title insurance policy insuring the same tract. Failing twice to do so, Realty breached the obligation under the agency contract to exercise due diligence in the title examination and was liable for the subsequent loss. Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Party May Choose to Breach Contract and Pay Damages: American Music Co. (AMC) sued Higbee and requested a preliminary injunction for Higbee's not honoring the parties' contract by replacing AMC's gambling machines with other machines. The Supreme Court stated that an injunction was not available because a party has a right to breach a contract if the party is willing to pay the damages caused by the breach and, in the present case, the amount of damages could be determined. Am. Music Co. v. Higbee, 1998 MT 150, 289 M 278, 961 P2d 109, 55 St. Rep. 586 (1998).

Agricultural Lease — No Error in Failure to Give Instruction on Implied Contract Covenant to Farm in Workmanlike Manner — Express Lease Terms Stricter Than Requested Instruction on Implied Term: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens through an agricultural lease. The lease required Stephens to farm with "diligence and care" and to do "all work necessary . . . and to the best interest of lessor, all in such time and manner as shall be to the best advantage and economy". The Schumachers sued Stephens, alleging that Stephens breached the implied contract covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The District Court refused to give the Schumachers' requested instruction on an implied covenant in the lease that would have required Stephens to farm the property in a "competent, skilled, workmanlike and husbandlike fashion". The Supreme Court noted that: (1) the District Court was correct in not giving an instruction on negligence because the Schumachers' complaint and evidence contained no such theory; (2) the District Court did instruct on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing; (3) the standard of care required of Stephens was expressly stated in the lease itself; and

(4) the Schumachers had not shown that they were prejudiced by the failure to give the requested instruction. For these reasons, the Supreme Court held that it was not error for the District Court to refuse to give an instruction on an implied covenant to farm in a workmanlike manner. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Agricultural Lease — No Error in Failure to Give Plaintiffs' Instruction on Effect of Material Participation Provisions — Instruction on Mutual Cooperation Held Sufficient: The Schumachers leased property that they owned to Stephens through an agricultural lease. Later, when the Schumachers sued Stephens over Stephens' failure to comply with the terms of the lease, Stephens claimed in defense that the Schumachers had breached the material participation agreements in the lease and that therefore he was excused from compliance. The Schumachers requested an instruction stating that if the jury found that Stephens failed to cooperate with the plaintiffs, then Stephens was not entitled to claim that he was excused from liability because of his contention that the Schumachers breached the material participation agreements in the lease. The District Court refused to give the instruction and instead gave an instruction stating that "the failure of a party to fully perform a contract is excused if his performance is prevented or delayed by the conduct of the other party". The Supreme Court noted that the Schumachers had not shown that they were prejudiced in any way by the failure of the District Court to give the requested instruction. Citing Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347 (1997), the Supreme Court held that: (1) a party assigning error to a refused instruction must show that the party was prejudiced by the refusal; and (2) the refused instruction must be reviewed in the context of the instructions that were given and the evidence produced at trial. Under these standards, the Supreme Court held that the instruction given by the District Court was sufficient. Schumacher v. Stephens, 1998 MT 58, 288 M 115, 956 P2d 76, 55 St. Rep. 247 (1998).

Mortgagee's Right to Assert, on Mortgagee's Behalf, Mortgagor's Contract and Tort Claims for Damage to Property: The mortgagee alleged that the engineering firm hired by the mortgagor knowingly laid improper pipe in the land, resulting in the state's disapproval of the pipe. The mortgagee could not sue the engineering firm for breach of contract and for breach of professional duty owed to the mortgagor under the theory that the mortgagee was a direct creditor of the mortgagor and was entitled to execute on any asset of the mortgagor and that the contract and breach of professional duty claims were assets. The mortgagee would have to be a judgment creditor of the mortgagor with a claim against the mortgagor that had been reduced to judgment before the mortgagee could sue the engineering firm for breach of the firm's contract with and professional duty to the mortgagor. Turner v. Kerin & Associates, 283 M 117, 938 P2d 1368, 54 St. Rep. 522 (1997).

Expert Testimony Not Needed on Insurance Agent's Standard of Care in Procuring Requested Insurance: In an insureds' negligence and contract action against an insurance agency for failure to procure requested coverage, an insurance agent testified as to the duties and responsibilities of an insurance agent when asked to procure specific insurance. Expert testimony on the insurance agent's standard of care and breach of the standard was not required. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997).

Insurance Agent's Failure to Procure Requested Coverage — Duty of Insured to Read Policy and Confirm Requested Coverage: The jury reasonably found that it was not unreasonable for husband and wife to have not read the insurance policy covering their outfitting business and that it was reasonable for them to act in reliance upon the representations of their insurance agent. The insureds did not have an absolute duty to read the policy. Failure to read a policy might amount to contributory negligence, but that is a question for the jury. The husband testified that he asked the agent for a policy that would cover everything, especially if someone were hurt on a horse, and that he was told that it would. He asked the same question for a number of years each time that the policy was renewed and was always given an affirmative answer. The agent testified that the husband frequently asked about and was concerned about "horse rider" coverage. When an accident occurred involving a horse, the agent told the husband that the bills would be paid. However, the insurance company failed to pay the bills, and the insured sued the agent for negligence and breach of contract. Fillinger v. NW. Agency, Inc., of Great Falls, 283 M 71, 938 P2d 1347, 54 St. Rep. 500 (1997). See also Bailey v. St. Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 2013 MT 119, 370 Mont. 73, 300 P.3d 1149, in which the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court's award of summary judgment to the insurer was improper because a genuine issue of material fact existed as to why discrepancies in coverage occurred when the insureds transferred their automobile policy from Oregon to Montana and requested that the insurer procure the same coverage.

Breach of Contract Action for Failure to Properly Embalm Deceased — Agency — Standing to Sue: Maria handled all funeral arrangements for her deceased mother. The family of the deceased, when viewing the body, observed a stain on the clothing that was determined to be caused by leaking embalming fluid. The lower court dismissed the family's claim for breach of contract and also ruled that Maria was not acting as agent for the other family members and that only she would have been able to sue for breach of contract. The Supreme Court held that a cause of action for breach of contract would exist if Maria could show that the breach had so "damaged" the funeral as to constitute a breach of contract entitling Maria to damages. The Supreme Court did affirm the lower court's ruling that Maria was not acting as an agent for the rest of the family in contracting with the mortuary. Therefore, only she could sue on the contract. Contreraz v. Michelotti-Sawyers & Nordquist Mortuary, Inc., 271 M 300, 896 P2d 1118, 52 St. Rep. 454 (1995).

Damages — Duty to Award Damages — Sufficient Evidence to Support Award: Plaintiff, who leased restaurant premises from defendant, sued for breach of contract and assault and battery. Defendant counterclaimed. The jury found for plaintiff and awarded contract damages. Defendant appealed on the grounds that there was insufficient evidence to support the award. Plaintiff introduced evidence of expenses, labor, actual income receipt records, rent and utility records, costs of goods and variable expense figures, complete tax returns, and several summaries of this information. Defendant failed to introduce any testimony or evidence to contradict the documents introduced by plaintiff. The Supreme Court held that there was substantial credible evidence to support the award. Having determined liability, it was the jury's duty to calculate an award of damages, including lost profits, based on the evidence presented. Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854, 52 St. Rep. 268 (1995), followed in Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999).

Lost Profits — Expert Testimony Not Required — Error to Limit: Plaintiff sued for breach of contract involving the lease of a restaurant. Plaintiff appealed the District Court's limiting of damages for lost profits to the period prior to the restaurant's closing. Defendant appealed on grounds that the District Court erred in denying a motion for judgment as a matter of law on the issues of contract damages and lost profits. Defendant based his argument on the judge's statement in chambers that there was no rational basis for the jury to award lost profits because plaintiff failed to introduce expert testimony on that issue. The Supreme Court held that the lower court did not err in denying defendant's motion. Expert testimony is not required to prove lost profits. Lost profits need be proved only with the best evidence under the circumstances that will support a reasonably close estimate of the loss. The District Court abused its discretion by limiting lost profits to the period prior to the restaurant's closing. Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854, 52 St. Rep. 268 (1995).

Failure to Comply With Provisions of Federal Act Incorporated by Reference Into Contract — Affirmative Defense: The Farm Credit Bank instituted suit to foreclose on a loan agreement with the Graveleys and filed for summary judgment. The Graveleys argued that the bank was estopped from foreclosing because it had not complied with the restructuring provisions of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1987, which had been incorporated by reference into the parties' agreement. The Supreme Court held that the Graveleys were entitled to assert as an affirmative defense the failure of the bank to follow the provisions of the Act and that allowing the defense was not synonymous with allowing a foreclosure court to substitute its judgment for that of the bank's loan officers. The Supreme Court also held that the lower court had correctly denied the motion for summary judgment on the basis that factual issues existed with respect to the merits of the Graveleys' affirmative defense. State ex rel. Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. District Court, 267 M 1, 881 P2d 594, 51 St. Rep. 709 (1994), following Farm Credit Bank of Spokane v. Parsons, 758 F. Supp. 1368 (D.C. Mont. 1990), and followed in AgAmerica, FCB v. Robson, 272 M 413, 901 P2d 100, 52 St. Rep. 800 (1995).

Extent of Obligation of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Measured by Justifiable Expectations of Parties: Talley argued that because the covenant of good faith and fair dealing is implied into every contract, the community college that employed him as a part-time instructor breached the covenant by not hiring him back after his term contract expired. However, the nature and extent of the obligation of good faith and fair dealing is measured by the justifiable expectations of the parties. Because Talley's contract had a "no-tenure" clause that precluded any justifiable expectation of continued employment, allegations of breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing were not reasonable. Talley v. Flathead Valley Community College, 259 M 479, 857 P2d 701, 50 St. Rep. 889 (1993).

Elements of "Special Relationship" Necessary to Support Tort Claim of Bad Faith: The essential elements of a special relationship necessary to support a tort claim of bad faith, as set out in Wallis v. Kroehler Mfg. Co., 207 Cal. Rep. 123 (1984), are: (1) the contract must be such that the parties are in inherently unequal bargaining positions; (2) the motivation for entering the contract must be a nonprofit motivation; i.e., to secure peace of mind, security, or future protection; (3) ordinary contract damages are not adequate because they do not require the party in the superior position to account for its actions and they do not make the inferior party whole; (4) one party is especially vulnerable because of the type of harm it may suffer and of necessity places trust in the other party to perform; and (5) the other party is aware of this vulnerability. If substantial evidence is not presented in support of each and all of the elements, the court shall direct that there is no special relationship. Simmons Oil Corp. v. Holly Corp., 258 M 79, 852 P2d 523, 50 St. Rep. 433 (1993). These elements were applied in Stephens v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America, 258 M 142, 852 P2d 565, 50 St. Rep. 467 (1993). See also Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767 (1990), and Warrington v. Great Falls Clinic, LLP, 2019 MT 111, 395 Mont. 432, 443 P.3d 369.

Monetary Damages — Specific Performance Inapplicable: In a breach of contract action seeking damages, the District Court instead ordered the return of a truck. Neither 27-1-401 nor 27-1-411 was applicable under the facts in this case. It was error to order specific performance when monetary damages was the only appropriate remedy. Merkes v. Mapston, 257 M 408, 849 P2d 210, 50 St. Rep. 332 (1993).

Admission of Erroneous Surveys — No Damages Awarded: A professional surveyor contracted to survey several parcels of land admitted in two letters that the results of his work were generally agreed to be erroneous. The developers who hired him relied on these admissions to purchase additional property affected by the alleged error, then sought to recoup as damages the amount spent as the result of the survey miscalculations. The District Court properly refused to award damages based on justifiable reliance on the surveyor's admissions of error because the decision to purchase additional land was a business decision that was not justified as long as the correct corner location remained in dispute, nor was the decision based on recordation information that was confirmed by the Bureau of Land Management. Yellowstone Basin Properties, Inc. v. Burgess, 255 M 341, 843 P2d 341, 49 St. Rep. 1051 (1992).

No Basis for Future Free Rent as Element of Compensatory Damages: The trial court ruled that plaintiff did not have to pay rent for the remainder of the term of a commercial lease because defendants had breached the contract in the past by refusing to accept rent checks. The Supreme Court held that there was no change in the position of the parties regarding future rent and that therefore free rent was not an element of compensatory damages. Daniels v. Dean, 253 M 465, 833 P2d 1078, 49 St. Rep. 535 (1992).

Equal Knowledge and Opportunity by Defaulting Party — No Duty of Nondefaulting Party to Mitigate Damages: As a rule, a nondefaulting party in a contractual arrangement must act reasonably under the circumstances so as not to unnecessarily enlarge damages caused by a default. However, as set out in 22 Am. Jur. 2d Damages 508, a nondefaulting party is not under a duty to mitigate damages if the other party, who had the duty to perform under the contract, had equal opportunity to perform and equal knowledge of the consequences of nonperformance. Nimmick v. Hart, 248 M 1, 808 P2d 481, 48 St. Rep. 293 (1991), distinguishing IFG Leasing Co. v. Schultz, 217 M 434, 705 P2d 576 (1985), and Diede v. Davis, 203 M 205, 661 P2d 838 (1983).

Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability Not Based on Fault: The plaintiffs brought an action for specific performance when the defendants quit making house payments and demanded rescission of a contract for deed. The defendants argued for rescission, alleging that the plaintiffs had breached the implied warranty of habitability. The plaintiffs, a husband and wife, contended that the warranty did not apply to them because they were not "builder-vendors" as contemplated by Montana case law. The Supreme Court held that the warranty did apply because the plaintiffs had built and sold two other houses prior to the one sold the defendants and though the plaintiffs were only amateur builders, the theory behind the warranty is not to discern fault but to place liability on the one most able to prevent the harm. Pracht v. Rollins, 239 M 62, 779 P2d 57, 46 St. Rep. 1513 (1989).

Lessor Treating Nonpayment of Rent as Partial Breach: Under the lease terms, lessor could have treated the nonpayment of rent as a total breach and accelerated the payments but waited more than a year and a half to do so. Therefore, lessor was in breach of contract itself during that period for failure to maintain signs that were the subject of the lease. Empire Dev. Co. v. Johnson, 236 M 433, 770 P2d 525, 46 St. Rep. 487 (1989).

Breach of Contract Required for Bad Faith Liability to Attach: When an underlying contract subsumes the entirety of the relationship between parties, Montana law requires an initial finding that one party breached the contract in order to have liability for bad faith and conduct attach. Mont. Bank of Circle v. Ralph Meyers & Son, Inc., 236 M 236, 769 P2d 1208, 46 St. Rep. 324 (1989), followed in Citizens First Nat'l Bank of Wolf Point v. Moe Motor Co., 248 M 495, 813 P2d 400, 48 St. Rep. 528 (1991). See also Mann Farms, Inc. v. Traders St. Bank of Poplar, 245 M 234, 801 P2d 73, 47 St. Rep. 2094 (1990), replacing previous opinion, subsequently withdrawn, at 47 St. Rep. 1557 (1990).

Tort Case — Jury Instruction Regarding Contract: It was not error in a trial based on tort liability to instruct the jury that damages could not be awarded for breach of contract. Ahmann v. Am. Fed. S&L Ass'n, 235 M 184, 766 P2d 853, 45 St. Rep. 2305 (1988).

Suspension of Performance Upon Material Breach of Contract: As part of a contract for sale of real property, seller agreed to obtain release of mortgage within 1 year, and failure to do so constituted a material breach entitling buyer to suspend performance. Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966, 45 St. Rep. 1270 (1988).

Seller's Failure to Control Weeds Not Breach of Contract: Property buyers claimed breach of contract because of seller's failure to control noxious weeds on adjacent property. The Supreme Court noted the existing statutory remedy for allowing propagation of noxious weeds in holding that the failure to control weeds was not sufficient to forgive payment on a contract by buyers for the purchase of land. Burgess v. Shippet, 230 M 387, 750 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 293 (1988).

Defects Not Precluding Use of Dwelling as Residence — Limitation of Implied Warranty of Habitability: The Supreme Court reversed a holding that the implied warranty of habitability applied in a case where a water seepage problem was an inconvenience but did not render the home uninhabitable. The court more clearly defined the implied warranty of habitability in holding that it was limited to defects that are so substantial as to reasonably preclude use of the dwelling as a residence. Samuelson v. A.A. Quality Constr., Inc., 230 M 220, 749 P2d 73, 45 St. Rep. 157 (1988).

Provision for Attorney Fees in Sales Contract Enforceable: Where a sales contract provided for an award of attorney fees to the party for any action to enforce the contract and to the prevailing party on an appeal, the sellers were properly awarded attorney fees by the District Court for enforcing the contract after breach by the buyers. The Supreme Court remanded for a determination of fees and costs after the sellers prevailed on appeal. Stevens v. Abbott, 228 M 101, 740 P2d 1136, 44 St. Rep. 1374 (1987).

Recovery Limited in Fraudulent Sale of Securities — Punitive Damages Claim Dismissed: In a case alleging breach of contract for sale of a security by means of fraud, recovery was limited under 30-10-307 to consideration paid for the security plus interest, costs, and attorney fees. A claim for punitive damages was properly dismissed. State ex rel. Vranish v. District Court, 228 M 59, 741 P2d 412, 44 St. Rep. 1341 (1987).

Instruction Necessary — Interference With Contract: An instruction on interference with contract must address the element of unjustifiability or impropriety of the alleged tortious actions and provide that the act is "without right or justifiable cause on the part of the actor". NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Weaver-Maxwell, Inc., 224 M 33, 729 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1995 (1986), distinguished in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Termination of Contract as Breach: The fact that a party terminated a contract amounted to a finding that he breached the contract and that he was therefore responsible for damages related to the breach. Hostetter v. Donlan, 221 M 380, 719 P2d 1243, 43 St. Rep. 909 (1986).

Lack of Appeal of Federal Agency Decision Not to Affect Contract Rights: Popp had an oral agreement to plant and harvest land owned by Frank and Gountanis. Popp attempted to enroll the land in the federal payment in kind program (PIK) but was informed by the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service (ASCS) that he must have a written lease to be eligible. He never appealed the ASCS decision. Frank later contended that the failure to appeal precluded Popp from collaterally attacking that determination in District Court. The Supreme Court held that Popp's filing of a lawsuit was not a collateral attack on the ASCS decision but rather that the amended complaint showed it was a breach of contract action. The court supported the finding that the PIK program could not be used to destroy Popp's contract rights. Popp v. Gountanis, 221 M 267, 718 P2d 340, 43 St. Rep. 801 (1986).

Implied Warranty of Habitability — Privity of Contract Not Required: Sale of a lot to plaintiffs was contingent upon plaintiffs' agreement to allow seller to contract with Mora Bros., Inc., for the construction of their home. When the land beneath their new home began to slide downhill, plaintiffs sued for damages. District Court granted plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment against seller and Mora Bros., Inc., as builder-vendors on the theory of breach of implied warranty of habitability, but denied plaintiffs' motion against Mora Bros., Inc., on the issue of negligence. Supreme Court affirmed District Court's finding that Mora Bros., Inc., is liable to plaintiffs under theory of implied warranty of habitability. The warranty does not depend on a contract for its existence, therefore privity of contract is not required. Once plaintiffs showed that house moved, defendant had to provide an explanation to create a genuine issue of fact. Defendant failed to provide an explanation, so summary judgment was proper. Degnan v. Executive Homes, Inc., 215 M 162, 696 P2d 431, 42 St. Rep. 262 (1985).

Agreement Containing Remedy for Breach — Remedy Not Expressly Made Exclusive — Injunction to Enforce Agreement Improper: A tender of stock containing an agreement not to compete contained a clear provision setting forth an appropriate remedy upon breach, which was a reduction of one-third in the stock price. Injunction was not a proper remedy to enforce the agreement because the agreement provided an adequate remedy in law. Although the agreement didn't expressly limit available remedies to those in the agreement, the court held that such limitation was not necessary because allowing injunctive relief would have nullified the remedy agreement agreed to by the parties, contrary to the intentions of the parties. Foster v. Realty Title Co., Inc., 209 M 183, 680 P2d 323, 41 St. Rep. 630 (1984).

Breach of Contract Action Sounding in Equity — Mutuality of Consent: Although an action for breach of contract to lend money is usually an action at law, the case sounded in equity where borrower argued that the contract was illusory and thus void because it lacked mutuality and that the lender's interpretation of the contract rendered the contract unconscionable and required the contract to be voided or reformed, and the lender raised the equitable defenses of estoppel, waiver, and laches. Shimsky v. Valley Credit Union, 208 M 186, 676 P2d 1308, 41 St. Rep. 258 (1984).

No Provision in Property Settlement for Attorney Fees — Fees Improperly Awarded: Where the parties to a dissolution proceeding agreed to a property settlement that did not provide for payment of attorney fees and the District Court later issued an order providing for the attorney fees to be paid by the husband if he did not comply with the agreement, the Supreme Court held that the District Court erred in issuing the order for the payment of fees by the husband. The property settlement agreement was approved by the District Court but never incorporated by reference into the decree and therefore has the status of a private contract, and the remedies for enforcement of a judgment are unavailable. Absent a statute or contractual provision, attorney fees are generally not recoverable, and since neither is involved here, there was no right to those fees. Lorge v. Lorge, 207 M 423, 675 P2d 115, 41 St. Rep. 50 (1984).

Tenant Unilaterally Terminating Lease — Damages: Plaintiff entered into a lease agreement for a motel in Forsyth that was not yet completed. The attorney for plaintiff prepared the lease. The county health and building code inspector found deficiencies requiring correction before the motel could be licensed. The parties negotiated a reduction of payments to a percentage of actual income. Many of the deficiencies were corrected, and the facility was issued a city business license. Plaintiff moved out of the motel and made no further payments. Plaintiff brought suit claiming breach by the defendant. The District Court awarded judgment and net damages to defendant. Plaintiff contended that by taking possession of the motel and operating it, defendant impliedly consented to the surrender, thereby extinguishing further obligations under the lease. The Supreme Court held that when a tenant unilaterally terminates the lease of commercial residential premises and vacates, without justification under 70-26-203, and the landlord expressly refuses consent and subsequently operates the facility to mitigate damages, the tenant is liable for net damages. Bunke, Inc. v. Johnson, 205 M 125, 666 P2d 1234, 40 St. Rep. 1163 (1983).

Punitive Damage — Tort Not Shown: Lessor sued for failure of lessee to vacate, and lessee counterclaimed that lessor converted the premises to his own use and interrupted her peaceful possession. Lessee could not get punitive damages under the conversion theory because conversion is a tort applicable to personal chattels and a leasehold interest is not a personal chattel. Nor could punitive damages be granted for interruption of peaceful possession, as it was not proven. In the absence of a showing of tortious conduct, it was error to grant lessee punitive damages in a simple contract action. Lemley v. Allen, 203 M 37, 659 P2d 262, 40 St. Rep. 279 (1983).

Construction Contract — Evidence Admissible to Establish Damages for Breach: A general contractor on a highway project subcontracted the bridge and concrete work to the plaintiff, who in turn subcontracted the concrete work to a specialist. In an action against the general contractor for breach of contract, the specialist's expert opinion evidence was admissible to establish the reasonable cost of the concrete work under the subcontract without regard to whether he was prequalified to perform the concrete work according to state Department of Highways (now Department of Transportation) standards. The trial court's dismissal of the case because there was no valid evidence to establish damages was improper. E. F. Matelich Constr. Co. v. Goodfellow Bros., Inc., 198 M 150, 645 P2d 391, 39 St. Rep. 831 (1982).

Malicious Inducement of Breach of Contract — Individual Liability of Corporate Agents, Employees, Officers, or Directors: In a case of first impression in Montana, the issue was whether agents, employees, officers, or directors of a corporation may be held liable individually for the tort of malicious inducement of a breach of an employment contract. The resolution of the appeal depended upon a weighing of public policy considerations. The court held that the corporate veil should not be utilized as a protection device by those who employ corporate power or authority to serve their own ends. Tort liability for the inducement of breach of contract should be imposed when a corporate agent, employee, officer, or director induces a breach of contract for private benefit or because of personal feeling and purposes relative to a third party. The privilege of limited liability should be applicable in those situations where actions are motivated and taken in the furtherance of corporate purposes, policies, and interests. When plaintiff/appellant failed to show that the actions of individual defendants were not taken in furtherance of corporate purposes and interests, the summary judgment granted to the defendants was affirmed. Phillips v. Mont. Educ. Ass'n, 187 M 419, 610 P2d 154 (1980), followed in Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989), Lachenmaier v. First Bank Sys., Inc., 246 M 26, 803 P2d 614, 47 St. Rep. 2244 (1990), Mannix v. Butte Water Co., 249 M 372, 816 P2d 441, 48 St. Rep. 782 (1991), and King v. Zimmerman, 266 M 54, 878 P2d 895, 51 St. Rep. 659 (1994).

Breach of Contract — Value of Goodwill Determined: In an action for breach of a contract to sell and purchase a barbershop business, the sole issue on appeal was the proper determination of the value of goodwill attributable to the shop's location. The court found that the District Court improperly restricted the reasonable value of goodwill associated with the shop's location to a 1-month period, in light of the facts that the purchaser had obtained a long-term lease and that there was no indication that the lessor would have been unwilling to have leased to the seller on a long-term rather than a month-to-month basis. While there is no rigid rule for determining the value of goodwill, the best indicator is the purchase price agreed upon in a voluntary arm's-length transaction. The three elements comprising the purchase price in this contract were the goodwill associated with the shop's location, the seller's furniture and fixtures, and the shop's telephone connection. The seller removed the fixtures and furniture and disconnected the telephone upon learning of the purchaser's new lease arrangements. These things were valued at $3,000. The seller's recovery was therefore based on the purchase price less the $3,000. An estimate of business lost due to changing locations was then used to determine the percentage of the base price representing the shop's goodwill attached to the shop's location. Baldwin v. Stuber, 187 M 430, 610 P2d 160 (1980).

Partial Performance — Restitution — Damages: A joint venture was formed, the contract contemplating the feeding of cattle by one party until 80% graded "choice", followed by sale and splitting of the proceeds with the supplier of the cattle, who was the second party. When cattle prices dropped, the feeder lost his financing and defaulted on the contract. The agreement was entire and nonseverable. Having failed in the complete performance of the contract, the feeder could not recover under it. Restitution to the feeder of his expenses before default would have to be based on implied contract theory. In order for a claim of restitution to lie, there must be no willful or intentional departure from the contract, and the defects in performance must not pervade the whole, or be so essential that the object which the parties intended to accomplish is not accomplished. The feeder could not recover his prior expenses because a party who has completely breached an entire, nonseverable contract without justification or excuse may not recover for any performance rendered prior to the breach. On the contrary, a counterclaim against the feeder for damages was upheld. Roundup Cattle Feeders v. Horpestad, 184 M 480, 603 P2d 1044 (1979), distinguishing Murphy v. Redland, 178 M 296, 583 P2d 1049 (1978).

Tort Actions Arising out of Breach of Contract: A party has a cause of action in tort arising out of a breach of contract only if the defaulting party, by breaching the contract, also breaches a duty owed to the complaining party independently of the contract. Boise Cascade Corp. v. First Sec. Bank of Anaconda, 183 M 378, 600 P2d 173 (1979), following First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Goddard, 181 M 407, 593 P2d 1040 (1979).

Sale of Real Estate — Water Rights: Where seller represents that motel is in compliance with AAA standards and that water rights are established, buyer will not be deprived of the benefit of his bargain and damages for buyer are appropriate, notwithstanding "as is" clause regarding premises or speculative nature of damages for replacement water supply. Moore v. Swanson, 171 M 160, 556 P2d 1249 (1976).

Instructions on Damages — Consequential Damages: Where contract for erection of silo was abandoned by defendant after negligent efforts at erection ended with collapse of silo in windstorm, plaintiff was entitled to jury instructions on damages relating both to breach of contract and to negligence. The plaintiff was also entitled to an instruction on consequential damages because the silo was an irreplaceable item. Bos v. Dolajak, 167 M 1, 534 P2d 1258 (1975).

Damages for Waste — Real Estate Contract: This section was applicable to determine damages for breach of contract and tortious injury to personal and real property where action was based on provision of contract prohibiting waste; damages for waste were recoverable despite fact that 27-1-315 makes no specific provision therefor, since this section clearly expresses that an aggrieved party is entitled to receive compensation for the loss he sustains. Wiseman v. Holt, 163 M 387, 517 P2d 711 (1973).

Statutes Not Exclusive: Statutes on the measure of damages are not exclusive; damages in addition to those provided in the statutes are recoverable under this section. Wiseman v. Holt, 163 M 387, 517 P2d 711 (1973).

Breach by Both Parties: Where buyer of exclusive business rights in a territory broke contract by failing to make payments as they fell due and seller broke the contract by doing business in the same territory, seller could not defend his breach by claiming a rescission of the contract when he later brought an action for the amount due on it, and buyer was entitled to set off amount of profit seller took from the territory. Leiman-Scott, Inc. v. Holmes, 142 M 58, 381 P2d 489 (1963).

Well Drilling: Where defendant failed to complete contract calling for his drilling of a water well, verdict of $1,000 for plaintiff was proper. Hein v. Fox, 126 M 514, 254 P2d 1076 (1953).

Action on Injunction Bond:

The measure of damages prescribed by this section is applied in an action on an injunction bond. Sheridan County Elec. Co-op, Inc. v. Ferguson, 124 M 543, 227 P2d 597 (1951).

Where a party is precluded from moving to dissolve an injunction and is driven to the remedy of trying to defeat the injunction, in which effort he is successful, the necessary court costs and fees of witnesses are a direct result of the wrongful issuance of the injunction and constitute a recoverable item of damages in an action on the bond given pursuant to 27-19-306. McDermott v. Am. Bonding Co., 56 M 1, 179 P 828 (1919).

The measure of damages in an action on an injunction bond is the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused by the injunction during the time it was in operation or which in the ordinary course of things was likely to result therefrom. McDermott v. Am. Bonding Co., 56 M 1, 179 P 828 (1919).

Attorneys' Fees, as Such, Not Recoverable — When Recoverable as Compensatory Damages: Attorneys' fees, as such, are not allowable as part of the damages in an action for breach of contract in the absence of contractual stipulation therefor or statutory allowance thereof, but where a lessee of farmlands in his attempt to obtain possession prior to commencement of action incidentally paid a small amount to an attorney, the amount so paid was properly recoverable as an element of compensatory damages. Smith v. Fergus County, 98 M 377, 39 P2d 193 (1934).

Wrongful Interference: Where full performance of a contract is prevented by the wrongful interference of one party, the other may treat such wrongful act as a breach of the contract and sue at once for damages arising from his having been prevented from reaping all the benefits and advantages which would reasonably follow a complete performance on his part, and the measure of his recovery would be the difference between the contract price and the expense to him of doing the work. McFarland v. Welch, 48 M 196, 136 P 394 (1913).

Attorney Fees — Failure to Pay: A client's failure to pay an attorney his fee when it becomes due is a breach of an obligation arising from contract, and the measure of damages for such breach is the principal amount due at the completion of the services plus the detriment proximately caused by the client's failure to pay, that is, legal interest for loss of the use of the money from that time up to the date of trial. Myers v. Bender, 46 M 497, 129 P 330 (1913).

PROXIMATELY CAUSED OR IN THE ORDINARY COURSE OF THINGS

Consent to Sublet Unreasonably Withheld — Measure of Landlord's Damages: Where the plaintiff landlord unreasonably withheld its consent for the defendant tenant to sublet the plaintiff's offices to the state parole board and the defendant quit the premises, whereupon the plaintiff convinced Waddell, another of its tenants, to move into the offices vacated by the defendant, the District Court did not err in holding that the plaintiff was entitled only to the rent owed by the defendant minus that amount which could have been earned by subletting to the state parole board. The refusal by the plaintiff to consent to the sublease was not such an interference with the leasehold estate as to justify cancellation of the lease by the defendant, and because the lease agreement is silent as to damages owed by the defendant in such an instance, the defendant is entitled to those damages directly caused by the plaintiff's unreasonable refusal and the plaintiff is entitled to those damages directly resulting from the defendant's abandonment of the lease. The District Court therefore properly applied the amount of rent receivable by the sublease as an offset against the rental payable by the defendant over the remaining term of the lease and refused to hold the defendant liable for the rental of the offices vacated by Waddell, as those damages are remote. Brigham Young Univ. v. Seman, 206 M 440, 672 P2d 15, 40 St. Rep. 1767 (1983).

Evidence Not Established: Evidence did not establish that the breakdown of a tractor that a farmer used to perform contract to seed landowner's land was proximately caused by landowner's failure to pay farmer the balance due for his work. Therefore, the maintenance and towing award to farmer was overturned. Weyler v. Kaufman, 196 M 132, 638 P2d 393, 38 St. Rep. 2197 (1981).

Fraud in Sale of Commercial Property — Compensatory Damages as Benefit of Bargain: Where the plaintiff sued for damages caused by the defendants' fraud in the execution of a contract for deed for the sale of a shale and concrete block plant, alleging that the defendants falsely represented the plant to be in compliance with air pollution control laws, the court did not err in granting the plaintiffs as damages that amount of money necessary to bring the plant into compliance with those laws. In the sale of commercial property, a commercial standard of damages should be applied. Plaintiffs are entitled to the benefit of their bargain, a plant which complies with the law. Therefore, plaintiffs are entitled to damages in the amount that will bring the plant into compliance. Poulsen v. Treasure St. Indus., Inc., 192 M 69, 626 P2d 822, 38 St. Rep. 218 (1981).

Damages for Loss of Profits: A person may recover for loss of profits which is the natural and direct result of the act of the defendant when such amount is certain and the amount awarded by the court is well within the evidence. Nevin v. Silver Bow County, 172 M 501, 565 P2d 314 (1977).

Damages for Loss of Anticipated Gross Income: Where plaintiff sold his accounting business due to a faulty computer, he could not determine damages by showing difference between projected gross income for the year and his actual gross income because such amount lacks certainty of origin. Lovely v. Burroughs Corp., 165 M 209, 527 P2d 557 (1974), reaffirmed in Lovely v. Burroughs Corp., 169 M 454, 548 P2d 610 (1976).

Jury Instruction: In action by plaintiffs, who purchased residence from contractor before it was completed, to recover for defective material and workmanship, instruction, although broad, was not prejudicial, where it read: "You are instructed that if you find from a preponderance of the evidence in this action that plaintiffs are entitled to damages, then in arriving at the measure of damages, it is the amount which will compensate the plaintiff for all detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom, or which has resulted therefrom." Mitchell v. Carlson, 132 M 1, 313 P2d 717 (1957).

Attorney Fees: Where parties have been enjoined and the remedy by motion to dissolve is not available to them and they pursue the only course recognized by the law to rid themselves of the restrictions imposed by the injunction, namely, to defeat it, and they are successful in so doing, the reasonable compensation paid for the services of counsel employed for the special purpose of defeating the injunction is the natural and proximate result of the wrongful issuance of the injunction and is recoverable under this section in an action on the bond given under 27-19-306. McDermott v. Am. Bonding Co., 56 M 1, 179 P 828 (1919).

Damages Not Proximately Caused: Circumstances under which damage to a mining company's credit, destruction of its business, and loss of its property through sales under a judgment secured by employees for wages due at the time an attachment was levied on its real property were held not to have been the proximate consequences of the attachment for which the surety on the attachment undertaking could be held liable. Plymouth Gold Min. Co. v. USF&G Co., 35 M 23, 88 P 565 (1907).

ASCERTAINABLE AND NOT SPECULATIVE

Denial of Tort Claims Affirmed — Evidence Relating to Contract Claim and Damages Properly Admitted — Special Relationship Contract Damages Unavailable: The plaintiff accepted a job offer by the defendant, a health clinic. Before the plaintiff began her new job but after she informed her employer she was leaving, the defendant informed the plaintiff that it would not be employing her. The plaintiff sued, alleging breach of contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and promissory estoppel. In a subsequent action to Great Falls Clinic v. 8th Judicial District Court, 2016 MT 245, 385 Mont. 95, 381 P.3d 550, the District Court denied the plaintiff's motion for partial summary judgment that sought to establish a "special relationship" in which the plaintiff sought damages for emotional distress, loss of enjoyment of life, embarrassment, anxiety, and punitive damages. The District Court denied the plaintiff's request to amend her complaint to add additional tort claims in addition to holding that the only issue to be tried was the damages for the breach of contract. At trial, the jury awarded contract damages. On appeal and cross-appeal, the Supreme Court held that the District Court properly determined that the only claim to be tried was the damages for breach of contract, that the elements to demonstrate a contract involving a special relationship were not met, that evidence of the plaintiff's contract expectations were relevant to the determination of expectancy damages, that efforts by the plaintiff's counsel to admit evidence not germane to the contract claim did not ultimately prejudice the jury, that the plaintiff presented sufficient evidence that her damages were appropriate and reasonably incurred, and that the denial of a jury instruction that the contract term was only for a year under 39-2-602 was proper. Warrington v. Great Falls Clinic, LLP, 2019 MT 111, 395 Mont. 432, 443 P.3d 369.

Remand for Determination of Clearly Ascertainable Damages in Breach of Contract Action: Watson was awarded $730,000 in compensatory damages in a default judgment against West for breach of an employment contract. The District Court based the amount on Watson's claims for 5 years of missed employment and the value of Watson's promised stock shares in West's corporation. However, the Supreme Court noted that questions remained whether the corporation was ever capitalized or brought into operation, that the parties' employment agreement was effectively canceled a mere 5 months after it was negotiated, and that the corporation itself was not named as a defendant, so it was questionable whether the award of 5 years of salary and the claimed full value of stock shares was reasonable. The fact that the judgment was entered by default did not abrogate the requirement that the damages be reasonable and clearly ascertainable, so the award was vacated and the case was remanded for further proceedings regarding the extent of Watson's reasonable and nonspeculative damages. Watson v. West, 2009 MT 342, 353 M 120, 218 P3d 1227 (2009).

Conclusory Statements and Speculative Assertions Insufficient to Establish Material Facts — Summary Judgment Proper: Plaintiff contended that defendants' work on the Tin Cup dam caused the dam to leak, which resulted in an emergency declaration and damages to plaintiff. However, the knowledge to determine what caused the dam failure fell beyond the understanding of the trier of fact and required expert testimony. Plaintiff offered no experts and thus was left with mere conclusory statements and speculative assertions on the issue of causation, which did not constitute facts of a material and substantive nature. Because plaintiff failed to meet its burden to show any issues of material fact, summary judgment was properly granted to defendant. Tin Cup County Water/Sewer District v. Garden City Plumbing & Heating, Inc., 2008 MT 434, 347 M 468, 200 P3d 60 (2008). See also Weyler v. Kaufman, 196 M 132, 638 P2d 393 (1981), *Ehly v. Contract Remedy Providing Transfer of Twenty-Acre Parcel of Land as Security for Contractual Obligations Not Considered Unenforceable Liquidated Damages Provision — Award of Actual Damages Not Including Expectancy Damages and Lost Profits: As part of a sale of real property, Canton pledged a 20-acre parcel to Riverview Homes II, Ltd. (Riverview), as security in the event that Canton breached his contractual obligation to complete a proposed subdivision and construct an artificial lake. Canton breached the contract, and Riverview sought to quiet title to the 20-acre parcel. The District Court agreed that Canton breached the contract, but held that the contract remedy was an unenforceable liquidated damages provision because the amount of damages to be paid for breach of Canton's obligations was determined in anticipation of Canton's possible breach. The court then examined the contract for another possible method to determine the appropriate amount of damages, and ultimately awarded Riverview $92,046 as the amount that Riverview would have received for the sale of the property as bare lots without homes. Riverview appealed, contending that the contractual language was not a liquidated damages provision because the parties did not agree on the amount of compensation or damages to be paid by Canton in case of a breach of contract, and arguing that the District Court erred in setting the damage amount by failing to account for the profit that Riverview would have received from the sale of the lots with homes. The Supreme Court agreed that the contract language was not an unenforceable liquidated damages provision, but found that the discussion regarding liquidated damages was not essential to the resolution of the parties' claims, and moved on to the actual award of damages. The Supreme Court declined to allow Riverview an award of speculative profits in the absence of lost profits attributable to Riverview's inability to sell developed lots. The District Court's determination of damages was affirmed. If the contract had been performed, Riverview would have had six bare lots approved as a subdivision and an artificial lake. Because of Canton's breach, Riverview had neither. The District Court's award accounted for the expectations of the parties at the signing of the contract, and Riverview was not allowed to recover a greater amount of damages than would have been gained by full performance of the contract. Riverview Homes II, Ltd. v. Canton, 2001 MT 309, 307 M 517, 38 P3d 848 (2001).

Party May Choose to Breach Contract and Pay Damages: American Music Co. (AMC) sued Higbee and requested a preliminary injunction for Higbee's not honoring the parties' contract by replacing AMC's gambling machines with other machines. The Supreme Court stated that an injunction was not available because a party has a right to breach a contract if the party is willing to pay the damages caused by the breach and, in the present case, the amount of damages could be determined. Am. Music Co. v. Higbee, 1998 MT 150, 289 M 278, 961 P2d 109, 55 St. Rep. 586 (1998).

Damages Based on Opinion That Bonds Would Not Be Called: The defendant objected to the amount of damages that were based in part on expert testimony that certain industrial revenue bonds would not be called in 1992 and instead that the damages should be calculated using the year 2002. The Supreme Court held that the evidence made it reasonably certain for the jury to assume that the bonds would not be called in 1992 and that the damages incurred by the plaintiff would continue until the payoff of the loan in 2002. Billings Clinic v. Peat Marwick Main & Co., 244 M 324, 797 P2d 899, 47 St. Rep. 1464 (1990).

Sales Markup of Merchandise Not Recoverable: The plaintiff appealed a verdict that did not allow for recovery of the margin of profit in a suit against his insurance carrier for a loss sustained when certain of his goods spoiled. The Supreme Court affirmed the verdict on the basis that no contract for the sale of the goods existed at the time they were lost and that therefore an award for damages would be speculative. Maddux v. Bunch, 241 M 61, 784 P2d 936, 47 St. Rep. 82 (1990).

Loss of Future Profits — Breach of Contract: Although determination of loss of future profits is often speculative, when injury caused by a breach of contract is certain, damages for lost profits may be awarded even though the amount of damages is uncertain. Hostetter v. Donlan, 221 M 380, 719 P2d 1243, 43 St. Rep. 909 (1986), followed in Van Riper v. Ford New Holland, Inc., 261 M 206, 862 P2d 47, 50 St. Rep. 1289 (1993).

Loss of Tax Savings as Ascertainable Damages: Plaintiff offered to buy defendants' ranch. One of plaintiff's disclosed purposes for wanting the ranch was for investment tax credits and depreciation for income tax purposes. After much negotiation, plaintiff paid earnest money and the parties entered into a buy-sell agreement under which the chattels were to be transferred in 1981 and the real property in 1982. Defendants later presented plaintiff with new terms, claiming transfer in different years would cause loss of grazing permits. A Forest Service official offered three alternatives in a letter. Defendants chose the one alternative inconsistent with the buy-sell agreement. At trial for breach of contract, the District Court awarded plaintiff damages for tax losses. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff's gain of the investment tax credit upon performance of the contract was within the contemplation of the parties and reasonably foreseeable. Defendants' failure to perform their obligations under the contract negated the possibility of plaintiff's claiming the tax credits and was the legal cause of the lost opportunity. The damages were reasonably foreseeable and ascertainable and were properly awardable. Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984).

Damages Caused by Improper Installation of Heating and Cooling System — Reasonable Computation of Excess Natural Gas Use: The repeated failure to properly install a heating, ventilating, and air-conditioning system constituted breach of contract. Testimony established that the system's improper installation caused astronomical natural gas bills. Although it may be difficult to ascertain the amount of damages based upon natural gas use, it was not speculative for the District Court, based upon testimony, to compute that 80% more natural gas was consumed and to award 80% of the total natural gas bills as damages. Sack v. A.V. Design, Inc., 211 M 147, 683 P2d 1311, 41 St. Rep. 1272 (1984), followed in Cut Bank School District No. 15 v. Rummel, 2002 MT 248, 312 M 143, 58 P3d 159 (2002), in ruling that the district failed to prove the damages element for contracted work on steps and sidewalks to a reasonable degree of certainty in its breach of contract claim, and in Mont. Petroleum Tank Release Comp. Bd. v. Crumleys, Inc., 2008 MT 2, 341 M 33, 174 P3d 948 (2008), to the extent that a method of calculating damages may provide a reasonable basis for computation, even if not mathematically precise, when the method is based on the best evidence obtainable under the circumstances to support the damage award and no alternative method is offered.

Lost Sales as Speculative: When plaintiff estimated lost profits based upon shopping mall promotional campaign, with no history of sales from this type of effort and no deduction for overhead, the court rejected the contended loss of profits as speculative. Bolz v. Myers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606, 39 St. Rep. 1747 (1982).

Lost Profits as Speculative: The District Court found that the bank had breached an agreement to finance Stensvad's corporation and, after that breach, had converted or appropriated his property, resulting in damages to Stensvad. On appeal the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's award of lost profits because the damages in this case for lost profits were speculative. Stensvad v. Miners & Merchants Bank of Roundup, 196 M 193, 640 P2d 1303, 39 St. Rep. 27 (1982), followed in Olson v. Parchen, 249 M 342, 816 P2d 423, 48 St. Rep. 718 (1991), and Fox Grain & Cattle Co. v. Maxwell, 267 M 528, 885 P2d 432, 51 St. Rep. 1136 (1994). See also Topco, Inc. v. St., 275 M 352, 912 P2d 805, 53 St. Rep. 175 (1996).

Damages for Breach — When Speculative: In a case relating to the sale of an old log cabin, the trial court held that the buyer's costs of hiring a man to haul logs from the dismantled cabin were too speculative to recover. The proof of the damages was speculative at best. The log hauler did not testify about any debt, and the appellant did not produce a bill, although over a year had passed since the work was done for the appellant. Jeffery v. Neville, 190 M 300, 620 P2d 1218, 37 St. Rep. 1983 (1980).

Speculative Damages: The breach of an obligation to establish escrow contained in a mining agreement with an option to purchase did not give rise to recoverable damages even though a potential investor withdrew because of the lack of escrow. The damages are too speculative. Rogers v. Relyea, 184 M 1, 601 P2d 37 (1979).

Evidence Sufficient — No Timely Objection: The evidence offered was sufficient to support the jury's award of damages when the computations offered may have been subject to the objection that they were speculative but counsel failed to object at the trial level. Sikorski v. Olin & Rolin Mfg., Inc., 174 M 107, 568 P2d 571 (1977), followed in Story v. Bozeman, 259 M 207, 856 P2d 202, 50 St. Rep. 761 (1993), and overruled in Bache v. Gilden, 252 M 178, 827 P2d 817, 49 St. Rep. 203 (1992), to the extent that Sikorski held that failure to request a continuance at trial constituted a waiver of the right to claim error on appeal. Bache was followed in Glacier Nat'l Bank v. Challinor, 253 M 412, 833 P2d 1046, 49 St. Rep. 503 (1992).

Loss of Business Income Too Speculative: Damages reflected by loss of motel income due to installation of defective gas heaters, based on income tax returns during the time defective heaters were installed compared with subsequent years with adequate electric heaters, is too speculative and too remote to qualify as clearly ascertainable damages. Credit Counsellors, Inc. v. Jones, 169 M 311, 548 P2d 158 (1976).

Contractor's Future Profits: Where a contractor had lost his bonding capacity and thereby future profits because of a breach of contract by the state and his accountants testified in detail as to his past earnings, net income, and depreciation taken for 22 years, the jury's award of $78,000 was not too speculative as computed for the next 3 years, as the profits were reasonably foreseeable. Laas v. St. Highway Comm'n, 157 M 121, 483 P2d 699 (1971).

Profits — When Recoverable and When Not: Under this section, profits that are a mere matter of speculation cannot be made the basis of recovery in a suit for breach of contract. When the profits can be shown to be reasonably certain, they may be recovered. Jurcec v. Raznik, 104 M 45, 64 P2d 1076 (1937).

Lack of Definite Statements:

Under this section, no damages can be recovered for a breach of contract which are not clearly ascertainable in both their nature and origin. Rocky Mtn. Fire Ins. Co. v. Belcher, 96 M 409, 31 P2d 316 (1934).

Where, in an action for the breach of a contract, the admitted facts do not show injury and there is a lack of definite statement by witnesses justifying an inference that the defendant has suffered damage, a claim for damages in a substantial amount is properly considered without foundation in the evidence. Busbee v. Gagnon Co., 50 M 203, 146 P 275 (1915).

Applicable to Obligations Arising From Contract: The measure of damages in an action for damages for failure of seller to promptly deliver equipment for a plow, resulting in loss by buyer in preventing performance of a plowing contract, is that specified in this section as an obligation arising from contract and not that provided in 27-1-317 as damages arising ex delicto. Hall v. Advance-Rumely Thresher Co., 65 M 566, 212 P 290 (1923).

Reasonable Amount: The measure of damages recoverable in an action for breach of contract under which defendant was required to sow a tract of land in grain, etc., was such reasonable amount, clearly ascertainable in both nature and origin, as to compensate plaintiff for the damages resultant and such additional amount as in the ordinary course of things would likely result from the breach. Harrington v. Moore Land Co., 59 M 421, 196 P 975 (1921).

Future Events: In an action for breach of contract, a requested instruction that the jury, in fixing damages for nonperformance in the future, should make allowance for the uncertainties which affect all conclusions depending on future events and that only such evidence as was reasonably certain to extend to future events should be considered in fixing damages for nonperformance of the contract was vague and indefinite and not authorized by this section. Brazell v. Cohn, 32 M 556, 81 P 339 (1905).

MEASURE OF DAMAGES

Employment Contract With 3-Month Limitation on Damages — Not Enforceable When Employee Terminated Without Cause: The defendant had worked as an insurance agent for the plaintiffs, a number of insurance companies, for more than 20 years when the plaintiffs terminated their agency appointment agreement with him. The agreement provided that it could be terminated on 3 months' written notice for any reason. Subsequently, the plaintiffs filed an action against the defendant, and he counterclaimed that the agreement had been terminated without cause. A jury found that the plaintiffs had breached the agreement by terminating the defendant without cause and awarded the defendant 5 years of lost wages. On appeal, the plaintiffs argued that the defendant's damages should have been limited to 3 months as provided for in the agreement. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed, noting that the jury had concluded that the defendant had been terminated without cause and that the provision limiting damages was therefore not triggered under the circumstances. Farmers Ins. Exch. v. Goldan, 2016 MT 196, 384 Mont. 301, 378 P.3d 1163.

Business Entitled to Consequential Damages for Wrongful Collection Action — Measure of Damages Based on Hardship in Obtaining Financing: The uninsured employers' fund (UEF) breached a contract by turning over to collections an employer that did not have workers' compensation insurance, despite the fact that late payments were being accepted from the employer by UEF. Accordingly, the District Court awarded consequential damages to the employer based on a loss of financing, a higher origination fee, unsold inventory, a restocking fee, and lost profits. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, reasoning that UEF should have foreseen that referring a claim to collections could create difficulties in obtaining financing and cause substantial barriers. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Objection to Damage Calculation Not Preserved for Appeal — Sufficient Evidence That Prevailing Party Mitigated Damages: The uninsured employers' fund (UEF) breached a contract and the District Court awarded consequential damages to the prevailing party. On appeal, UEF claimed that the District Court did not properly calculate damages based on two grounds. First, UEF claimed the District Court awarded gross damages rather than net damages. Second, UEF claimed the District Court should have offset any damages that it awarded given that the party that was awarded damages did not mitigate its damages by selling inventory to other dealers. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that UEF did not preserve the net damages argument based on a failure to object at trial. Additionally, the testimonial evidence supported the District Court's determination that the prevailing party could not sell its inventory to other dealers. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Substantial Credible Evidence Supported Calculation of Damages — Further Damages Not Reasonably Certain to Occur: The uninsured employers' fund breached a contract and the District Court awarded consequential damages to the prevailing party. On appeal, the prevailing party claimed that the District Court failed to award further damages, including future lost profits of $1.3 million over 10 years. On appeal, the Supreme Court determined that substantial credible evidence supported the District Court's conclusion and that further damages were not reasonably certain to occur. Elk Mtn. Motor Sports, Inc. v. Dept. of Labor and Industry, 2012 MT 261, 367 Mont. 36, 289 P.3d 165.

Fees of Expert Considered Damages Rather Than Witness Fees: Plaintiff employed an engineer to assess problems with a tennis facility constructed by defendant, and the engineer testified as an expert at trial regarding water damage and radon problems discovered as part of the assessment. Defendant moved to exclude evidence of the amount plaintiff paid the engineer for the consulting work, but the District Court allowed evidence of the amount plaintiff paid the expert. On appeal, defendant contended that the engineer should receive only expert witness fees as provided in 26-2-505. The Supreme Court disagreed. The record showed that the engineer was employed prior to litigation and reflected that the engineer's time was spent investigating the cause of the construction defects, rather than preparing to testify at trial. As such, the engineer's fees were properly assessed as damages instead of expert witness fees. Glacier Tennis Club at the Summit, LLC v. Treweek Constr. Co., Inc., 2004 MT 70, 320 M 351, 87 P3d 431 (2004).

Failure to Provide Documentation of Damages Precluding Damage Award: A settlement agreement provided that the wife would be sole owner of a house and be responsible for indebtedness on the property. The husband contended that he should have been credited for additional interest that he was charged on loans unrelated to the marriage because the wife defaulted on the mortgage after the final decree was entered and hurt the husband's credit rating. However, even though the wife breached the settlement agreement, the husband did not submit documentation to prove damages related to the loss of credit, and absent proof, the damage request was properly denied. In re Marriage of Mease, 2004 MT 59, 320 M 229, 92 P3d 1148 (2004).

Failure of Trial Court to Consider Damages From Defective Construction Not Erroneous: In a construction lien case, the District Court adopted the contractor's proposed findings and conclusions almost verbatim. Plaintiffs alleged error because the court failed to consider damages from defective workmanship, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Although the verbatim adoption of findings and conclusions is discouraged, in this case, the trial court considered substantial but conflicting evidence from both parties regarding the quality of the work and resolved the conflict in favor of the contractor. Given the substantial evidence upon which the decision was made, the Supreme Court declined to disturb the findings. Rossi v. Pawiroredjo, 2004 MT 39, 320 M 63, 85 P3d 776 (2004).

Assignment of Retail Installment Contract — Breach of Warranty — Abrogation of Waiver of Recourse: Arcadia Financial, Ltd. (Arcadia), is a Minnesota corporation that purchases retail installment contracts from automobile dealers, including Prestige Toyota (Prestige) in Billings, after the dealers have entered into installment contracts with automobile buyers. Knight purchased a Toyota from Prestige, and Knight's contract contained a provision assigning the contract to Arcadia under one of four options. The same day that Knight purchased the automobile, Prestige assigned the contract to Arcadia "without recourse", which meant that only the contract warranties applied, one of which was that Prestige had a valid certificate of title and would send it to the appropriate officials within 10 days of sale to ensure Arcadia's interest in the vehicle. The contract also provided that Prestige unconditionally guaranteed full performance of the contract in the event that it breached any of the warranties. Prestige failed to send a valid certificate of title as required. Knight later defaulted and filed for bankruptcy protection. Arcadia demanded that Prestige repurchase the Knight contract. Prestige admitted breaching the warranty but claimed that it was not required to repurchase the contract and refused to do so, asserting that Arcadia's damages were limited to the amount that the bankruptcy trustee received from sale of the automobile. The District Court awarded Arcadia the principal amount due on the Knight contract, plus interest, attorney fees, and costs, concluding that under the clear language of the contract assignment provisions, Prestige had guaranteed payment of all sums due when it failed to deliver the valid title within the time required. The Supreme Court agreed, noting that the contract was converted into a full recourse contract when Prestige failed to deliver the valid title, so Prestige was required to repurchase the contract for the amount of principal remaining due. The detriment proximately caused by Prestige's failure to repurchase the contract was the principal amount owing on the contract. Further, the District Court properly awarded attorney fees to Arcadia as the prevailing party pursuant to 28-3-704. Arcadia Financial, Ltd. v. Prestige Toyota, 1999 MT 273, 296 M 494, 989 P2d 831, 56 St. Rep. 1111 (1999).

Breach of Contract Action for Failure to Properly Embalm Deceased — Agency — Standing to Sue: Maria handled all funeral arrangements for her deceased mother. The family of the deceased, when viewing the body, observed a stain on the clothing that was determined to be caused by leaking embalming fluid. The lower court dismissed the family's claim for breach of contract and also ruled that Maria was not acting as agent for the other family members and that only she would have been able to sue for breach of contract. The Supreme Court held that a cause of action for breach of contract would exist if Maria could show that the breach had so "damaged" the funeral as to constitute a breach of contract entitling Maria to damages. The Supreme Court did affirm the lower court's ruling that Maria was not acting as an agent for the rest of the family in contracting with the mortuary. Therefore, only she could sue on the contract. Contreras v. Michelotti-Sawyers & Nordquist Mortuary, Inc., 271 M 300, 896 P2d 1118, 52 St. Rep. 454 (1995).

Damages — Duty to Award Damages — Sufficient Evidence to Support Award: Plaintiff, who leased restaurant premises from defendant, sued for breach of contract and assault and battery. Defendant counterclaimed. The jury found for plaintiff and awarded contract damages. Defendant appealed on the grounds that there was insufficient evidence to support the award. Plaintiff introduced evidence of expenses, labor, actual income receipt records, rent and utility records, costs of goods and variable expense figures, complete tax returns, and several summaries of this information. Defendant failed to introduce any testimony or evidence to contradict the documents introduced by plaintiff. The Supreme Court held that there was substantial credible evidence to support the award. Having determined liability, it was the jury's duty to calculate an award of damages, including lost profits, based on the evidence presented. Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854, 52 St. Rep. 268 (1995), followed in Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999).

Lost Profits — Expert Testimony Not Required — Error to Limit: Plaintiff sued for breach of contract involving the lease of a restaurant. Plaintiff appealed the District Court's limiting of damages for lost profits to the period prior to the restaurant's closing. Defendant appealed on grounds that the District Court erred in denying a motion for judgment as a matter of law on the issues of contract damages and lost profits. Defendant based his argument on the judge's statement in chambers that there was no rational basis for the jury to award lost profits because plaintiff failed to introduce expert testimony on that issue. The Supreme Court held that the lower court did not err in denying defendant's motion. Expert testimony is not required to prove lost profits. Lost profits need be proved only with the best evidence under the circumstances that will support a reasonably close estimate of the loss. The District Court abused its discretion by limiting lost profits to the period prior to the restaurant's closing. Lee v. Kane, 270 M 505, 893 P2d 854, 52 St. Rep. 268 (1995).

Offset of Tort Judgment With Amount Owed on Contract Underlying Tort as Within Equity Power of Court: Defendant fraudulently induced plaintiffs to purchase property by misrepresenting the quality of the road that she intended to build as access to the property. The District Court required her to file an accounting reflecting the principal balance due her from each of the plaintiffs for property purchased under the contracts for deed, and the court then offset and credited the amounts due plaintiffs from the judgment against the balance of the principal owed by plaintiffs under the contracts for deed. Although the contracts themselves were not at issue, the respective obligations of the parties arose from the same transaction and damages were related to the value of the premises and the purchase price, which was the basis of the principal under the contract. It was within the equity power of the court to allow a setoff of debts under these circumstances because that power exists independent of statute when grounds for equitable interposition are shown, such as fraud or insolvency. Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993). On remand, the District Court found that although one cotenant had quitclaimed all interest in the property to the plaintiff cotenant, the right to personal damages did not pass with the transfer of the property. Clarifying Dew, supra, the Supreme Court noted that the discussion regarding the equity power of the District Court was confined solely to its ability to set off the principal balances on the contracts for deed against the damages plaintiff sustained. As such, the District Court was not invested with the broad equitable power to award plaintiff 100% of the personal damages attributable to fraud when he was not entitled to such an award by law. Because the underlying action was for personal damages, not property damages, the court properly determined that plaintiff was entitled to only 50% of the personal damages arising from defendant's fraud. However, the court miscalculated the amount of accrued interest owing, so the case was remanded for a recalculation of damages. Dew v. Dower, 269 M 286, 888 P2d 421, 51 St. Rep. 1388 (1994). See also S. Surety Co. of N.Y. v. Maney, 121 P2d 295 (Okla. 1941).

Moratory Interest on Borrowed Funds Not Recoverable: Relying upon the accuracy of plans supplied by the state, Martel Construction (Martel) contracted with the state to construct a new highway bridge to replace one originally built in 1936. In preparing its plans, the state had relied on plans used to construct the 1936 bridge, incorrectly believing that those plans represented the elevation and dimensions needed for the new bridge. As a result of this error, Martel was required to perform extra work not contemplated under the contract. The District Court awarded Martel damages for the actual construction costs for the extra work performed and damages for "moratory interest" or the interest paid on funds borrowed to finance the extra work. The Supreme Court reversed the portion of the ruling allowing recovery of "moratory interest", holding that the state is not liable for prejudgment or postjudgment interest unless the interest is part of actual damages resulting from the state's breach of contract. Martel Constr., Inc. v. St., 249 M 501, 817 P2d 812, 48 St. Rep. 812 (1991).

Damages for Emotional Distress Improperly Awarded in Breach of Contract Action: Distinguishing emotional distress claims in a breach of contract action from emotional distress damage claims in tort actions, the Supreme Court applied 27-1-317 as the measure of damages to be used in tort actions and this section for damages collectible under a breach of contract action, noting that this section contains the additional limitation that the detriment must, in the ordinary course of things, be likely to result from the breach of contract and that damages must be clearly ascertainable in nature and origin. Lacking such a showing, the award of emotional damages in a breach of contract action constituted reversible error. Larson v. Udem, 246 M 336, 805 P2d 1318, 47 St. Rep. 2088 (1990).

Tort of Bad Faith — Not Available for Most Contract Actions — Breach: In a contract action, the Supreme Court ruled that a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing constituted a breach of the contract and that only contract damages would be available to the prevailing party. The court stated that tort-type damages would not be available for a breach of the covenant. The court also held that the tort of bad faith would apply only in exceptional circumstances to discourage oppression in contracts that necessarily give one party a superior position. Every contract, regardless of the type, contains an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. A breach of the covenant is a breach of the contract. Story v. Bozeman, 242 M 436, 791 P2d 767, 47 St. Rep. 850 (1990), followed in Mann Farms, Inc. v. Traders St. Bank of Poplar, 245 M 234, 801 P2d 73, 47 St. Rep. 2094 (1990) (replacing previous opinion, subsequently withdrawn, at 47 St. Rep. 1557 (1990)), Keller v. Dooling, 248 M 535, 813 P2d 437, 48 St. Rep. 554 (1991), McNeil v. Currie, 253 M 9, 830 P2d 1241, 49 St. Rep. 312 (1992), and *Kneeland v. Damages for Failure to Obtain Mortgage Release: Seller of real property failed to obtain release of a mortgage, resulting in buyer's inability to get financing for a horse ranch on the property. Damage to buyer through seller's breach of contract was properly determined to be $18,000 for increased costs of building a house, barn, and other outbuildings; $10,000 for increased costs of purchasing a tractor, plow, and irrigation equipment; $1,600 for increased costs of obtaining power to a pump and digging wells; and $13,500 for increased costs of obtaining a horse trailer and appropriate truck. Sjoberg v. Kravik, 233 M 33, 759 P2d 966, 45 St. Rep. 1270 (1988).

Net Value of Lost Crops Recoverable: On the question of damages recoverable for loss of crops due to a breach of contract that resulted in failure to participate in farm subsidy programs, only the net value of lost crops could be recovered. Albers v. Bar ZF Ranch, Inc., 229 M 396, 747 P2d 1347, 44 St. Rep. 2081 (1987).

Breach of Contract — Cause of Damages Not Proven: The District Court properly found that an oral agreement to cut and bale the first crop of hay by July 10 was breached since the work was not completed until July 20. However, the delay was not proven to be the cause of the failure to get a second crop. Despite the breach of contract, failure to award damages was proper. Burns v. Hinman, 229 M 62, 744 P2d 879, 44 St. Rep. 1782 (1987).

Breach in Sale of Restaurant — Measure of Damages and Interest: Where restaurant buyers breached a sales contract, the trial court properly granted sellers the amount expended on outstanding accounts payable incurred by the buyers, such as power service, garbage service, and advertising debts, as well as interest at 10% from the date of judgment. Stevens v. Abbott, 228 M 101, 740 P2d 1136, 44 St. Rep. 1374 (1987).

Special Interrogatories on Tort and Breach of Contract Claims — Award Under Each Theory Unclear — Remand: A District Court judgment on a special verdict based on jury findings of damages, both for breach of contract and for tort, was remanded because the special interrogatories did not state which acts were to be considered under each theory; therefore, the verdict on tort claims was unclear as to which damages were cumulative to contract damages and which were alternative. NW. Nat'l Bank of Great Falls v. Weaver-Maxwell, Inc., 224 M 33, 729 P2d 1258, 43 St. Rep. 1995 (1986), distinguished in Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988).

Determination of Damages in Violation of Covenant Against Competition: The Supreme Court reversed a District Court judgment upon finding that a party to an agreement to sell a radio station breached a covenant against competition and remanded for a determination of damages accruing to the purchaser due to improper interference with transferred goodwill. W. Media, Inc. v. Merrick, 224 M 28, 727 P2d 547, 43 St. Rep. 1991 (1986). The Supreme Court relied on the rule set out in Crncevich v. Georgetown Recreation Corp., 168 M 113, 541 P2d 56 (1975), and Weinberg v. Farmers St. Bank of Worden, 231 M 10, 752 P2d 719, 45 St. Rep. 391 (1988), in affirming the award of attorney fees as damages. W. Media, Inc. v. Merrick, 232 M 480, 757 P2d 1308, 45 St. Rep. 1212 (1988).

Damages Awarded on Theories of Breach of Contract and Rescission: Appellant argued that the District Court award of damages on both theories of breach of contract and rescission was improper, contending that the remedies were mutually exclusive. The Supreme Court noted that restitution under a theory of rescission can, under some circumstances, be a remedy for breach of contract; however, it was clear from the complaint and judgment in this case that the recovery was in damages for breach of contract and as such was properly computed. Hostetter v. Donlan, 221 M 380, 719 P2d 1243, 43 St. Rep. 909 (1986).

Accrued Interest on Loan as Part of Damages: The District Court awarded a two-thirds share of payment in kind (PIK) benefits to a tenant, plus accrued interest on his outstanding bank loan dating from the failure of the landlords to pay his share of PIK benefits. On appeal, one landlord asserted this was error because the tenant maintained only one account that covered living expenses as well as other farming operations; therefore, the loan balance was not solely attributable to the farming of the landlord's property. The Supreme Court disagreed, noting that had the tenant received his share of PIK benefits at the proper time, he would have been able to pay the loan entirely and avoid further interest charges. The accrued interest on the loan balance from that date was held to be clearly part of his damages. Popp v. Gountanis, 221 M 267, 718 P2d 340, 43 St. Rep. 801 (1986).

Lessee's Breach of Agreement to Lease Office Renovated for Him: After defendant refused to move into office space plaintiff renovated under a lease agreement, a jury gave plaintiff damages for the value of the lease and for the renovation expenses. There was no improper double recovery in also granting the renovation expenses as damages when the two principal witnesses on the matter were plaintiff and his expert, who testified that there was little chance of leasing the renovated premises to someone else and that the premises would have to be completely rerenovated for any new tenant. Nicholson v. United Pac. Ins. Co., 219 M 32, 710 P2d 1342, 42 St. Rep. 1822 (1985).

Bailment — Damages for Loss of Deposited Items When No Value of Contents Stated: An armored car service lost five bags received from a customer, but no statement of value of the contents of the bags was set forth in the contract receipt for the bags. The Supreme Court held that 70-6-204 is a limitation on the general rule of contract damages applicable only when a bailment involves a stated value for deposited items; thus, when no value is stated, the measure of damages is determined pursuant to this section. Interstate Brands Corp. v. Cannon, 218 M 380, 708 P2d 573, 42 St. Rep. 1670 (1985).

Breach of Oral Contract — Interest Rate: Plaintiff agreed to remodel a prefab home for defendant. He also built a foundation, added a bedroom and deck, and built a double garage. Plaintiff completed the basement and sent a bill to defendant. The bill was paid. The remainder of the work was completed, but defendant refused to pay, contending the oral agreement between the parties contained a "cap" of $30,000. Plaintiff contended the agreement was on a cost-plus basis, the unpaid portion of which was $63,310. The District Court found for plaintiff and awarded the amount due with interest at 6% from the completion date. Defendant contended the award of damages was unreasonable. The amount awarded was the amount owed on the contract, not damages for breach. The award merely compensated plaintiff for what he was owed. Pursuant to 27-1-211, plaintiff was entitled to interest from the date he was entitled to payment. That was the date the District Court determined the work was completed. Since the parties had not agreed on an interest rate, the District Court used the legal rate stated in 31-1-106. This was within the court's reasonable discretion. Frank L. Pirtz Constr., Inc. v. Hardin Town Pump, Inc., 214 M 131, 692 P2d 460, 41 St. Rep. 2366 (1984).

Sale of Land:

In an action for breach of contract for sale of land, it was proper for the trial court to award as damages both the difference in value of the land conveyed from the value promised and the difference in crop values actually obtained from crop values that would have been obtained had the conveyance been as promised. Recovery of losses for crops may be awarded only from the time the contract was entered into until the time plaintiffs were in possession of full knowledge of the facts pertaining to the breach. Castillo v. Franks, 213 M 232, 690 P2d 425, 41 St. Rep. 2071 (1984).

In computing damages for sale of land constituting constructive fraud in that representations of acreage exceeded actual acreage, buyer was not entitled to damages for loss of profits based on number of cows that total ranch would support but was entitled to damages for missing acreage computed from contract value on per acre basis without distinction between deeded and leased land or fenced or open land. Hardin v. Hill, 149 M 68, 423 P2d 309 (1967).

Although defendant was not entitled to retain downpayment on land when no binding contract of sale was ever made, he should be allowed to retain so much thereof as would be necessary to compensate him for damage caused by defendant's occupancy of the land. Fink v. Doggett, 123 M 324, 214 P2d 743 (1950).

Damages recoverable for a breach of contract of sale of farmlands are such as may fairly be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when they entered into it and such as might naturally have been expected to result from its breach. Healy v. Ginoff, 69 M 116, 220 P 539 (1923).

Proper Quantum for Architect's Services: Under a contract with a landowner who wished to build housing units on the land, an architect prepared plans and specifications that were approved by landowner. Under the contract, the architect was to receive 5% of the construction cost. Following abandonment of the project, he was entitled to a fee based on quantum meruit. The proper recovery was the number of hours of service, 600, times the architect's hourly rate, $30, or $18,000. It was improper for the court to hold that the architect was entitled to only $10,000 based on the value of his services. Kenneth D. Collins Agency v. Hagerott, 211 M 303, 684 P2d 487, 41 St. Rep. 1375 (1984).

Damages Caused by Improper Installation of Heating and Cooling System — Reasonable Computation of Excess Natural Gas Use: The repeated failure to properly install a heating, ventilating, and air-conditioning system constituted breach of contract. Testimony established that the system's improper installation caused astronomical natural gas bills. Although it may be difficult to ascertain the amount of damages based upon natural gas use, it was not speculative for the District Court, based upon testimony, to compute that 80% more natural gas was consumed and to award 80% of the total natural gas bills as damages. Sack v. A.V. Design, Inc., 211 M 147, 683 P2d 1311, 41 St. Rep. 1272 (1984).

Repurchase at Reduced Price — Not Mitigation of Damages: The parties entered into an agreement for the lease of a truck. The lease agreement contained a noncancellation provision and provided alternative remedies to the lessor in the event of a default. Lessee returned the truck with current payments to lessor prior to the termination date of the lease. Lessor had to make repairs to the truck. Lessor held a public sale pursuant to the lease and repurchased the truck. He then leased it to another party. The lessor had full title to the truck before and after the sale. There was no payment from buyer to seller to offset damages resulting from lessee's default. Since there was mitigating effect in plaintiff purchasing his own truck, it was error for the District Court to consider the sale in awarding damages. The value of the re-lease rather than the sale price of the truck was the proper method of determining mitigation of damages. Diede v. Davis, 203 M 205, 661 P2d 838, 40 St. Rep. 394 (1983).

Consent to Sublet Unreasonably Withheld — Measure of Landlord's Damages: Where the plaintiff landlord unreasonably withheld its consent for the defendant tenant to sublet the plaintiff's offices to the state parole board and the defendant quit the premises, whereupon the plaintiff convinced Waddell, another of its tenants, to move into the offices vacated by the defendant, the District Court did not err in holding that the plaintiff was entitled only to the rent owed by the defendant minus that amount which could have been earned by subletting to the state parole board. The refusal by the plaintiff to consent to the sublease was not such an interference with the leasehold estate as to justify cancellation of the lease by the defendant, and because the lease agreement is silent as to damages owed by the defendant in such an instance, the defendant is entitled to those damages directly caused by the plaintiff's unreasonable refusal and the plaintiff is entitled to those damages directly resulting from the defendant's abandonment of the lease. The District Court therefore properly applied the amount of rent receivable by the sublease as an offset against the rental payable by the defendant over the remaining term of the lease and refused to hold the defendant liable for the rental of the offices vacated by Waddell, as those damages are remote. Brigham Young Univ. v. Seman, 206 M 440, 672 P2d 15, 40 St. Rep. 1767 (1983).

Failure of Insurance Agent to Procure Insurance: Lee leased a new car and contacted Andrews, an insurance agent, to obtain insurance. Andrews didn't procure the insurance. Lee was involved in an accident, and a judgment of $152,000 was taken against him. Lee sued Andrews, and judgment was entered in favor of Lee on the question of liability. A new trial was ordered on the issue of damages. Damages include the cost of attorney fees in defending the automobile accident suit, damages awarded in that action to the amount of the insurance policy if one had been issued, and damages from having to borrow money at 20% interest to defend the action and pay the judgment. Lee v. Andrews, 204 M 527, 667 P2d 919, 40 St. Rep. 1049 (1983).

Distributorship Contract — Computation of Lost Profits: Distributor suing for breach of wine distribution contract by wine broker presented conflicting evidence regarding computation of his lost profits. An exhibit purportedly computed lost profits on a gross, per-month basis and was used by the court in fixing damages. However, distributor also testified there were expenses associated with the sale of the broker's wines that were not reflected in the exhibit. Generally, when overhead or operating expenses are saved as a result of the breach, the proper measure of recovery is net, not gross, profit, and when such expenses are constant and no saving occurs, the rule is otherwise. It was improper to grant recovery without considering that there were expenses associated with the sale of the wines, and the award was vacated and the issue remanded for reconsideration. Bronken's Good Time Co. v. J. W. Brown & Associates, 203 M 427, 661 P2d 861, 40 St. Rep. 549 (1983).

Damages for Title Insurers' Failure to Cover Easements: The $46,000 that landowner paid to purchase easement rights was the measure of damages where title insurance companies were liable to landowner up to the face amount ($25,000) of the title insurance policy for failure to discover and disclose or insure against the existence of the easements, and landowner was properly awarded his damages up to the face amount of the policy, minus $2,500 the companies had paid in a settlement of part of the easement rights. Lipinski v. Title Ins. Co., 202 M 1, 655 P2d 970, 39 St. Rep. 2283 (1982). The Lipinski rule, requiring due diligence in title examination, was applied in Old Republic Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Realty Title Co., 1999 MT 69, 294 M 6, 978 P2d 956, 56 St. Rep. 286 (1999).

Breach of Contract — Interference With Business: Defendant breached a contract to sell business property to plaintiff and not to compete and subsequently interfered with the conduct of plaintiff's business. Defendant is liable not only for breach of the contract between himself and plaintiff but also for the tort of intentional interference with a contractual or business relationship between plaintiff and his potential customers. Bolz v. Myers, 200 M 286, 651 P2d 606, 39 St. Rep. 1747 (1982).

Breach of a Contract to Employ — Measure of Damages: Rhines entered into an employment contract with Como, but after Como moved his family from Minnesota to Missoula, Rhines refused to give him a job. In a suit brought for breach of the contract, the Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly applied Title 39, ch. 3, part 2, in awarding damages. That part requires an employee to perform work for an employer. Since Como never performed any work for Rhines, the correct measure of damages should be the amount provided for by 27-1-311. Como v. Rhines, 198 M 279, 645 P2d 948, 39 St. Rep. 932 (1982), followed in Merkes v. Mapston, 257 M 408, 849 P2d 210, 50 St. Rep. 332 (1993). See also Grenfell v. Anderson, 1999 MT 272, 296 M 474, 989 P2d 818, 56 St. Rep. 1101 (1999).

Measure of Damages — Implied Warranty of Habitability: The court determined a breach of an implied warranty of habitability on a new home to be a breach of contract and applied this section as establishing the proper damages. The measure of damages includes the fixed contract price of having the remedial work completed and all incidental costs of moving, storage, and temporary rental, even though the total damages allowed substantially exceed the sales price of the home. Damages for emotional distress were not allowed since the liability resulted from breach of an implied warranty of habitability and not from negligence or strict liability. Chandler v. Madsen, 197 M 234, 642 P2d 1028, 39 St. Rep. 508 (1982).

Contract to Seed Land — Failure to Pay Balance Due: Trial court properly awarded contract farmer $4,760 as the balance due on a contract where he had seeded 4,690 acres at an agreed rate of $4.00 an acre for a total contract price of $18,760. Landowner had paid $14,000 and then stopped payment, and landowner was found liable for balance due as farmer had fully performed. Weyler v. Kaufman, 196 M 132, 638 P2d 393, 38 St. Rep. 2197 (1981).

Measure of Damages for Breach of Construction Contract — Labor Contributed by Plaintiffs: In a construction contract when the contractor abandoned the project or otherwise failed to complete it, the normal measure of damages was the reasonable cost of completion by another plus any damages suffered by the delay. In this case the replacement contractor completed the contract at essentially the same price quoted by the appellants, except that the plaintiff and his son-in-law contributed their own labor in order to get the job done faster. The trial court found the plaintiff had suffered damages in the amount of $1,200. The Supreme Court found that to be adequate compensation for the detriment caused by the breach. Carriger v. Ballenger, 192 M 479, 628 P2d 1106, 38 St. Rep. 864 (1981).

Amending Damages in Verdict Form: The court erred in amending the verdict form, over objection, and submitting to the jury, after instructions were settled, on issue of damages when such damages were not pleaded, were not based on evidence, and were not covered by jury instructions. Agrilease, Inc. v. Gray, 173 M 151, 566 P2d 1114 (1977).

Loss of Hay Crop: The trial court erred in submitting to the jury, over objections, the issue of damages for the loss of a hay crop when the only evidence of the market value of the hay crop was based on gross market value without deducting the cost of production and marketing such crop. Agrilease, Inc. v. Gray, 173 M 151, 566 P2d 1114 (1977).

Damages — Contract for Real Property Sale — Waste: Damage award was correct because after deducting the alleged damages the seller is better off than he would have been had the contract been performed, notwithstanding the fact that recovery for harm done to the land is not allowed. As to waste, plaintiff has a right to the return of real property only if the contract is breached. The damage done may be used to reduce the market value of the land but not to allow damages when none would be due under the statutory measure. Whitney v. Bails, 172 M 121, 560 P2d 1344 (1977).

Breach of Construction Contract: When the contractor fails to keep his agreement, the measure of the employer's damages is the sum which will put him in as good a position as if the contract had been performed. Kirby v. Kenyon-Noble Lumber Co., 171 M 329, 558 P2d 452 (1976).

Construction Contracts — Computation of Damages: Increased costs of performing a contract, standby costs for idled equipment, and lost profits were a proper measure of damages where construction work on a highway was delayed due to the state's failure to obtain rights-of-way as required by the contract. Zook Bros. Constr. Co. v. St., 171 M 64, 556 P2d 911 (1976).

Silo Replacement: Where defendant constructed silo for dairy farmer in negligent manner such that wind blew it over just before completion, proper measure of damages was replacement cost of silo plus damages for loss of use less an amount for the foundation, which remained usable. Bos v. Dolajak, 167 M 1, 534 P2d 1258 (1975).

Measure of Damages — Defective Construction: The measure of damages for defective construction is the sum which will put the owner in as good a position as if the contract had been performed, and if the defect is remedial, recovery generally will be based on the market price of completing or correcting the performance, which will generally be the cost of getting work done or completed by another. Haggerty v. Selsco, 166 M 492, 534 P2d 874 (1975).

Unacceptable Installations: Proper measure of damages for faulty installation of showers in campground was the cost of reinforcing them and bring them up to contract specifications. Haggerty v. Selsco, 166 M 492, 534 P2d 874 (1975).

Wrongfully Discharged Teacher: In an action for breach of contract, School Board's failure to follow sections 75-1622 and 75-2411, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), in dismissal of teacher made the dismissal void for want of jurisdiction, entitling teacher to damages for loss of benefits which would reasonably have resulted from complete performance of the contract on her part, including loss of rent-free living quarters, a condition of employment, and expenses in seeking other employment. Wyatt v. School District, 148 M 83, 417 P2d 221 (1966).

Hail Insurance: In an action by the insured against his insurer to recover loss to the insured trailer caused by a hailstorm, where the insurer failed to prove the measure of damages according to its theory of the case, the District Court was not in error in entering judgment for the insured on the basis of estimate of cost of repairing hail damage. Eby v. Foremost Ins. Co., 141 M 62, 374 P2d 857 (1962).

Limitations: The damages recoverable for the breach of an obligation arising from contract must be limited to such as may fairly be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties when they entered into the contract and such as might naturally be expected to result from its violation. In no case is the plaintiff entitled to recover anything more than he would have received had the contract been performed by the defendant on his part, assuming that it had been performed. Myers v. Bender, 46 M 497, 129 P 330 (1913).

Case Notes

Insurance Recovery — Prejudgment Interest Not Allowed Until Appraisal — Postjudgment Interest Allowed After Appraisal: After a building fire, the property owner pursued recovery in District Court against the insurer of the building and was awarded replacement costs and prejudgment interest beginning from the date of the loss. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court's recovery calculation by lowering the judgment amount and remanded the case for the purpose of calculating postjudgment interest, but not prejudgment interest. The court reasoned that prejudgment interest was not appropriate, as the damages could not be made certain until an appraiser made adjustments for portions of the building that were slated for demolition before the fire. Lincoln County Port Authority v. Allianz Global Risks US Ins. Co., 2013 MT 365, 373 Mont. 60, 315 P.3d 934.

Application of Banking Standards, Not Livestock Industry Standards, to Loan Transaction Involving Cattle — Bank-Customer Relationship Not Giving Rise to Fiduciary Responsibilities: A bank loaned money to a couple to fund their cattle breeding operation. When the couple failed to make loan payments, the bank brought an action to collect and foreclose, and the couple brought a counterclaim that the bank's actions breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing and the bank's fiduciary duty toward the couple. After the couple paid the amount owing, they became the plaintiffs and the case proceeded on the breach of covenant and fiduciary duty claim. The District Court granted the bank summary judgment on the claim, and on appeal, plaintiffs asserted that the court improperly applied banking standards to the case rather than livestock industry standards, constituting a breach of good faith. The Supreme Court disagreed. In Montana, the relationship between a bank and its customer is generally described as that of debtor and creditor and does not give rise to fiduciary duties except when special circumstances place a bank into the role of adviser. In this case, the bank acted as a creditor and not an adviser, and did not force the cattle sale but simply sought to enforce the repayment provisions of its contract with plaintiffs, so no special circumstances existed. The bank acted in accordance with the contract provisions and comported with prudent banking policy and reasonable commercial standards. It was appropriate for the District Court to apply commercial banking standards to the analysis of the bank's relationship with plaintiffs and plaintiffs' ability to service their loans. Summary judgment for the bank was proper. McCoy v. First Citizens Bank, 2006 MT 307, 335 M 1, 148 P3d 677 (2006). See also Pederson v. Rocky Mtn. Bank, 2012 MT 48, 364 Mont. 258, 272 P.3d 663.

Interest Due on Commission Fees: On appeal of a judgment awarding commission fees as detailed in a signed note but specifically denying award of interest on the debt, the Supreme Court found that the criteria to be eligible for prejudgment interest were met, that under 27-1-312 the remedy for breach of an obligation to pay money is "the terms of the obligation with interest thereon", and that the appropriate interest to be charged was ascertainable under 31-1-106. Byrne v. Terry, 228 M 387, 741 P2d 1341, 44 St. Rep. 1620 (1987).

Case Notes

No Recovery When No Damages Incurred in Failure to Convey Property: Defendants conducted a foreclosure sale of real property in which plaintiff was the successful bidder, but the sale was subsequently voided, and plaintiff sued for breach of contract. The District Court concluded that under this section, defendant was not entitled to damages. On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed. Because no purchase price was paid that could be recovered in this case, this section limited recoverable damages to expenses incurred in examining title and preparing the necessary sale papers. Only when there is a showing of bad faith does the statute authorize the nonbreaching party to recover the difference between the agreed price and the property value at the time of the breach, when the agreed price is lower than the value. However, plaintiff failed to produce facts showing defendants' bad faith, so plaintiff's damages were limited to actual damages, of which there were none. Knucklehead Land Co., Inc. v. Accutitle, Inc., 2007 MT 301, 340 M 62, 172 P3d 116 (2007).

Payment of Fees Other Than for Title Search Improperly Ordered: Hickingbothams sued Duncan for fraud and constructive fraud in connection with the purchase of real estate upon which an unwarranted construction lien had been filed, and the District Court awarded $781 in attorney fees. The Supreme Court held that the fees were improperly awarded because they were not awarded for purposes of a title search or as an expense incurred in preparing to enter upon the land. The money was also not awarded pursuant to the agreement to sell and purchase because that agreement provided that the sole remedy was the return of money paid and no money had changed hands. The Supreme Court held that the District Court had misinterpreted this section as providing for fees in this case. Hickingbotham v. Duncan, 271 M 525, 898 P2d 1215, 52 St. Rep. 574 (1995).

Recovery of Survey Costs: In a contract for sale of real property when there was a technical breach of the covenant against encumbrances, the District Court did not err when it awarded damages when the court's findings were supported by substantial evidence in the record. Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993).

Equity Requires Payment of Prejudgment Interest: Plaintiffs, who rescinded contracts conveying real property, were entitled to prejudgment interest under the equitable theory. They had been deprived of their money for more than 8 years to date of judgment, while defendants received or were able to receive profits from the use of the land for nearly all those years. The act of one plaintiff in allowing another person to cut hay on the land did not constitute exercise of possession of the property sufficient to deny award of prejudgment interest. Brunner v. LaCasse, 234 M 368, 763 P2d 662, 45 St. Rep. 1978 (1988).

Value of Lease Adopted as Amount of Damages: Defendant had an obligation to transfer a lease to landlords, but failed to do so. The lease was included in the assignment of the farm, and its value equaled its portion of the total purchase price. It was within the discretion of the District Court to adopt the value of the lease as the amount of damages. Moore v. Hardy, 230 M 158, 748 P2d 477, 45 St. Rep. 108 (1988).

Breach of Joint Venture Fiduciary Trust — Award of Investment Plus Interest Affirmed: Kelly and Rust agreed to purchase land, subdivide it, and sell it at a profit. Rust advanced Kelly $4,000 as one-half the purchase price. Kelly paid the $4,000 balance and recorded the deed, but did not include Rust on the recorded deed. Rust moved from the area and later attempted, through his agent, to purchase Kelly's interest in the land. The agent was told the land was already sold, so Rust brought an action to recover his investment plus interest. The trial court properly held that: (1) the parties had entered into a joint venture; (2) Kelly was required in equity to hold the property in a constructive trust; (3) Kelly breached the joint venture fiduciary duty and attempted to deprive Rust of his interest in the property; and (4) Rust was entitled to return of his $4,000 investment plus interest. Rust v. Kelly, 228 M 220, 741 P2d 786, 44 St. Rep. 1471 (1987).

Alteration of Oral Contract — Rescission — Damages: Plaintiffs had an oral agreement with defendants to pay one-half of defendants' purchase price under defendants' written contract for deed for purchase of certain real property with the understanding that plaintiffs' names would be added to the title as co-purchasers. Without plaintiffs' consent, defendants made written assignment of their interests under the written contract to a third party, retaining a life estate to themselves. Plaintiffs refused to make further payments and sued for damages and to quiet title in themselves. The District Court denied plaintiffs' claims and in effect found plaintiffs to be the breaching party. The Supreme Court found plaintiffs were entitled to rescission and reversed the District Court decision. Defendants' assignment while retaining a life estate constituted a material alteration of the oral agreement to which plaintiffs had not consented. Defendants' breach entitled plaintiffs to recover money they had paid on the contract with interest. Forsythe v. Elkins, 216 M 108, 700 P2d 596, 42 St. Rep. 680 (1985).

Loss of Tax Savings as Ascertainable Damages: Plaintiff offered to buy defendants' ranch. One of plaintiffs disclosed purposes for wanting the ranch was for investment tax credits and depreciation for income tax purposes. After much negotiation, plaintiff paid earnest money and the parties entered into a buy-sell agreement under which the chattels were to be transferred in 1981 and the real property in 1982. Defendants later presented plaintiff with new terms, claiming transfer in different years would cause loss of grazing permits. A Forest Service official offered three alternatives in a letter. Defendants chose the one alternative inconsistent with the buy-sell agreement. At trial for breach of contract, the District Court awarded plaintiff damages for tax losses. On appeal, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff's gain of the investment tax credit upon performance of the contract was within the contemplation of the parties and reasonably foreseeable. Defendants' failure to perform their obligations under the contract negated the possibility of plaintiff's claiming the tax credits and was the legal cause of the lost opportunity. The damages were reasonably foreseeable and ascertainable and were properly awardable. Ehly v. Cady, 212 M 82, 687 P2d 687, 41 St. Rep. 1611 (1984).

Breach of Agreement to Convey Land — Bad Faith — Damages — Refusal to Compel Specific Performance: A parcel of land owned by one Edmund Andrett had been leased for several years to parties named Hardy. After Andrett's death, Lillian Watt became the owner of the land, still subject to a Hardy lease. Prior to the expiration of the lease, Watt and the Hardys were disputing lease rental payments. Watt believed that the Hardy lease had expired and that the Hardys were in default on rental payments. For this reason, she contacted attorney Mason and asked him to find a new tenant. Unknown to Watt or her attorney, however, the leasing agency which Andrett had used for years before his death had renewed a lease and purchase option with the Hardys on March 1, 1968, which lease wasn't recorded until November 22, 1969. Meanwhile, attorney Mason had leased the farmland to the Stovalls, with an option to purchase, which lease was dated March 3, 1969, and recorded, previous to the Hardy lease, on September 22, 1969. The court balanced the equities of the ensuing chaos and decided that between the Hardys and the Stovalls the total circumstances favored the result reached by the trial court, upholding the sale of the land to the Hardys. The court also affirmed the damages against Lillian Watt for her breach of the agreement with the Stovalls. In so doing, they noted Lillian Watt, directly and indirectly through her attorney, kept information about sale of the land from the Stovalls unfairly and failed to answer some of their inquiries by mail and telephone. The court concluded that Watt's conduct constituted bad faith. The damages were the difference between the value of the land, as found by the trial court, and the actual contract price. Stovall v. Watt, 187 M 439, 610 P2d 164 (1980).

Cost of Altering Other Property: Where, under instructions based on this section and section 17-602, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), the jury was told that the plaintiff could recover the difference between the price agreed to be paid and the price plaintiff would be required to pay for similar property, the jury could not properly award an amount based on the projected costs of making some other property similar. Orford v. Topp, 136 M 227, 346 P2d 566 (1959).

Price of Other Property: This section and section 17-602, R.C.M. 1947 (since repealed), must be applied together in an appropriate case, and thus where bad faith is shown, the aggrieved buyer's damages are set at the difference between the price he agreed to pay and the price he is required to pay on the market for equivalent property. Orford v. Topp, 136 M 227, 346 P2d 566 (1959).

Property of Peculiar Value:

This section and 27-1-305 must be construed together in determining damages in a case where the property of which the buyer is deprived has a peculiar value to him. Orford v. Topp, 136 M 227, 346 P2d 566 (1959).

Where there was no evidence to show any peculiar value to the plaintiffs in the property of which they were deprived, a verdict in excess of the difference between the price which the purchasers agreed to pay and the price for which the property was sold by the vendor was not supported. Orford v. Topp, 136 M 227, 346 P2d 566 (1959).

Prompt Declaration of Termination Necessary or Option on Notice Considered Waived: Under an installment contract for sale of real property, making time of its essence and providing that in case of default on any installment the vendor shall have the option to declare the contract terminated, such option must be promptly exercised or failure of timely payment is presumed waived and the contract still valid, and if it provides for 30-day notice to terminate it, the giving thereof is essential to the exercise of the option for its termination. Thompson v. Lincoln Nat'l Life Ins. Co., 110 M 521, 105 P2d 683 (1940).

Lease of Building Under Construction: Under contract to lease a building under construction, the proper measure of damages is the difference between the price agreed to be paid as rent and the reasonable value of the term agreed upon at the time of the breach and any expenses properly incurred by plaintiff in preparing to take possession in reliance on the agreement. Jurcec v. Raznik, 104 M 45, 64 P2d 1076 (1937).

When Anticipated Profits Not Recoverable — New Venture: Anticipated profits from an established business are recoverable upon showing prior profits in the same location, but where plaintiff was about to embark on a new business venture when prevented by lessor's wrongful act in leasing the premises to another, they may not be made the basis of an action for breach of contract, since it cannot be proved what the profits would have been. Jurcec v. Raznik, 104 M 45, 64 P2d 1076 (1937).

Equitable and Legal Estates: This section applies to an agreement to convey an equitable as well as a legal estate. Ross v. Saylor, 39 M 559, 104 P 864 (1909).

Expenses Properly Incurred:

In an action to recover damages for the breach of an agreement to convey real property situated in another state, expenses incurred by the plaintiff in removing his family to that state, preparatory to taking possession of the lands sold to him by the defendant, as well as counsel fees and court costs paid by the plaintiff in defending an action to quiet title brought against him by the defendant's prior grantee are recoverable under this section as "expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land". Ross v. Saylor, 39 M 559, 104 P 864 (1909).

Where the jury returned a verdict "for necessary expenses in preparing to take possession of the land", while the court in its instruction employed the words of the statute, "expenses properly incurred", there was no substantial difference between the two expressions, and the verdict was sufficient, in the absence of an objection thereto at the trial. Ross v. Saylor, 39 M 559, 104 P 864 (1909).

Damage Where Bad Faith Is Not Alleged: Plaintiff having failed to allege bad faith, in an action to recover the amount paid by him to secure title to real estate, after discovering that defendant was unable to convey, the measure of damages was the amount paid to defendant on the purchase price, together with incidental expenses. Willard v. Smith, 34 M 494, 87 P 613 (1906).

Sale of Property Contingent on Financing — Financing Contingent on Grant of Contract — Oral Agreement to Purchase Additional Property Contingent on Initial Sale — Summary Judgment Proper Absent Genuine Issue of Fact: Community, Counseling, and Correctional Services, Inc. (Community), agreed to purchase Albright's property for a prerelease center. An additional oral agreement provided that Community would also purchase furnishings on the property when the sale was completed. The sale was contingent on Community's ability to obtain financing, and financing was contingent upon a grant for the prerelease center to Community from the Department of Corrections. Ultimately, the Department declined to issue the contract for prerelease services, Community was unable to obtain financing, and Albright was unable to sell the property or furnishings. Albright sued Community for breach of contract. The District Court granted summary judgment to Community, holding that under the plain language of the contract, the offer terminated when the Department did not issue the contract. Albright appealed, but the Supreme Court affirmed. No question of fact existed with respect to the conditions for the agreement because the agreement conditioned formation of any contract to buy the real property on Community's ability to obtain financing and Community could not obtain financing without the Department contract. Further, Albright's own affidavit stated that the oral agreement to purchase the furnishings was contingent on purchase of the property, so no issue of fact existed regarding the sale of the furnishings either, and that issue was also properly disposed of by summary judgment. Albright v. Community, Counseling, & Correctional Serv., Inc., 2001 MT 272, 307 M 289, 37 P3d 675 (2001).

Defaulting Buyer Under Unambiguous Written Contract Cannot Rely Upon Expectations Not Covered by Contract to Avoid Contract — Disposition of Downpayment Amounts Paid and Due — County Not Liable for Negligent Misrepresentation as to Recordability of Deeds and Seller's Title Insurer Not Liable for Loss in Marketability: Documents for the sale and purchase of two sections of land unambiguously showed, and it was undisputed, that the resale of 20-acre parcels by the buyer, the immediate acceptance by the county of 20-acre resale deeds of a type that would make subdivision review unnecessary, and the ability to resell without having to undergo subdivision review were not parts of the bargain. The parties knew that these things were contemplated, but the documents did not refer to them or make them a part of the contract. Before the contract was made, the county indicated that it would accept the 20-acre resale deeds. The deal fell through when the county changed its position after the contract was signed. The buyer failed to pay the whole downpayment, and the seller terminated the contract and kept the paid portion of the downpayment. Precontract discussions on the matter must be disregarded as parol evidence because the documents were unambiguous and did not refer to the matter. The buyer was not entitled to rescind the contract and have the paid portion of the downpayment returned based on mutual mistake or failure of consideration. There was no mutual mistake because the parties knew that it was not a certainty that the county would accept the deeds. There was no failure of consideration because the resale, county acceptance of the deeds, and avoidance of subdivision review were not part of the written contract. In addition, the need for a subdivision review would not make the land unmarketable; at most, its market value decreased and it would take longer to sell it. Furthermore, a party in default is not entitled to rescission. The seller was entitled to terminate the contract. The seller was also entitled to keep an amount of the paid portion of the downpayment equal to the amount by which the contract price for the land exceeded the market value of the land at the time of the breach. The seller was not entitled to keep the remainder of the paid portion of the downpayment or to a judgment for the unpaid portion of the downpayment because the contract did not provide for that remedy. The county was not liable in tort to the seller for negligent misrepresentation, and the buyer's title insurance company was not liable to the seller for the loss in the marketability of the land caused by the need for subdivision review. Yellowstone II Dev. Group, Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 2001 MT 41, 304 M 223, 20 P3d 755 (2001), overruled in Mary J. Baker Revocable Trust v. Cenex Harvest St., Cooperatives, Inc., 2007 MT 159, 338 M 41, 164 P3d 851 (2007), to the extent that Yellowstone II held that the determination of whether a term in a contract is ambiguous is not a question involving parol evidence.

Lawsuit by Shareholder Causing Damages Considered Breach of Fiduciary Duty of Care: Sletteland brought a suit against two other corporate shareholders for charging excessive attorney fees and seeking their removal as corporate directors. The District Court held that the fees were excessive, but found no grounds for removal. The other shareholders filed a counterclaim against Sletteland, alleging that he breached his fiduciary duty in bringing the lawsuit because the timing of the suit caused refinancing of a project to fail, resulting in damage to the corporation and to other shareholders. The District Court agreed, and both parties appealed their respective issues. The Supreme Court reversed on the issue of excessive fees, but affirmed on the issue of breach of fiduciary duty. The fiduciary duty between shareholders of a close corporation is one of utmost good faith and loyalty. Sletteland admittedly knew of the refinancing and, as an attorney and investment banker, also knew the effect that a lawsuit alleging misconduct by board members would have on a refinancing effort. In fact, it appeared that the suit was brought to specifically derail the refinancing. Sletteland was the person who determined the timing of the suit, which was filed immediately before the individuals involved in the refinancing were to meet for discussions, and when asked to withdraw the suit so refinancing could conclude, he refused to do so. Sletteland did not use the care that an ordinarily prudent person would use in a similar situation, resulting in the breach of fiduciary duty. The Supreme Court also affirmed the award of damages. Although future damages could not be calculated exactly in this case, the District Court did not abuse its discretion in basing its calculations on expert testimony of a well-known regional economist. Sletteland v. Roberts, 2000 MT 382, 304 M 21, 16 P3d 1062, 57 St. Rep. 1639 (2000).

Acceptance of Payments Irrelevant When Service of Notice Insufficient: The real estate contract entered into by the Ahrens and Cottle provided that all notices between the parties be delivered personally or by registered mail. When Cottle failed to make several underlying payments to the bank, the Ahrens made the payments to the bank and subsequently, in November 1993, filed suit to cancel the contract for deed and for possession of the property. In December, Cottle cured the default by making the late payments to the bank. The lower court held that the Ahrens had waived their right to default by allowing Cottle to make payments curing the default. The Supreme Court held that the payments were irrelevant because the Ahrens had never served notice of default on Cottle as required by the contract and therefore could not accelerate the contract and seek to regain possession of the property. Ahrens v. Cottle, 271 M 339, 896 P2d 1127, 52 St. Rep. 485 (1995).

Failure to Comply With Contract Notice Provisions: The real estate contract entered into by the Ahrens and Cottle provided that all notices between the parties be delivered personally or by registered mail. When Cottle failed to make several underlying payments to the bank, the Ahrens posted a notice of default on Cottle's back door. The Supreme Court held that although Montana case law has held that failure to adhere to technical requirements of notice is immaterial if an individual has knowledge of the notice, in the present case, the posting of the notice was a material flaw in service. Ahrens v. Cottle, 271 M 339, 896 P2d 1127, 52 St. Rep. 485 (1995), distinguishing Hares v. Nelson, 195 M 463, 637 P2d 19 (1981), and LeClair v. Reitner, 233 M 332, 760 P2d 740 (1988).

Landowner Testimony — Value of Property: In this action involving the sale of commercial real estate, the purchaser was allowed to estimate the value of the resort he purchased from the defendant seller. A landowner has the right to testify as to the value of his property. Zugg v. Ramage, 239 M 292, 779 P2d 913, 46 St. Rep. 1693 (1989), followed in Dew v. Dower, 258 M 114, 852 P2d 549, 50 St. Rep. 454 (1993).

Contract for Deed — Notifying Escrow Agent of Default: Seller under contract for deed did not have to notify the escrow agent as well as the buyers that payments were in default and the contract was terminated, because the contract only provided for notice to buyers and did not require notice to the escrow agent. More important, the contract gave buyers the right to pay the accelerated balance due within 90 days of receipt of the notice of default, the deed and other documents were held by and the payments were made to the escrow agent, and notice of default to the escrow agent would have prematurely closed the escrow account and denied the buyers the opportunity to pay off the contract within 90 days. Boles v. Ler, 222 M 28, 719 P2d 793, 43 St. Rep. 1035 (1986).

Contract for Deed — Seller's Right to Cancel After Accepting Late Payments to Escrow Agent: Buyers under contract for deed made three late payments to the escrow agent. The escrow agent's acceptance of the three checks was not acceptance by the seller under the theory that the escrow agent was the seller's agent and acceptance by the agent was acceptance by the principal, nor did seller's acceptance of the payments from the escrow agent ratify the agent's acceptance. Failure to promptly return the payments did not waive seller's right to cancel the contract. The contract gave buyers 90 days from notice of default to pay the balance due under the contract, and they could do so in more than one installment. Seller decided the three payments might be installments in an attempt to pay the balance due and decided to hold the checks until it became apparent that the buyers were either going to pay off the balance due or were attempting to induce seller to waive her right to cancel the contract. Seller returned the checks when she realized the latter was the motive. In addition, seller sent a second cancellation notice, making it clear what her intent was. Boles v. Ler, 222 M 28, 719 P2d 793, 43 St. Rep. 1035 (1986).

Sufficiency of Default Notice — Mandatory Finding: Michunovich purchased a tract of land under contract for deed from the Brangers. Michunovich entered a contract for deed to sell a portion of that tract to Owen. Owen fulfilled his part of the contract. Michunovich defaulted on the Branger contract. Brangers filed a breach of contract suit against Michunovich. Michunovich served Owen a notice of termination since he was unable to secure a deed release from Brangers. Michunovich did not refund Owen's downpayment as required by the contract. Owen refused to vacate the property. Michunovich assigned all his interest in the Branger contract to Stevenson with the Brangers' consent. Since Stevenson was able to bring the Branger contract current, the Brangers stipulated to the dismissal of their suit against Michunovich. Owen filed a purchaser's lien on the property under his contract from Michunovich. Stevenson then filed a quiet title action. The trial court found for Stevenson, finding that the notice from Michunovich to Owen terminated that contract so that Owen had no interest in the land. The Supreme Court remanded because according to the terms of the contract the refund of Owen's downpayment was a condition precedent to the contract being declared void. The trial court was instructed to determine whether Stevenson's default notice terminated the Owen contract and to resolve issues regarding rental value and improvements. Stevenson v. Owen, 212 M 287, 687 P2d 1010, 41 St. Rep. 1743 (1984).

Damages — Contract for Real Property Sale — Waste: Damage award was correct because after deducting the alleged damages the seller is better off than he would have been had the contract been performed, notwithstanding the fact that recovery for harm done to the land is not allowed. As to waste, plaintiff has a right to the return of real property only if the contract is breached. The damage done may be used to reduce the market value of the land but not to allow damages when none would be due under the statutory measure. Whitney v. Bails, 172 M 121, 560 P2d 1344 (1977).

Remedy Not Exclusive: This section did not provide mandatory and exclusive formulae to determine damages for breach of contract and tortious injury to personal and real property; damages for waste in action based on provision of contract prohibiting waste were properly recoverable under 27-1-311 despite fact that this section did not provide specifically therefor. Wiseman v. Holt, 163 M 387, 517 P2d 711 (1973).

Case Notes

No Award of Damages and Attorney Fees Unless Covenant of Warranty Breached: The Ecklunds sued the Stevensons, claiming that they owned part of the Stevensons' property. In defending the claim, the Stevensons also sued the Woods on the basis of a breach of the covenant of warranty in transferring the property to them. The lower court found that the Ecklunds had no claim to the property because the doctrine of apportionment had been properly applied to correct the 1910 plat. The Stevensons asserted that they were entitled to damages and attorney fees from the Woods because of having to defend against the Ecklunds' suit. The Supreme Court held that the Woods were not liable because the application of the doctrine of apportionment meant that the Ecklunds had no basis for a lawful claim to the property and that therefore no breach of the covenant of warranty had occurred. Stevenson v. Ecklund, 263 M 61, 865 P2d 296, 50 St. Rep. 1706 (1993).

"Deposit" — Spending of Earnest Money Not Material Breach: In a contract for sale of real estate, use of words such as "deposit", "depositing", and "held on deposit" prohibited the sellers from spending the earnest money paid by the buyer pending the closing of the sale; however, the sellers' failure to keep earnest money on deposit until the closing did not constitute a material breach of contract. The buyer was entitled to seek contract damages but not rescission. Cady v. Burton, 257 M 529, 851 P2d 1047, 50 St. Rep. 395 (1993).

Breach Not Affecting Marketability of Title: In a contract for sale of real property, a "technical" breach of the covenant against encumbrances that did not affect marketability of title is nonetheless a breach of contract. Maloney v. Heer, 257 M 500, 850 P2d 957, 50 St. Rep. 382 (1993).

Failure to Create Home Owners' Association Not Breach of Protective Covenants: Property buyers claimed sellers breached the contractual protective covenants by failing to establish a home owners' association. The argument was discounted upon finding that: (1) the contractual conditions requiring establishment were not met at the time buyers defaulted on payments; (2) there was no deadline for establishment; (3) the provision for enforcement of covenants did not declare the entire contract terminated in the event of a covenant violation as it did for default on payments; and (4) buyers never gave notice to sellers that they considered failure to establish a home owners' association a violation of the contract. Burgess v. Shiplet, 230 M 387, 750 P2d 460, 45 St. Rep. 293 (1988).

Encroachment as Encumbrance: An encroachment may or may not be an encumbrance. In determining that there was a fact question as to whether there was a legal right to encroachment, the Supreme Court adopted the rule set out in 3 American Law of Property 12.128 (A.J. Casner ed. 1952): "[I]f the encroachment is of an improvement located on adjoining land which extends across the line onto the land conveyed, there may be a breach of either the covenant of seizin or of the covenant against encumbrances, depending on whether title to that part of the land purchased has been lost by adverse possession, or has become encumbered by an easement." D'Agostino v. Schapp, 230 M 59, 748 P2d 466, 45 St. Rep. 14 (1988).

Reversal of Award of Attorney Fees — Applicability of Specific Statutes: Respondents contended that under 27-1-316, 28-3-704, and 30-14-222 they were entitled to attorney fees. The court considered each statute and decided: (1) since the issue of unlawful restraint of trade was reversed, no damages were allowable under 30-14-222; (2) because there was no allowance for attorney fees where the covenantor brings an action for breach of contract against the covenantee, 27-1-316 was inapplicable; and (3) since an agreement with an attorney fee provision was entered into prior to the July 1, 1971, effective date enumerated in 28-3-704 and was found to have been merged in the deeds that contained no such provision, 28-3-704 was also not applicable. The award of attorney fees to respondents was reversed. Haggerty v. Gallatin County, 221 M 109, 717 P2d 550, 43 St. Rep. 674 (1986).

27-1-317. Breach of obligation other than contract.

Case Notes

Duty of Care — Restatement (Second) of Torts 324A Adopted as Additional Prerequisite: On extraordinary review in an asbestos case, the Supreme Court addressed whether the District Court erroneously concluded that an insurer owed a duty of care to warn third-party employees of its insured of a known risk of airborne asbestos exposure based merely on foreseeability of harm and related public policy. The Supreme Court adopted a formulation of Restatement (Second) of Torts 324A as an additional prerequisite for determining whether one who affirmatively undertakes to render aid or services to a third party owes a duty of reasonable care to others regarding foreseeable risks of harm directly created or resulting from the conduct of the third party. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the insurer owed a direct common-law duty under Restatement (Second) of Torts 324A(b)-(c) to use reasonable care under the circumstances to warn third-party employees of the known risk of exposure to airborne asbestos in the insured's workplace. The case was remanded for further proceedings. Md. Cas. Co. v. Asbestos Claims Court, 2020 MT 70, 399 Mont. 279, 460 P.3d 882.

Reasonable Basis in Law for Conditioning Insurer's Payment — Bad Faith Award Improper: The plaintiff, the guardian ad litem of a man who was severely injured in a car accident, filed suit against the defendant, the insurer of the driver, alleging bad faith. The plaintiff claimed that the defendant had acted in bad faith by refusing to pay policy limits without first getting a lien release from TRICARE, the insurer of the injured man, for its payment of medical expenses. The District Court granted the plaintiff summary judgment and held the defendant liable for a consent judgment of nearly $1.5 million. On appeal, Supreme Court reversed, ruling that the defendant had a reasonable basis in law for conditioning the payment of its policy limits as it had, and remanded the matter to the District Court to grant summary judgment in favor of the defendant. West v. United Services Auto. Ass'n, 2016 MT 285, 385 Mont. 292, 384 P.3d 58.

Breach of Fiduciary Duty — Actions of Former Shareholders in Establishing Competing Accounting Firm — Remand for Calculation of Damages Caused by Breach: The plaintiff, an accounting firm, sued the defendants, former shareholders of a satellite office, after they established a new accounting firm and took most of the plaintiff's clients. The plaintiff claimed that the defendants had breached their fiduciary duty to the plaintiff. Of the several defendants, the District Court concluded that only one defendant, who had been branch manager of the firm and who had the plaintiff's client list downloaded for use in the new firm, had breached a fiduciary duty. However, the District Court also concluded that no damages stemmed from the breach. On appeal, the Supreme Court, while agreeing that only the branch manager had breached his fiduciary duty, remanded the issue of damages caused by the breach to the District Court. Junkermier v. Alborn, 2016 MT 218, 384 Mont. 464, 380 P.3d 747.

Causation in Legal Malpractice Claim — Summary Judgment Not Proper — Plaintiffs Not Required to Show Claim Would Have Been Successful: An attorney missed a statute of limitations deadline in a medical malpractice case by failing to file an application with the Montana Medical Legal Panel before filing a complaint in District Court, as required under 27-6-301 and 27-6-701. After the medical malpractice claim was dismissed, the plaintiffs filed a legal malpractice case against the attorney, but the District Court dismissed the legal malpractice case during summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiffs did not carry the burden of showing that the underlying medical malpractice claim would have been successful. On appeal, the Supreme Court revisited Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 Mont. 342, 916 P.2d 122 (1996), Babcock Place Ltd. Partnership v. Berg, Lilly, Andriolo, & Tollefsen, P.C., 2003 MT 111, 315 Mont. 364, 69 P.3d 1145, and Fisher v. Swift Transp. Co., Inc., 2008 MT 105, 342 Mont. 335, 181 P.3d 601, and determined that it was error for the District Court to require the plaintiffs to prove that the medical malpractice case would have been successful given that there was no independent intervening cause after the plaintiffs' injury. All that was required was a showing that the plaintiffs' injury (not being able to pursue the case) would not have occurred but for the attorney's negligent conduct. Labair v. Carey, 2012 MT 312, 367 Mont. 453, 291 P.3d 1160. On remand in Labair v. Carey, 2016 MT 272, 385 Mont. 233, 383 P.3d 226, the Supreme Court determined that the plaintiffs more probably than not would have recovered a settlement. Thus, the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment as a matter of law on this first element of settlement damages.

Award for Emotional Distress Proper When Based on Claims Not Tied to Breach of Contract: The Whites entered into a construction contract with Longley for the construction of their home. Subsequently, Longley failed to build a house that could be occupied or salvaged. In addition to other damages, the trial court awarded the Whites a sum for emotional distress, and Longley argued that such an award could not be made for breach of contract. The Supreme Court upheld the award on the basis that in addition to breach of contract, the trial court also found that Longley had acted negligently and fraudulently. White v. Longley, 2010 MT 254, 358 Mont. 268, 244 P.3d 753.

Governmental Entity Liable for Tortious Acts of Contractor Transporting Prisoners: Paull was a prisoner who was injured in an auto accident while being extradited to Park County by a private prisoner transportation service. The District Court summarily dismissed Paull's tort claim against the state and county for his injuries after the state and county argued that they owed Paull no actionable duty because the injuries were inflicted by the transportation company or its employees and that Paull's injuries were not foreseeable. The court concluded that the state owed Paull no duty because the state had no contractual or agency relationship with the company and that the county had no duty because a contractor-independent contractor relationship existed between the county and the company. Paull appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed. The court first addressed the county's liability, considering whether the county had a contractor-independent contractor relationship with the company. Under Beckman v. Butte-Silver Bow County, 2000 MT 112, 299 M 389, 1 P3d 348 (2000), an exception to the general rule that contractors are not liable for torts of their independent contractors applies if the activity is inherently or intrinsically dangerous. The District Court found that the activity in question was driving, which commonly is not an inherently dangerous activity, so the Beckman exception did not apply. The Supreme Court disagreed. Transportation of prisoners is more than just driving and is an inherently dangerous activity; therefore, under Beckman, a county or other governmental entity that contracts to have prisoners transported by an independent contractor may be held vicariously liable for injuries caused by the contractor. Any claim must still be established under the ordinary rules of negligence, requiring proof of the existence of a legal duty on the part of the contractor, breach of duty, causation, and damages. A contractor is not liable for every tort by an independent contractor engaged in inherently dangerous work, but only those torts that arise from risks caused by engaging in the dangerous activity. Here, the risk of driver misconduct was an inherent danger in the transportation of prisoners and part of the peculiar risk of harm arising from that activity. Likewise, the state had a duty to exercise ordinary care in returning Paull to Montana for probation revocation proceedings. Although the state was not strictly liable for any injury during prisoner transportation regardless of fault, the state may be held liable for tortious acts or omissions of its agents undertaking prisoner transportation if the state allows other entities to do the work. Because the acts or omissions of the transportation company for which the state or county might be liable were yet to be determined, summary judgment was inappropriate, and the case was remanded for further proceedings. Paull v. Park County, 2009 MT 321, 352 M 465, 218 P3d 1198 (2009). However, see Stricker v. Blaine County, 2019 MT 280, 398 Mont. 43, 453 P.3d 897, holding that a county could not be held vicariously liable for a hospital's negligent treatment of an inmate in its custody.

Neighbors' Long-Term Campaign of Vulgar, Abusive Language and Conduct Sufficient Evidence of Severe Emotional Distress — Compensatory and Punitive Damages Proper and Reasonable: In a subdivision covenant violation case, defendants counterclaimed for severe emotional distress based on plaintiffs' incessant verbal assaults against defendants in violation of a covenant that prohibited noxious or offensive activities that were annoying or constituted a nuisance to other owners. The District Court awarded each defendant $25,000 for emotional distress and imposed a $10,000 punitive award against plaintiffs as well. Plaintiffs appealed, asserting that there was no evidence of severe emotional distress, but the Supreme Court affirmed. Emotional distress can manifest in both physical and nonphysical harm, and when the distress is accompanied by shock, illness, or other bodily harm, those physical manifestations afford evidence that the distress is genuine and severe. In this case, plaintiffs' behavior was indecent, atrocious, and utterly intolerable and was exclusively intended to anger, humiliate, and embarrass defendants. Under these outrageous circumstances, the physical manifestations of defendants' emotional distress were sufficient to support the conclusion that defendants suffered compensable, serious emotional distress that was a reasonably foreseeable consequence of plaintiffs' tortious conduct. Given the intensity and duration of the verbal attacks over a 4-year period and defendants' physical and emotional reactions to the attacks, defendants adequately established a compensable claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, and the District Court's award of $50,000 in compensatory damages was not grossly disproportionate to the injury or an abuse of discretion. Additionally, because plaintiffs acted with malice, the punitive damage award was not clearly erroneous. Czajkowski v. Meyers, 2007 MT 292, 339 M 503, 172 P3d 94 (2007).

Damages Payable for Corporate Partner's Breach of Fiduciary Duty: In dissolving a corporation, the District Court found that one partner had breached a fiduciary duty to the corporation, causing damages. However, the District Court did not make a specific dollar finding for the amount of damages or award the corporation any compensation. The Supreme Court reversed and remanded for a determination of damages to be paid to the corporation by the partner who breached the fiduciary duty. Attorney fees were properly denied because the corporate agreement contained no provision for award of attorney fees to the prevailing party in a civil action. Sartori v. S&S Trucking, Inc., 2006 MT 164, 332 M 503, 139 P3d 806 (2006), following Nat'l Cas. Co. v. Am. Bankers Ins. Co. of Fla., 2001 MT 28, 304 M 163, 19 P3d 223 (2001).

No Prejudicial Error in Failure to Give Negligent Homicide Mental State Instruction in Wrongful Death Action When Other Instructions Adequately Reflect Negligence: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for foreseeable negligence. To boost the theory of foreseeability, Samson offered a jury instruction that defined Bercier's conduct as reckless and postulated therefrom that the conduct was foreseeable because of Bercier's background, seeking to undermine the state's theory that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The District Court refused to offer the instruction, instead instructing the jury on elements of wrongful death, and Samson appealed. The state argued that the mental state of Bercier was not a controlling issue and contended that it was not necessary to instruct the jury on the mental state of negligent homicide because the instructions as a whole properly included the key concepts of a wrongful death action. The Supreme Court agreed with the state. The fundamental issue concerned the state's negligence, not Bercier's mental state. Nevertheless, Samson was still able to present the foreseeability theory under the instructions that were given, so failure to give Samson's offered instruction did not result in prejudice to Samson's case. It is within a District Court's discretion to decide how to instruct the jury, taking into account the theories of the contending parties, and absent an abuse of discretion, the District Court was affirmed. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003). See also Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122 (1996).

State Not Liable for Unforeseeable Accident — Intervening Criminal Act of Third Person — Expert Testimony on Foreseeability Proper: Samson's son was killed by Bercier, a youth who walked away from a nonsecure, supervised licensed youth group home. Samson sued the state for negligence. The jury returned a verdict for the state, and Samson appealed. Rather than retry the case and evaluate the facts to determine whether the state was negligent, the Supreme Court reviewed the verdict to determine if there was substantial evidence to support it and determined that there was. In order to sustain a negligence action, plaintiff must establish a legal duty on the part of defendant, a breach of that duty, causation, and damages. In cases involving a dispute over the intervening criminal act of a third party, foreseeability must be analyzed twice—first with regard to the existence of a legal duty and second with regard to proximate causation. Samson contended that the District Court erred in allowing the state to present evidence in the form of expert testimony and to argue that the shooting was an unforeseeable accident. The state argued that the expert testimony was relevant and aided the jury. Given the need to determine the foreseeability of Bercier's actions, the expert testimony was properly allowed. Further, in cases alleging an intervening cause, juries must be instructed that the specific injury to plaintiff need not have been foreseen. Samson v. St., 2003 MT 133, 316 M 90, 69 P3d 1154 (2003), affirming Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373 (1996). See also Lopez v. Great Falls Pre-Release Serv., Inc., 1999 MT 199, 295 M 416, 986 P2d 1081 (1999), and St. v. LaTray, 2000 MT 262, 302 M 11, 11 P3d 116 (2000).

Offer of Total Amount Owing Upon Redemption of Tax Lien — Summary Dismissal of Negligence Claim Proper Absent Damages: Shepherd held an assignment of the tax sale certificate on real property in Red Lodge. A few days before the redemption period was to expire, the owner of record redeemed the property by paying $4,407.28, but the County Treasurer unintentionally overlooked an additional $56.30 in interest that had accrued between the date that notice was given that a tax deed would be issued and the date of redemption. Shepherd then filed a complaint under 42 U.S.C. 1983, alleging that the county's failure to collect the statutorily required amount for redemption deprived him of a property interest without due process of law. Shepherd sought $250,000 in general damages, punitive damages, and attorney fees and costs. Shortly thereafter, the county tendered Shepherd $56.30 plus interest, but Shepherd rejected the money and added a negligence claim to the complaint, based on the County Treasurer's improper extinguishment of the lien. The District Court summarily dismissed the negligence claim because Shepherd was offered the full amount of recovery owing under 15-18-114, plus interest, prior to litigation. Shepherd appealed, claiming that the redemption process in 15-18-114 did not apply to cases in which a negligence action is brought for improperly extinguishing a lien and that this section should apply instead, which would allow compensation for all detriment caused by breach of an obligation not arising from a contract. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the summary dismissal of the negligence claim. Regardless of the statute relied on, Shepherd was tendered all the damage caused by the County Treasurer's omission when he was offered $56.30 plus interest. Had the County Treasurer not miscalculated, that was the full additional amount Shepherd would have received. Once tendered, it was no longer owed, and without damages, there was no claim for negligence. Shepherd v. Carbon County Bd. of Comm'rs, 2002 MT 98, 309 M 391, 46 P3d 634 (2002).

Interpleader Purporting to Release Potentially Liable Individuals Remanded for Clarification That Only Insurer Released Upon Payment of Policy Limits: The District Court granted an insurer's request in a prayer for interpleader for an order "enjoining and restraining each and all of the defendants from instituting or prosecuting further any proceeding on account of the incident or the insurance policy". Defendants claimed that the order infringed on their right to seek further relief from other potentially liable persons individually after the maximum policy limits were distributed. The Supreme Court noted that the measure of damages for negligence, notwithstanding available insurance proceeds, is the amount that will compensate the injured for all detriment proximately caused, but in this instance, it was not clear whether the insurer specifically requested additional relief for other parties or intended such a comprehensive exclusion of remedies. Pursuant to the principles of subject matter jurisdiction, the District Court should have released only the insurer from further claims, not the other potentially liable individuals involved. The case was remanded for a clarification of the order. Infinity Ins. Co. v. Dodson, 2000 MT 287, 302 M 209, 14 P3d 487, 57 St. Rep. 1196 (2000).

Jury Award of Compensatory Damages Proportionate to Posttraumatic Stress Injuries — Affirmed: Onstad was assaulted on the job and sued the employer, Payless Shoesource (Payless), for failure to provide a safe workplace. The jury held Payless liable and awarded Onstad $500,000 in compensatory damages. On appeal, Payless contended that the award was excessive and unsupported by the evidence. However, Onstad was entitled to reasonable compensation for any pain and suffering that she experienced and would reasonably probably experience in the future, and the law does not set a definite standard by which to calculate compensation for mental pain and suffering. Only when the amount awarded is so grossly out of proportion as to shock the conscience will an appellate court intervene. In this case, Onstad was terrified during the attack and subsequently became withdrawn; her sense of safety, security, and self was violated; she felt extremely powerless; and her whole sense of self-esteem and self-confidence was affected. The amount of compensatory damages awarded was not so grossly disproportionate to Onstad's posttraumatic stress injury as to shock the conscience, and the Supreme Court declined to alter the award. Onstad v. Payless Shoesource, 2000 MT 230, 301 M 259, 9 P3d 38, 57 St. Rep. 943 (2000).

Joint and Several Liability — Corporations Owned by Same Person Acting as Agent: Lloyd Kimble was president of Hobbble Diamond Cattle Company (Hobbble) and Kimble Properties, Inc. (Kimble Properties), making him an agent of both companies. Hobbble sold land to the buyers, and Kimble Properties sold them an irrigation system. The irrigation system was deficient, and part of the land lay in an old river channel. The buyers sued Kimble, Hobbble, and Kimble Properties. The District Court assessed damages against Kimble and Hobbble. On appeal, Kimble argued that Hobbble was responsible for fraud, but he personally was not. The Supreme Court held that at the time that Kimble sold the irrigation equipment, which was subsequently damaged by erosion of the land, he was acting as an agent of Kimble Properties, not Hobbble, so the District Court erred in assessing damages against Hobbble rather than Kimble Properties. However, a principal is liable for wrongs committed by an agent while acting within the scope of employment, and a director or officer is individually liable for false representations, so Kimble was personally liable regardless of which of his companies was also liable. H-D Irrigating, Inc. v. Kimble Properties, Inc., 2000 MT 212, 301 M 34, 8 P3d 95, 57 St. Rep. 832 (2000).

Prevailing Party on Ditch Easement Claim Entitled to Attorney Fees and Costs Despite Loss of Separate Counterclaim Related to Road Easement: Espy sued for easement interference related to an underground irrigation system. Quinlan filed a permissive counterclaim, alleging that Espy had interfered with Quinlan's road easement over Espy's property. Following trial, the District Court concluded that: (1) Espy was successful on his claim because he had a valid easement over Quinlan's property for use and maintenance of the irrigation system; (2) Quinlan was successful on her counterclaim because she had a valid road easement over Espy's property; (3) both parties were entitled to a permanent order restraining the other party from interfering with their respective easements; and (4) Espy was entitled to attorney fees and costs as the successful party under 70-17-112. Quinlan appealed the award of attorney fees, contending that because she prevailed on the counterclaim, neither party could be considered a prevailing party. However, Quinlan's counterclaim was not raised in the context of 70-17-112, but was instead related to a road easement. Because Espy successfully prevailed on all claims raised pursuant to 70-17-112, he was entitled to attorney fees and costs regardless of the fact that he was not the prevailing party on the counterclaim. Espy v. Quinlan, 2000 MT 193, 300 M 441, 4 P3d 1212, 57 St. Rep. 764 (2000), distinguishing Knudsen v. Taylor, 211 M 459, 685 P2d 354 (1984). See also Gibson v. Paramount Homes, LLC, 2011 MT 112, 360 Mont. 421, 253 P.3d 903.

Damages for Intentional Interference With Business Relations or Prospective Economic Advantage: Defendant was found liable for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage through tortious interference with plaintiff's right to buy a parcel of land. A special master properly applied this section in determining economic damages but improperly speculated as to what an appropriate replacement parcel would cost as a means of ascertaining damages. Damages for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage must be proved by substantial evidence that is not the product of mere guess or speculation. Here, the price of an adjoining parcel had nothing to do with the parcel that plaintiffs contended that they rightfully should have been allowed to purchase and from which a prospective economic advantage was lost. The Supreme Court concluded that the judgment should be modified based on the substantive evidence of damages resulting from intentional interference with the parcel in question. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000). See also Sebena v. Am. Auto. Ass'n, 280 M 305, 930 P2d 51 (1996).

Damages Proper for Emotional Distress Based on Sale of Real Estate — Punitive Damages Appropriate: The Maloneys were promised an option to purchase property adjacent to their own, hoping to build their retirement home near Glacier Park. The real estate agent who listed the property was aware of the Maloneys' option but sold to another instead. That person then developed the property, building a 3,000-square-foot home on the very site that the Maloneys had desired and within sight of the Maloneys' residence, and then listed the newly developed property for almost six times what the Maloneys could have paid had the option been properly offered. A special master concluded, and the District Court agreed, that the Maloneys had suffered and were entitled to compensation for the shock, worry, anger, disappointment, and frustration that they had suffered and would continue to suffer in light of the inherent duration of the Maloneys' adjacent ownership. The Supreme Court affirmed, noting that under French v. Ralph E. Moore, Inc., 203 M 327, 661 P2d 844, 40 St. Rep. 481 (1983), emotional distress damages may result from negligent or intentional damage to property arising from interference with the use and enjoyment of land and that under Johnson v. Murray, 201 M 495, 656 P2d 170, 39 St. Rep. 2257 (1982), compensatory damages could include compensation for humiliation, embarrassment, distress, and ridicule associated with interference with plaintiffs' use of their private property. The private property interest at issue here sufficiently involved the use and enjoyment of land to fall within these holdings. Further, the award of punitive damages was also affirmed in this instance despite defendant's claims of the special master's improper estimation of net worth, a syntax error, and the special master's improper recognition of punitive damages assessed against defendant in a prior case. Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000), followed in Rubin v. Hughes, 2022 MT 74, 408 Mont. 219, 507 P.3d 1169, affirming that a nuisance claim demonstrating an interference with the enjoyment of property may support an award of parasitic emotional distress damages. Independent Tort of Intentional Spoliation of Evidence Recognized — Elements: After a review of decisions in those jurisdictions that have recognized the tort of spoliation of evidence, the Supreme Court adopted the tort of intentional spoliation of evidence, although that tort was not present in this case. Elements of intentional spoliation of evidence include: (1) the existence of a potential lawsuit; (2) defendant's knowledge of the potential lawsuit; (3) the intentional destruction of evidence designed to disrupt or defeat the potential lawsuit; (4) disruption of the potential lawsuit; (5) a causal relationship between the act of spoliation and the inability to prove the lawsuit; and (6) damages. As with negligent spoliation of evidence, a plaintiff bringing a claim for intentional spoliation of evidence is required to prove a causal relationship between the act of spoliation and the inability to prove the lawsuit and damages. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Coleman v. Eddy Potash, Inc., 905 P2d 185 (N. Mex. 1995).

Independent Tort of Negligent Spoliation of Evidence Recognized — Elements: After a review of decisions in those jurisdictions that have recognized the tort of spoliation of evidence, the Supreme Court adopted the tort of negligent spoliation of evidence. Elements of negligent spoliation include: (1) the existence of a potential civil action; (2) a legal or contractual duty to preserve evidence relevant to that action; (3) destruction of that evidence; (4) significant impairment of the ability to prove the potential civil action; (5) a causal connection between the destruction of the evidence and the inability to prove the lawsuit; (6) a significant possibility of success of the potential civil action if the evidence were available; and (7) damages. As with intentional spoliation of evidence, a plaintiff bringing a claim for negligent spoliation of evidence is required to prove a causal relationship between the act of spoliation and the inability to prove the lawsuit and damages. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Holmes v. Amerex Rent-A-Car, 710 A2d 846 (D.C. 1998).

Proof Required to Show Causation in Action Alleging Spoliation of Evidence: A third-party spoliator should not be forced to pay damages to a plaintiff who has only a frivolous underlying claim, so some threshold showing of causation and damages is required. Recovery for loss of a plaintiff's ability to prove the underlying case and a third party's interest in only compensating plaintiff for the third party's harmful conduct must be balanced in determining the standard of proof for causation in an independent cause of action for negligent or intentional spoliation of evidence. Balancing those interests requires plaintiff to show a nexus between the destroyed evidence and the impairment of proving the underlying suit. Therefore, in order to prove causation, plaintiff must show that: (1) the underlying claim was significantly impaired because of the spoliation of evidence; (2) a causal relationship exists between the projected failure of success in the underlying action and the unavailability of the destroyed evidence; and (3) the underlying action would enjoy a significant possibility of success if the spoliated evidence still existed. With respect to the third prong of causation, plaintiff must demonstrate a substantial and realistic possibility of succeeding, but need not demonstrate that success was more likely than not. Oliver v. Stimson Lumber Co., 1999 MT 328, 297 M 336, 993 P2d 11, 56 St. Rep. 1303 (1999). See also Holmes v. Amerex Rent-A-Car, 710 A2d 846 (D.C. 1998).

Easement Dispute — Attorney Fees Improperly Awarded — Foy and Randoni Distinguished — Costs Sustained: Smalls brought a quiet title action against Goods for determination of an easement. Goods counterclaimed to quiet title to an easement for themselves. The District Court found in favor of the Smalls on the easement issue and awarded Smalls $8,536 in attorney fees and $759 in costs. The Supreme Court reversed on the issue of attorney fees, holding that there was no applicable exception to the general rule that attorney fees cannot be awarded absent a contractual agreement or other special circumstances. The Supreme Court held that the District Court improperly relied upon Foy v. Anderson, 176 M 507, 580 P2d 114 (1978), and Martin v. Randoni, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959 (1981). The Supreme Court stated that the Randoni case stands for the proposition that fees may not be awarded as costs and that Foy is distinguishable in that in Foy, fees were awarded to a person who had sought to avoid legal action, unlike the Smalls who initiated litigation in this case. Although expressing no opinion on the applicability of former Rules 11 and 54(d), M.R.Civ.P. (now superseded), to the case before it, the Supreme Court also pointed out that fees could be awarded as a sanction under former Rule 11 and that costs could be awarded pursuant to former Rule 54(d). However, the Supreme Court did sustain the award of costs to Smalls, noting that the purposes for which costs were awarded by the District Court were of the type of costs allowable under 25-10-201. Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

Montana Pattern Instruction No. 2.06 — Instruction to Be Coordinated With Section: After Lacock was injured in a shooting at a 4B's restaurant, he brought an action against 4B's, claiming that the restaurant should have foreseen that he would be injured. The District Court gave Montana Pattern Instruction No. 2.06, but left off the last line of the instruction in deference to Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990). The Supreme Court held that leaving off the last line of the instruction was error because the decision in Kitchen Krafters must be coordinated with this section. Without the last line of the instruction, the Supreme Court noted that a jury will be mistakenly led into believing that to be held liable, a defendant must foresee the specific injury to the plaintiff. Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373, 53 St. Rep. 492 (1996).

Foreseeability to Be Considered Part of Analysis of Duty: The trial court refused to give Columbus Hospital's proposed jury instruction on proximate cause and also did not instruct the jury on foreseeability even though the hospital contended that the Supreme Court had included foreseeability as an element of proximate cause in Kitchen Krafters, Inc. v. Eastside Bank of Mont., 242 M 155, 789 P2d 567 (1990). The Supreme Court, after a lengthy discussion of duty, proximate cause, and foreseeability and after examining the statutory definitions of duty and proximate cause, held that foreseeability is to be considered as part of the analysis of duty rather than proximate cause. The Supreme Court further held that it was reversing that part of Kitchen Krafters that requires a two-tiered analysis of causation that includes consideration of foreseeability in cases other than those cases in which there has been an allegation that the chain of causation is severed by an independent, intervening cause. Busta v. Columbus Hosp. Corp., 276 M 342, 916 P2d 122, 53 St. Rep. 428 (1996), followed in Lacock v. 4B's Restaurants, Inc., 277 M 17, 919 P2d 373, 53 St. Rep. 492 (1996), and Gourneau v. Hamill, 2013 MT 300, 372 Mont. 182, 311 P.3d 760.

Crops Damaged by Spraying and Held for Sale at Higher Price Some Time After Harvest: In an action for negligent damage to crops caused by improper spraying, which caused a smaller crop, damages for the lost part of the crops were properly calculated on the basis of the amount that a bushel of the remaining crop was sold for minus the expense of growing and marketing it, rather than the market price on the date of harvest minus the growing and marketing costs. Although the plaintiffs waited for some time after harvest to sell, it is a common practice (and their common practice) engaged in to enable farmers to sell at a higher price than when there is a market glut at the time of harvest. Plaintiffs did not wait to sell in order to enhance their damages. Semenza v. Bowman, 268 M 118, 885 P2d 451, 51 St. Rep. 1209 (1994).

Award for Brain Damage Affirmed: A jury award of $177,000 for defendant's negligence resulting in plaintiff's permanent brain damage was not so grossly out of proportion as to shock the conscience of the court, was supported by substantial evidence in the record, and was thus affirmed. Simchuk v. Angel Island Community Ass'n, 253 M 221, 833 P2d 158, 49 St. Rep. 473 (1992).

Fiduciary Duty Between Shareholders in Close Corporation When No Other Type of Relationship Exists: The fiduciary duty between stockholders of a close corporation is one of utmost good faith and loyalty. However, the controlling group should not be stymied by a minority stockholder's grievances if the controlling group can demonstrate a legitimate business purpose and the minority stockholder cannot demonstrate a less harmful alternative. If called on to settle a dispute between the stockholders, the court must weigh the legitimate business purpose, if any, against the practicability of a less harmful alternative. Daniels v. Thomas, Dean & Hoskins, Inc., 246 M 125, 804 P2d 359, 47 St. Rep. 2293 (1990), citing Donahue v. Rodd Electrotype Co. of New England, Inc., 328 NE 2d 505 (Mass. 1975), and Wilkes v. Springside Nursing Home, Inc., 353 NE 2d 657 (Mass. 1976), and distinguishing Skierka v. Skierka Bros., Inc., 192 M 505, 629 P2d 214 (1981), Deist v. Wachholz, 208 M 207, 678 P2d 188 (1984), and Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, 221 M 447, 720 P2d 1148 (1986).

In Warren v. Campbell Farming Corp., 2011 MT 324, 363 Mont. 190, 271 P.3d 36, the Montana Supreme Court, in answering a certified question from the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals, revisited the Daniels test and concluded that the Daniels test does not apply to claims involving director conflict of interest transactions. However, the Daniels test does apply to minority shareholders' claims of breach of fiduciary duties against majority shareholders.

Damages for Emotional Distress Improperly Awarded in Breach of Contract Action: Distinguishing emotional distress claims in a breach of contract action from emotional distress damage claims in tort actions, the Supreme Court applied this section as the measure of damages to be used in tort actions and 27-1-311 for damages collectible under a breach of contract action, noting that 27-1-311 contains the additional limitation that the detriment must, in the ordinary course of things, be likely to result from the breach of contract and that damages must be clearly ascertainable in nature and origin. Lacking such a showing, the award of emotional damages in a breach of contract action constituted reversible error. Larson v. Undem, 246 M 336, 805 P2d 1318, 47 St. Rep. 2088 (1990).

Emotional Distress Damages Inapplicable to Case of Negligent Damages Resulting in No Physical Injury: The Supreme Court has adopted only Comment j to Restatement (Second) of Torts 46 (1965), defining severe emotional distress, but has not recognized the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress as a cause of action. Therefore, the court declined to extend recovery for emotional distress to cases in which the defendant negligently damages or destroys real property but plaintiff suffers no physical injury. Day v. Mont. Power Co., 242 M 195, 789 P2d 1224, 47 St. Rep. 626 (1990), followed in McNeil v. Currie, 253 M 9, 830 P2d 1241, 49 St. Rep. 312 (1992).

Reduction of Compensatory Damages to Precise Amount in Record: A company had over $1 million annual gross income at the time its bank exercised a setoff, leaving the company with no operating cash or line of credit. The record showed company assets valued at $312,000, but as a result of the bank's action, the company lost all its employees, was sued many times, had its corporate goodwill destroyed, and had to enter into joint venture agreements with general contractors in order to stay in business. There was no clear indication in the record as to the company's profits following the setoff. The jury awarded the company $500,000 compensatory damages. However, rather than resort to speculation to establish the amount of lost profit reasonable to be ascribed as damages, the Supreme Court reduced the jury award to $312,000, the only positive figure in the record and the figure most favorable to the company. Bottrell v. Am. Bank, 237 M 1, 773 P2d 694, 46 St. Rep. 561 (1989).

Misrepresentation of Business Profits — Compensatory and Punitive Damage Awards Affirmed: Despite contentions that damage awards were too low in a case in which business profits were misrepresented to the detriment of buyers, the Supreme Court affirmed as adequate an award of $62,238 in compensatory damages to cover annual losses of $31,338 and reasonable wage losses of $30,900 and an award of $10,000 punitive damages to deter future similar behavior. Selvidge v. McBeen, 230 M 237, 750 P2d 429, 45 St. Rep. 168 (1988).

Award of Fair Market Value Not Compensation for Lost Profit: A cattle breeder compensated for loss of two exotic cows was awarded fair market value of the cows but was not allowed to present evidence of lost profits from his embryo production business. The Supreme Court adopted the reasoning in Snyder v. Bio-lab, Inc., 405 N.Y.S. 2d 596 (1978), in holding that the award of fair market value did not compensate for profits lost between the date the cattle were killed and the date they could reasonably have been replaced; therefore, the breeder was entitled to his lost profits for that period of time. McPherson v. Schlemmer, 230 M 81, 749 P2d 51, 45 St. Rep. 33 (1988).

Amount of Investments Represents Reasonable Measure of Damages: Bank appealed judgment awarding compensatory damages, based on the amount of shareholders' investments, to a commercial trout company upon a finding that failure of the trout farm was proximately caused by a breach of contract and misrepresentation by the bank and its agent. The Supreme Court held that the trial court acted reasonably and properly in determining that the damages suffered by the trout company were the amount of shareholders' investments at the time the bank entered the picture. Crystal Springs Trout Co. v. First State Bank of Froid, 225 M 122, 732 P2d 819, 44 St. Rep. 90 (1987).

Franchisor's Right to Determine Franchise Location — Duty to Reasonably Consider Relocation: Appellant franchisor had the sole contractual right to determine location of the franchise; however, the law imposed a duty to reasonably consider facts regarding relocation. The Supreme Court found evidence that vital information was withheld from respondents and from the vice president in charge of authorizing relocation which, if believed, would provide a basis for finding appellant acted unreasonably, thereby breaching its duty to exercise good faith. The evidence was sufficient to warrant submission to the jury on the question of good faith. Dunfee v. Baskin-Robbins, Inc., 221 M 447, 720 P2d 1148, 43 St. Rep. 964 (1986).

When Specific Amount of Damages Sought Must Be Argued: The specific amount of damages sought by plaintiff in a personal injury action must be placed before the jury in the opening argument in order to provide defendant a fair opportunity to argue the amount of damages. Miller v. LaBelle's of Colorado, Inc., 42 St. Rep. 1474 (D.C. Mont. 1985) (apparently not reported in Federal Supplement).

Bad Faith in Settling Insurance Claim — Damages: Plaintiff, a Kalispell ophthalmologist, pierced Frisnegger's eyeball with a needle while administering a local anesthetic to his eyelid. A cataract formed on the eye. Plaintiff notified his local insurance agent and on his direction notified defendant in writing that defendant was entirely at fault. Frisnegger filed suit against plaintiff. Defendant did not feel the claim was worth over $45,000 and refused to settle within the policy limits of $100,000. A jury verdict was returned for Frisnegger in the amount of $175,000. Plaintiff then brought suit against defendant alleging negligence and bad faith on the part of defendant for failure to settle the claim within policy limits. A jury verdict awarding plaintiff compensatory damages of $250,000 and punitive damages of $300,000 was returned. Defendant moved for a new trial or to alter or amend the judgment, alleging excessive damages. The trial court denied the motion. The Supreme Court said that although an action against an insurer for a breach of its implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing toward its insured sounds in contract, the action is to be regarded as one for tort. The measure of damages is the amount that will compensate the injured party for all detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not. When emotional distress is a factor in the detriment sustained, there is no reason why an award for such damages may not be given by a jury. The mental distress of a professional person fearing damage to his reputation and the stress of disruption of his home and professional life are elements for the jury to measure. The evidence was straightforward. The verdict was upheld. Gibson v. W. Fire Ins. Co., 210 M 267, 682 P2d 725, 41 St. Rep. 1048 (1984).

Damages Judgment to Be Supported by Substantial Evidence: In a suit for damages for negligent destruction of construction machinery, the District Court ruled in favor of plaintiff but refused to award damages for loss of rental income and interruption of business. The Supreme Court affirmed, ruling that plaintiff had not adequately proven these damage claims at trial and that a judgment for damages must be supported by substantial evidence which is not the product of mere guess or speculation. Lenz Constr. Co. v. Cameron, 207 M 506, 674 P2d 1101, 41 St. Rep. 106 (1984).

Measure of Loss-of-Use Damages: In a suit for damages for negligent destruction of construction machinery, the proper measure of loss-of-use damages is the reasonable rental value of a comparable machine for the period of time necessary for replacement, regardless of whether another machine is actually rented. Lenz Constr. Co. v. Cameron, 207 M 506, 674 P2d 1101, 41 St. Rep. 106 (1984).

Negligent Interference With Use of Land — Mental Anguish Recoverable: Plaintiffs owned a family home and a restaurant located on the same lot in Livingston. Strong odors of gasoline were detected in the basement of the restaurant. Fire officials investigated and ordered the closure of the restaurant. Testing showed concentrations of gasoline fumes constituting a health hazard. The home was also contaminated, but plaintiffs' financial situation was such that they were unable to move. The gasoline contamination was caused by leakage of defendant's storage tanks. Plaintiffs brought suit based on nuisance, negligence, and trespass theories. The jury awarded plaintiffs damages for diminution of the value of the property, lost income, pain, and mental, physical, and emotional distress. Defendant contended the pleadings did not permit recovery for pain or mental, physical, and emotional distress. The Supreme Court held that the underlying action was a suit for damages arising out of injury to real property. The court adopted the general rule that damages for mental anguish are recoverable in a negligence action where the claim is that the defendant has interfered with the use and enjoyment of plaintiffs' land. French v. Ralph E. Moore, Inc., 203 M 327, 661 P2d 844, 40 St. Rep. 481 (1983), followed in Maloney v. Home & Inv. Center, Inc., 2000 MT 34, 298 M 213, 994 P2d 1124, 57 St. Rep. 144 (2000).

Legitimate Disputes as to Law Not Within "Frivolous Case" Exception to General Rule on Recovery of Attorney Fees: Wilson brought an action against the defendant Department to prevent it from adjudicating his water rights as being subject to the prior existing right of Walton. The District Court erred in awarding attorney fees to be paid by Wilson to Walton on the theory that it was Wilson's unlawful appropriation which forced Walton to intervene in Wilson's legal action against the Department in order to protect his (Walton's) interest. Generally, attorney fees are not to be allowed absent statutory authorization or an agreement between the parties. The exception for frivolous legal action was inapplicable because a thorough examination of the basis for Wilson's claim to Walton's water rights shows that there was a legitimate basis for Wilson's claim, even though it was ultimately unsuccessful, and a legitimate dispute. State ex rel. Wilson v. Dept. of Natural Resources and Conservation, 199 M 189, 648 P2d 766, 39 St. Rep. 1294 (1982), distinguished in Braach v. Graybeal, 1999 MT 234, 296 M 138, 988 P2d 761, 56 St. Rep. 919 (1999).

Recovery for Damage to Loaned Vehicle: Plaintiff loaned the use of a semitrailer to defendant for the hauling of one load. Defendant used the truck for the hauling of a second load. The trailer was damaged in an accident and towed away and stored, and defendant was liable for plaintiff's loss of earnings for the 2 months between the date of the accident and the date of plaintiff's purchase of a new trailer and for the cost of the towing, storage, and repairs. Recovery of towing, storage, and repair charges was not limited by value of the trailer, and recovery for lost earnings included loss due to owner's financial inability to pay towing and storage charges in order to remove the trailer and have it repaired. McPherson v. Kerr, 195 M 454, 636 P2d 852, 38 St. Rep. 2021 (1981).

Possible Jury Reliance on Wrong Theory of Damages: In suit for damages arising from defects in modular home plaintiffs purchased from defendant, error occurred where case was submitted to the jury on the theories of negligence and breach of general statutory warranties, the jury was instructed on the measure of damages for negligence but not on the measure of damages for breach of general statutory warranties, the U.C.C. warranties should have been applied to the case, not the general statutory warranties, thus precluding a general statutory warranties instruction, and it could not be determined whether the jury relied on negligence or breach of warranty in granting plaintiffs a verdict and thus it was not certain that the jury did not rely on the improper warranty theory in assessing damages. Little v. Grizzly Mfg., 195 M 419, 636 P2d 839, 38 St. Rep. 1994 (1981).

Wrongful Occupation of Property — Compensation for Personal Time Expended Properly Denied: Where the plaintiffs had failed to establish title to certain real property by adverse possession and the defendants had counterclaimed for damages caused by the wrongful occupation of the land, the court did not err in not awarding one defendant damages for his personal time expended in recovering the property and in preparing for trial. The defendants' reliance upon 27-1-317 and 27-1-320 is misplaced, as the former provides for the measure of damages where damages are not expressly provided for, as they are in this case, and the latter is applicable only to conversions of personal property; nor is the time invested by the defendant a "cost" recoverable under 27-1-318. Martin v. Randono, 191 M 266, 623 P2d 959, 38 St. Rep. 209 (1981), distinguished in Small v. Good, 284 M 159, 943 P2d 1258, 54 St. Rep. 825 (1997).

Negligent Misrepresentation by Real Estate Agent — Measure of Damages: Where the defendant real estate agent improperly identified certain real estate to prospective purchasers with the result that the buyers purchased real property they had not intended to buy, the court did not err in finding that the seller had suffered actual damages and awarding the seller $7,169.58 to cover credit issued on the wrong parcel of land, interest which was forgiven, the cost of obtaining alternate access, and the cost of title insurance, as the measure of damages prescribed by 27-1-317 is intended to be compensatory for the detriment that has been caused to the plaintiff. McCarty v. Lincoln Green, Inc., 190 M 306, 620 P2d 1221, 37 St. Rep. 2007 (1980).

Determination of Damages: When a hospital interferes with its employee's statutory right under 50-5-503 to refuse to participate in a sterilization operation, its violation of 50-5-504 may entitle the employee to damages to be determined by a compensation theory, including reasonably certain future damages and possibly exemplary damages. Swanson v. St. John's Lutheran Hosp., 189 M 259, 615 P2d 883, 37 St. Rep. 1420 (1980).

Violation of Insurance Law: An insurer has not only a contractual duty to make payment of a valid claim but a statutory duty to do so as soon as possible. It is the breach of that statutory requirement, a duty independent of the insurance contract, that gives rise to tort liability. The measure of damages in such a case is provided in 27-1-317. First Sec. Bank of Bozeman v. Goddard, 181 M 407, 593 P2d 1040 (1979).

Damages in Action Against City: It was proper for the court to award a reasonable amount of damages for the continuing interference with the flow of plaintiffs' irrigation water and the continuing flooding and discharge of polluted waters upon his land. Walton v. Bozeman, 179 M 351, 588 P2d 518 (1978).

New Trial Proper to Consider Damage Award: While the jury could have considered other factors as going to the issue of "proximate cause", they would not explain the inadequacy and inconsistency of the verdict in the light of uncontradicted testimony. Thus, the Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion by the lower court in awarding a new trial but declined plaintiffs' invitation to simply make a mathematical recalculation of damages when several issues remained which were within the province of a jury. Ferguson v. Town Pump, 177 M 122, 580 P2d 915 (1978).

Damages for Blocked Ditch: When plaintiffs built an apartment house on property through which ran an irrigation ditch to which defendants had a water right, the Supreme Court reversed the District Court and awarded attorney fees and damages to defendant for costs incurred in renting a sprinkler to compensate for the blocked ditch. Boz-Lew Builders v. Smith, 174 M 448, 571 P2d 389 (1977).

Instructions on Damages — Consequential Damages: When contract for erection of silo was abandoned by defendant after negligent efforts at erection ended with collapse of silo in windstorm, plaintiff was entitled to jury instructions on damages relating both to breach of contract and to negligence. Plaintiff was also entitled to an instruction on consequential damages. Bos v. Dolajak, 167 M 1, 534 P2d 1258 (1975).

Market Value as Measure of Damages: Damages to real property caused by the derailment of a train were measured by the market value of the property immediately before its destruction and the difference in market value at the place before and after injury. Wippert v. Burlington N., Inc., 397 F. Supp. 73 (D.C. Mont. 1975).

Aggravation of Preexisting Injury: Measure of damages in tort action includes damages for aggravation of preexisting condition, but injured party is not entitled to recover damages which would have resulted from his previous condition even without aggravation; however, where it was reasonable to suppose that in absence of accident, intervertebral disc would have herniated within not more than 2 years, still injured party was entitled to damages resulting from hastening of back condition, including pain and suffering during additional period of disability reasonably caused by accident. Kegel v. U.S., 289 F. Supp. 790 (D.C. Mont. 1968).

Estimation of Damage to Property: Where plaintiff suffered damage to motel property from sewage seeping into basement caused by defendant's workmen having negligently broken sewerline and left it open overnight, but where plaintiff's list of items damaged was ridiculously long and included discarded items, damages should have been calculated on the value of the items just before they were damaged and not on the basis of what they would cost to replace. Spackman v. Ralph M. Parsons Co., 147 M 500, 414 P2d 918 (1966).

Damage Limited — Cost of Truck: Although oil company, which negligently put diesel fuel in farmer's truck, was liable for the loss of the truck's use beyond the time reasonably necessary to make repairs, damages were limited to the cost of the truck, since, as a consequence of law, court found no distinction between cases in which property is totally destroyed and those in which it is damaged but repairable. Stahl v. Farmers Union Oil Co., 145 M 106, 399 P2d 763 (1965).

Question of Anticipation by Wrongdoer:

Where farmer was unable to pay off lien for repairs on truck, which was damaged by oil company's negligence in putting diesel fuel in it, time lost beyond that needed to repair the vehicle was compensable, even though unanticipated by the oil company. Stahl v. Farmers Union Oil Co., 145 M 106, 399 P2d 763 (1965).

In an action for damages, it is not necessary to show that the wrongdoer ought to have anticipated the particular injury which resulted; it is sufficient to show that he ought to have anticipated that some injury was likely to result as the reasonable and natural consequence of his negligence. Mize v. Rocky Mtn. Bell Tel. Co., 38 M 521, 100 P 971 (1909). See Stewart v. Stone & Webster Eng'r Corp., 44 M 160, 119 P 568 (1911).

Personal Injury Actions: There is no measuring stick by which to determine the amount of damages to be awarded in personal injury actions. Each case must depend upon its own particular facts. Chavez v. U.S., 192 F. Supp. 263 (D.C. Mont. 1961).

Loss of Profits: A person may recover for loss of profits where it is shown that such loss is the natural and direct result of the act of the defendant complained of and that such amount is certain and not speculative. Cruse v. Clawson, 137 M 439, 352 P2d 989 (1960).

Wrongful Occupation of Land: Although defendant was not entitled to retain downpayment on land when no binding contract of sale was ever made, he should be allowed to retain so much thereof as would be necessary to compensate him for damage caused by defendant's occupancy of the land. Fink v. Doggett, 123 M 324, 214 P2d 743 (1950).

Instructions Based on This Section:

Where the facts are few and simple, it is not error to give instructions containing abstract statements of statutory law; therefore, in such a case, instructions giving verbatim 27-1-221, as to when exemplary damages may be allowed, and this section, on the measure of damages for the breach of an obligation other than contract, may not be held erroneous. Johnson v. Horn, 86 M 314, 283 P 427 (1929).

In an action in conversion, the giving of an instruction submitting to the jury the measure of damages declared by this section is error, the rule thus established being inapplicable to such a case. Ferrat v. Adamson, 53 M 172, 163 P 112 (1917).

In an action by an inexperienced laundry employee who was injured while feeding a mangle, an instruction that if she was injured by defendants' negligence, she was entitled to recover what would compensate for all damage "proximately caused by the negligence of defendants, whether such damage could be anticipated or not", was not objectionable for failing to specify by whom the damage need not be anticipated, where there was no showing in the record that defendants asked for any more definite declaration upon the subject. In the case of such an employee, the doctrine of assumption of risk has no application. Coleman v. Perry, 28 M 1, 72 P 42 (1903). See Coulter v. Union Laundry Co., 34 M 590, 87 P 973 (1906).

Earning Capacity Impaired — Faulty Jury Instruction — No Guide to Amount: An instruction that if the evidence made it appear that plaintiff's earning capacity had been impaired by reason of his injuries, the jury should compensate him for such impairment, without stating a rule or guide for arriving at the amount to be awarded in that behalf, was faulty. Zanos v. Great N. Ry., 60 M 17, 198 P 138 (1921).

Railroad Failure to Stop for Sick Passenger — May Consider Probable Serious Consequences: If the engineer of a railway train sees a signal to stop but fails to stop for a sick passenger, the probable serious consequences to follow from missing the train may be considered as an element of damages. Burles v. Oreg. Short Line R.R., 49 M 129, 140 P 513 (1914). See Jones v. Shannon, 55 M 225, 175 P 882 (1918).

Proximate Cause: To enable the plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries, to recover damages, he must show that the negligence charged was a proximate cause of the injury. Therriault v. England, 43 M 376, 116 P 581 (1911).

Conversion: An action to recover the value of ore, alleged to have been mined from a vein owned by the plaintiff and to have been converted by the defendant, is the same in legal effect as an action for the conversion of personal property; and, in view of this section and 27-1-320, the plaintiff, where he prevails, is entitled as a matter of law to interest on the value of the ore converted. Mont. Min. Co. v. St. Louis Min. & Mill. Co., 183 F 51 (9th Cir. 1910).

Capacity to Pursue Established Course of Life Distinct From Loss of Earning Capacity: Merely because the earning capacity of plaintiff, a farmer 68 years old who was injured by falling into an open cellarway, may have been so small as to be a negligible element in making up his estimate of the damages which he could recover, he was nonetheless entitled to compensation for the destruction of his capacity to pursue his established course of life, an element distinct from loss of earning capacity. Montague v. Hanson, 38 M 376, 99 P 1063 (1909). See Mullery v. Great N. Ry., 50 M 408, 148 P 323 (1915).

False Imprisonment: In an action to recover damages for false imprisonment, the court may properly call the attention of the jury to the provisions of this section as to the measure of recovery. Kroeger v. Passmore, 36 M 504, 93 P 805 (1908).

Cost of Repair of Nuisance by Injured Party: Where a party injured through the maintenance of a nuisance by a city has abated it at his own expense, after a refusal by the municipality to remedy the evil, the necessary outlay so incurred is a part of his detriment proximately caused by its maintenance and recoverable as an element of his damages. Murray v. Butte, 35 M 161, 88 P 789 (1907).

Nuisance Maintained by City: In case a city maintains a nuisance, the measure of damages is declared by this section to be the amount which will compensate the injured party for all the detriment proximately caused thereby. Murray v. Butte, 35 M 161, 88 P 789 (1907).

What May Be Considered in Estimating Damages Generally: In an action for personal injuries, the jury, in fixing the damages, may consider mental and physical suffering caused by the injury, wages plaintiff might have earned from the date of the injury to the date of the trial, and if the injuries were permanent, any loss by reason of the impairment of his capacity to earn money. Bourke v. Butte Elec. & Power Co., 33 M 267, 83 P 470 (1905).

27-1-318. Wrongful occupation of real property.

Case Notes

No Taking When Government Under Mistaken Belief It Owned Property — Tort Instead of Taking: The District Court did not err in concluding that the county's use of the upper branch of a road did not amount to a taking under the U.S. and Montana Constitutions. When viewed in a light most favorable to the plaintiff landowner, the evidence presented established no genuine issue of material fact. The Supreme Court determined that it is a very different matter when the government claims that it is dealing with its own property and recognizes no title superior to it. In that instance, the government, or the officers who seize the property, are guilty of a tort if the property is in fact private. The Supreme Court further noted that federal case law provides that mistaken applications of the law are inevitable but that no principle of constitutional law requires compensation for every mistake. Letica Land Co., LLC v. Anaconda-Deer Lodge, 2019 MT 30, 394 Mont. 218, 435 P.3d 634.

Summary Judgment — Encroachment and Tree-Felling Constitute Civil Trespass — No Other Relief at Law Available Prior to Final Judgment: The parties were owners of adjoining tracts of rural property. Without verification or inquiry, the defendants mistakenly assumed that a line of pink survey flags running across the ground from a corner survey marker delineated the boundary line. As a result, the defendants cut down several trees on the plaintiffs' property and built a shop building and installed an accompanying septic system drain field near their property line mistakenly encroaching on the plaintiffs' property. The District Court granted the plaintiffs' summary judgment declaring that the defendants' encroachments and tree-felling constituted civil trespasses. However, the District Court denied the plaintiffs' requests for immediate ejection and removal of all encroaching improvements, site restoration, and a permanent injunction enjoining any further intrusion on the plaintiffs' property or noncompliance with county zoning setback requirements. On appeal of the summary judgment motion, the Supreme Court analyzed civil trespass, common law trespass and ejectment, declaratory judgment of trespass and ejectment, and supplemental preliminary and permanent equitable relief. As applied, the plaintiffs obtained summary judgment declaring that the defendants' tree-felling and encroaching building and drain field constituted civil trespasses. As far as it goes, that declaratory judgment was the substantive equivalent of a judgment of ejectment declaring the plaintiffs' right to exclusive possession of their property to the exclusion of the subject encroachments. Thus, the plaintiffs successfully obtained an interlocutory judgment, prevailing on their alternatively pleaded declaratory judgment and common law ejectment claims. Except for undetermined damages not at issue on appeal, and in contrast to any supplemental injunctive relief otherwise appropriate in equity, no other relief at law was available to the plaintiffs on their common law ejectment claim prior to final judgment. As such, the District Court did not err in declining to grant relief at law other than a declaration of trespass on the plaintiffs' common law ejectment claim. Davis v. Westphal, 2017 MT 276, 389 Mont. 251, 405 P.3d 73.

Wrongful Occupation Claim — Application of Continuing Tort Doctrine Permissible: The plaintiffs were property owners in Opportunity, located close to a former copper smelter. They sued the successor in interest to the original smelter operator for damages for the cost of restoring their properties to their original state and filed several claims, including a claim of wrongful occupation. The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, finding that the 2-year statute of limitations had expired on that claim. On appeal, the Supreme Court concluded that the District Court had erred, finding that the accrual of a claim of wrongful occupation is not on the first date of occupation and that a wrongful occupation claim may be considered continuing. The Supreme Court remanded the matter to allow the District Court to consider whether the occupation was continuing. Christian v. Atl. Richfield Co., 2015 MT 255, 380 Mont. 495, 358 P.3d 131.

Award of Restitution and Emotional Distress Damages for Forcible Detainer: The District Court awarded plaintiffs restitution and damages for emotional distress for defendant's forcible detainer. Defendant contended that under this section, plaintiffs were only entitled to the fair rental value of any land that was wrongfully occupied. The Supreme Court disagreed. Once forcible detainer is proved, damages are recoverable under 70-27-205, and this section does not apply. In deciding whether emotional distress damages, damages for lost profits, and incidental damages are recoverable under 70-27-205, the court relied on San Francisco v. Suburban Home Bldg. Soc'y, 119 P 405 (Calif. 1911), and 36A C.J.S. Forcible Entry and Detainer 60 (2003), in holding that damages that are the natural and proximate consequence of a forcible detainer, including the damages in this case, were recoverable. Harding v. Savoy, 2004 MT 280, 323 M 261, 100 P3d 976 (2004).
